East India House Meeting.—On Wednesday the Quarterly General Court of the Proprietors of Stock in this Corporation, was held at the India House. The first business that occupied the meeting was a resolution in connexion with the deposition of the Ameers of Scinde, and is as follows:—"That, in the opinion of this Court, the restoration of the province of Scinde to the Ameers, is a measure which is equally called for by considerations of justice, sound policy, and economy, and that the Court of Directors be requested to take such steps as they may think expedient for forwarding this object." The resolution was supported in a long speech by the mover, Mr. Sullivan, and it was seconded by Captain Dickenson, and supported by Captain Eastwood, but was ultimately, after some desultory discussion, withdrawn The case of the Rajah of Sattara was then brought forward once more by Mr. Thompson, who concluded by moving the following resolution:—"That, on a deliberate view of the manner in which the Court of Directors have dealt at every successive stage with the case of the Rajah of Sattara, it is the opinion of the Court of Proprietors that the Court of Directors have evinced towards the ex-Rajah a contempt of every principle of justice, while it has manifested towards every person who was instrumental to the dethronement of his Highness a partiality the most flagrant, and extended to them protection the most culpable That this conduct is calculated to shake the confidence of the native Princes of India in the power and good faith of the British Government, while it has reflected the deepest disgrace upon the British name in all the nations of the civilised world among whom the case of the ex-Rajah has become known." Mr. P. Gordon seconded the resolution, which was negatived by a large majority. The Court then broke up.

Funeral of the Late Mr. Justice Williams.—At twelve o'clock on Wednesday, the remains of this lamented Judge were interred in the Benchers' vault of the Middle Temple, of which Honourable Society the learned Knight was a member. The impressive service of our Church for the burial of the dead was read by the Rev. Mr. Rowlatt, the officiating clergyman, in the absence of the Rev. Dr. Robinson, Master of the Temple. In addition to the chief mourners, there were present—Lord Chief Justice Denman, the Lord Chief Baron (Sir F. Pollock), Justices Sir John Patteson, Sir J. T. Coleridge, Sir William Wightman, Sir T. Coltman, Sir C. Cresswell, and Messrs. Cole, Williams, Egan, Humphrey, Bayley, and other members of the Equity and Common-Law bar. The coffin of the learned Knight was deposited in one of the lower compartments of the vault, and underneath the coffin of Lord Chancellor Thurlow. The aisle of the church was nearly filled, the public having been freely admitted.

The Metroplitan Testimonial to Mr. Cobden.—The metropolitan contribution to the national tribute to be presented to Mr. Cobden now amounts to nearly £13,000—making the grand total but little short of £80,000.

Pavement of Cheapside.—At a meeting of the Commissioners of Sewers, on Tuesday, at Guildhall, it was reported that there was no longer anybody responsible for the wood pavement of Cheapside, the London Wood Paving Company having been relieved of its responsibility. It was, therefore, resolved that the whole of the wood pavement from Bow Church to the west end of Cheapside should be forthwith removed, and the carriage way be re-laid with the same description of stone as Fleet-street. At the same meeting, the sewers' rate was reduced from 4d. to 2d. in the pound, and the consolidated rate, for lighting, paving, &c., was reduced from 4d. to 3d.

The Health of the Metropolis.—On Monday morning a very fully attended meeting of the ratepayers of St. Ann's, Westminster, took place in the Vestry Room The senior Churchwarden presided, and stated the objects of the meeting, namely, the closing entirely of the present unwholesome burial ground of St. Ann's, which was stated to be so offensive, from the foul mephitic exhalations arising from it, that the healths of the surrounding inhabitants were daily affected by it. After some very lengthened details had been gone through, it was put and carried that a Committee, headed by the Rector and Churchwardens, together with a number of influential parishioners, should forthwith investigate the subject matter of complaint.

Births and Deaths in the Metropolis.—There were registered in the metropolitan districts, during the week which terminated last Saturday, 863 deaths, and 1235 births Mortality caused by epidemic, endemic, and contagious diseases, is gradually decreasing.

Lighting the Thames Captain Goodwin has just laid before the Common Council a plan for lighting the River Thames, from the Nore to London, by means of masked reflectors, lighting only the best water, the Captain's object being to prevent the collision of vessels, by sending a stream of light down each reach

THE ACCIDENT TO THE "GREAT BRITAIN" STEAMER.

In page 198 we have given an account of an accident to the Great Britain steamer. The following additional particulars are from the Liverpool Advertiser, of Thursday:

"It will be recollected that the Great Britain left Liverpool for New York at eleven o'clock on Tuesday forenoon, with the largest number of passengers (upwards of 180) that ever crossed the Atlantic in any steamer. She sailed south of the Isle of Man, the intention of Captain Hosken being to run up the Irish Channel, and to reach the Atlantic by the northern coast of Ireland. She made extraordinary way after clearing the harbour of Liverpool; indeed, all accounts agree in showing that she went at the unusually rapid rate of 13½ knots an hour. There can be very little doubt that she steamed most rapidly, for in nine and a-half hours after leaving our quays she struck on the Irish coast.

"Many rumours prevail as to the cause of the accident. Some say that the reckoning was badly kept, and others that the light off Dundrum Bay was taken for some other light. We believe, from what we have heard, that the latter was the real cause of the disaster. Certain it is at all events, that at the hour we have mentioned, about eight o'clock p.m., she ran on shore on the main land near the Cow and Calf, as it is called, in Dundrum Bay. This bay is situated on the eastern coast of Ireland, and was the scene a few years since of one or two dreadful wrecks. It lies almost immediately opposite the southern shores of the Isle of Man, and is about half way between Belfast and Drogheda.

"The passengers and crew, we are rejoiced to say, were all landed in perfect safety. By means of jaunting cars, horses, carts, and other conveyances, the majority of them reached Belfast, and several of them arrived in Liverpool and Fleetwood this morning by the Sea King and Maiden City steamers. More, if not all of them, are expected to reach here to-morrow, and in the meantime prompt communication will be had by Messrs. Gibbs, Bright, and Co., the Liverpool agents for the Great Britain, with the directors in Bristol. The Sea King brought back the Great Britain's mail bags, which will be despatched to America by the next steamer.

"There was naturally very great confusion and consternation on board when the vessel struck; but, through the active exertions and timely counsel of Captain Hosken, all fears for personal safety were quickly subdued, and the passengers, as we have said, were safely landed, and with as much expedition as the unexpected nature of the circumstances would admit of.

"The Great Britain, it is thought, will be got off, but as yet nothing very positive on this point can be stated. A letter from Captain Hosken reached Messrs. Gibbs, Bright, and Co., this morning, detailing the calamity, and briefly giving his opinion as to the probability of getting her off. The sea was making a complete breach over her after she struck, but the ship was perfectly tight.

"We cannot conclude this account without expressing our deep regret that such a dreadful catastrophe should happen, and that the fame of this noble ship has unhappily been so greatly tarnished, when she appeared to be in the commencement of a most prosperous career. The voyage which had begun promised to be the speediest ever on record, as it is said she was sailing at the rate of 13½ miles an hour when she struck."

The Late Accident on the Eastern Counties Railway.—At the Central Criminal Court yesterday, William Clare, a young man of respectable appearance, surrendered to his bail, and was placed at the bar, charged with the manslaughter of Mr. Hinde. The particulars of this case have appeared in our police reports, and inquiries before the Coroner. It will be recollected that, a short time since, an accident occurred at the Romford station of the Eastern Counties Railway, when several passengers were more or less injured, and one gentleman, named Hinde, was so seriously wounded that he died a few days afterwards. The prisoner was the driver of the engine on that occasion, and he was now charged with the crime of manslaughter, arising from negligence in the discharge of his duty. The Jury returned a verdict of Acquittal.

Captain Richardson.—We understand that Captain Richardson was yesterday discharged from custody.

Disturbances in Ireland.—The Irish papers received to-day contain accounts of riotous proceedings at Youghal and in the town of Kilkenny. At Youghal, the mob broke into the bakers' shops, and took out the bread. A similar course was pursued at Kilkenny by a mob, who assembled upon pretence of demanding employment. In both cases, the disturbances had been quelled. The neighbourhood of Youghal was lighted up by fires on the hills, and large detachments of people stationed themselves at various thoroughfares to prevent the corn being brought into the town. There is a report in circulation that Parliament will be assembled at an early date, to take into consideration the alarming state of Ireland.

Loss of Life by Fire at Bridport.—An alarming fire, attended with loss of life, was discovered on Monday evening in the house of Mr. Tucker, bookseller, Bridport. Mrs. Tucker perished, it is supposed, by suffocation, in endeavouring to escape. The maid-servant escaped from a window.

LATEST FOREIGN NEWS.

The United States and Mexico.—By the Boston packet-ship Anglo-Saxon we have received accounts from New York to the 4th, three days later than those noticed elsewhere. The New York papers mention that Mr. Bancroft, Secretary of the United States Navy, is on the eve of resigning his office, and coming to England. The New Orleans Picayune of the 26th August, says, from information received at Alvarado, it would appear that the Californias were not taken by the squadron under Commodore Sloat, but that American citizens located in those provinces, combined with disaffected Mexicans, declared themselves independent of the Central Government, and raised the flag of the United States, in token of allegiance to that country. No official despatches had been received by the War Department of Washington from the army. We learn that the late news is credited by the Administration, and has imparted the hope more strongly than heretofore, that Santa Anna will accede to the proposition to open negociations, as transmitted through Commodore Connor on the 27th of July. Peace, at all events, is confidently looked upon from Santa Anna's return to power.

COUNTRY NEWS.

MANSLAUGHTER BY A POLICEMAN, IN GLOUCESTERSHIRE.

Considerable sensation has been created in the neighbourhood of Northleach, Gloucestershire, owing to an affray between a county policeman and some country people, after the feast and wake at Great Barrington, on Sunday, the 6th inst., which has resulted in the death of one person, and may possibly be attended by the loss of a second life.

The ground was cleared at an early hour, and the people proceeded to regale themselves at various places of public entertainment. Amongst the rest, several young men and women repaired to the Fox Inn, at the village of Windrusk, where they were provided with such refreshment as their means afforded. Amongst the company assembled in the parlour were the deceased, Reuben Busby, Clifford, the other injured man, and two or three others who were in the habit of working in the same service. The company was made up of detached parties, but all were orderly and sober. In the course of the evening, a strange man, somewhat intoxicated, joined the company, and broke a glass, for which he refused to pay the sum demanded. This led to a partial disturbance, which induced the landlord to send for the police. Sergeant Adams and two of the constables came into the parlour, when one of the latter, Probert, pushed one of the company, an old man, down on the floor; this had the effect of exasperating the company, more especially Clifford, who complained of the unnecessary interference of the police. One of the constables had by that time gone out. Probert, however, drew out his truncheon, and, according to the statement of several witnesses, struck right and left, although no one had then committed any breach of the peace. It was proved that Sergeant Adams remained at the door, never once interfering. Probert continued striking at Clifford until the man was dragged out of the room, when Probert turned upon Reuben Busby, the deceased, who was sitting quietly at the table, and a blow of the truncheon across the crown of the skull laid him bleeding on the floor, and to all appearance dead. The landlord of the house, with several other persons, then interfered, and the deceased was taken out into the air, but, as he showed no symptoms of consciousness, it was deemed necessary to procure medical aid. Mr Cheatle, surgeon, of Burford, promptly attended, but he saw at once that it was a hopeless case. He found the deceased in a state of collapse, and labouring under depression of the brain. Stimulants were administered, and the other means in such cases resorted to without effect. The deceased, who never rallied, expired next morning.

At the close of the investigation, the Coroner went through the evidence, and the Jury, after a long consultation, returned a verdict of "Manslaughter against James Probert," who was committed for trial at the assizes.

The New Music Hall, Liverpool.—The cost of the new Music Hall, the foundation stone of which was to be laid on Thursday, will be £23,000. It is calculated to contain 2300 persons, and is from an elaborate design by J. Cunningham, Esq.—Liverpool Courier.

Opening of the Lancaster and Carlisle Railway to Kendal.—The opening of the Lancaster and Carlisle Railway to Kendal took place on Monday, and as it is the first railway formed in the county of Westmoreland, caused considerable stir in the town. The day (which was a most delightful one) was kept as a holiday by most of the operatives, and a great majority of the shops were closed for the occasion. The train, consisting of twelve carriages, arrived at the station, in Longpool, a little after three o'clock, having performed the distance in about fifty-three minutes. They returned to Lancaster at a quarter to six to time. The line was opened to the public on Tuesday.

ACCIDENTS AND OFFENCES.

THE CHARGE AGAINST THE AUTHORITIES OF ST. PANCRAS WORKHOUSE.

On Tuesday the Directors and Guardians of the Poor of the extensive parish of St. Pancras re-assembled for the third time in the Board Room of the Workhouse, for the purpose of further prosecuting an investigation into the recent serious charges made against them at an inquest held before Mr. Wakley, on the body of Mary Anne Jones, aged 19, who committed suicide under the circumstances already stated in our paper. The attendance was very large.

Dr. Birmingham said that, wishing to ascertain if the food of the workhouse was in accordance with the dietary table, he took the opportunity of visiting there on Saturday last, and ascertained that the soup given on that day was called "ox cheek." He found it so good, that he was not satisfied with the mere tasting of it, but finished the quantity given him as a specimen. He then went into the kitchen, and saw the master cutting up beef for sick and infirm. He had also tasted the mutton; it was as succulent and good in appearance and quality as that which he purchased for his own consumption. If ever poverty visited him, he would be thankful if he never had worse food set before him. Upon going into the larder, there were several buttocks of beef, and he understood that they had also pickled pork at different times of the year. The speaker then contended that such food was not given at any other establishment of the kind in England. He then moved that the master of the house be desired to place before the Board the rations of breakfast, dinner, and the ordinary suppers allowed to the paupers, in order to test them, and also that any gentleman present should be allowed to call in any one or more of the paupers to ask them if that was the kind of food they were in the habit of receiving. (Hear, hear.)

The master was brought forward, and the effect of Dr. Birmingham's resolution having been made known to him, specimens of the diet were placed on the table before the Directors, who evinced their satisfaction with them.

A great number of the inmates of the workhouse were then called in, and asked to declare whether the specimens were not similar in quantity and quality to the rations they were ordinarily supplied with. This was an unfortunate experiment for the workhouse authorities, for, without a single exception, all the witnesses declared that the specimens were far superior, both in quality and quantity, to any they had ever received. Most of them declared the food they received was bad, and all of them were unanimous in saying that it was deficient in amount.

The Board of Directors then adopted a report, which is to be submitted to the next vestry, and to be also forwarded to the Poor Law Commissioners. This report, of course, acquitted not only themselves, but all the workhouse authorities of any blame whatever in the matter, and asserted that the food was excellent, both in quality and quantity.

Death in a Police Cell.—An inquest was held on Monday before Mr Mills, at the Elephant and Castle, Camden-town, on the body of Sarah Hannan, aged 38, the wife of a painter and glazier, who had been taken to the police station when in a fit, under the supposition that she was drunk. She was placed in a cell with the door open, and no surgeon was sent for until she was observed to be dying. The Coroner cautioned the police against being too rash in concluding that all persons insensible must be drunk. The Jury returned a verdict of "Natural death."

Railway Accident.—As the nine o'clock p.m. train was leaving Rugby station for Leicester, on Saturday last, an engine belonging to the London and North Western Company was standing below the point at which the Midland line diverges from the former, and no sooner had the engine and tender passed the points, than the engine-driver of the London and North Western Company turned on his steam, and the result was that the engine ran into the train before it had cleared the line, broke four of the carriages, throwing them off the rails, and tearing up the latter for some distance, whilst several of the passengers were seriously shaken and bruised. Mr. Hudson, the Chairman to the Midland Company, was in one of the carriages, but escaped unhurt. Assistance was promptly rendered to the sufferers, to whom every attention was paid by the officials of the London and North Western Company, and, after the detention of about an hour, the passengers were placed in carriages belonging to the latter Company, and forwarded on their journey. The guard was so seriously injured, that he was left behind.

Fatal Affray.—On Tuesday, an Inquest was commenced before Mr. W. Baker, at the Cock, Ratcliff, on the body of William Harrold Levitt, aged 25, who died at the house of his father, in Broad-street, Ratcliff, on Monday morning, from the effects of injuries he received in an affray which took place on the Barking-road, on Tuesday, the 15th instant. The body bore marks of considerable violence. Mr. Baker asked if there had been a post mortem examination of the body, and, on being answered in the negative, he said it would be useless to proceed with the case until the body had been examined, and the cause of death ascertained. He should therefore adjourn the inquiry; and, after giving the necessary direction for a post mortem examination, bound over the Jury in the usual recognisance to attend again. The deceased, who was the son of an ironmonger, whose family have lived in Ratcliff for the last half century, was returning from Barking on the 15th, in a chaise-cart, when he interrupted a running match on the road, and got into an altercation with some parties in a barouche drawn by two horses, and struck at them with his whip. One of the men in the barouche left it, and, after getting into the chaise, beat Mr. Levitt, jun., with the butt end of his whip about the head, face, and body. The deceased was rendered insensible by the blows, and he was conveyed to his father's residence in Ratcliff, where he lingered until Monday, when he died.

Murder in Liverpool.—On Monday evening, about half-past seven o'clock, a woman named Catherine Tunney, residing at 42, Thomas-street, Liverpool, received such severe injuries at the hands of her husband, Owen Tunney, as caused her death. It appears that they had a quarrel, during which Tunney knocked his wife down by a blow upon her head with his fist; and, when she was down, he kicked her so violently as to cause her death, before a surgeon, who was sent for, could arrive. An inquest was held upon the body before the Borough Coroner on Wednesday, when a verdict of "Manslaughter" was returned against Owen Tunney, who has since surrendered himself to the police.

Fatal Accident at a Pleasure-Party on the River.—On Tuesday morning a fatal and distressing accident occurred on the River Thames, near Battersea. It appears that four persons hired a small boat at Westminster, for the purpose of proceeding to Richmond for a day's pleasure. It was observed that the parties did not understand the management of a boat. They, however, arrived safely near Battersea, when they rowed athwart a barge, which was lying at anchor; one of the parties moved from his seat, and the boat immediately capsized, throwing the whole of them into the water. Two succeeded in grasping the cable, and were rescued by the bargemen. The other two unfortunate men, named James Gascoine, aged twenty-four, and George James, aged thirty-two, residing in Clerkenwell-green, almost instantly sunk, and were never seen to rise again. The boat was picked up and conveyed home by a fisherman.

Alarming Accident and Loss of Lives on the Great Western Railway.—On Monday evening a dreadful accident occurred at the Farringdon-road Station on the Great Western Railway, by which two of the passengers were killed, and others were seriously injured. It appears that the quarter before five o'clock Bristol train from Paddington proceeded in perfect safety until within a short distance of the station at Farringdon-road, sixty-three miles and three quarters from Paddington, when the steam was thrown off, and the breaks applied, for the purpose of stopping. The luggage-van, which was between the tender and second-class carriage, having ran off the rails, and thereby diminished its velocity, the second-class carriage next to it ran into it with a fearful crash, being impelled forward by the remainder of the train, which was an unusually heavy one. The carriage was entirely demolished, and two passengers lost their lives. An inquest was held at the Prince of Wales Tavern, adjoining the Farringdon Station, on Tuesday, and, from the evidence given, it appeared that one of the deceased was a workman, named James Bonner, and the other Paul Broome Sargeant, a dairyman, of Wamborough Nithe Farm, near Swindon. The Jury returned a verdict of "Accidental Death."

The Murder of the Policeman at Dagenham.—On Tuesday, the inquiry into the mysterious murder of Police-constable George Clarke was resumed, for the sixth time, before C. C. Lewis, Esq., Coroner for Essex, at the Cross Keys Tavern, Dagenham. A great deal of evidence was gone into in addition to that already published, after which the Coroner, at considerable length, addressed the Jury. The room was then cleared of strangers; and, after consulting for upwards of one hour, the court was reopened, when the Coroner announced that the Jury had agreed to a verdict of "Wilful murder against some person or persons unknown." Mr. Rawlings said, on the part of Sergeant Parsons, against whom some suspicions had been raised, he wished to know whether Parsons was to remain under the surveillance of the police any longer? Mr. Superintendent Pearce said he had no authority to answer the question.—Mr. Rawlings observed that Sergeant Parsons was quite ready to meet any charge that might be brought against him.—The Coroner said, no doubt a few days would decide the matter; and if Sergeant Parsons remained in custody he had no one to blame but himself. The proceedings in this most extraordinary case then terminated.

Melancholy Wedding.—On Wednesday an inquest was held before W. Baker, Esq., at Clay Hall, Old Ford, Bow, on the body of Elizabeth Johns. The deceased, who was 20 years of age, was married on Saturday last at Poplar, and, after spending the day with her husband, returned with him to her father's house, and was taken very ill immediately afterwards, so much so that her husband slept on the floor. She continued to get worse, and expired on Tuesday morning, about two o'clock. There were no marks of violence on the body, nor did she complain of anything but a severe pain in her chest. Some of the jury thought a post mortem examination ought to be made, and the inquiry was then adjourned for that purpose.

Lamentable Accident.—On Thursday morning, about two o'clock, a fatal accident occurred to a young man, of the name of John Matthews, a printer, employed at Beaufort House, Strand, who, along with a fellow-workman named William Evans, had been spending the evening with one of the men employed on the Bee steam-boat, and with whom they were going to sleep on board the vessel on account of the wetness of the night. On passing from the pier to the boat, Evans slipped and fell overboard; John Matthews instantly jumped into the river to save his companion, but unfortunately struck his head against the paddle-box, immediately sank, and was drowned. His body was not found until nine o'clock on Thursday morning. Evans, however, was more fortunate, for he clung to the chain of the pier, and was hauled in by the engineer. The deceased has left a wife and four children.

Fire at Soham, Cambridgeshire.—Another fire, believed to be the act of an incendiary, occurred at Soham, on Saturday night, upon the premises of Mr. Fyson, near the Brook Dam. Three haystacks, and about fifty coombs of wheat, were burnt, as well as the stables, barn, and other outbuildings. The house was saved, owing to the river being immediately in front of it. This is about the tenth fire since Christmas. The loss is estimated at £300.

CENTRAL CRIMINAL COURT.

THE ALLEGED FORGERY OF RAILWAY SCRIP.

On Wednesday, John Bannister Faulkner and Bentham Fabian were called upon to surrender to take their trials upon two indictments for forgery, which have been upon the files of the Court for several sessions. Faulkner alone surrendered; and as the other defendant did not appear when he was formally called upon his recognisances, they were ordered to be estreated.

The defendant Faulkner was placed in the dock, and arraigned upon an indictment which alleged that on the 6th of May, at the parish of St. Marylebone, one Bentham Fabian feloniously forged a certain acquittance or receipt for the payment of money, and that the prisoner feloniously incited and counselled him to commit the forgery, and was an accessory before the fact.

Mr Clarkson and Mr. Bodkin appeared for the prosecution; Mr. Ballantine, with Mr. Huddlestone, conducted the defence.

Mr. Clarkson addressed the Jury, and said that the defendant was indicted with another person named Fabian, who, as they had heard, had absconded from his bail, with the offence of forgery. These parties had carried on the business of stock and share brokers in the neighbourhood of Broad-street, in the city of London, and they were charged with forgery, uttering a document purporting to be an acquittance or receipt for the payment of money, with the intention of defrauding a gentleman named Leon Solomon. The learned counsel proceeded to state that, although the forged document was technically described as a receipt for the payment of money, in point of fact the forged document was what was now pretty generally known as railway scrip, and referred to a projected line of railway, which was duly registered in accordance with the provisions of the Act of Parliament, called the Buckinghamshire Railway and Oxford and Bletchley Junction, and an important question would arise, whether such an instrument as railway scrip came within the scope of the Act of Parliament, and would be considered as a valuable security. With regard to the facts, he said he apprehended there would be no doubt that Fabian had obtained a large sum of money from the prosecutor, depositing as security a number of the railway scrip to which he had referred: and he should show that this scrip, which represented the holder to be entitled to four hundred shares in the undertaking, was forged in every respect.

Mr. Ballantine, on the part of the prisoner, contended that the present indictment could not be supported, inasmuch as the document which formed the ground of accusation did not come within the scope of the Act of Parliament, and could not be taken as an acquittance or receipt. The learned Counsel said that it was perfectly clear that, at the time the statute under which the indictment was framed was passed by the Legislature, no such thing as railway scrip was in existence, and therefore it could not have been intended that the Act should apply to such instruments; and he proceeded to argue that it would be impossible to regard railway scrip, although it might in point of fact represent that a certain amount had been paid as a deposit, in the light of a receipt or acquittance, and he therefore submitted that the present indictment could not be supported.

Mr. Huddlestone followed on the same side.

The Judges, after a short consultation, said they should not stop the case.

Mr. Clarkson accordingly proceeded to call witnesses.

Mr. Edward Richards deposed that, in the early part of this year, he was in the habit of transacting business with the firm of Fabian and Faulkner, but particularly with Mr. Fabian. They were partners in the business of share agents. He was introduced to the prisoner by Mr. Fabian, at their office in Broad-street; and, after this, witness negociated the raising money upon the security of Buckinghamshire railway scrip, and he repeatedly raised money upon shares of that description, and handed it over to Mr. Fabian, at the Hall of Commerce, and also at the Jamaica Coffee-house. He never paid any money in the prisoner's presence. In May he received some money from a Mr. Killeck. This was before the transaction with Mr. Solomon. Witness received money from that gentleman upon the security of the Buckinghamshire shares, by desire of Mr. Fabian. On the 6th May he was in the City, and Mr. Fabian said something to him about the necessity of getting a sum of money before four o'clock on that day. He did not see Mr. Faulkner on that day until after the transaction, when they dined together. Witness and Mr. Fabian went to Mr. Solomon's house, to ask whether he would advance more money, if scrip was left with him as security; and, upon his consenting to do so, Fabian went to fetch the scrip, and he returned with the scrip in question, and Mr. Solomon advanced the sum arranged to be received. The prisoner did not know anything of the transaction until the afternoon, and then it was only stated generally that a sum of money had been obtained.

Mr. Bodkin asked the witness whether he had not on a former occasion made a written statement of the transaction to his solicitor? He replied that he did.

Mr. Bodkin said that, having recalled his attention to this circumstance, he must repeat the question, whether he persevered in stating that Mr. Faulkner was not aware beforehand of the transaction respecting the shares? The witness replied that he did.

Mr Clarkson addressed the Court, and intimated his opinion that it would be useless to proceed any further, as he said the charge against the prisoner of being an accessory before the fact rested entirely upon the testimony of the witness Richards, and as he now made a statement entirely contrary to the evidence he had formerly given, and in fact exonerated the prisoner from the charge, it would be hopeless to expect a conviction.

Mr. Baron Platt remarked that, as Richards had made two opposite statements, it was possible that what he now said might be the truth.

The Jury then, under the direction of the Court, returned a verdict of "Not Guilty."

Mr Clarkson said there were two other indictments against the prisoner, one for felony and the other for misdemeanour in obtaining money under false pretences, but as he had no further evidence to offer, it would be unnecessary to occupy the time of the court by proceeding with them.

A verdict of "Not Guilty" was then recorded upon each indictment.

Mr. Clarkson then said that a considerable sum of money was taken from the prisoner when he was apprehended, and as there was every reason to believe that a portion of it consisted of the money that had been obtained from Mr. Solomon by means of the forged scrip, he applied to the Court to order that amount to be restored to the prosecutor.

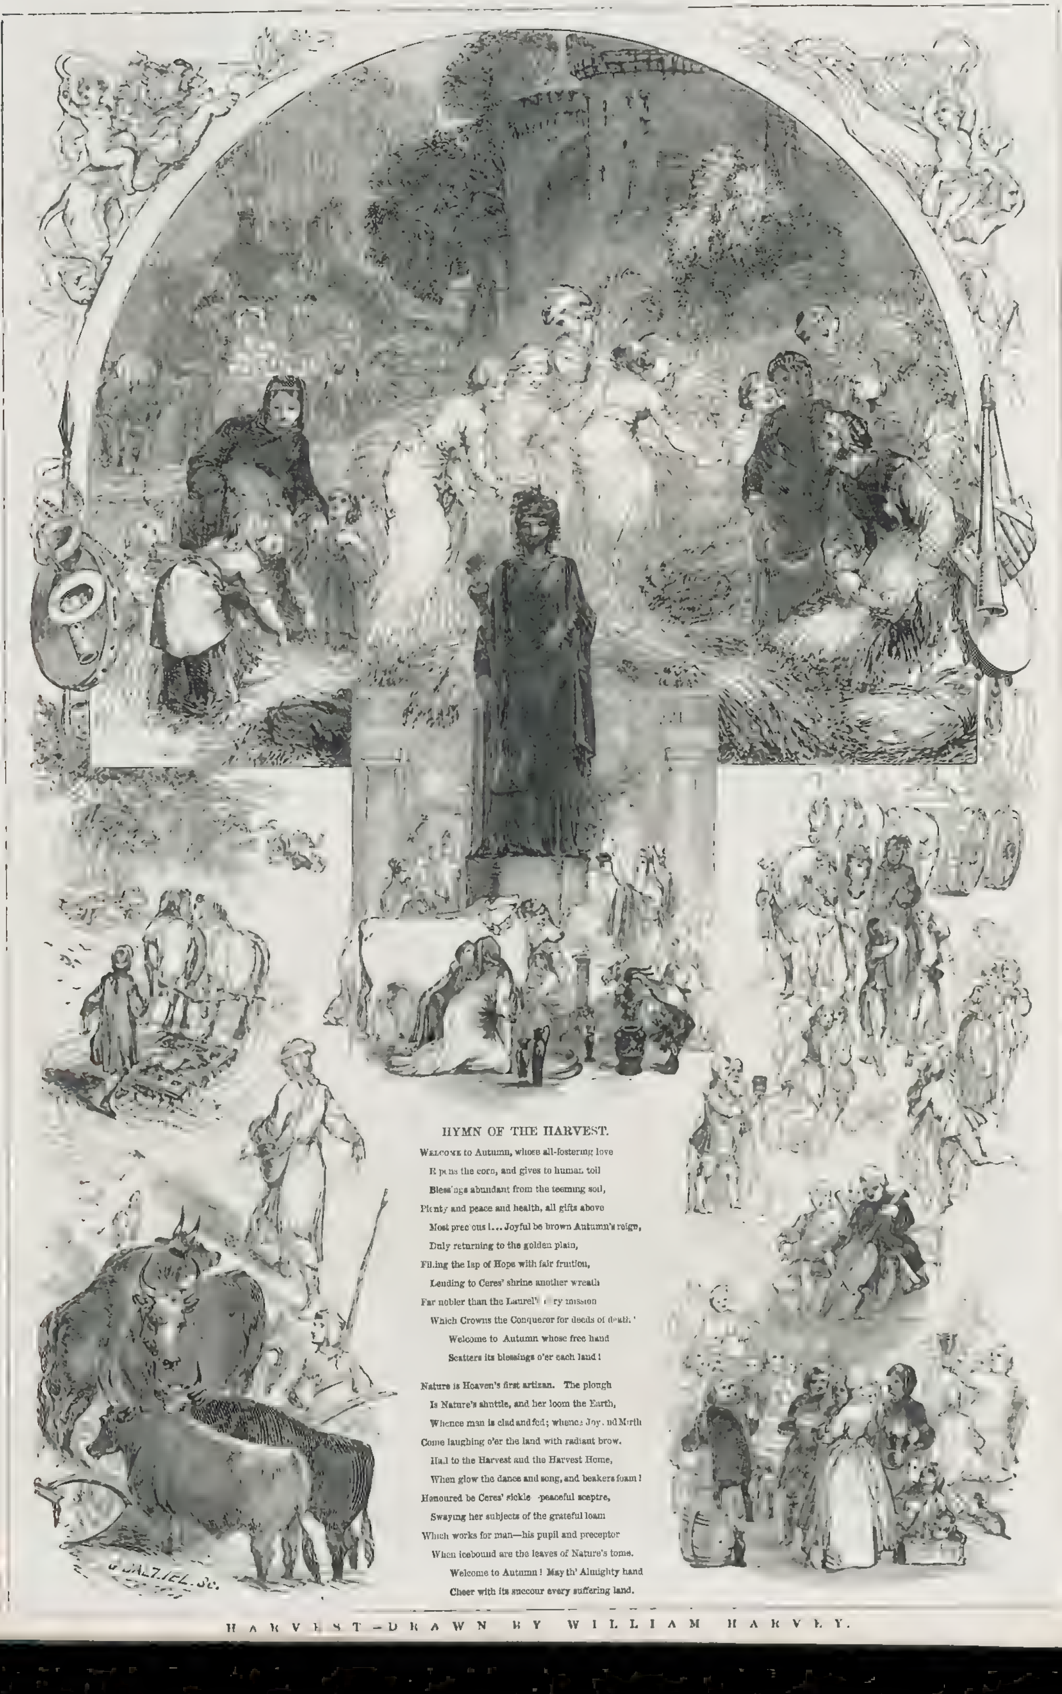
Mr. Ballantine said he was instructed by Mr. Faulkner to state that he should offer no obstacle to the application, and was quite willing that any money that could be identified as a portion of that obtained from Mr. Solomon should be delivered up.

The Bill against Captain Richardson Ignored by the Grand Jury.—On Wednesday evening, after the Judges had left the Court, it was intimated that the Grand Jury had ignored the bill, charging Captain Richardson, on two counts, with fraud and forgery. The Grand Jury examined a great number of witnesses, and it was understood that they stated as their reason for ignoring the bill, that, after looking at the whole of the evidence which had been laid before them, the majority of them were of opinion that the words "ten pounds" had never been written in the cheque, and, therefore, no forgery had been effected. They were, at the same time, satisfied that Captain Richardson had, by some means, obtained the signatures of his two co-trustees to a blank cheque, and, as he was authorised by a resolution of the Company to draw cheques, no fraud had been committed: entertaining, as the majority of the body did, this view, they had no other course to adopt than to ignore the bill. The Grand Jury came into Court on Thursday morning with several bills, and among them the one preferred against Capt. Richardson for forgery of the cheque for £5000, and which they returned "Not Found."—Mr. Bodkin, on behalf of the prosecution, applied to the Court to make an order that the accused gentleman should be detained till the Grand Jury were discharged, in order to give the Directors of the Railway Company, for whom he appeared, an opportunity of consulting the shareholders as to the propriety of preferring another bill, or adopting some other form of proceeding. Mr. Clarkson opposed the application. He said it was a very novel course to apply for the detention of an accused person, in order to suit the convenience and accomodate the shareholders of a joint-stock speculation. There had been ample opportunity to prefer a second indictment against the accused gentleman, if the prosecutors had thought proper to do so.—Baron Platt said he thought he was bound to see that the interests of justice were not defeated, by allowing a person, placed in the position of the prisoner, to be set at large. He considered the application a reasonable one. His Lordship then gave a formal order that the prisoner should be detained until the Grand Jury were discharged.

The Late Assault and Riot on the North Western Railway.—On Thursday, Joseph Glory, aged 25, Richard Cumming, aged 27, John Duggan, aged 29, John Sheehan, aged 30, and thirteen others, all Irish labourers, employed at the Camden Town Station, of the North Western Railway, were indicted for feloniously wounding William Ellis, with intent to do him some grievous bodily harm. There were other counts in the indictment charging the prisoners with riot and assault. We recently gave an account of the occurrence. The prisoners pleaded Guilty. The prisoners (seventeen in number) were respectively sentenced to periods of three, four, six, and nine months' imprisonment, with hard labour.

The New Judge.—We understand that the Solicitor-General, Mr. Dundas, will be the new Judge, in the room of the late Mr. Justice Williams.

Munificent Bequests.—The late Mr. J. Ashton, of Newton Bank, near Hyde, in Cheshire, a wealthy and extensive cotton manufacturer of Manchester, has bequeathed to the Manchester Royal Infirmary a legacy of £5000, and, after leaving large bequests to his family and others, leaves the residue of his personal estate, which is considerable, to the Commissioners of the Sinking Fund, for the reduction of the national debt. The residue is augmented by the falling-in of a legacy of £20,000, left to Mr. W. Wright, his confidential clerk, and whom he had constituted an executor, but who died only a short time previous to the testator, leaving a wife and family to deplore the loss of their sole protector, and the promised reward, which seemed within their grasp. The testator has directed that all money out on mortgage shall also fall into the personal estate. There is a legacy of £1000 to the son of Mr. Wright, who is a clerk in the concern, and legacies to the other clerks, and to the servants connected both with the business and his private establishment: to Frederick Slowe, he leaves £1000 as a token [illegible] for his faithful services whilst in his employ; to Mr. John Barker, £5000. He leaves in trust for his daughter, £25,000; and also an annuity until she is of age: to his brother, Mr. Joseph Ashton, £500 a-year; to his brother, Mr Samuel Ashton, and his sisters, Miss Jane Ashton and Mrs. Mary Tucker, £25,000 each. There are legacies to many of his relations on the maternal side. He devises and bequeaths to his brother, Mr. Robert Ashton, all his messuages, buildings, factories, warehouses, lands, tenements, hereditaments, and all the freehold, leasehold, and copyhold estates, and all the steam-engines, apparatus, and machinery absolutely. Besides the property in Chester and Manchester, for which a separate grant of probate has issued, there has been £80,000 administered to in London by the surviving executor, Mr. Robert Ashton. We are not furnished with the amount of the residue of the personal estate, which probably is not yet known; but it is spoken of as likely to realise to the Government £150,000.



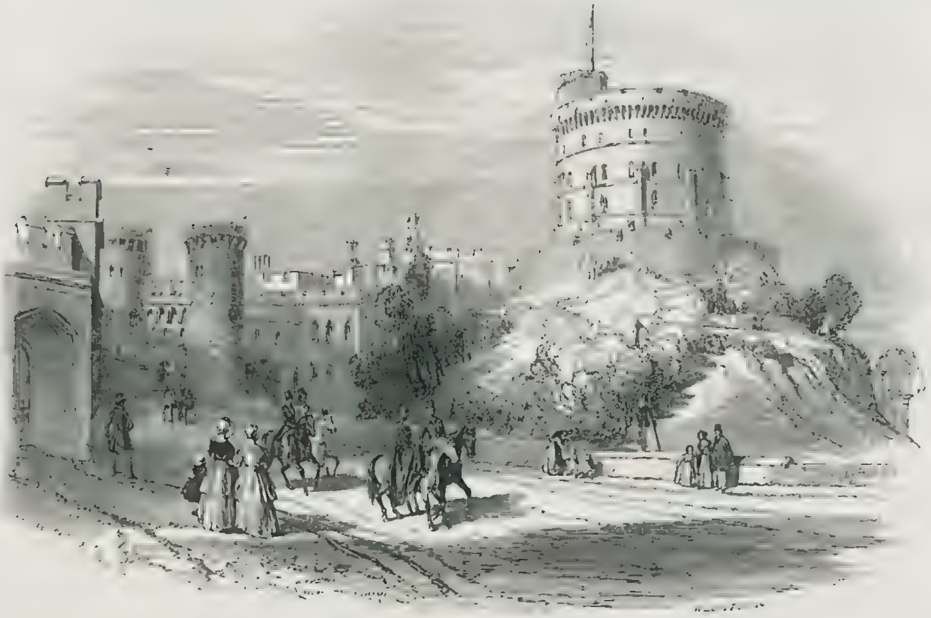
HYMN OF THE HARVEST.

Welcome to Autumn, whose all-fostering love
Ripens the corn, and gives to human toil
Blessings abundant from the teeming soil,
Plenty and peace and health, all gifts above
Most precious!... Joyful be brown Autumn's reign,
Duly returning to the golden plain,
Filling the lap of Hope with fair fruition,
Lending to Ceres' shrine another wreath
Far nobler than the Laurel's gory mission
Which Crowns the Conqueror for deeds of death!
Welcome to Autumn whose free hand
Scatters its blessings o'er each land!

Nature is Heaven's first artizan. The plough
Is Nature's shuttle, and her loom the Earth,
Whence man is clad and fed; whence Joy and Mirth
Come laughing o'er the land with radiant brow.
Hail to the Harvest and the Harvest Home,
When glow the dance and song, and beakers foam!
Honoured be Ceres' sickle—peaceful sceptre,
Swaying her subjects of the grateful loam
Which works for man—his pupil and preceptor
When icebound are the leaves of Nature's tome.
Welcome to Autumn! May th' Almighty hand
Cheer with its succour every suffering land.

HARVEST—DRAWN BY WILLIAM HARVEY.

RETURN OF THE COURT TO WINDSOR CASTLE.



WINDSOR CASTLE.—THE ROUND TOWER.

The return of the Court to Windsor Castle—the only fitting palace and really "proper house and home" of the Sovereign—has suggested the propriety of this week commencing in our Journal a Series of Original Illustrations of this magnificent pile. These Views, we should premise, have not been copied from any previous Engravings, but have been executed from Drawings expressly made by first-rate Artists, who have been favoured by the Official Authorities with special permission to complete their Drawings in the respective apartments, so as to insure accuracy. For this privilege, our best acknowledgments are tendered to the Gentlemen of the Lord Chamberlain's Department, at Windsor Castle, by whose courtesy we are thus enabled to present these faithful pictures of the Castle-Palace to our Readers. "Those who wish to see a Royal residence worthy of our island, and desire to become acquainted with the social and domestic character of our Sovereign," says Mr. Jesse, "should go to Windsor;" and we are persuaded that our Illustrations will bear out this recommendation.

With the early history of the Castle, we shall be very brief; our object being to introduce the Reader to Windsor as it is, rather than a retrospect of its condition in past ages. The site, as Sir John Denham says, seems made to "invite the builder." The Conqueror built a Castle here, and his son, Henry I., added a Chapel; and a treaty of King Stephen refers to Windsor as second in importance only to the Tower of London. A few fragments of Norman architecture were brought to light about twenty years since. King John lay at Windsor during the conferences at Runnymede. Henry III. considerably altered and enlarged the Lower Ward, and added a Chapel on the site of the present Tomb-house.

But Windsor Castle owes all its glory to Edward III.; for it could have been but little more than a rude fortress, with an adjacent chapel, till Edward of Windsor (it was his native place), gave it grandeur, extent, and durability.

What our Third Edward built, under the directing eye of William of Wykeham, King George IV. restored by the directing taste of Sir Jeffry Wyatville, commencing in the year 1824.

The Castle is oblong in plan, and is divided into three Wards, the Lower, Middle, and Upper. Between the two latter Wards is with which Edward III. commenced his Castle: of this it was the Keep, and a sort of Hall, for the assembling of a fraternity of Knights who should sit together, on a footing of equality, as the knights sat in romance at the Round Table of King Arthur. Of this Tower, and the inner face of the Norman or Queen Elizabeth's Gate, our first Illustration presents a fine view.

Mr. Jesse tells us:—" The Round Tower stands on an artificial mound, surrounded by a deep fosse or dry ditch, long since converted into a sunk garden.

A garden faire, and in the corner set
Ane herebere green, with wandis long and small Railed about

"'The compass of the Tower,' says Stow, 'is one hundred and fifty paces.' Wyatville added thirty-three feet to the Tower, exclusive of the Flag Tower, giving an elevation of twenty-five feet more. The interior is approached by a covered flight of one hundred steps, commanded by a piece of artillery fixed into the wall at the summit. A second flight of steps leads to the battlements of the proud Keep, from which it is said, so extensive is the view, that twelve counties may be seen. His Royal Highness Prince Albert is Constable of this Tower, and, indeed, of Windsor Castle. This fine old Keep was the prison of the Castle from the reign of Edward III. to the Restoration in 1660. 'From this Tower,' says Stow, 'when ye wethar is cleare may easily be descried Poll's steple' This was the steeple of old St. Paul's the dome and lantern of the new may still be descried."

For the sake of effective arrangement of our Illustrations, we shall be constrained to detach them from the regular plan. Thus, our present specimen of the Interior is from the State Apartments, and named

THE WATERLOO CHAMBER.

It is a truly noble room, of large dimensions, and originality of design; and great acquisition to the State Apartments of the Castle; it having been built by Sir Jeffry Wyatville, over a comparatively useless Court-yard. As it is situated between other ranges of apartments, it is, of necessity, lighted from above; but this circumstance has been happily seized by the Architect, who has, in fact, made it contribute to the peculiarity of character which the room possesses. It is superbly fitted in oak, and within the panels are placed those chef-d'œuvres of art which Sir Thomas Lawrence painted for King George IV., consisting of the Portraits of many of the then reigning Sovereigns of Europe, as well as some of the eminent statesmen and warriors conspicuous in the stirring events of the years 1813, 1814, and 1815, by whose talents and exertions the peace of Europe was established. Hence it is called the Waterloo Chamber, from the glorious event of the last-named year. The pictures are fifty nine in number; five of the finest being the Portraits of Lord Londonderry, 1823; the Earl of Liverpool · Pope Pius VII.; Francis II., Emperor of Austria; and Field-Marshal Prince Blucher.

The Chamber is lighted with lamps of superb design; and the furniture is gorgeous. Here many of the State banquets are given; and her Majesty entertained the Queen Dowager, the Princess of Prussia, and a large and distinguished party, at a grand dinner on Wednesday evening.

COURT AND HAUT TON.

RETURN OF HER MAJESTY AND PRINCE ALBERT TO WINDSOR.

The Queen, Prince Albert, and the Royal children, embarked on board the Fairy steam-yacht, from Trinity Wharf, East Cowes, on Tuesday morning, at nine o'clock, under a salute from the guns of the Castle. The Fairy, with the standard flying, proceeded across the Solent to Portsmouth.

A few minutes before 10, the Fairy entered the harbour under the customary salutes, the ships manning yards and exhibiting their coloured flags from stem to stern

The Fairy proceeded up to the landing place at the Royal Clarence-yard, where, on landing, the Royal party were received by the Commander-in Chief, Admiral Sir Charles Ogle: by the Lieutenant Governor, Major Gen. the Hon Sir Hercules Pakenham; by a guard of honour formed by the 13th Light Infantry, under Major Cunninghame; and the officers of the guard. The Royal train carriages were in waiting, and the Royal party proceeded en route to Farnborough station, and thence to Windsor, where they arrived at half-past one o'clock.

The Royal party occupied five carriages. In the first carriage were the Queen, Prince Albert, the Prince of Wales, and the Princess Royal. In the second carriage were the Princess Alice, the Princess Helena, and the Dowager Lady Lyttleton. In the third carriage were Prince Alfred and the Lady in Waiting, the Viscountess Canning. In the other carriages were the Maids of Honour in Waiting, the Lord in Waiting, (Lord Waterpark), the Groom in Waiting, the Equerry in Waiting to her Majesty (Lieut-Colonel the Hon. Charles Grey), and the Equerry in Waiting to Prince Albert (Colonel Bouverie).

The Queen gave a grand dinner on Wednesday evening. The company included her Majesty the Queen Dowager, her Royal Highness the Princess of Prussia, her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, his Excellency the Chevalier Bunsen, the Duke of Wellington, the Lady in Waiting on the Queen Dowager, the Countess Haack, the Lady in Waiting on the Duchess of Kent, the Baroness de Speth, the Countess of Westmoreland, the Earl of Denbigh, the Earl and Countess of Clarendon, Viscount and Viscountess Palmerston, Viscount Clifden, Lord Edward Howard, Lord Robert Grosvenor, Count Puckler, Count Witzleben, Count Wylde, the Hon and Rev. C. Leslie Courtenay, Sir George Couper, the Rev. David Markham, and Colonel the Hon. H. Cavendish. The banquet was given in the Waterloo Chamber.

Windsor, Thursday Evening.—From our own Correspondent.—Her Majesty, accompanied by her Royal Highness the Princess of Prussia, left the Castle this morning between nine and ten o'clock, in an open pony phaeton, proceeding through the Norman Gateway to St. George's Chapel. Her Majesty and the Princess alighted at Cardinal Wolsey's tomb-house, through which they walked to the Chapel of St. George, entering the sacred edifice by the Cloister Postern, near the Chapter Room. His Royal Highness Prince Albert, Viscount Palmerston, Viscount and Viscountess Canning, and some other of the distinguished visitors at the Castle walked by the side of the Queen. The Hon. Colonel Grey, Colonel Bowles, and Colonel Bouverie were in attendance upon the Queen and the Prince. Her Majesty and the Prince Consort, with their Royal and distinguished guests, were received, upon their arrival at the Chapel, by the Rev. David Markham, the Canon in residence, (in the absence of the Dean), who had the honour of conducting them over the interior of the building. The Royal Party, after visiting the Choir, proceeded through the Nave to the Cenotaph of the Princess Charlotte, and returned thence to the Queen's closet. Dr. Elvey, her Majesty's organist, played the National Anthem upon the Queen entering the Chapel, and other sacred compositions during the Royal visit. The Royal party returned to the Castle, after staying about half an hour. The commencement of the morning service was suspended for a short time, in consequence of the visit of her Majesty. The Queen, accompanied by the Princess of Prussia, walked, upon their return from St. George's Chapel, to the Queen's private kennel, in the Home Park, and visited the Royal aviary in the course of their morning promenade through the private grounds and plantations around the Castle. His Royal Highness Prince Albert, accompanied by Prince Edward of Saxe Weimar, &c., and attended by Colonel Wylde, and other members of the Royal household, shot, this morning, over the Royal preserves in the vicinity of Flemish Farm, and had most excellent sport. Their Royal and Serene Highnesses returned to the Castle shortly before two o'clock, to luncheon with her Majesty. At four o'clock in the afternoon her Majesty, accompanied by the Queen Dowager and the Princess of Prussia, took an airing in the Great Park and through the grounds at Virginia Water, in an open pony carriage and four, attended in two other pony phaetons and on horseback, by the Royal suite. The Prince Consort was accompanied by Prince Edward of Saxe Weimar, the Duke of Wellington, Viscount Palmerston, and several of her Majesty's distinguished guests on horseback. Immediately upon the Queen alighting at the Castle, which was not until a few minutes past six o'clock, a letter was placed in her Majesty's hands, from the Duchess of Kent, who will not (we regret to state) be able to join the Royal dinner circle this evening, in consequence of indisposition. The Duchess was slightly indisposed on Sunday last, and has not quite recovered since the first attack. Her Royal Highness will, therefore dine in private this evening, at Frogmore House. Mr. Brown, surgeon to the Royal Houshold, is professionally attending the Duchess. The Royal banquet was served, this evening, in the Waterloo Gallery Covers were laid for forty-four. The band of the 1st Regiment of Life Guards performed during the banquet.

The Court is expected to leave Windsor in the course of next week for Claremont, where it will remain for about a week or ten days, to enable his Royal Highness Prince Albert to enjoy the sport of shooting over the preserves of that domain.

THE PRINCESS OF PRUSSIA,

On Monday her Royal Highness the Princess of Prussia, accompanied by the Grand Duke of Mecklenburg Strelitz, Countess Haack, his Excellency Chevalier Bunsen, Count Puckler, Baron Witzelben, and the Earl of Denbigh, visited the Mansion House. Her Royal Highness was met at the entrance hall by the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress and the State officers. They then proceeded to view the state rooms in the Mansion House Refreshments being laid out, her Royal Highness partook of some. Her Royal Highness proposed the health of the Lord Mayor and the Lady Mayoress, and prosperity to the City of London. His Lordship made a suitable reply, and before sitting down begged to drink her Royal Highness' health, and prosperity to the Prussian dominions. Her Royal Highness then went to the Guildhall, the East India House, and the Post-office, and afterwards to Kew on a visit to their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge. A select party was invited to meet her Royal Highness to dinner at Cambridge Cottage.

The Countess of Blessington.—The Countess of Blessington, with her nieces, accompanied by le Comte d'Orsay, arrived at Bath, last week, on a visit to the Prince Louis Napoleon Bonaparte

The Duke and Duchess of Bedford The Duke and Duchess of Bedford intend to receive a succession of visitors at Woburn Abbey, at the close of the ensuing month.

The Duke of Wellington. There is a rumour afloat that the Duke of Wellington is about to visit the island of Jersey. This is in some measure confirmed by a more assured report that Sir Charles Ogle, Port Admiral, is going to Jersey, in order to inspect the fortifications in company with the hero of Waterloo.

Festivities at Witley Court. Witley Court, lately the residence of the Queen Dowager, has recently been the scene of unwonted gaiety, on account of the noble owner, Lord Ward, having taken up his residence there for a short time on his return from the Continent.

Marriage in High Life—On Tuesday last, the Hon. Edward Plunkett, son of the Right Hon Lord Dunsany, was married, by special licence, to the Hon. Miss Anne Constance Dutton, daughter of the Right Hon. Lord Sherborne, and sister to the Countess of Ducie. Shortly after the ceremony, the happy pair left Sherborne Hall for Dunsany Castle, to pass the honeymoon.

Entertainment to the Princess of Prussia.—Her Majesty the Queen Dowager has caused to be issued cards for a grand entertainment to her Royal Highness the Princess of Prussia on Wednesday next, at Marlborough House, the Princess having appointed the following day for her departure for Berlin.

THE THEATRES.

THE LEGITIMATE MINORS.

Whilst Miss Laura Addison continues her brilliant career in the "far north" of Sadler's Wells, nightly filling the theatre to its last available nook, Mr. Macready is attracting large audiences in the extreme south, at the Surrey. He appeared on Monday evening as Othello; and it was with the greatest difficulty we could now and then obtain even a glimpse of the stage, although we arrived very shortly after the curtain had risen, during the first scene. It was gratifying to see this immense mass of people quiet and orderly. During the entr'actes, it is true, they gave their lungs full play; but whilst the tragedy was going on—except when some restless visitor felt inclined to walk over the others to or from his place—their behaviour was characterised by extreme propriety. It must be recollected that the performances were to a shilling pit and sixpenny gallery, and that it was a Monday night audience. As we have before stated, it would be useless to enter into any criticism upon Mr. Macready's acting; our task is rather to record the general effect of it upon his audience, and this must to him have been exceedingly gratifying. He appears and is heard to the greatest advantage at the Surrey; the house being, in our opinion, the finest in London that is to say, not as regards actual size, but proportions; and a good view of the stage is to be obtained from every part of the auditory. Hence, whilst there is sufficient distance interposed between the audience and the actor to help the proper effect, every tone of the latter is audible, and all the nicer phases of the impersonation can be readily caught. Every point in Mr. Macready's acting on Monday was readily and judiciously recognised; and, as we before stated, the general attention was remarkable, looking to the manner in which the people swarmed like bees round the galleries and sides of the pit. The other characters in the tragedy were respectably performed. Mr. Cooper played Iago, and Mr. Leigh Murray was the Cassio, Mrs. Ternan, Emilia; and Mrs. Gill, Desdemona. The entire dramatis personæ were evidently in good training, and the manner in which the play was mounted was creditable to the management. We would, however, suggest that the whole of the front of the stage should be covered with green baize, instead of the square piece as laid down on Monday. On the off-nights, Mr. Cooper has appeared as Abel Dodsworth, in "The Law of the Land," a drama by Mr. W. H. Wills, which enjoyed a considerable run some years ago. We believe the story of Dr. Dodd is taken as the foundation of the plot.

From the Surrey we turned into the Victoria, where something terrifically nautical was being enacted. The house was not particularly well attended, nor did there appear to be anything represented sufficiently meritorious or attractive to command an audience. There was a shabby, careless look about the stage arrangements, and utter disregard of detail, which the lowest classes of playgoers are now quick at detecting. What we heard of the piece, too, was ultra-melodramatic, verging closely on burlesque. This is to be regretted, as the position and capabilities of the theatre would allow far better things to be done. We are aware of the futility of forcing people to sit out heavy five-act plays under the impression that they are arresting the decline of the drama, when their tastes have evidently changed with respect to so many of the pieces denominated "standard;" but such trash as forms the pabulum of those who make up the audiences of the "minimum" theatres is really calculated to swamp the drama altogether, legitimate and otherwise, and cannot be too severely dealt with. In their usual performances—that is to say, altogether apart from the star system the Surrey and Victoria Theatres ought to hold precisely the same rank as the Porte St Martin and Ambigu Comique at Paris; and they undoubtedly would do so were the same exertions used in procuring and putting their pieces on the stage. With first-class dramatists to write for them, and first-rate intelligence to superintend their productions, there is no reason why the same hits should not be made which, for hundreds of nights consecutively, crowd the Boulevard theatres.

An adaptation of the clever French piece, "L'Almanach des 25,000 Addresses," is in rehearsal at the Lyceum, under the title of "Which Mister Smith?"

Mr Phelps has resigned his character of Mercutio, in "Romeo and Juliet," to Mr. H. Marston. We are glad of this, as it was altogether unsuited to Mr Phelps's style of acting. We believe he was averse to playing it himself, but did so to "strengthen the bill," as it is termed

The Haymarket is being embellished, previous to commencing its ensuing season at the beginning of October.

Drury Lane puts forward a promising prospectus of the intended arrangements for the season. The ballet of "Betty," now playing at the Académie Royale, and founded on our play of "Charles the Second," will be one of the earliest novelties.

The Olympic opens about the second week in October. The company has been selected very judiciously, and comprises Mrs. C. Jones, Mrs. R. Gordon (of whom we spoke so favourably at the Queen's, under Mr. Abington's management), Mrs. Walter Lacy, Miss Charles, Mr. Wilkinson, Mr. Leigh Murray, Mr. Henry Betty, &c.; and the ballet department is unusually strong. There is a chance of the manager's success, provided that care be taken in the selection of pieces to be represented, and that all amateur rubbish be utterly rejected.

A new drama is in preparation at the Princess's

M. Laurent has taken the Adelaide Gallery, which he intends to open on the plan of the Concerts Valentino at Paris, concluding with a ball. The establishment will be called "Laurent's Casino," for Soirées Musicales et Dansantes. The arrangements will be carried on under the direction of several efficient masters of the ceremonies: every attempt will be made to preserve extreme order, and admission will be refused to all questionable visitors. The Gallery is being entirely redecorated, and the refreshment department will be under the superintendence of Mr. Ellis.

MUSIC.

OPERA AT DRURY-LANE THEATRE.

The lessee has issued his Prospectus for the forthcoming season, which commences on Saturday next (October 3), the theatre having closed June 23. In the interregnum the interior has been re-painted, repaired, and decorated the original designs being preserved. The orchestra will be semi-circular for the future, so that the players will now be ranged as far back as the pit partition, the stalls being removed from the central portion to the sides up to the stage-lights. That this alteration, which is in accordance with continental practice, will be highly favourable for instrumental effect, there can be no doubt. A new drop-curtain has been painted by Mr. Grieve—under whose superintendence the scenic department is placed; Mr. W. West directing the spectacle, and Mr Harley being stage-manager. Mr. Hughes is the leader of the band, and Schira is the conductor.

Three new grand operas are in preparation. The first will be by Mr. Lavenu, a violoncello player, the step-son and partner of the late Mori; the second, by Mr. Balfe; and the third, by Mr. Wallace, the composer of "Maritana." Thus there will be three works from native composers, executed by our own vocalists—at the head of whom is Madame Anna Bishop, who has had a brilliant career in Italy and Germany. She is to appear in Balfe's "Maid of Artois," which has been altered and arranged by the Composer expressly for her. The other singers are Miss Romer, Miss Rainforth, Miss Messent (of the Royal Academy of Music), Miss Poole, Miss Collett, Miss Rebecca Isaacs (her first appearance); Messrs. Harrison, D. W. King, Barker, Henry, and a débutant, as tenors; Borrani, Burdini, Stretton, Weiss, and S. Jones, as basses.

Mr Bunn announces, also, that he is in negotiation with Madame Pauline Viardot Garcia to sing in English. As this great artiste has been engaged, as we believe, at the Italian Opera in Covent-Garden Theatre, for the season 1847, we think her advent to the British stage is now rather problematical.

The lessee also intimates his determination not to allow Jenny Lind to break, with impunity, the contract she signed with him in Berlin, on her own terms, to sing at Drury-Lane Theatre in Meyerbeer's "Camp of Silesia." Her appearance in this country at any other theatre, whilst this agreement is in full force, is, of course, out of question; but we understand that she has not the most remote notion of visiting this country. It is not a fortnight since she declared positively that she would not sing either in Italian or English for any earthly consideration. The Swedish Nightingale is known to be firm in her resolutions, so we despair of hearing her syren notes in England.

The Orchestra and Chorus, (Mr. Tully being Chorus Master), have been again numerically increased. A new tenor, that great desideratum, is promised

In the Ballet and Spectacle department, there is to be a vast array of talent. Carlotta Grisi has all but signed; but Flora Fabbri, who will dance on the opening night in a new ballet called "Ersilie," composed expressly for her by her cara sposa Bretin; Mdlle. Plunkett, who is now ranked in Paris, at the French Grand Opera, as Premiere Danseuse; Mdlle. Fuoco, the new young Italian, who has created such a sensation at the Académie Royale; and Mdlle. Paderna, who has been the idol of La Scala and San Carlos, are all positively engaged Amongst the other dancers are M. and Mdme. Theodore, Mdlle. Bénard, and Mdlle La Borderie, all from the Parisian Académie Royale; and Mdme Gubilei, the sisters St. Louis, Mdlle. Louise, Mdlle. Adele, MM. Adrien and Paul, MM Huguet and Blasis, from Italy. MM. Blasis and Barry are the Ballet Masters, and M. Adrien, Under Ballet Master. The pantomimists—Messrs. Payne, Mathews, Wieland, Howell, Risley and Sons have been re engaged. Mr. Bunn is pledged in his Prospectus to three new operas, and three new ballets; so that there will be no lack of exertion. We understand that "Maritana," and the new ballet of "Ersilie," will be the opening pieces on Saturday next; and, in the following week, Mdme Bishop is to make her début. We would suggest to the lessee, also, to vary the old répertoire a little more than was done last season, and to revive some of the old English ballad operas, such as "Love in a Village," the "Duenna," the "Beggar's Opera," &c. Mr. Bunn, in conclusion, it is but justice to mention, deserves the support and patronage of the public, for the advances he is making towards a truly Grand National Opera.

MUSICAL CHIT CHAT.

Mr. Wilson.—This clever vocalist has been giving his Scottish entertainments in Devonshire and Cornwall with great success. Next week he visits Brighton, Hastings, St. Leonard's, and Ramsgate.

Musical Tours. Grisi, Mario, F. Lablache, and John Parry, with Benedict as accompanyist, sang at the concert of the Shrewsbury Choral Society to 800 persons, and were encored in nearly all their pieces. On the 17th, they were at an evening concert at Wolverhampton. On the 18th at a morning one at Leamington. On the 19th they had a morning concert at Cheltenham; after which Benedict quitted the party for Germany, and was replaced at the evening concert by Lindsay Sloper Last Monday night they were at an evening concert at Plymouth, and on Tuesday evening at Exeter. On Wednesday morning they visited Clifton, and at night delighted the Bath amateurs. On Thursday morning they sang at Reading, and in the evening they were at Mr. Carter's concert at Greenwich. This expedition was closed yesterday at Brighton, and Grisi and Mario were to have quitted England for Paris this day; but we learn that their stay is likely to be prolonged for a concert on the 30th inst., to be given by the Queen Dowager, in honour of the Princess of Prussia. A Royal musical entertainment, on the 28th, at Windsor Castle, is also spoken of. As the Italian Opera opens in Paris on Thursday next with Madame Persiani as Lucia, the services of Grisi and Mario will not be required until the end of the week. At Easter, 1847, they return to London, to fulfil their engagement at the new Italian Opera in Covent Garden Theatre.

GOSSIP OF THE WEEK.

As Autumnal quiet settles more and more deeply over our home-politics, we look all the more keenly for every rumour of excitement and change abroad; and John Bull stares about him like Palinurus,

> Atque omnes ventos atque omnia sidera captat.

The Iberian Peninsula, that seems to rival the "still-vexed Bermoothes" in constant agitation, sends us the largest bale of intelligence. The prospect of the Infanta's marriage with the French Prince seems likely to lash up into ungovernable fury those whom Byron called and the escape from France of Don Carlos's son, and General Cabrera, for the evident purpose of beginning a new Carlist war, will soon make the "confusion worse confounded."

We have just seen a Lay of Rejoicing at this prospect of fresh fighting in the Peninsula, written by an Irish friend of ours, who looks on the world as an extensive Donnybrook Fair, and admires Spain as one of its liveliest booths:—one who fully enters into the spirit of his friend Ensign O'Doherty's celebrated Thanksgiving Ode on the general European peace in 1815:—

> I wish to St. Patrick we had a new war;
> I care not with whom, nor what it was for, &c.

Tacitus tells us, in his "Life of Agricola," that many of the Irish were decidedly of Spanish origin. Perhaps this may be the case with our friend, and make him feel that lively interest in Spanish rows, past, present, and future, which his stanzas depict. He exhibits some disregard of chronological arrangement, but this probably is done to group his heroes more effectively.

Air. "The Groves of Blarney."

Oh, Spain 's the region
For a martial legion,
And for keeping bayonets in fine repair.
From the ould dominion
Of the Carthaginian,
To when Gin'ral Evans paraded there.
The worthy Cæsar
Fought there at his leisure,
The Connaught Rangers they tried its air;
Bould Hannibal and Mago
Did all the way go,
To enjoy a skrimmage in a scene so fair.

There were Goths and Vandals,
Whose names are bad handles
For my poor genie to twirl in rhyme:
And Arabian deceivers,
And Moor misbelievers,
Smashed one another there many a time:
Orlando the Paladin,
Who shines many a ballad in:
And Gineral O'Reilly, as bould as a gun·
And some Blakes and O'Donnels,
And several O'Connells,
Turned themselves into natives to enjoy the fun.

There was great Sertorius,
And his Fawn so glorious
('Tis all written about them in a book):
And my friend Riego,
Who did the wrong way go:
Faix, they caught him, and gave his neck a crook.
And the Emperor Boney
Charging passes so stony,
With his Polish Lancers all of a row.
But ould or new, boys,
Spain never did view, boys,
Such another commander as The Duke, you know.

And now—'tis consoling—
Here comes Count Montemolin,
And Ramon Cabrera the game to renew.
So, brave boys, who delight in
The fun of fighting,
Come over at once, for there's lots to do
Leave your rotten potatoes,
And all your great O's,
Who thunder in Conciliation Hall:
And, since Mr. Meagher
For the sword is so eager,
He'd better come first, and open the ball.

Our own conquests, however, appear likely to furnish employment for our fire-eaters for some time to come. There seems every probability of some of our present friends in the Punjaub partially reorganising their army and beginning a fresh struggle with us. The lesson they got in the beginning of this year, sharp as it was, does not appear to have thoroughly cured them of their fanatical folly. The Sikhs have yet to find out their mistake; and the Singhs seem to be returning to their old martial tune. That crafty gentleman, Gholab Singh, who adroitly watched the late conflict, and sided with us when he saw that we were winning, is now said to be intriguing with the Affghans against us. "Vestigia nulla retrorsum" will be the motto this year for our army of occupation at Lahore. The end of it probably will be, that we shall be forced to do a little bit more in the "annexation" line. Alexander the Great conquered these regions and left them, though very anxious to stay and keep them. We, on the contrary, though very desirous to leave them, seem likely to stay and keep them. A good practical illustration of the difference between conquests made for the sake of aggrandisement, and conquests made for the sake of safety.

Looking still further eastward, beyond the Ganges, which formed the extreme east-end of the Roman moralist's imagination, we find some of the sprigs of the "Flowery Nation," as the Chinese term themselves, have been at their old amusement at Canton. These Floral worthies look upon us Europeans as the mere weeds of creation; a few of which may be tolerated here and there, at the skirts of the garden, but only on sufferance, and liable to be hoed up whenever their presence offends the nosegay inhabitants of the parterre. If, however, John Chinaman is the rose and John Bull the nettle, of the human race, the latter has proved pretty effectually that he can sting, and is now dealt with a little more carefully in the Celestial Empire. The Canton mob has been renewing its ancient popular pastime of pelting the European merchants with stones, brickbats, and similar flowery marks of attention. The Europeans have acknowledged these civilities with a volley which soon sent the chosen subjects of the Favourite of the Sun and Moon to the right about. Some exquisite proclamations have been issued by the Chinese authorities. "Hwang, Governour of Kwangtung," fulminates in a special edict, terminating in an order to "oppose not." And Sz', the acting chief magistrate of Nan-hai-Hien, "with great earnestness makes a proclamation," which he desires "every good man beholding to believe the best of his heart, and tremblingly to obey." The name of this latter fuctionary irresistibly reminds one of the way in which our policemen, after once being enrolled in the force, lose baptismal title and surname, and thenceforth become symbols and signs. John Jones, on assuming the blue uniform, is turned into A 37 or K 15, and under one of these cabalistic titles he walks about, and has his existence—a mystery rather than a man. So the Chinese peace-preserver Sz' sounds to our ears. But the title cannot be genuine, for the Chinese have no alphabetical characters; and our only solution of the difficulty is, that some European at Canton, who, when at home, was painfully familiar with police nomenclature, has metamorphosed the title of the native guardian of the peace in China into a combination of letters, similar to what he had himself been accustomed to see on collars of dark blue great coats near Bow-street and elsewhere in the metropolis of his own country.

Perhaps we were wrong in speaking of the internal condition of England as one of perfect tranquility.

We are not wholly pacific at home. In spite of The Duke's dictum that "a great nation cannot have a little war," we manage to get one up in our Registration Courts every Autumn. Sir Robert Peel informed his followers, in the palmy days of Conservatism, that it was in the Registration Courts that the battle of the Constitution was to be fought; and the annual campaign is proceeding with great vigour. Voters are fetched up from their grouse-shooting, or back from their foreign tour, to defend their franchise against the assault of some speculative objector, who reckoned on striking them off in their absence. Desperate arguments are vigorously maintained, and the decisions of the Revising Barrister are characterised by a pleasing variety. Each day's gains and losses are reckoned up by the respective parties as keenly as if the Corn-Laws were not settled, and as if the Sugar Question had yet to be debated.

Singular Case of Restored Animation.—On Thursday (last week) there was a regatta at Southend, accompanied with a variety of amusements of a rustic character. Shortly after the conclusion of the regatta, a party, who had been out fishing in a boat some distance below the pier, discovered the body of a man, respectably dressed, floating on the surface. It was immediately taken on shore to the Ship tavern, where, after using the usual restorative means for several hours, animation was at length restored. It appeared that Lieutenant Drake, R N., had been walking on the pier, which is a mile and a quarter in length, and by some accident fell off unobserved by the spectators. He was borne away by the tide, and floated to a considerable distance till he was thus fortunately rescued, whilst in a complete state of insensibility. Lieutenant Drake is now convalescent.

LITERATURE.

The Ship of Glass; or, the Mysterious Island. By Hargrave Jennings. 3 vols. T. C Newby.

The author of these volumes conceives, somewhat ingeniously for his purpose, that we have too much utilitarianism in the present day that everything seems about resolving itself into sums and machines—figures and fact; that we have had too much reality of all kinds, and that a good wholesale fabrication may be welcomed as a relief. With this impression he offers us "The Ship of Glass," a romance of the first water, as regards mysticism and conspiracy; startling description and powerfully drawn pictures, such as must satisfy that very numerous class of readers who woo terror to delight them. We have not space to detail the plot, but give an extract or two, to show the attractiveness of the scenes and characters. Here is a picture of Klypp, a mathematician in search of "the mysterious island." ·

"Klypp's leisure time, of which he had abundance, was devoted to abstruse studies, and countless speculations upon that which was monopolising the attention of all the country far and wide—the existence of the mysterious island out at sea. All his thoughts were bent upon this one grand discovery; and, to tell truth, if the island was susceptible of being discovered at all, and no mere image from the mischievous jack-o'-lantern of imagination, Klypp, from his accomplishment in art, and his unheard of learning, seemed the individual marked out for the distinction of settling the wonder. For some reason or other, he felt persuaded, or he had succeeded in convincing himself, that he was destined to have a high hand in the laying open the treasures of this undiscovered region, the surprises of this enchanted paradise, to his longing countrymen. Actuated with the hope, and impelled with this fond desire, which bore him up through the most enormous fatigue, and such toil as, perhaps, no man but himself could have supported, did Klypp labour on with his geographical books, his globes, his quadrants, his sextants, and his astronomical instruments. Charts, yards square in size, did he travel over and retraverse with the most indefatigable diligence, by the aid of an enormous pair of iron spectacles, which were especially appropriated to this kind of rough work. All his brass implements and philosophical apparatus were put in requisition, until there was such a wheeling of wheels, and screwing of screws, and jingling and clicking of clockwork, and such an occasional clash when any of his complicated scientific mechanism went wrong or got foul, that he would have finished any old nervous lady in two days. When seized with one of these fits, which sometimes lasted weeks at a time, you would have thought his house turned into a vast machine, with shifting doors, and portcullises for gates, and windows which would push either one way or the other, and quite evade you if you wanted to look in, much worse if you wanted to look out. All his household clattered like a steam engine, puffing and blowing, and hastening forward to overtake this grand discovery."

"The Ship of Glass" occupies little more than the first volume; and early in the second commences the tale of "Atcherley," from the Rye House Plot, altogether a better story than its predecessor. We select a portion of a scene, which proves the author's descriptive power; and, though such a scene may have too much of the upholstery of the novelist, is is very popular in the present day:

"Roland and Atcherley were first shown into a lower apartment. The silence of the house was only disturbed by the footsteps of the servant, who soon returned and quietly announced the readiness of his master to see them. Motioning the man to precede him, Atcherley rose, and, followed by Roland, whose sensations were sufficiently tumultuous, ascended the wide and ponderous staircase Arrived on the first story, a door to the right was opened through which light was visible. Unannounced they passed the solemn-looking attendant and entered the apartment. The room was large and lofty; well, though somewhat scantily furnished, and bearing the impress of a cold dignity. Three windows, now concealed by dark green draperies, were on one side; a few ebony cabinets, embellished with inlaid work, old-fashioned high-backed chairs, the damask seats of which were sadly faded, and other pieces of cumbrous furniture on the other. At the upper end, over an architectural chimney-piece of oak, was a smoky portrait of the great Hampden, whose forehead was the only point which had escaped the general obscuration. A pedigree on discoloured vellum was on one side of the painting, the ramifications of which were sufficiently intricate: and some framed conveyance, in black letter, on the other. The apartment, too, was half in darkness; for the light of the two tall and sickly tapers, exalted upon a highly venerable pair of pole-like candlesticks, was insufficient to dispel the many shadows which hung about the room. The scanty light, the size of the apartment, the heaviness of the furniture and the melancholy hue of the walls, created an uncertainty through which the eyesight had much difficulty to pierce. Two figures were discernible at the farther end, who rose as their visitors entered On an approach their characteristics were more particularly visible: one was an old man, the other a young lady, and a glance sufficed to intimate what sort of persons they were."

The lovers of the marvellous, and the admirers of hair-breadth escape and chivalrous adventure, will find much to amuse them in these two romantic tales, they are somewhat of the Udolpho tinge, and are calculated to work out the theory proposed in the Preface in a very agreeable fashion.

Nyren's Cricketer's Guide. Collected and Edited by Charles Cowden Clarke Fourth Edition. Washbourne.

John Nyren, the excellent Father of this little manual of his favourite game, ranks, if we mistake not, as the Justinian of Cricket. At least, we infer such to have been his position, from the Editor's Introduction to this Guide.

"The name of Nyren was for many years held in high estimation in the cricketing world; he was the father and general of the famous old Hambledon Club, which used to hold its meetings on Broad-Halfpenny, and afterwards on Windmill-down, near to Hambledon, in Hampshire. While old Nyren directed their movements, the Club remained unrivalled, and frequently challenged all England The most polished players that this country ever produced were members of the Hambledon Club if John Nyren, the son of the good old patriarch, and father of this little manual, be worthy of credit; and many eminent members of the Marylebone Club, both 'gentle and simple,' can attest his solid judgment, as well as his regard to truth and plain dealing. Of the former class in society, the names of Lord Frederick Beauclerc, with Mr. Ward, and Mr. Ladbroke, will alone form ample testimony to his fitness to speak upon such points; while his first-rate instruction, long practice, and superior accomplishment, will qualify him to impart his half a century's experience to the young practitioner."

We learn, too, from Mr. Clarke, that Mr. Nyren was a remarkably well-grown man, standing nearly six feet, of large proportions throughout, big-boned, strong, and active. He had a bald, bullet-head, a prominent forehead, small features, and little deeply sunken eyes· the latter made no show of observation, but they were perfect ministers to their master; not a thing, not a motion escaped them in a company, however numerous; here was one secret of his eminence as a Cricketer.

To Nyren's directions for playing the game are appended a few papers of reminiscences of "The Cricketers of My Time," and "A few Memoranda respecting the Progress of Cricket;" so that the work is, directly and indirectly, a first-rate authority upon "the noble game" It is fitly dedicated to Mr. W. Ward, who gained the "longest hands" of any player on record, in July, 1820, at Marylebone, when the great number of 278 runs appeared against Mr. Ward's name, being 108 more than any player had ever gained!

German in One Volume. By Falck-Lebahn, Professor of the German Language in the Robertsonian Institution. A. Black.

To those who wish to become acquainted with the German language, and feel deterred from the attempt by the alleged difficulty of learning it, this work will be a welcome help and encouragement. As an elementary book, it is clear, sound, and complete; no necessary rules are dispensed with, nor is the student involved in a network of needless intricacies. Every step is made in natural order; and the utmost advantage is taken of the great similarity of English and German, as cognate languages, to impress an immense number of words and phrases in the latter tongue on the mind of the learner, who is thus made to feel himself progressing with a degree of ease highly encouraging. He is made to see at once that a great deal of German may be learned with very little trouble. The progressive exercises are all in phrases in daily use, and not from the writings of poets and historians; the scholar is prepared to read them afterwards, but is made aware at once of the fact that men in ordinary life do not talk like pages from Schiller and Wieland. The declension of nouns has been much simplified, and the rules for construction are very clearly laid down. For those who would attain a practical use of the language, with a moderate expenditure of time and labour, we do not know a better work than "German in One Volume," which contains, first, a practical grammar, with exercises on every rule; secondly, the beautiful tale of "Undine," unabridged, with notes on the more difficult words and phrases; and, thirdly, a vocabulary of no less than four thousand five hundred words, which are the same both in English and German. With a slight knowledge of construction, and the command of this vocabulary alone, any one would know enough of the language for all the ordinary purposes of travel and intercourse. The experiment has been tried successfully.

The Portuguese Bondholders. A meeting of the Committee of Portuguese Bondholders was held on Monday, to consider the expediency of calling a public meeting for the purpose of protesting against the measures adopted by the Government of Portugal in appropriating twenty per cent. of the interest due to British subjects on the loans contracted in London, as comprehended in the 4th article of the Decree of the 21st of August last, and signed by the Queen and Council of Ministers, the same being opposed to the conditions of the bonds, which provide against any deduction, under any circumstances whatever—when it was resolved, "That this Committee deem it advisable that a strong but respectful remonstrance should be addressed by the Chairman to his Excellency the Minister of Finance, setting forth the injustice thus contemplated, and that the public meeting be postponed till an answer to such representation be received." In conformity with which, an address was unanimously adopted, and will be forwarded by the next packet.

Volcano in the Red Sea. A letter from Lieutenant Barker, of the Hon. East India Company's steam-vessel Victoria, to Lloyd's, announces that on the 14th of August last, smoke was observed to issue from the summit of Saddle Island, in lat. 15° 7′ N., long. 42° 12′ E. The weather at the time was very squally with thunder and lightning Saddle Island is one of a group called Zebayer Islands in the Red Sea, in the direct track of vessels proceeding up and down, and are all of volcanic origin, but there is neither record nor tradition of their having been in active operation. Jibble Seer, in lat. 15° 32′ N, and long. 41° 55′ E., was observed to be smoking when visited by the officers of the Benares, during the survey of the Red Sea, but never since. There is a tradition among the Arab pilots of its having been on fire some fifty years ago, and it bears among many of them the name of Jibble Doukhan, or Hill of Smoke, and has the appearance of having been in active operation at a much later period than the Zebayer Islands.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED.

THE DUKE OF ATHOLL.

John Murray, Duke of Atholl, Marquis of Tullibardine and Atholl, and also an Earl, Viscount, and Baron, in the Peerage of Scotland, Earl Strange in that of Great Britain, Hereditary Sheriff of Perthshire, was the eldest son of John, the fourth Duke of Atholl, by his first wife, Jane, eldest daughter of Charles, sixth Lord Cathcart. He was born on the 26th June, 1778, and succeeded, on the death of his father, the 29th September, 1830. Of his Grace there remains but to be stated the fact that, for many years, he lived in perfect seclusion, at a suburban villa, near St. John's-wood. His mental condition excluded him from intercourse with general society, and from the management of his affairs. His Grace died unmarried, on the 15th instant.

His nephew, George, Lord Glenlyon, already a Peer in his own right, inherits his titles and estates, and is now the sixth Duke of Atholl. His Grace is in the 33rd year of his age; he married, in 1839, a daughter of the late G. H. Drummond, Esq., and has issue.

LORD TEMPLETOWN.

John Henry Upton, Viscount Templetown, a Peer of Ireland, died on the 21st instant. His Lordship was eldest son of the late Clotworthy Upton, Esq., of Castle Upton, county Antrim, who was raised to the peerage as Baron Templetown, in 1776. He possessed a large landed estate, and represented a distinguished branch of the ancient Devonshire family of Upton, of Lupton. The grandfather of the noble Lord whose death we record, John Upton, Esq., of Castle Upton, gained considerable reputation as a military officer, and commanded a regiment with great gallantry at the famous battle of Almanza. Lord Templetown was born 8th November, 1771, and married, 7th October, 1796, Lady Mary Montagu, only daughter of John, fifth Earl of Sandwich, by whom (who died 4th October, 1824) he has left a daughter, Mary Wilhelmina, wife of John Eden Spalding, Esq., and four sons, the eldest of whom, Henry-Montagu, is the present Viscount.

LADY AUGUSTA BONDE

Little more than two short years have elapsed since this young lady was married, and the sound of her wedding bells seems scarcely out of our ears when we hear of her death. Her Ladyship was the second daughter of the late Earl of Munster, and, consequently, grand-daughter of King William IV. At the period of her decease, which took place on the 5th inst., she had just completed her twenty-fourth year. Her marriage to the French Baron Bondé bears date 10th April, 1844.

Sudden Illness of the Viscountess Hardinge.—This lady, it will be recollected, only a few months ago returned to England from Nice, where she had been sojourning for the benefit of her health since the departure of Viscount Hardinge for India. Her Ladyship went last week to see her niece at Bromham Hall, the seat of the Hon. Colonel and Mrs. Rice Trevor, near Bedford, where she was taken ill; the attack at first was considered to be influenza, which, however, becoming more alarming, her son, Sir Walter James, and his lady, were sent for from South Park, Kent, who, on their arrival at Bromham Park, found Lady Hardinge so seriously indisposed, that Dr. M'Cann, of Parliament-street, her Ladyship's medical attendant, was sent for, who, with Dr. Witt, of Bedford, is in constant attendance. We are happy to learn, however, that by the latest advices received in town, Viscountess Hardinge was considered much better. It is gratifying to know that no immediate danger is apprehended

Fire, and Destruction of Property at Bristol.—Between one and two o'clock on Sunday morning a fire of an alarming character took place on the premises of Mr. Leech, cabinet manufacturer, Broadmead, Bristol. The premises adjoin the extensive stables and coach and waggon-houses of Messrs Bland and Co., coach-proprietors and railway carriers, and the fire was first discovered by the wife of a horse-keeper in their employ, who observed smoke issuing from Mr Leech's workshops. She immediately gave an alarm at the police-station, and the engine belonging to the force, as well as those of the different fire-insurance offices, were speedily brought to the spot. The combustible nature of the materials upon Mr. Leech's premises caused the flames to extend with the utmost rapidity, consequently all efforts to save the workshops, or the tools and materials contained in them, proved unavailing. Everything was burnt, and the flames communicating with the premises of Mr. Staddon, bedstead manufacturer, his workshops were speedily on fire. Mr. Staddon had just laid in a considerable stock of timber, which served but to feed the conflagration, which, after reducing his property to ashes, set fire to the furniture, warehouses, and sale-room of Mr. J. Naish, auctioneer, which formed the front of the range of premises. Mr Naish's rooms were crowded with furniture, and great efforts were used to save it from the general destruction. These were in part successful, but much valuable property was sacrificed, or greatly damaged in the attempt to save it. The fire burned for many hours, and the damage done must exceed £2000, at the least. The British Mechanics' Institute, which adjoins Mr Naish's warehouses, was saved with difficulty; as was also the house occupied by Mr. Wayman, tailor and draper.

Committal of a Gamekeeper for Shooting a Young Woman.—W. Hayter, the gamekeeper of the Rev. W. Radcliffe, of Warleigh, Devon, has been committed for trial at the next Exeter assizes, charged with wilfully and maliciously wounding Marina H. Hicks, a girl 16 years of age, by twice shooting at her, on Sept. 4. The complainant was the daughter of a person who rented land of the Rev. W. Radcliffe, and he occupies a portion of garden ground which abuts upon a plantation. It appears that between this piece of ground, so cultivated, and the plantation, there is no fence of any description, and, on September 4, the complainant thought it no harm to enter the plantation to gather blackberries She had ascended some distance upon the incline, when the defendant made his appearance, and ordered her to start from that place. The poor girl was somewhat surprised at such a salutation, and she endeavoured to make the best of her way off from the place, and in her attempts to get away, the defendant discharged one of the barrels of the gun at her, and though, fortunately, it did not take effect, he was not content with that. His intention was not to frighten her merely, for when she got further down the hill, he fired another barrel at her, and the consequence was, that two of the shots took effect—one entering her thigh, and the other one of her fingers. Fortunately for the defendant, the principal charge entered a tree near where the complainant was standing at the time, and a very large number of shots were found in that tree.

Fire at the Croydon Railway Terminus.—Between the hours of one and three on Wednesday morning a fire of a fearful character, attended with a serious destruction of property, broke out upon the Croydon station of the London and Croydon Railway. The flames issued through the roof of the carriage depôt, a spacious building, upwards of 100 feet long, and which was filled with carriages of the first and second classes. Contiguous to this building stood another erection, in which several other carriages were deposited. Fortunately the servants of the Company and police succeeded in saving the stock. The usual intelligence was, without delay, sent to the engine stations of the town, and forthwith the barrack and parish engines reached the scene of the fire. By that period the whole of the old locomotive depôt was enveloped in flame, and upwards of a dozen first and second class carriages were in flames. When the London engines arrived, for some time the greatest difficulty was experienced in obtaining a supply of water; meanwhile the flames progressed with such rapidity that before four o'clock both the stations (the present atmospheric, and the old locomotive) presented an immense body of flame. By leading the hose of the engines through the windows, the military and firemen were enabled to pour a limited stream of water upon the fire, but it had obtained too firm a hold to be easily extinguished, and carriage after carriage was consumed. It was not until the whole of the combustible articles in the two buildings were burnt that the conflagration was cut off, just as it was attacking the ticket-station and booking-offices. By eight o'clock the fire was so far subdued as to allay all further apprehension of its extension. By that period the old locomotive depôt was burnt down, an immense number of first and second class carriages destroyed; the atmospheric carriage shedding was likewise consumed; the electric telegraph was also displaced, and a large number of the sleepers on the line were burnt, and the metal tramways were forced into various slopes so as to prevent the regular transit of the trains, but the traffic now proceeds as usual. The total loss amounts to several thousand pounds at least. On Wednesday afternoon, an investigation was instituted by the Directors, assisted by the principal officers of the Company, with the view to ascertain the origin of the fire. Nothing, however, transpired which could lead to any distinct opinion on the subject. It appeared, in the course of the inquiry, that the lamp-cleaner had left the key of the lamp-room, which was situated under the platform, in the door. This circumstance was noticed by the watchman when he went his rounds at eleven o'clock at night, and again at two o'clock, but he did not take it out, as he found all right on both occasions. The statement of the watchman leaves the matter in considerable doubt as to whether the fire originated from spontaneous combustion of the tow, oil, or other materials in the lamp-room, or, whether it had arisen from some of the ballast men having entered the place after the rounds of the watchman, and accidentally let fire fall on some of the loose material lying there.

EPITOME OF NEWS.—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

We have received accounts from Monte Video to the 27th of July, when it was rumoured that the provinces of Entre Rios and Corrientes were about to separate, and declare their independence of the Argentine Republic. Mr. Hood, the British Consul, was absent at Buenos Ayres, but the object of his mission had not transpired It seems to be pretty generally believed that notwithstanding his mediation there will be no peace with Rosas. He had even rejected a proposal for an exchange of prisoners.

The Convict Smith was on Saturday removed from Newgate to Millbank prison, where he will remain till carried to one of the penal settlements.

The ceremony of turning the first turf of the Wilts, Somerset, and Weymouth Railway took place on Thursday (last week) in a field adjacent to the Penn Mill Inn at Yeovil

Since the operation of the new tariffs, the variety of imports into this country has very much increased. Fifty bundles of horseradish have been recently brought by a steamer from Hamburg, and the Hannah has arrived at Hull with 16 casks of strawberries from Prussia.

A fatal disease has appeared amongst hares in the north, numbers being found dead in the fields.

The inauguration of the railway from Vienna to Bruck took place on the 12th instant.

The opening of the portion of railroad from Berlin to Boitzenburg is to take place on the 15th of next month, and it is hoped that by that time one of the lines of rails on the trunk line from Hamburg to Boitzenburg will also be ready, which will complete the communication between Hamburg and Berlin. The execution of the different lines in Hanover is proceeding rapidly, and it is expected that from Hamburg to the capital will be completed this year. The principal line from Hanover to Minden and from thence to Bremen will not be terminated before the end of 1847

Mr. Green, the son of the English aeronaut, made his last ascent at Berlin on Saturday last, accompanied by Baron d'Ohsson, the Swedish Minister. After remaining up for upwards of an hour, they safely descended at about three leagues and a half from the capital.

The Journal de Liege contains the following advertisement:—"A. P., captain of infantry, having announced in the journal of the 8th that he will not acknowledge or pay any debt contracted by his wife, she thinks it right, in her turn, to inform the public that she will not pay any debt contracted by her husband, and that her pecuniary resources enable her to pay her debts much better than her husband can pay his."

On Wednesday (last week) a trial-train made its first trip on that part of the Great Central Railroad comprised between Vierzon and Bourges, and it is expected that the line from Orleans to Bourges may be opened to the public in the early part of November.

The Governments of the different States of Germany are continuing to take measures for providing against the scarcity of provisions arising from the scanty harvest and the high price of corn. The Government of Baden has authorised the importation of foreign corn, and an analogous decision of the Zollverein allows the free entrance of all foreign corn up to the 1st of May, 1847, and prorogues all anterior ordonnances relative to free entry on corn.

A letter from Genoa, 15th inst., says:—"The opening of the eighth Italian Scientific Congress took place on the 14th, in the most brilliant manner. The Prince de Canino (son of Lucien Bonaparte) afterwards addressed the meeting, and stated that he had been commissioned by Pope Pius IX. to make known the great interest he felt in the institution, and to state that, as his Holiness was anxious to contribute everything in his power to the material and intellectual welfare of his people, he had it in contemplation to re-establish the famous scientific academy, De Lincei."

By letters from Frankfort, of the 18th, we learn that the Germanic Diet adopted on the previous day an important resolution on the affair of the Duchy of Holstein It will be remembered that the King of Denmark, by letters patent of the 8th July, wished to establish an absolute right of succession to the Duchy of Schleswig, in favour of the Crown of Denmark, without, however, declaring himself equally categorically with regard to the Duchy of Holstein. The Diet, animated by a desire to calm the public mind, and influenced by a sentiment of justice and moderation, has reserved the rights and the competence of Germany for future decision, and has wished in no way to prejudge the question of succession to the Duchy of Holstein.

The first stone of the new normal school was laid at Constantinople, on the 1st of September, with great ceremony, all the Ministers being present.

A letter from Rome of the 5th inst. says:—"Some disturbances have occurred at Ancona—the people distributed wine amongst the soldiers. At Jesi, the populace pillaged a house where Gregory XVI. had passed a night; it is even said that his bust was dragged through the streets."

From Java papers it appears that the Dutch have made a successful descent upon Bally-Beliling. The occasion of the war is stated to be generally the injuries done to the flag of the Netherlands in the Bally Seas, and the misunderstanding of the Rajah of Beliling of treaties between him and the Netherlands Government.

A letter from Erzeroom of the 29th ult. states that the cholera at Teheran had in some degree subsided, but that it was making great ravages at Kasvine, Zenginan, Konm, and Cachan. The mortality at Teheran had been great, but less than in 1835. Amongst the victims at Teheran, or in the camp of the Shah, were the Minister for Foreign Affairs, the Keeper of the Seals, the Farache Bachi, Ismail Khan, and Mr. Robert Glean, an attaché of the British Embassy.

On the night of the 15th Sept. a fire burst out in the hotel of the Crown, at Tavannes, in Switzerland, not far from Berne. There were thirty-three foreigners staying at the hotel. Six of them perished in the flames M. Immer, Engineer-in-Chief of the Canton of Thun, was on the point of jumping from a window, when the floor fell in with a loud crash and he perished. Two more persons have since died from their wounds. Most of the travellers were Englishmen.

THE RACE FOR THE ST. LEGER.—THE STRUGGLE NEAR THE RED HOUSE

Of all the good Saints in the Calendar hoary—
And all in the highest respect do I hold,
From Crispin to George, and St. Pat in his glory,
With Denis and Sandy, and David the bold—
Oh! give me the Saint which, at Doncaster Races,
Rejoices the hearts of the brave and the free,
When the steed is careering, and multitudes cheering,
St. Leger! St. Leger! 's the Saintship for me!

And of all the good steeds, here's a health to Sir Tatton;
Though all might embellish an Emperor's stud;
Search where you may, from Newcastle to Gatton,
Match him in vigour, pace, beauty, and blood.
Brocardo, Iago, may go to Tobago,
With the "rut," no farrago of dastard degree;
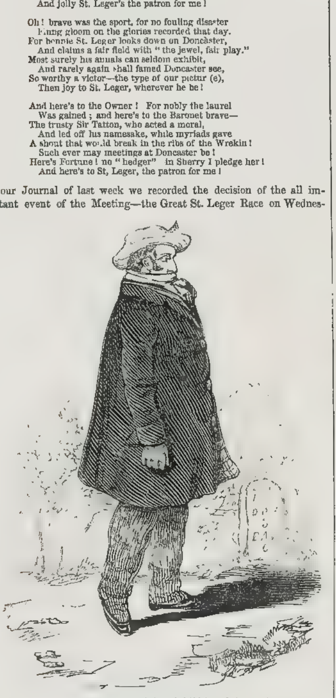
For the pride of the Tykes will be Sir Tatton Sykes,
And jolly St. Leger's the patron for me!

Oh! brave was the sport, for no fouling disaster
Fling gloom on the glories recorded that day.
For bonnie St. Leger looks down on Doncaster,
And claims a fair field with "the jewel, fair play."
Most surely his annals can seldom exhibit,
And rarely again shall famed Doncaster see,
So worthy a victor—the type of our pictur (e),
Then joy to St. Leger, wherever he be!

And here's to the Owner! For nobly the laurel
Was gained; and here's to the Baronet brave—
The trusty Sir Tatton, who acted a moral,
And led off his namesake, while myriads gave
A shout that would break in the ribs of the Wrekin!
Such ever may meetings at Doncaster be!
Here's Fortune! no "hedger" in Sherry I pledge her!
And here's to St. Leger, the patron for me!

In our Journal of last week we recorded the decision of the all important event of the Meeting—the Great St. Leger Race on Wednesday, the 16th inst. We are this week enabled to present our readers with a series of characteristic illustrations of the contest, and those who were mainly engaged in it; all engraved from Sketches made on the Course, and therefore stamped with its "age and body."



W. SCOTT.—SKETCHED ON THE BAWTRY-ROAD, ON THE MORNING OF THE ST. LEGER RACE.

THE RACE.

The St. Leger was timed on the card for four o'clock, and a few minutes after the hour appointed for starting, the horses, mounted by their respective riders, were got together at the post. At the first signal, they got well away, accomplishing as good a start as ever was witnessed. Tom Tulloch at once went to the front, with Sir Tatton Sykes lying second, and Iago third, Mr. Meiklam's two being the last off. Poynton was beaten before he had exceeded a quarter of a mile. They ran thus to the hill, where Brocardo passed Free Lance, and took his place next Sir Tatton Sykes. These positions were strictly maintained to the Red House, where Tom Tulloch, having performed his mission, retired; and Sir Tatton Sykes went on with the running, having Brocardo and Iago well laid up. (See the Engraving.) Fancy Boy, The Traverser, and Sting, were at this time fifth and sixth, and up in front. At the distance, Iago made a desperate effort to reach him, but never fairly got up. Opposite the stand he succeeded in getting on his haunches, but could do no more. The two being thus fairly singled out from the rest, contested the remainder of the race home, Sir Tatton Sykes winning cleverly in the end by half a length. Brocardo was third, finishing about four lengths behind the second, and beating The Traverser for third money by a length. Fancy Boy was fifth, and Grimston sixth. Poynton was the first horse that shut up; he could not live the pace in any part of the race, and was beaten off a considerable distance. Romance was also beaten early. The pace, from beginning to end, was very superior, and it may be said to have been a true-run race.

Run in three minutes sixteen seconds. It was allowed by all parties to have been one of the quickest races during the last twenty years, being a second quicker than in Don John's year.

Thus, the race was won by the best horse, amidst the deafening cheers of the friends of the owner, trainer, and jockey, William Scott, whose former feats have made him a great favourite in this part of the world. The betting, in the course of the week, had undergone several fluctuations, the two Scotts, however, alone disputing the premiership, and "John" having a trifling call of "Bill" at the finish. The excitement which prevailed just before the start was, as usual, extraordinary. At the conclusion, when "Sir Tatton" passed the chair first, the joy and mortification of winners and losers were sufficiently apparent. The result was rendered singularly interesting by the fact of Sir Tatton Sykes, the worthy Baronet, of Sledmore, after whom the winner was named, taking him by the bridle, and, with his hat off, actually leading him from the winning chair to the weighing stand—a proof of his appreciation of the compliment paid him, and of the pleasure he felt at the triumphant success of his favourite. (See the Illustration.)

DESCRIPTION OF THE WINNER.

We copy from the Doncaster Gazette Mr. Herring's description of him:—"Sir Tatton Sykes is a bright bay horse, with a white reach down his face, and one white foot; stands little more than 15½ hands high; he has a long lean head, and rather Roman nosed, drooping large ears, light straight neck, very oblique shoulders, wide chest, deep brisket, large long arms, great knees, very short legs, strong pasterns, and fine open feet, turns his toes a little out, large back and fore ribs, fine loins, very wide from hip to hip, long quarters, tail thin and set on high, great length from the hip to the hock, immense gaskins, long and strong thighs, large curby-looking hocks, and very short from the hock to the ground, and stands with his hocks close together. He is particularly quiet and docile, and possesses every qualification for a race-horse."

The crowd assembled was immense, scarcely inferior, we should say, to the gatherings in the olden time; but it did not require a second glance to detect a sad falling off in the grade of the visitors; the Stand was full, but the rank of its occupants offered a wide contrast to the splendid assemblage of beauty and fashion seen in the golden days of Doncaster. In the Club Stand were a few of the leading patrons of the turf; but it was not difficult to discover that their connexion with the ring was very slight, their speculations being either confined to their own circle, or entrusted to commissioners. The results of the Race were forwarded by express from the Course to Swinton, and by the aid of the electric telegraph to Rugby. The report of the Race appeared in the Times of Thursday. The Plate Race was not over until six o'clock, and the object which the authorities appear to have had in view throughout

"SIR TATTON SYKES," WINNER OF THE ST. LEGER, OF 1846.—DRAWN BY MR. J. F. HERRING, SEN.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS

"S. L. M."—Your Problems are of the class of which we receive dozens weekly. As you say, "they are not without difficulty"; but the difficulty consists, not in finding a way to mate the Black King, but in avoiding it. It is not by huddling the poor King in a corner, surrounding him with powerful adverse pieces, and then managing to mate him by the sacrifice of one of them, although that one be a Queen, that a fine Chess Problem is constructed. Devote some months to the study of positions by such adepts as Bolton, Mendheim, D'Orville, Brede, &c., and you may then catch a notion of what goes to make up a stratagem really worthy of publicity.

"J. J. B.," Settle.—Your first position in 5 moves can be solved in two different ways in 4; and the others submitted are anything but problematical. Thanks for the Sarrate Stratagem. The ten-move problem to which you refer shall be looked to. The solution, we remember, is very troublesome. Your other questions shall be replied to next week.

"Sopracitta," "Juvenis," &c. &c. The following is the solution of Mr. Bolton's unrivalled six-move problem, which appeared in our Notices to Correspondents a few weeks back:—

White.	Black.
1. R to Q Kt 6th (discovering ch)	K to B sq, or (a)
2. Kt to K 6th (ch)	K to B 2nd
3. B takes P (ch)	K takes B
4. Q to K 8th (ch)	K takes P
5. Q to K R 5th (ch)	K takes Q
6. Kt to Kt 7th, mate.

(a) White.	Black.
1.	R takes Q
2. R takes K Kt P	K to B sq (best)
3. B takes P (ch)	K takes B
4. R to K 6th (ch)	K to Q sq, or to B sq
5. R to K 8th, checkmate.

"C. O."—Our only object was to save you the annoyance you would have been subjected to from waggish Correspondents. The solution of Enigma No. 50 is this. 1. Kt to Q 5th—R checks (best); 2. Q to K B 6th; and play as Black may, he must be mated next move.

"J. E. C." - You have failed in several of the solutions.

"Amateur," Athenæum Club.—The fine Chess Library belonging to the late Dr. Bledow, containing between five and six hundred volumes, many of them most scarce and costly, is now in the market, and may be had complete, we understand, for a hundred pounds. It was Dr. Bledow's wish that this valuable collection of works upon the game of Chess should remain intact; and, by his desire, it was first offered to the President of the London Chess Club and to Mr. Staunton, but those gentlemen having declined the purchase, it is now open to the public. We have been favoured with a catalogue, and shall take occasion next week to point out some of the most rare and interesting works which it contains, in the hope of tempting the Committee of one of our Metropolitan Chess Clubs to avail themselves of this favourable opportunity of acquiring a splendid Club Library at very small cost.

"F. P. N."—"W. G." Just so. We should like to see the sort of figure the critic in question would make in playing the same match that Mr. Harrwitz is engaged in. That he would require all the assistance and encouragement of his friends, we can understand; but Mr. Harrwitz is a very different sort of player, and has resource enough in himself not to need cramming from other people whenever he plays a hard game.

"R. T. C."—Had the match between Mr. Staunton and Mr. Harrwitz been played throughout in private without the annoyances of a crowded assemblage, we have no hesitation in saying the former would have won it hollow. In the few games played by them without disturbing influences, Mr. S. gained three ahead, and all these at the larger odds of Pawn and two moves.

Solutions by "Sopracitta," "L. E. M.," "G. T.," "Juvenis," "Archer," "Phonos," "Alderman," and "Subscriber," are correct.

15. K Kt to B 5th	B takes Kt	31. R to Q B 3rd	Q R to K 7th
16. P takes B	Kt to K 4th	and White gives up the contest.

(a) The opening of this game is admirably played by Mr. Horwitz.

(b) T[illegible] and inefficient.

(c) After this move, with common care on White's side, Black's game was irretrievable.

(d) It is difficult to imagine a more utterly deplorable position than poor Black's at this point.

(e) A very good move, but Kt to K 4th, to our mind, would have been a better.

(f) This inconceivable blunder loses White the game and the match!! He had only to play Queen to R 5th, and then Black might with good grace have resigned.

(g) It is worth observing, that if White on his last move, instead of playing his Q had tried to confine the Kt by placing the Rook at K Kt 3rd, he would have lost all advantage at once, because, in that case, Black could have taken K B's P with his Bishop, e.g.:—

White	Black
22. R to Kt 3rd	B takes K B P (ch)
23. K R takes B or *	Q to K 8th (ch)
24. K R to K B sq	Q takes Q R—and wins
* 23. K to R sq	B takes Q R—and must win

(h) This exchange was compulsory. Had white attempted to evade it by moving his Q to K B 3rd, Black would have answered with Kt to K R 7th, and, when the K took it, have played K R P one, winning the Rook.

CHAPTER X.

The situation of Trevor Sefton was certainly in many respects an unenviable one. Without purchasing the knowledge by very disagreeable experience, it is hard to understand the discomfort of being intimately associated with a discordant couple, that is to say, after the veil of "appearances" has been cast aside, and the truth is thoroughly revealed to the looker on. Not that Mr. and Mrs. Smith had ever been in the habit of quarrelling according to the vulgar sense of the word, which conveys an idea of loud voices and bitter words; and even to the ebullition of passion on the lady's part already described, succeeded a calm, which, to a casual observer, might not have seemed very different from that which had preceded it. But Trevor knew otherwise; for he alone, of lookers on, was conscious of the nature of the provocation, and in how much it differed from ordinary disagreements. Not that he ever learned what had passed between themselves, or how the lady accounted for having ransacked her husband's drawers and writing desk, and possessed herself of the miniature.

Mr. Smith, however, was well aware that she had made a new will; indeed she wished him as well as the witnesses to her signature, to understand that by that act she cancelled the one executed some time ago, and which remained in the hands of her solicitor in London. He guessed too, if he did not know the nature of this recent testament; or perhaps surmised, that he was more harshly dealt with than even was the truth. He had hated his unhappy wife at the time when he had only received benefits at her hands; hated her with a slowly growing hatred, because life lingered from year to year in its fragile tenement and stood between him and the free enjoyment of the tens of thousands she had originally bequeathed to him; but hatred is too weak a word to express the passion which now raged in his heart, and to which a thousand trifling circumstances seemed hourly to add fuel. Like all those unhappy half gifted beings whose aspirations are high, and powers of achieving greatness but moderate, he was morbidly sensitive on the point of general approbation and general admiration, a vain man without the self-sustaining principle of proper pride. And to be humbled in the eyes of a boy physician and a group of mere acquaintances, was it not enough to lash his brain to frenzy? Even the half compassion of one or two of the party who were cognisant of his disappointment, but ignorant of all else, seemed to him worse to endure than would have been expressions of triumph from the fortunate legatee. It seemed as if the ship were too small to be his dwelling place—the deck too narrow a space for his impetuous pacing, and yet as if the measureless blue arch of heaven pressed heavily on his frame, for his eyes were now commonly cast down, and his brows knit into perceptible furrows. He was nursing his vengeance, as a serpent might be supposed to garner his venom for one stealthy deadly stroke.

As may well be imagined, the fortnight's voyage seemed all too long to more than one of the party; and though hailed with different emotions, the rugged peaks of Madeira were welcomed by all. It may be that Trevor felt a satisfaction in knowing that the extreme point of distance from those he loved best was gained—the chain stretched to its longest. The poor invalid looked to that softer clime, perhaps, with a lingering hope more strong than reason would have sanctioned; perhaps only as the scene of greater freedom than it was possible to know in the confinement of the packet. After all, it is a great thing for an ill-used wife to have the command of a full purse—for Gold is Power in a great many ways; and never so much as now had Mrs. Smith blessed her father's memory, and revered his foresight, for having put it out of her power to be generous in the days of a foolish delusion.

On their landing, she deputed Trevor to make all necessary arrangements, begging him to engage an excellent house in the best situation; but no sooner were they settled therein, than it became evident the lady intended to lead a life as independent as possible from that of her husband. She had taken letters of introduction to one or two families resident at Funchal, and, though so great an invalid, took an opportunity of making their acquaintance. I think, however, there is not much wonder that she was looked on as an "odd" person. Whenever she and her husband were seen together—which, to be sure, was now but seldom—his manner towards her was that of great kindness and attention, but which she always rebuffed with open contempt and rudeness. The glassy brilliance of her eye was a token of the disease that, vampire-like, was preying upon her, but it lent a strange effect to the flashes of indignation which she darted from time to time upon him; and though no one who has once recognised the fearful Look of Insanity could have mistaken her expression for it, her acquaintances were of the happy many who have no such dreadful knowledge. In short, when rumours were heard—though with whom originating seemed not distinctly known—rumours that the poor invalid was "not quite right in her mind," people seemed little surprised, and some even observed, in their utter ignorance of that fearful calamity which so often heightens, not contradicts, the just impressions of the mind, that "mad persons generally take an aversion to those they have loved best, and no doubt this was the reason she behaved so strangely to her husband." Adding, of course, much commiseration for his distress of mind.

Trevor Sefton was not the first to hear these reports; neither was he quite the last; and they had reached him, and been contradicted too, with something very like indignation, when Mr. Smith took an opportunity one day of drawing him into a private conference.

"Much as there has been," he exclaimed in a tone that was intended to be half sarcastic, "much as there has been in Mr. Sefton's deportment since I have had the honour of his acquaintance, for which I can find neither clue nor precedent, I must confess nothing has surprised me so much as the intelligence which has just reached me."

"May I ask what that is?" said Trevor.

"Simply your denying in the most unequivocal terms a fact which must have been for a long time self-evident to you as well as to all the rest of the world."

"May I beg of you to be a little more precise; for I am quite in ignorance of what it is you mean."

"Well, then, I am at a loss to know your motive for peremptorily denying the real state of health of my wife and your patient." And as he spoke he looked furtively at Trevor, anxious to watch the effect of his own words, and yet not daring boldly to meet the glance of the other."

"I have never denied, even to Mrs. Smith herself," exclaimed Trevor, who did not even yet comprehend the allusion, "I have never denied the exceedingly precarious state of her health, although I trust there is no immediate danger."

"But you deny that she is mad—perfectly insane!" exclaimed the husband, with a forced laugh, which was meant to conceal the tremor of the mouth; a tremor which the cowardly villain could not altogether control.

Trevor started as if he had been stung; for the villanous scheme, in all its force and intricacy, flashed upon him in an instant.

"I denied it, Sir," he replied, with as much calmness as he could assume, "because there is not one atom of truth in the report. Ill in body, your lady is; ill in mind I fear she may be; but her reason has remained unshaken—undimmed—and that too through one trial, at least, which might have unnerved the bravest and strongest." And as he spoke the last words, he looked at his companion, whose eyes, however, were bent to the ground.

"Come, come," said Mr. Smith, appearing not to understand him, "I see how the matter stands, and after all you are quite justified in driving the best bargain you can. I confess it will not be easy to prove her insanity without your help; a help that will cost you but little trouble, and for which I am willing to pay liberally. Suppose we say three hundred a-year secured for your life, from the day I take possession of my poor wife's property under the Will made ten years ago, when she was perfectly in her senses, you know?"

"Is there to be no measure to the insults to which poverty is subjected," exclaimed Trevor, with indignation, "that you should dare to make so infamous a proposal to me! But I thank you for it in one sense, for your villany has overreached itself, and the fact of this attempt at bribery would be evidence against you, should you unhappily find more supple instruments of your wicked will."

"Sir, you are insolent."

"A conference of this kind," returned Trevor Sefton, "can scarcely be made a question of insolence or courtesy. It is sufficient, Mr. Smith—Mr. Geoffrey Smith, that I know you; that I know those antecedents of your life which you have sedulously concealed from your wife, but which, out of compassion to her feeble health and wounded affections, I have not betrayed to her."

It would have been a fearful study for a painter or an actor, to have watched the agonised and deepening expression on the countenance of the guilty man, as Trevor spoke. Though indignant at the iniquities of which he really knew, it was not till afterwards that he suspected there must be some yet more terrible secret, the memory of which had so suddenly stricken and subdued a man hardened in guilt. It is thus, indeed, that conscience is the coward-maker! Had Mr. Smith known that his desertion of Hester Clifford was the chief antecedent to which Trevor alluded, he would have laughed to scorn his threats of denunciation. But, instead of this, his cheeks became of a livid paleness, his trembling hands seemed to clasp and writhe together involuntarily; while, from his blanched lips the only words that struggled forth were, "Mercy! Mercy!"

"As you are just, so will I be merciful," replied Trevor, perceiving his advantage in an instant.

"It is to atone—to make amends, that I long for wealth," exclaimed the other.

"Atone!—make amends!—how?" began Trevor; but he wisely paused, too well content with the influence he had gained, to hazard losing it by any indiscretion. Fortunately, too, a summons from Mrs. Smith broke off the conference, and thus gave him time for reflection and decision on the line of conduct he should adopt. Lonely and companionless as he had often felt, never had he seemed so much to need some faithful friend, of whom to seek counsel, or to whom, at least, to tell the strange position in which he was placed. Oh! for the advice of the warm-hearted, but shrewd and clear-headed Dr. G——; or the counsel of his beloved mother, whose wisdom was always that which is nearest to inspiration—the wisdom of the heart; or, most desired of all, the dear sympathy of his gentle, yet firm-hearted betrothed, whose love, even in absence, was a star of hope, a light to cheer and comfort, and whose sympathy was to his own thoughts even

> "As a rich goblet to bright wine,
> Which else had sunk into the thirsty earth."

And thus, for awhile, must I leave him, and ask the reader once more, in thought, to cross the blue ocean, and watch how events were wreathing themselves in London.

THE MARKETS.

Corn Exchange (Friday).—Although our returns show rather a large arrival of English wheat, the number of samples of that article on sale to day—owing to many of the cargoes having been disposed of previous to arrival—was small. All kinds commanded a very ready sale, at an advance in the quotations obtained on Monday of from 1s to 2s per quarter, at which a good clearance was effected. Foreign wheat was in good request, and 1s to 2s per quarter higher. Bonded grain was inquired for, yet the transactions were trifling. Although the supply of barley was small, the demand ruled heavy, and the inferior kinds sold at a trifle less money. Superfine malt moved off steadily, other kinds slowly, at late rates. Oats, beans, peas, and flour were in fair request, at full prices. From America 4050 barrels of the latter have come to hand this week.

Arrivals.—English wheat, 9330; barley, 2570, oats, 3880. Irish Wheat, ——; barley, ——; oats, ——. Foreign, wheat, 430, barley, 190, oats, 4540. Flour, 2790 sacks; malt, 1440 quarters.

English.—Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 49s to 59s; ditto white 55s to 67s; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 47s to 54s; ditto white, 52s to 59s; rye, 33s to 35s; grinding barley 29s to 31s, distilling, 32s to 34s; malting ditto, 36s to 40s, Lincoln and Norfolk malt, 58s to 63s, brown ditto, 53s to 55s; Kingston and Ware, 64s to 65s, Chevalier, 65s to 66s, Yorkshire and Lincolnshire feed oats, 26s to 27s, potato ditto, 29s to 33s, Youghal and Cork, black, 24s to 26s, ditto, white, 24s to 30s, tick beans, new, 36s to 37s; ditto old, 38s to 39s, grey peas, 37s to 39s; maple, 38s to 42s, white, 48s to 55s, boilers, 55s to 60s, per quarter. Town-made flour, 48s to 50s, Suffolk, 40s to 44s, Stockton and Yorkshire, 40s to 42s, per 280 lbs. Foreign—Free wheat, —s to —s. Dantzig, red, —s to —s, ditto white, 54s to 64s per quarter.

The Seed Market.—Linseed cakes are in good request, at very full prices. In all kinds of seeds only a moderate business is doing, at late rates.

Linseed, English, sowing, 55s to 60s. Baltic, crushing, 38s 9d to 41s, Mediterranean and Odessa, 41s to 42s. Hempseed, 36s to 38s per quarter. Coriander, 12s to 14s per cwt. Brown Mustard-seed, 11s to 15s, white ditto, 10s to 13s. Tares, 5s 6d to 7s 0d per bushel. English Rapeseed, new, £21 to £22 per last of 10 quarters. Linseed cakes, English, £11 10s to £12 0s; ditto, foreign, £7 10s to £8 12s per 1000, Rapeseed cakes, £5 0s to £5 2s per ton. Canary 46s to 52s per quarter. English Clover-seed, red, 45s to 50s, extra, 25s to 55s, white, 60s to 62s; extra, up to 68s. Foreign, red, 40s to 48s; extra, 50s; white, 60s to 62s, extra, 75s per cwt.

Bread.—The prices of wheaten bread in the metropolis, are from 8d to 8½d; of household ditto, 6½d to 7½d per 4lb loaf.

Imperial Weekly Average.—Wheat, 51s 3d; barley, 36s 1d; oats, 23s 7d; rye, 33s 0d; beans, 41s 6d; peas, 40s 5d.

The Six Weeks' Average.—Wheat, 48s 2d; barley, 30s 9d; oats, 23s 4d; rye, 31s 10d; beans, 40s 4d, peas, 37s 11d.

Duties on Foreign Corn.—Wheat, 9s 0d; barley, 2s 6d, oats, 1s 6d; rye, 2s 6d; beans, 2s 6d, peas, 2s 6d.

Tea.—About 7000 packages were offered for public sale on Thursday, and partly found buyers, at late rates. In the private contract market very little business is doing.

Sugar.—A very active demand has been experienced for West India sugar, at an advance of from 6d to 1s per cwt. All other kinds of sugar have had an upward tendency. In refined goods, a large business is doing, at from 64s 6d to 65s per cwt. for standard, and 63s to 64s for brown lumps.

Coffee.—This market has a very quiet appearance, and prices rule about stationary.

Rice.—Most descriptions are firm, with comparatively little doing.

[illegible]—[illegible] demand exists for Irish butter, at an advance of fully 1s per cwt. Carlows, landed, [illegible] 97s, Clonmel, 93s to 98s, Cork, 90s to 93s, Waterford, 89s to 92s; and Limerick, 89s to 93s, per cwt. For forward shipment, several sales have been made, at high prices, Carlows having produced 92s to 97s; Limerick, 88s to 90s, and Cork, 90s to 92s per cwt. Dutch butter—the supply of which is good—moves off steadily, at full prices. The best parcels are producing 94s to [illegible]; inferior and middling, 70s to 90s per cwt. English butter is dull, at barely late rates. The best Dorset is quoted at 100s to 102s, middling and good, 90s to 98s. Devon, 94s to 98s; and fresh, 9s to 12s per dozen. In bacon next to nothing is doing. All other kinds of provisions are unaltered.

Tallow.—P. Y. C. [illegible] and prices are on the advance. That article, on the spot, is held at 43s to 43s 3d for new, and 42s 3d to 42s 6d for old. Town tallow firm, at 41s 6d to 41s 9d, net cash.

Oils.—This market is [illegible] steady, at late rates.

Hay and Straw.—[illegible] new hay, £3 5s to £4 0s, new ditto, £2 8s to £3 10s; old clover, £4 15s to £5 12s, new ditto, £3 10s to £4 18s; oat straw, £1 8s to £1 10s; wheat straw, £1 10s to £1 12s per load.

Wool.—The public sales are progressing steadily, and prices rule firm.

Potatoes.—The best samples of potatoes are producing from £6 to £8, the inferior qualities £3 to £5 per ton, with a fair demand.

Coals (Friday).—West Hartley, 15s 9d; Bell and Brown, 16s 6d, Eden Main, 16s 6d, Belmont, 17s, Adela de Tees, 17s 3d; and Tees, 17s 6d per ton.

Hops (Friday).—Although the supply of new hops is very extensive [illegible], there is an increased amount of business doing; yet we cannot [illegible] the quotations. The duty is backed at from £210,000 to £220,000. New [illegible] pockets, £3 15s to £4 8s, Weald of Kent ditto, £4 2s to £4 12s. Mid and East Kent ditto, £4 14s to £6 6s per cwt.

Smithfield (Friday).—The supply of beasts on offer, to-day, being large, and the attendance of buyers small, the beef trade was very dull, at a decline in the quotations of 2d per 8lb. There were in the market 230 oxen and cows, 390 sheep, and 22 calves from Holland, together with 75 oxen from Spain—the latter of which sold at from £12 to £18 per head. A vessel arrived in the river this morning, from Harlingen with 120 beasts on board—75 of which were smothered on their passage. With sheep, we w[illegible] was inactive, at Monday's prices. In lambs, exceedingly little was doing, and the currencies suffered an abatement of from 2d to 4d per 8lb. Calves and pigs—the numbers of which were small—moved off slowly, at late rates. Milch cows produced from £16 to £19 each, including [illegible] small calf.

Per 8lb to sink the offals:—Coarse and inferior beasts, 2s 8d to 2s 10d; second quality ditto, 3s 0d to 3s 4d, prime large oxen, 3s 6d to 3s 8d; prime Scots, &c., 3s 10d to 4s 0d, coarse and inferior sheep, 3s 8d to 4s 0d; second quality ditto, 4s 2d to 4s 4d, prime coarse-woolled ditto, 4s 6d to 4s 8d; prime South Down ditto, 4s 10d to 5s 0d; large coarse calves, 3s 8d to 4s 6d; prime small ditto, 4s 8d to 4s 10d; large hogs, 3s 10d to 4s 6d; neat small porkers, 4s 8d to 5s 0d; lambs, 4s 8d to 5s 8d. Suckling calves, 18s to 30s; and quarter old store pigs, 16s to 20s each. Beasts, 1012; cows, 120; sheep and lambs, 6800; calves, 285; pigs, 540.

Newgate and Leadenhall (Friday).—The general demand was somewhat heavy, on the [illegible]

[illegible] Inferior beef, 2s 6d to 2s 8d, middling ditto, 2s 10d to 3s 0d, prime large [illegible] 3s 4d, prime small ditto, 3s 6d to 3s 8d; large pork, 3s 6d to 4s 6d; inferior mutton, 3s 6d to [illegible]; middling ditto, 4s 0d to 4s 4d; prime ditto, 4s 6d to 4s 8d; veal, 3s 8d to 4s 8d; small pork, 4s 8d to 5s 0d, lamb, 4s 8d to 5s 8d.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

Absence of business continues the [illegible] characteristic of all the markets. In the English House [illegible] during the week, [illegible] generally, [illegible] a plausible pretext for [illegible] The state of the Money Market, however, [illegible] anything like a heavy or permanent depression at present. Consols, on Monday, [illegible] at a slight reduction on Saturday's prices, [illegible] and afterwards receded to [illegible] On Wednesday purchases were made at 95⅛, but sales quoted only 95¼. A slight improvement, however, has since occurred, the closing prices being 95⅜ to ½ for Money, and 95½ to ⅝ for Account. In Exchequer Bills little has been done, and consequently there has been scarcely a variation. The last [illegible] is [illegible] premium. Bank Stock is quoted for the Account at 211, and no business has been quoted in the other Stocks, which are closed until after the dividends.

The Foreign Market has been nearly inanimate, Portuguese being the only Stock in which any fluctuation has occurred. The state of affairs in Spain, which usually affects the whole [illegible], is the reason assigned for the [illegible] in prices. [illegible] Mexican is a point better than at the beginning of the week, [illegible] Spanish continues flat, although without any marked alteration in prices. The Three per Cents close at [illegible] Five per Cents, [illegible] Passives, [illegible] Dutch is a [illegible] better. The [illegible] Half per Cents [illegible] Four per Cents, [illegible] Buenos Ayres, 43, Brazilian [illegible] and Granada, [illegible]

Saturday Morning. [illegible] yesterday, [illegible] for Account. Mexican was rather flatter, quoting 24⅞ for Account. Spanish was also a point lower. The Share Market was dull, without much business doing.

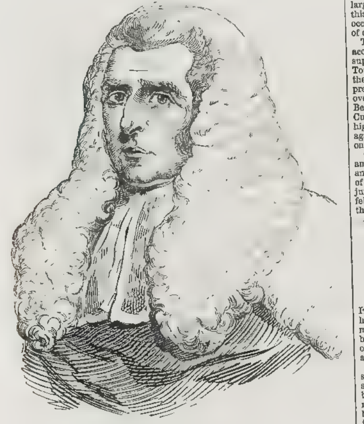
THE LATE MR. JUSTICE WILLIAMS.

Sir John Williams, Knight, one of her Majesty's Justices of the Court of Queen's Bench, was the scion of a respectable Merionethshire family.



THE LATE MR. JUSTICE WILLIAMS.

His father was Rector of a parish in that county, and also Vicar of Bunbury, in Cheshire. He was himself born at Bunbury; and, after receiving the early part of his education at the Manchester Grammar School, he went to Cambridge in 1794, and there obtained much distinction, and finally a Fellowship. Mr. Williams was called to the bar in 1804, and went the Northern Circuit. He soon obtained a very respectable amount of business. His progress, however, was more sure than rapid. His chief qualities were his great discretion in the conduct of a cause, and his astonishing powers of cross-examination. The most conspicuous case in which Mr. Williams was ever engaged was the famous "trial" of Queen Caroline. Mr. Williams was one of her Majesty's advocates, and his matchless skill in cross-examining Theodore Majocci widely established his fame. After this, his practice increased, and in 1822 he became member of Parliament for Lincoln. In politics Mr. Williams was a Whig; he was principally distinguished in the House of Commons as co-operating with Mr. Michael Angelo Taylor in denouncing the abuses of the Court of Chancery. Mr. Williams received a silk gown in 1827, and soon after the accession of William IV. was appointed Attorney-General to that Monarch's consort. In 1834 he became one of the Barons of the Exchequer, and after sitting there during one term, was made a Justice of the Court of King's Bench during the rest of his life. He was knighted also in 1834.

It is well known that Sir John Williams appeared to considerable advantage in criminal cases, and that, in every trial before him, he laboured unceasingly to reconcile his strong sense of justice with his, perhaps, still stronger feelings of mercy.

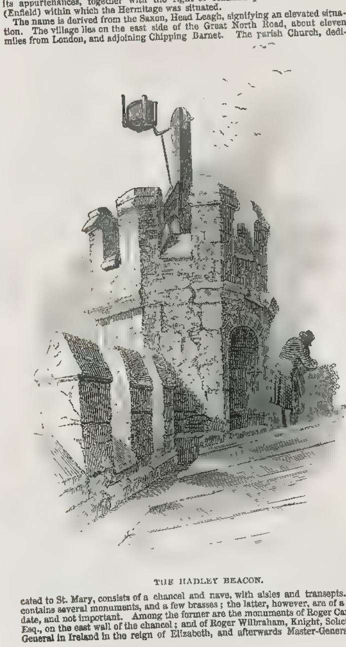
Sir John Williams died at his seat, Livermore Park, near Bury, in Suffolk, on the 14th inst., his age being at the time about 70: the learned Judge had been for some weeks unwell, but not apparently seriously so; his death occurred suddenly, and without a struggle. Abler men may have sat on the English Bench, but few have been more well-intentioned, or more sincerely good, than this lamented Judge. It is generally reported that Sir John Williams is to have an eminent successor in his office—Mr. Sergeant Talfourd; a great name, truly.

NOOKS AND CORNERS OF OLD ENGLAND.

BEACON ON HADLEY CHURCH.

The manor of Hadley, or Monken Hadley, formerly belonged to the family of Mandeville, and was included in the grant made by Geoffrey de Mandeville, Earl of Essex, to the Abbey of Walden, by name of the Hermitage of Hadley; and all its appurtenances, together with the right of common pasture in the chase (Enfield) within which the Hermitage was situated.

The name is derived from the Saxon, Head Leagh, signifying an elevated situation. The village lies on the east side of the Great North Road, about eleven miles from London, and adjoining Chipping Barnet. The parish Church, dedicated to St. Mary, consists of a chancel and nave, with aisles and transepts. It contains several monuments, and a few brasses; the latter, however, are of a late date, and not important. Among the former are the monuments of Roger Carew, Esq., on the east wall of the chancel; and of Roger Wilbraham, Knight, Solicitor-General in Ireland in the reign of Elizabeth, and afterwards Master-General of the Court of Requests during the time of James I. This last monument was the work of Nicholas Stone.



THE HADLEY BEACON.

The windows contain some remains of painted glass, a portion of which displays the canting or punning cognizance of the Goodere family, which flourished at Hadley for several generations previous to 1600. It represents a partridge with a large ear of wheat in its bill, with the explanatory word "Gooder," so as to render this subtle device plain even to ordinary understandings. The same device occurs on a pillar of the south transept, where it commemorates the beneficence of one of the Gooderes, who rebuilt part of the Church.

The Tower is of flint, with stone quoins. On the front appears the date 1494, accompanied with the device of a rose and a wing—the cognisance, it has been supposed, either of the Abbey, or one of the Priors of Walden. At the top of the Tower, placed upon a turret, is an iron Beacon, such as were formerly used for the purpose of alarming the country in time of danger or invasion; but in the present instance it was probably intended as a guide to the traveller journeying over the waste of Gladsmere heath, the former name of Finchley Common. The Beacon performed this duty for the last time when the troops under William of Cumberland marched that way, in 1745, to Culloden. It was blown down by a high wind on the 1st of January, 1779, after which it was repaired and set up again. This specimen of the old pitch-pot, or fire-pan, is considered to be the only one of the kind now in existence.

On Gladsmere Heath was fought the decisive battle between the houses of York and Lancaster, in the year 1471, in which the great Earl of Warwick was slain; and Hadley Church is reported to have been founded by Edward IV., on the site of the old hermitage, in intercession for the souls of the slain. An obelisk at the junction of the Hatfield and St. Alban's woods, indicates the spot where Warwick fell. It was erected, 1740, by Sir Jeremy Sambrook, Bart., in commemoration of that event.

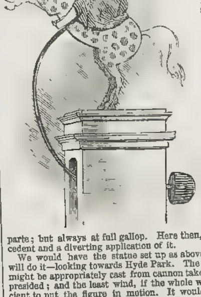
A PRECEDENT FOR THE STATUE.

It has certainly struck us as something very remarkable, that, amongst all that has been said for and against the intended position of the Wellington Statue, the most natural and best known precedent of an equestrian figure over an arch has been entirely overlooked. We hasten to be the first to lay it before the readers of the Illustrated News; premising, also, that, whilst it gives a precedent, it also suggests an improvement, in the contemplated position of the Statue.

The idea struck us during an attempt made the other evening to force a passage through that region of shops turned inside out—of aspiring cornets à piston, apoplectic post-horns, and sentimental accordions—the Lowther Arcade. Having been nearly impaled upon some enormous hair pins, and knocked through the middle of a pile of glass candlesticks and cornucopias, and pushed into a bushel of crockery egg-cups and china jars (well denominated, from their treacherous position, "For Spills"); having twice been seated, against our will, upon some cruets and flower stands, and once impelled completely through an unfolded piece of architectural paper-hanging, as the riders at the Circus go through a hoop of tissue—after all this, we paused to take breath in the refuge of a doorway; and there, close by our side, we saw the precedent alluded to, in the shape of a rider, something between a dragoon and a jockey, poised on an arch, on which his horse's hind feet alone rested, by a crooked wire and a bullet. He was kept in his place by some great philosophical fact connected with gravity, which, whilst it preserved his, almost upset ours, so comical was his motion—always struggling and striving, yet never getting on—a Vanderdecken on a hobby horse.



The toy was by no means a new one. We remember it as Frederick of Prussia, with a moveable balanced sword-arm and fore-legs, when we could almost have got inside our own Noah's Ark. Sometimes it was a Harlequin—who is generally associated, in the minds of toy-makers, with rocking-horses; we know not why; sometimes it was a species of Horse Grenadier: sometimes Buonaparte; but always at full gallop. Here then, was a hint for Mr. Wyatt: a precedent and a diverting application of it.

We would have the statue set up as above—a little alteration of the fore-legs will do it—looking towards Hyde Park. The metal arc, and the counter-weight, might be appropriately cast from cannon taken in the wars over which the Duke presided; and the least wind, if the whole were properly poised, would be sufficient to put the figure in motion. It would then become a wonder of the metropolis—a rival to the Logan stone of Cornwall, and a triumph of British ingenuity, shown in the application of the humblest playthings of the nursery to the highest purposes of art.

LAYS OF THE LINE.

THE LONDON AND RAMSGATE PASSENGER.

Air—Woman.

Shall I, wasting in despair,
Cry, because they've raised the fare?
Shall the terms my journey bar,
Whilst the boats much cheaper are?
Be they swifter than the day
In the latter end of May,
If the price I can't afford,
I'll the steamer get aboard.

Shall the railway's Chairman make Me a bankrupt for his sake?
Or on his line go down,
When the cabin's but a crown?

Be it brighter, steamier than
A new baked-potato can,
If its price won't do for me,
What care I how bright it be

If it drop again its fare,
I will never more despair;
For a cheap ride, even, I
On the Eastern Line would die:
If its trips be dear and slow,
I will scorn and let it go;
For if its fares ain't made for me,
What care I for whom they be.

THE BATHING AT THE SEA-SIDE.

We have received the following touching letter from an ingenuous Correspondent:

"Sir—Whilst the newspapers are occupying themselves with animadversions upon the proceedings of those outside the bathing-machines, perhaps you will kindly draw the attention of the humane public to the sufferings of those within. Everybody knows the horror of that dreadful journey made down a beach in a bathing-machine. The perfect uncertainty as to where you are being carried; the bumping of the pincushion rivalling that of your own heart; the treacherous nature of your powers of keeping on your legs; the lashing of the ocean when you get down to it; and, above all, that invariable discomfort which always affects the boldest minds before jumping into cold water—all these things are bad enough in themselves. But now, such is the rush to the sea-side, that the owners of the machines hurry their customers in a manner leading to the most frightful results. At high water you are let down a steep hill of shingles in a reckless manner, that knocks you off your feet before you have begun to undress, and entirely maims you for the morning. And at low water you are run out miles from shore, with such insecure latches to the doors—as huge and weak as that celebrated one which the robber moves in 'The Wreck Ashore'—an appropriate name, by the way—that the first sea forces them open, bursts right through the crazy tenement, and washes you out in front, like a sluice; perhaps, at last leaving you high, but not dry, on the beach.

'Pray, exert your influence to stop these barbarities; let the 'reckless driving' apply equally to bathing-machines as to cabs and omnibuses, and oblige

"Your humble servant, "Triton."

CHARADE THE NINTH.

It was an old ancestral park, and shaded o'er with trees,
That nobly reared their heads, or bowed to kiss the passing breeze;
And rabbits on the uplands fed, and sheep upon the leas:

And often in the days gone by, high in the welkin borne,
My First provoked the hunter's cry, and woke his ringing horn,
As wide and far the echoes spread all in the sunny morn.

It was a new and handsome street, with pavements fair and wide;
And gorgeous shops, all glass and gold, were ranged on either side;
On which, from morn till night flow'd on the fashionable tide:

And there again My First was seen, in marvellous array,
And on its beaten promenade he pass'd the livelong day,
Until "the World" deserted it, when he too went away.

His fortunes turned; time brought about a change on which he never reckon'd.
He found the learning he had scorn'd was better valued than My Second.
Not fit for anything—he did what others do—he went to sea;
And read and studied till he found My Second once more on his lee.
'Twas England; and he leapt on shore—Southampton was the welcome station—
But found the town was running o'er with members of th' Association.

One he heard who told the wonders of the young chaotic world,
Spoke of mightiest volcanoes to the depths of vallies hurl'd;
Showed the prints of giant footsteps—marks of some forgotten race—
Which the shocks of past convulsions were not able to efface.
Now he spoke of fish tremendous, now of some huge reptile's might;
Now pourtrayed the Mastodon, and now the coiled Ammonite.
Told him what St. Cuthbert plays with, when he sits and tolls to frame,
What Sir Walter Scott has called "the sea-born beads that bear his name."
Great he was in "old red sandstone," greater still in "London clay," Talk'd of fossil bones and "lias" as the things of every day.
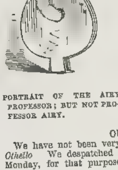
Who he was, from what he spoke of, by this time you ought to know,
If you don't, my First and Second you must join my Whole to show.



PORTRAIT OF THE AIRY PROFESSOR; BUT NOT PROFESSOR AIRY.

As an apt pendant to the above charade, connected with the late meeting of the British Association, we subjoin a portrait, omitted in our series last week, of the gentleman who proposed to do so much by filling vessels with air, but had not quite made up his mind how to set about it. The theory had much of the puff in it, hence the applicability of the likeness

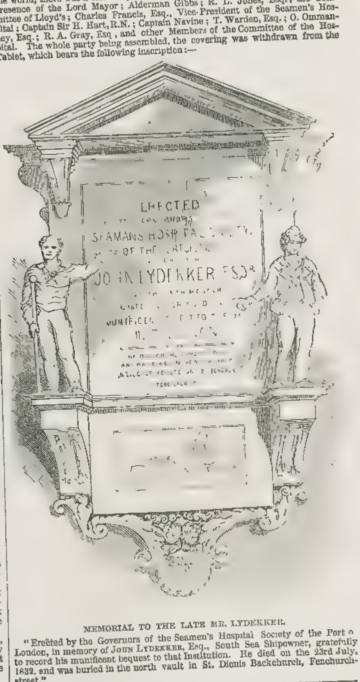
MEMORIAL TO THE LATE MR. LYDEKKER, AT THE ROYAL EXCHANGE.

Some years since, Mr. Lydekker, the eminent South Sea shipowner, bequeathed to the Seamen's Hospital Society the large sum of £58,000; and, to commemorate this munificent bequest, a neat marble Memorial has just been placed in the lobby of Lloyd's Rooms, at the Royal Exchange. It consists of a Tablet, surmounted by a bold pediment on Italian trusses; flanked by two seamen, one with a fractured arm, and the other leaning on a crutch. The Tablet rests on a cornice, beneath which, in a panel, is sculptured a scene from the Southern Whale Fishery; the base being a shell and some cleverly-executed foliage. The artists of the work are Mr. J. J. Sanders, sculptor; and Mr Tite, architect.

As such an example of munificence cannot be too widely known in the mercantile world, there was a formal opening of the Memorial on the 14th inst, in the presence of the Lord Mayor; Alderman Gibbs; R. L. Jones, Esq.; the Committee of Lloyd's; Charles Francis, Esq., Vice-President of the Seamen's Hospital; Captain Sir H. Hart, R.N.; Captain Navine; T. Warden, Esq.; O. Ommanney, Esq.; R. A. Gray, Esq, and other Members of the Committee of the Hospital. The whole party being assembled, the covering was withdrawn from the Tablet, which bears the following inscription:—



MEMORIAL TO THE LATE MR. LYDEKKER.

"Erected by the Governors of the Seamen's Hospital Society of the Port of London, in memory of John Lydekker, Esq., South Sea Shipowner, gratefully to record his munificent bequest to that Institution. He died on the 23rd July, 1832, and was buried in the north vault in St. Dionis Backchurch, Fenchurch-street."

COLOSSAL STATUE OF THE DUKE OF WELLLINGTON.—BY M. C. WYATT, ESQ

MERIT AND REWARD.

TO few men has it been granted to taste so fully of the rewards of great success as the Duke of Wellington, who has this week seen celebrated another ovation. What depends on a man's own qualities and conduct it is an error to ascribe to Fortune; but there are many things which may be the adjuncts of success, wholly independent of merit or ability; and in these the Duke of Wellington has been singularly lucky. He was fortunate in achieving his military fame at a time of life which left him a long period for the enjoyment of his renown; he was fortunate in concluding his active career with his most signal victory, great in itself, greater still, perhaps, in its results, which made it one of the main turning points of modern and European History, one that compels remembrance as the last of that series of conflicts that shook the world; he was fortunate that he served a State whose settled Constitution gave no opportunity, and furnished no temptation to the indulgence of that ambition that has lured more than one great Military Commander to the fate of a Wallenstein; and he has been fortunate that thirty years of peace have brought no need for a second course of service in the field, in which, while it would have been impossible to surpass his former fame, it might have been difficult to have maintained it.

We do not recollect in history an instance of fuller and more perfect realisation by one man of the threefold fortune of action—of fame, wealth, and honour, as its reward—and of a long life and health for the enjoyment of them. If his career does not present the brilliancy and the overpowering elevation of that of Napoleon, it is also spared the dark shadow and humiliation of his decline; while from the casualties that chequered the fate of those with whom he may be more fitly ranked, his life has also been singularly free. By many has fame been achieved, but to few has its full enjoyment been permitted. What has been the doom of most of the warriors whose names occur to us? Blake served a country that he loved, under a Government he had ceased to honour, and died on the ocean he had subdued, with little to console him but the consciousness of having done his duty. Marlborough outlived his influence, and went down the vale of years in the midst of quarrels and cabals; even the national reward he received, became the subject of mean disputes and litigation; and the close of his life has furnished a line to the poet's saddening estimate of human greatness. Wolfe fell in the moment of his victory; as did a yet greater man—Nelson; and though the last gathered in his life a full meed of that glory which inspired him, yet it was accompanied by constant physical suffering that embittered existence, and is partly believed to have made him, in his last battle, court the aim of the foe beneath which he fell. Moore and Abercrombie, alike in fate, won applause that fell only on the dull cold ear of death: but the circle of Wellington's career is perfect in every part; and, by a rare exception from the usual course, he has not only exhausted all that the world could give him during his life, but has seen offered to him that homage which, in most cases, is deferred till the object of it "sleeps in marble."

Statues, bridges, columns, have risen in honour of his name and deeds, and he has seen them rise, with an equanimity amounting almost to coldness. He considers himself "a dead man" in such cases, and leaves the public to do as it pleases. His contemporaries are to him posterity, and anticipate the admiration of future ages those who come after us will have nothing to do in this respect; the columns are all reared, the bridges built, and the pedestals occupied. The effigies of the Roman Emperors were scarcely more numerous in the Eternal City than are those of the Duke of Wellington in England. When Johnson in his gloomy satire bid the Aspirant to Fame reflect how greatness is rewarded, and to see

> How nations slowly wise and meanly just,
> To buried merit raise the tardy bust,

he did not foresee such a career as Wellington's—so busy in its early part, so influential in its later years, so honoured through all!

Altogether it must be admitted that the age is not an ungrateful one; indifference to its heroes is not the vice of the present generation. The State, indeed, does not award the civic or the mural wreath; but the community has taken the task of being grateful, in a great measure, out of the hands of rulers, and has discovered modes of expressing its obligations far superior to the bestowal of garlands and oak leaves. Peace has its perils as well as victories; and the man who saves the life of a submerged fellow-citizen, expects a medal from the Humane Society as a matter of course. Nay, even when the benefit of a man's exertions has been confined to himself, provided he has distinguished himself by a particularly extensive exhibition of successful selfishness, testimonials will not be wanting to him, too, as if he possessed all the virtues incident to humanity. Thus a great railway speculator, who has gathered round him a thick crust of golden thousands, has a score or so additional thrown upon the heap; every contributor of a coin paying a homage of admiration to one who has done so well, what all are trying to do in some way or other.

This is the most unintelligible manifestation of Hero-worship we ever met with, since no one trait of benevolence, courage, devotion, disinterestedness, self sacrifice, or any one of the qualities that men are bound to honour has been established as the ground of the claim; one kind of admiration of great wealth is intelligible enough, and was largely indulged in by our worthy ancestors, the proofs being to be found in the writings of philosophers, poets, and satirists, passim; it was the species of veneration that sprang from an actual participation in the profits of the wealth-maker: in the Roman world he was mostly a General who had squeezed a province, and converted the proceeds into a villa on the Esquiline, and unlimited suppers to his friends. An usurer with more than the average luck in heavy per centages often figures among the millionaires of old; but the result to society was the same: if much money was got much was spent; and, as there was good cheer at the dispersion of it, those who partook might naturally be a little eloquent in praise of the fountain from which they drank. They might occasionally send in a discreetly timed gift, with a view to a place in the rich man's will, like the expectants so deliciously "done" in Ben Jonson's "Volpone;" but beyond that they never went; clubbing together collectively "to give their sum of more to that which had too much," gilding, as it were, the not "refined gold," was a thing undreamed of in their philosophy. For such a case of slavish prostration before the golden calf as that which we need not more directly allude to, required from the age some exhibition of a better kind to redeem us from the laughter of Europe; and, we are happy to say, we are not left without it.

Confessing to a fear that "Tributes" and "Testimonials," and "Tokens of Admiration," may become a kind of fashion, and, by being made matters of course, lose all their value, which consists in their marking the exceptional cases of superior intelligence and exertion in the great cause of mankind, we cannot but admit that there is among us a praiseworthy readiness to acknowledge public services; great merit in a prominent place does not go unrewarded; and, after the grants for the last victories in India, no one will say that a Belisarius, "begging his bread through realms his valour saved," would now be a possibility. The community, though less promptly, and with more effort, is not behind the State in thus honouring those it considers its benefactors; and, in modern times, at least, political services have been as richly rewarded as achievements in the field. A Cobden has his testimonial, his seconds and assistants have services of plate; a Prime Minister is rewarded by a penny subscription, and the freedom of corporations in a gold box; one condition only is required for all this applause and homage; it is SUCCESS! Men must do something, produce some effect in their day and generation, or they may possess all the virtues, and every highest intellectual quality, and go unnoticed and unknown. Nearly all the complaints of "merit unrewarded" arise from those who have had all the requisites for obtaining greatness, save the opportunity of action, or the power of seizing it when it came. They do everything, save—succeed, and so they sink beneath the surface unmarked. The man of action comes, converts their theories into facts, pushes them into action, changes nations, Governments and systems, and is ranked with the great among mankind. There never was a movement that had not both its Luther and its Melancthon, the elegant and refined thinker, and the coarser, but more energetic man of action, without whom the mass of men could not be moved. The last "dare us to forget;" the first plead more gently for remembrance, and are often unduly forgotten.

It is this dazzling power inherent in all action that makes itself visible and palpable to men, which gives such a prominence in history to military greatness; and it has the same effect in this nineteenth century, in the midst of a practical trading people, as in the Republic of Rome, that existed by territorial aggression. There it gave the warrior triumphs, statues, arches, and pillars; and with us the rewards are but little changed: title, rank, wealth, orders, stand instead of the procession to the Capitol; and to them are added monumental honours identical with those of old. In raising them, one thing alone is to be regretted—that more unanimity is not secured. But Art itself has its factions; and in this last great effort the community have had to witness a battle between the Archists and the Anti-Archists, resulting in a compromise which throws an uneasy doubt over the whole proceeding. We have made an experiment for a time in what should have been raised for an eternity; and the sense of a difficulty vanquished is blended with a fear that, possibly, the work may have to be undone. Indeed, the Committee may say, in the quaint language of Sir Thomas Browne—"The circle of our felicities maketh but short arches; our contentments stand upon the tops of pyramids, ready to fall off; and the insecurity of their enjoyments abrupteth our tranquillities!"

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

PARISIANA

(From our own Correspondent.)

PARIS, Wednesday.

Few and far between are the returns of persons of any mark from the country to Paris. Fashion, in this respect, no less intense than the recent temperature, keeps all the gay leaders of society at a distance, if no further off, concealed in the small villages that surround the capital. The consequent diminution in the number of readers has achieved the revolution, which, from the satiety of the public, had long begun, in the French press. We are approaching the last dying speech and confession of the Roman feuilleton. The Débats, the most eminent French journal—whether we consider the talent it commands, or the political secrets it is always the first to announce ex Cathedrâ—is striving to begin the reform.

Within this week its proprietor, M. Bertin, assembled the celebrated writers, the heads of his establishment, J. Janin, Michel Chevalier, St. Marc Girardin, Chasles, Sacy, Barriere, Fleury, &c., and it was decided that novels should cease to form part of the daily paper as soon as it could be done without raising an outcry on the part of the subscribers, who, true to human nature, esteem little what they have, but violently lament what they lose, however worthless. The marvel is how M. Bertin could ever have adopted this system, French newspapers not having even now area sufficient for the information the most essential to men of business, whilst novels divided into 365 chapters only manage to attract attention for a time by the daily horrors and immorality they depict: at last the reader loses all appetite as well as taste for them, his palate and the "stomach of his sense" being both destroyed by the literary Cayenne. The Presse appears ready to follow the example; it is even now publishing travels instead of novels. In another direction we see that MM. Duming, Hippolite Babou, and Claude Saignes, its best writers, have devoted the Courrier Français for a new review; and M. F. Mallefille has left the National in the lurch, disgusted with his office; as many, however, have been before him, for, as the celebrated Armand Carrel once observed, whenever a clever pen presents itself at the office of the National, it always finds four or five old penknives to behead it—pour le Guillotiner.

A year or two more and the Roman feuilleton will be no more—leaving it a fact of literary history that the most volatile of nations endeavoured to make journalism the most heavy and prosy; whilst the most serious in antiquity (the Romans) opined that, of all places, in the daily chronicle of passing things, brevity is most the soul of wit; and the first Roman journalist (Costus), whilst throwing off his quotidian records, called them the "ludibria ventis," for he threw his leaves to the passing, ever-changing wind of popular opinion. Our conduct in this respect is highly paradoxical and very uncongenial to our natures; for, in whatever is to be achieved in art, literature, or industry, by inspiration, or by the effort of the moment, we equal—and, in my opinion, we surpass—every other nation; but we cannot screw our courage to any struggle that is continuous and enduring. One proof of this I take to be the envy which produces the present outcry against the Jews, who have outstripped us in every department. The walls and shops of Paris are placarded by bills, announcing pamphlets for and against "King Rothschild the First" ("Le Roi Rothschild I."); and a new edition is but now appearing of M. Tonvenal's "Les Juifs Rois de l'Epoque"—which, by-the-by, has had also two editions in Germany.

It is not in finance and commerce alone the Jews have beaten us; their success and popularity at the Bar and in the Chamber of Deputies is all-surpassing. It is but four days since that 10,000 persons of all classes issued from the town of Chinon, to do honour to their deputy, M. Crémieux, an Israelite. On the other hand, the classical stage of the country, with Racine and Corneille, is now placed at the mercy of a fair Jewess, Rachel; and the Minister of the Interior and the Théâtre Français are now in a state of trepidation, because the sole and absolute Queen of Tragedy, in high dudgeon at being pressed to fulfil her duties, has refused to perform any longer the conditions of her former engagement, which compelled her to act twice a week on receiving 50,000 francs a year, with three months' furlough. There is at this moment great likelihood that the Queen of French Tragedy will go and join the sole representative of French Comedy, Mdlle. Plessy, who a year since abandoned the Théâtre Français and la belle France for the hyperborean plaudits and "golden ioys" of St. Petersburgh.

After a stagnant month of the dead season, the Parisians having exhausted all the subjects of excitement in which they habitually delight, have seized upon the Montpensier marriage with an eagerness nothing can surpass. Each circumstance, domestic and political, of this event has been distended so as to fill up the utmost void the most fervid imaginations of the Parisians in their longings can conceive. Unfortunately, the domestic circle and the court in which Queen Christina, aided by her husband, Munoz, so despotically rules her two Royal children, and the eight others she possesses, offers details, and daily occurrences of the most piquant as well as lamentable character; these are, however, of too degrading a nature to be revealed; but they form the medium in which Louis Philippe and his ambassadors have been compelled to move and furnish at present to French Causeries inexhaustible material: so much the more so as discretion is not a characteristic of official persons in France, and in the promiscuous state of society here—thanks to the King's garrulity, and the number of tattling Deputies, Peers, and Aide-de-camp, by whom the Sovereign and M. Guizot are surrounded. Every evening are chronicled all over Paris, all the smallest as well as greatest secrets of Court and Cabinet. The midnight scenes at the Escurial, commented on in Paris, are, however, unfit for publication. But they are not the only amusing results of this affair. The French are particularly amused at Lord Normanby's misadventures. Relying on the entente cordiale, and the amity, all couleur de rose, betwixt the two Sovereigns, the noble Marquis came to Paris, suspecting nothing He had resolved to spend a month or six weeks at the waters of Vichy, and then to enjoy his blushing honours and his bed of roses at the British Embassy. As [illegible] his credentials a political bomb exploded at his feet; it was at his [illegible] w, M. Guizot broke the intelligence to the new Ambassador of England. His astonishment and embarrassment were naturally indescribable—he muttered an indistinct opinion, and retired; uncertain how the Ministers at home would act; whilst he dispatched a courier to London, he hastened to Vichy, both to avoid initiatory steps on his part, as well as not to appear to confer too much importance on M. Guizot's coup de Jarnac. But he was destined to swim in more troublous waters than those of Vichy, and he was quickly summoned to Paris to present the protest of the English Government against an infraction of mutual amity, as unexpected as unprovoked. So much for Lord Normanby's unpropitious début. On the other hand, it is well known to all political men that this Spanish affair was an invention of Louis Philippe, and that, whatever may have been M. Guizot's inclination to avenge himself of his former defeat by Lord Palmerston, his principal motive, as Responsible Adviser of the Crown, in yielding himself to the King's wishes, was, by effecting this opulent marriage, to avoid presenting the Law of Dotation of the Duke de Nemours, which, in Louis Philippe's desire to increase the revenues of his family, is the thought ever uppermost, and the only measure which no Minister can attempt again without incurring general odium Now it happens that such has been the outcry against Louis Philippe's thirst after a marriage portion in this negotiation, that he has been obliged at last to play the generous, and formally renounce the Donna Luisa's fortune. Thus, whilst France has forfeited the amity of England, and espoused a Spanish cause, which, at no distant day, she must support at the sacrifice of blood and treasure, Louis Philippe has lost at one fell swoop, and first starting, his dear ingots. But, as the French proverb says, "Quand le vin est tiré, il faut le boire" and the young Princes, amidst the tears and prayers of their agonised mother, have left Paris for Madrid. With them, crowds have gone to witness, or to chronicle events for others. Théophile Gautier, the celebrated feuilletonist, who has already published travels in Spain, left Paris five days since, to convey the marvels of matrimonial conquest to the Presse; whilst Strauss is at this moment crossing the Pyrenees, to ensure to the Duke of Montpensier other bands besides those of Guerillas. For the next fortnight, all Paris will be in Madrid—at least, in imagination. We can but repeat as our opinion what a great diplomatist said to M. Guizot a few days since, when he retired after a long conference: "I suppose you now will exclaim, like the Grand Monarque, 'Il n'y a plus de Pyrenées'; but, depend upon it, if the political Pyrenées are gone, the chasms and precipices are more numerous, wider, and deeper than ever."

FRANCE.

It is scarcely necessary to say that public attention is completely absorbed in Paris with the subject of the proposed marriages in Spain. Some of the papers contain very angry articles against England, and the most contradictory reports are daily circulated upon the subject.

The Marquis of Normanby has had an interview with M. Guizot, to present a protest against the marriage of the Infanta of Spain with the Duke de Montpensier. A private letter from Paris says, "The interview of the Marquis of Normanby with M. Guizot was, it is presumed, a very animated one, for when M. Guizot issued from his cabinet to conduct the noble Lord to the entrance, he was much flushed a matter of rare occurrence with him. Lord Normanby showed quite as much colour. They had scarcely separated, when M. Guizot was besieged by persons anxious to learn what had been the nature of their conversation. It became known immediately that M. Guizot professed himself satisfied with the communication made to him, which he described as couched in terms much more moderate than he had expected. This naturally produced a favourable effect out of doors, but there is another version of the story in circulation. It is said that the protest presented to M. Guizot by Lord Normanby expressed in the most energetic terms the hostility of the British Government to the contemplated marriage of the Duke de Montpensier with the Infanta of Spain, which, the document contended, would be in direct contravention of the Treaty of Utrecht. It added that even if the Treaty of Utrecht had ceased to exist, or had never had existence, the British Government would protest with equal energy against the marriage, on the broad general ground that it would affect the interests of all Europe, and disturb the balance of power. The document is described as concluding by the expression of a fear, or a conviction, that 'the marriage is calculated injuriously to effect the relations subsisting between France and Great Britain.' This protest was immediately forwarded to the King at St. Cloud."

The Epoque, after quoting an announcement in a Paris paper that "Lord Normanby had presented an energetic note to M. Guizot," denies the fact, and says—"We have been assured that Lord Palmerston has perfectly dissembled, as a well-bred gentleman should, his ill-humour at the marriage of the Duke de Montpensier. His Lordship is, moreover, too able a statesman to protest energetically without a firm resolution not to confine himself to mere words. Weak Governments protest; but powerful ones act."

Orders have been received at the Palace of Compiegne to prepare apartments for a portion of the Royal Family, which intends to visit that residence towards the close of the month. The King, it was believed, would be of the party

The most important fact announced in the French papers is that their Royal Highnesses the Duke de Montpensier and the Duke d'Aumale took their departure at six o'clock on Monday morning for Spain. They went by the railroad to Tours, where they were to arrive at twelve, and immediately to proceed to Bordeaux. Fifteen postilions and forty-two horses were ordered to be ready at every relay. M. de Vischer, the Court Inspecteur des Voyages, left on Sunday, in order to have all in readiness at the different relays. The Princes arrived at Bordeaux on Tuesday morning, and were to proceed to Bayonne in the course of the day. The following were the persons in attendance upon the Duke de Montpensier: General Baron Atthalin, Peer of France, First Aide-de-Camp to the King; Colonel Fiereck, his Orderly Officer; M. A. de Latour, his Private Secretary; and M. A. Pasquier, Surgeon, nephew of Dr. Pasquier, First Surgeon to the King and the Prince Royal. The Duke d'Aumale was attended by Lieutenant-Colonel Baron Jamin, his Aide-de-Camp, and Commandant de Beaufort d'Hautpool, his Orderly Officer. The Princes were to take their departure from Bayonne for Madrid on Thursday, travelling by post. They were to be received at Irun, the first stage on entering Spain, by the Marquises de Santa Cruz and Povar, and the Marquis d'Arana, Grandees of Spain. Their Royal Highnesses were to stop at Tolosa, Vittoria, Burgos, and Segovia, arriving at Madrid on the 5th of October.

Incendiary fires continue to desolate all France, and Burgundy in particular. Seven villages of the district of Morvand had been almost entirely consumed during the last three weeks, and, notwithstanding the vigilance of the police and the inhabitants, it had been impossible to seize the incendiaries. The whole population had been ever since on the watch, day and night, and it was dangerous for strangers to traverse the country. In the districts of Montargis and Gien the agitation was extreme. The inhabitants everywhere mounted guard, and several persons mistaken for malefactors had been either killed or wounded by the armed peasantry.

On Friday morning (last week), Jean Pétry, the waiter at a coffee-house at St. Ouen, who, it will be remembered, was last month tried and found guilty of the murder of his mistress, under revolting circumstances, and of afterwards robbing the house, was executed at the Barrière St. Jacques. He retained to the last moment the same revolting indifference which he has evinced ever since the committal of his crime; and, when ascending the steps of the scaffold, he stopped for a moment, and coolly called out in German to an acquaintance in the crowd, and asked him whether his (Petry's) uncle was present. Almost the entire commune of St. Ouen was present at the execution. This, says one of the journals, makes the 153rd execution which has taken place in Paris since the beginning of the present century.

SPAIN.

We learn that Mr. Bulwer was received, on the 21st ult., by Queen Isabella II. in a private audience, and congratulated her Majesty on her approaching marriage. The Infanta was not present, and the excuse made (by the journals) for her absence is, that she has been slightly indisposed for the few previous days It is evident, however, that the real reason was the awkwardness which would result from her Royal Highness' presence at an interview, demanded by the English Minister, for the purpose of congratulating the Queen on her marriage, while he, at the same time, was protesting against her own. The French Ambassador had not, by the latest accounts, made a formal demand of the hand of the Infanta, in the name of the King of the French. The indisposition of the Infanta is made the excuse for the delay in this case, as for the absence of her Highness from Mr. Bulwer's audience.

The Chamber of Deputies met on the 21st, but, owing to the attractions of a bull-fight, it was long before a sufficient number of members arrived in time to discuss the bill for authorising the Government to collect the taxes until the end of the year 1846. M. Gonzales Romero supported his amendment, whereby the Government was to be permitted to collect the taxes until the 31st of December, "when the new Cortes would be assembled." M. Munoz Maldonado opposed the motion, and M. Gonzales Romero replied After two days' discussion, the vote of confidence for the collection of the taxes was passed, by a majority of 134 to 13

The Senate have presented to the Queen their Address, in reply to her matrimonial message, and they also waited on her mother, the Infanta, and the Infante Don Francisco de Assiz. It was their President, the Marquis de Miraflores, who had the honour of congratulating the aforesaid Royal personages. To the Senate's address the Queen replied as follows:—"The consoling hopes which my heart founded on the marriage I am about to contract, and on that of my beloved sister, are converted into infallible certainty when I see you around me, and congratulating me in the name of the country which you so lawfully represent. I thank you, gentlemen, for the solicitude with which you express to me your devotedness; and I trust that the Almighty will bless these two marriages by vouchsafing the happiness I demand for myself and my sister, and peace and felicity to my people

The day of the marriages of the Queen and of the Infanta continues to be fixed for the 10th of October

The Eco del Comercio, Clamor Publico, Espectador, and Nuevo Espectador, having been seized on the 22nd ult., the editors of these four Progresista journals had met and agreed to a joint declaration against that arbitrary act, which they published on the 23rd. The Espanol was also seized for copying an article of the Times of the 16th on the Spanish marriages.

The offence of the Eco del Comercio was a proposal to present Senor Orense with a medal. It had also previously remonstrated against the seizures, but in moderate language.

The Debats at length ventures upon an explanation in regard to alleged violence on the part of the French Ambassador, towards the Queen of Spain, to induce her to consent to marry Don Francisco. The Débats says:—"The evening of the 26th and that of the 27th of August, were exclusively devoted by the Queen of Spain to her usual consultations with her Ministers; and, according to her custom, her Majesty, before she withdrew to her private apartments, received at an advanced hour of the night some persons of her household. Those who pretend to be well informed on the customs of the Spanish Court ought to know that the habit of the Queen, as it was that of her mother, Queen Christina, is to consult her Ministers during the evening, and to give receptions (hold a drawing-room) during the night. It was some hours after quitting her Ministers that the Queen, who received only M. Donoso Cortes, and afterwards waited on her mother, recalled her Ministers, to announce to them her resolution. Several amongst them were still in the palace, at the office of the First Secretary of State. The others had withdrawn. All immediately assembled in her Majesty's presence. They quitted her after having received her orders, and it was during that evening that the Queen signed the convocation of the Cortes. The French Ambassador did not interfere in the slightest degree"

The Times makes these remarks upon the explanation of the Débats:—"So far as our contemporary appears to have been instructed, it speaks truth. The Queen did recal her Ministers on the night in question, but it was after weeping bitterly and continuously for two hours in her Majesty's private apartment, when, worn out by solicitation and teazing, she descended, and said to the Queen Mother 'Do as you will; I accept Don Francisco.' The Ministers were immediately recalled. The Royal assent was given. The marriage of the Infanta with the Duke de Montpensier was, in that moment of excitement, urged upon her, and acquiesced in. M. Bresson was produced, and had the satisfaction of learning that his mission had, through the all-powerful aid of the Queen Mother, succeeded."

NEW CHURCH AT HAMBURG.

The ceremony of laying the first stone of the new church of St. Nicholai at Hamburg, took place on Thursday, the 24th of September, in the presence of at least 20,000 persons; the surrounding houses, as well as the platforms, being crowded with spectators. The church is intended to occupy the site of the former one (destroyed by the great fire of 1842) in the large open space called the Hopfenmarket. It is from the designs of Messrs. Scott and Moffatt, of London; the estimate being considerably above the sum intended to be applied, which was 1,000,000 marks banco, or about £80,000. The foundation, which is carried to a depth of 36 feet, was commenced last November, and is not yet completed. Round the eastern end of the new building seats were erected, rising to a height of thirty or forty feet, and accommodating about 10,000 persons. In the centre was the platform for those assisting at the ceremony, and in front was another large sloping platform for those who could not procure seats. The ceremony (which was more lengthy than is usual on such occasions in England) commenced at eleven o'clock in the forenoon, with the singing of an anthem, accompanied by a military band of about thirty men selected from four regiments of the "regulars," after which Dr. Strauch (the "pastor" of the parish) delivered a most eloquent address, which was followed by another anthem. The Chief Burgomeister then addressed the assembly, and then another anthem was sung. The Chief Burgomeister then proceeded in the usual manner to lay the first stone, being assisted by three other Members of the Senate, and four Priests, and attended by Mr. Scott, the architect, and about sixty masons dressed in leather aprons and black cocked hats, each carrying a long steel set-square; two of the principal masons bearing on purple velvet cushions the silver trowel and mallet, and two more carrying the level and mahogany set-square to be used at the ceremony. Beneath the stone, which is at the north-east angle of the choir, was placed a cylindrical vessel, containing the coins, &c.; and over this was a large brass plate with an appropriate inscription. On this the stone was lowered. The ceremony concluded by each of the Priests pronouncing a blessing over the stone; after which another anthem was sung. The whole passed off well, without any accident or disturbance, which, considering the immense concourse of people, was to every one a matter of surprise, as well as congratulation, and reflects much credit on those entrusted with the management.—(A fine Engraving of this splendid church appeared in No. 171 of our Journal.)

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.—THE WAR WITH THE KAFFIRS.

Cape of Good Hope papers have reached us to the 21st of July, ten days later than our last accounts. Nothing of particular importance had occurred, but the extracts which we subjoin from the papers possess some interest. No engagements of moment had taken place on the frontier up to the latest date. The operations of the Kaffirs were confined entirely to petty depredations upon the cattle and supplies. In one of these affairs, a very enterprising settler named Nourse lost his life. Supplies for the troops were being landed at the mouth of the Fish River.

LATEST FROM THE FRONTIER.

(From the Graham's Town Journal, of July 11.)

Wednesday.—An express arrived this morning from Fort Beaufort, with the mournful intelligence of the death of Mr. Gordon Nourse, one of the most intelligent, enterprising, and high-spirited residents on this frontier. On the evening of the 5th instant, a small party of the Kaffirs having succeeded in capturing a herd of about 100 head of cattle, while grazing near the Guala post, the residence of the deceased, were immediately followed by him and a few others. The marauders were overtaken in the kloofs, and the cattle were re-captured, with the loss of four of the enemy, who were shot. Mr. N—— had nearly reached the end of the kloof, when a ball, fired with fatal precision by a lurking Kaffir, mortally wounded himself and a man of colour attending on him. Mr. Nourse succeeded in reaching home, and survived the fatal wound about two hours, perfectly conscious that it was mortal. The ball, it seems, struck him a little above the hip, and, cutting upwards obliquely, had passed out near the opposite shoulder. His friend and companion, Mr. Vowe, was, we understand, with him at the time of his death. The spot where he fell is known by the name of Fuller's Kloof, and which forms one of the main sprouts of the Blinkwater. The cattle taken by the Kaffirs were the joint property of the deceased, Mr. Vowe, and Mr. Botha. The Hottentot who fell with Mr. Nourse behaved very gallantly, seized the gun of the latter on his falling, and, though mortally wounded himself, got out of the bush with it. A person named Wilkie was also severely wounded—a ball carrying away a portion of the chin, and then lodging in the shoulder. He is, however, said to be in a fair way of recovery

The men who rode the express, report that on Monday evening last six or eight mounted Kaffirs approached to within gunshot of the wooden bridge at Fort Beaufort, and fired a volley. The place was instantly in alarm, and pursuit was made, but the marauders, who appear to have been actuated by a mere spirit of bravado, were off, scampering through the bushes, which are thickly spread over the ground in that neighbourhood, and high up the Kaffirland mountains. We learn, also, that thirty head of the contractor's slaughter cattle were swept off from the vicinity of Fort Beaufort, about fourteen days ago.

Saturday.—We have received the following communication from Fort Beaufort, dated the 7th instant:—

"Bodies of Kaffirs, consisting of from 10 to 20, continue to infest this part of the frontier, and whenever they can succeed in driving off flocks or herds by stealth they do so, avoiding, however, a combat, either to capture or for the protection of what they may have stolen. In these forays several horrible murders have been committed lately by these cowardly assassins on herdsmen in the vicinity of this place. Last week they shot two Fingoes while herding cattle near Macomo's Kraal; and, not satisfied with killing the poor fellows, they tormented one of them by flaying his face while he was yet alive. The other escaped from them mortally wounded, but has since died. The day after this, Field Captain Loxton was ordered out with his Hottentot corps on escort duty, and on his return home at daybreak of the 2nd instant, he discovered the traces of a flock of sheep which the Kaffirs were attempting to drive across a drift on the Kat River, near the Blinkwater Post, but who, on hearing the approach of his men, had taken shelter in the bush with the sheep. On being followed into the thicket, the Kaffirs retreated, leaving four hundred and ninety sheep in the hands of the pursuing party. From circumstances which have transpired subsequently, it appears that these marauders, after loosing their booty, took post during the remainder of the day on a high conical hill, overlooking the spot where the sheep had been taken, watching the herds from the Blinkwater Post, in the hope that chance would afford them an opportunity of repairing their loss at the expense of these men. Unfortunately, some straggling sheep being seen near where these Kaffirs lay in ambush, two of these men were induced to proceed towards the spot, and were intercepted and fired on—one having his arm shattered, and the other his gun split in two near the lock. The latter, however, escaped, and on reporting the case, Captain Loxton was ordered out with his company to the spot, whence the bloodspoor was traced for about half a mile, and here a most shocking spectacle presented itself. It appeared that the wounded man had dropped from loss of blood, and that the Kaffirs had then tortured him in a horrible manner. They had first torn open the sleeve of the shattered arm; they had ripped open the wound with the assegai, and extracted the bullet. They stabbed him once in the bowels, and six times in the neck, also in the mouth and breast, and mutilated and bruised the broken arm with knobbed keeries. The remains of this unfortunate man being buried, the bush was then effectually scoured, but without finding the murderers. This is now generally the case, the Kaffirs never presenting themselves voluntarily, unless in overwhelming numbers. Besides these affairs, one or two other skirmishes have been reported, in one of which, the friendly Kaffir Hermanus recaptured a few head of cattle and killed one or two of the marauders; another is the case of Mr. Ryneveld's company, who having pursued some of his oxen which had been carried off, succeeded in overtaking them, and shooting two out of the three Kaffirs who were driving them. The third, who was on horseback, escaped. Information has been received that a number of Kaffirs have been seen in Vader Kloof (behind the Kromme Berg), and a force was to be sent in quest of them."

Since the above, accounts have been received direct from Algoa Bay, to the 22d of August. They announce the landing of provisions and stores at the mouth of the Fish and Buffalo rivers. The troops had moved on to the Kei, where a skirmish had taken place with the Kaffirs, who, being defeated, fled across the river, leaving their women and children, and an immense quantity of cattle in the possession of the English.

THE UNITED STATES AND MEXICO.

The steamer Britannia has arrived from Boston and Halifax, with the usual mails of the 16th of September

The political news in the New York papers is not very important. The rumour which had reached us by the way of Jamaica of the capture of Monterey, in California, by the American squadron, and which was hardly credited, has since been confirmed. The proclamation of Commodore Sloat, commanding the American naval forces in the Pacific, dated 6th July, has been received. On that day he entered the harbour of Monterey, and in his proclamation called on the Californians to remain tranquil, assuring them that he came as a friend to the people, and that California was destined to form a part and parcel of the great Federal Union. Several weeks ago the Lexington store ship sailed for California with stores, ammunition, and cannon, and having on board a company of United States Artillery, in order to aid in the permanent establishment of the authority and jurisdiction of the United States in that region.

From Camargo, we learn that it was the intention of General Taylor to leave that place with the main body of the army about the 5th of September. Three hundred mules, 200 waggons, and 160,000 rations had been sent on in advance; and it is stated that the General intends, if unopposed by the Mexicans, to proceed at once to Saltillo. Other accounts state, however, that his means of transport were still deficient. Meanwhile, parties of rangers were actively scouring the country around the destined line of march, and had visited en route several of the small towns of the district without encountering resistance or discovering any signs of an opposing force. According to general report, however, the Mexicans had concentrated at Monterey, to the extent of some few thousand ill-paid and ill-clothed men. Disgraceful riots, we also learn, had taken place among the volunteers at Burita, arising from a feud existing between an Irish company and two of the Georgian corps. The affair took place on board of a steam-boat which was anchored near the shore. Guns, swords, and bayonets were used with reckless violence. The colonel of a regiment of Illinois volunteers, who, at the head of two of his companies, attempted to quell the disturbance, was wounded, and his men were driven back; and when at length the rioters submitted, a considerable number of men had been either killed or wounded.

The California expedition was on the point of leaving New York.

Rumours were current that an agent from the Mexican Government was at Washington.

Forty miles above Leynosa, on the 21st of August, the steam-boat Enterprise burst her boiler, and blew up. Five persons were killed instantly, and several wounded

Killed.—Enoch Tucker, and A. Bosnell, of Tennessee; Mr. Scaps, of Texas; Thomas Ganfrey, of New York; a cook, and a stranger, names unknown.

Badly Wounded.—Lieutenant Dearing, of the Louisville Legion; William A. Crook, and C. B. Crook, of Tennessee; Captain Woods, William Grey, Jacob Bouridge, and Thomas Eagle, of Texas; J. C. Howard, suttler, of Baltimore; Joseph Gregsby, and Mr. Heckery, suttlers, of the Louisville Legion; Taylor, the pilot; Thomas Hemper, Samuel Martin, Patrick Kelley, Frank and Pallacott, deck hands; and J. F. Crank, the mate. 12 slightly wounded. On the 28th ult., Lieutenant Dearing was out of danger. Patrick Kelley was out of his senses, and would probably die.

The United States brig of war Truxton had been totally wrecked on the 15th, near the mouth of the river Tuppan. Two lieutenants and nineteen men reached the squadron at Vera Cruz in boats: the remainder of the officers and crew, including also the captain, landed with the intention of surrendering themselves prisoners of war. The Princeton steam-frigate proceeded to the assistance of the brig on the arrival of the boats; but, finding her rescue to be impossible, set fire to the hull, and, after ascertaining that the remainder of the crew had set out for Tampico, she returned to Vera Cruz. Tampico and Tobasco had joined in the revolution. The yellow fever is stated to have broken out on board the British vessels of war at Sacrificios. A portion of the United States squadron was suffering from scurvy.

OPERATIONS IN BORNEO.

Tuesday night's Gazette contains several despatches from Sir Thomas Cochrane, detailing the operations of the English fleet at Borneo. The following is a summary of the results to which these despatches refer:—His Excellency Rear-Adm. Sir J. T. Cochrane, after his arrival off the river of Borneo Proper, tried to arrange matters with the Sultan in an amicable manner, but found that all his efforts were met with suspicion. The Sultan refused to allow his Excellency to go up the river, except in a small boat, and behaved altogether in such a distrustful manner, that negotiations were found to be useless. Decided measures were therefore, resolved upon

On the 6th of July, the Spiteful towed the Agincourt, Iris, Ringdove, Hazard, and Royalist into the river, within about twelve miles below the town of Brunè. On the 7th, the Hazard and the Royalist were moved up to the bar, and the Honourable Company's steamer Phlegethon towed the Royalist over the bar, and returned to the squadron for the boats, &c. The Admiral then hoisted his flag on board the Spiteful; and, on the 8th, the Spiteful and the Phlegethon—the latter, having a much less draught of water than the Spiteful, taking eight boats in tow proceeded up the river. On the steamers, &c., coming within range of the forts, the Malays opened a fire upon them with round and grape, by which two men were killed and seven wounded on board the Phlegethon. This was returned from the Phlegethon with rockets and guns. The boats were now cast off, and the crews, under the command of Capt. Mundy, of her Majesty's ship Iris, landed and stormed the forts. The guns in the two forts, seven in number, were spiked, and in the afternoon the forts were destroyed. The steamers and boats then proceeded up the river towards the town of Brunè. On rounding the point of the town, another fort opened on the Phlegethon with the boats in tow. The steamers kept on their course, returning the fire: and, on a party of marines landing at the fort at half-past four in the afternoon, it was found deserted. The marines were encamped for the night on the hill.

On the 10th a party of marines and small-arm men proceeded up the river, under command of Captain Mundy, on an inland expedition, in pursuit of the Sultan and his army, who had fled into the interior, but they did not succeed in coming up with the Malays. This expedition was absent four days. After their return, the steamers and boats moved down the river to the ships, and on the 25th the fleet left the river and proceeded to Pulo Labuan, off which it was lying when the Spiteful left; 57 guns in all were taken possession of, of which 27 were beautiful brass guns. One of these is described to be a magnificent Spanish piece of the reign of Charles III. The Phlegethon was to proceed on the 25th July, to Amboong and Tampasook for bullocks for the use of the fleet; and it was generally thought that the Admiral would proceed immediately to China. The Dædalus joined on the 11th with provisions and coals.

The following despatch contains a sketch of the posture of affairs at the latest period:—

[illegible] XCELLENCY SIR THOMAS COCHRANE, the Admiral Commander-in-Chief of her [illegible] Majesty's Naval Forces within these Seas, to PANGERAN MOUMEIN, who has [illegible] è, to PANGERAN BAHAR, the Ministers, Nacodahs, and community of the good people of that city.

It was this time last year that I heard, through James Brooke, Esq., of Sarawak, that the Sultan invited me to visit Borneo.

On my arrival off Moarro, he sent Pangeran Bedurudeen, and numerous other princes, to welcome me, stating that they had his friendship.

At the Sultan's solicitations, I visited the city, he again expressed to me his confidence in his uncle Rajah Muda Hassim and Pangeran Bedurudeen, and his apprehension of Pangeran Usop. He solicited me to send a guard to protect his palace from Pangeran Usop's designs, and he invited me to attack, and, if possible, destroy him.

He also requested me to attack Seriff Housman, because it was Seriff Housman's intention to ruin Brunè, in consequence of the treaty entered into by the Sultan and Muda Hassim with the Queen of Great Britain. I went and attacked Seriff Housman, and annihilated him, at a great cost of British life.

After this, James Brooke, Esq., visited the Sultan, and he returned many thanks for what we had done, and expressed himself entirely friendly to us. Yet a short time afterwards he ordered the death of his uncle the Rajah Muda Hassim, Pangeran Bedurudeen, and many other of his relations, all of whom he declared to me were his friends; and, conscious of his fault, he immediately erected forts and batteries to oppose the British

Shortly after that, he endeavoured to entrap by false representations, the captain of the man-of-war I sent to Brunè.

Subsequently, on my arrival with the squadron and ascending the river, his forts and batteries fired upon our ships first, without any provocation. On that very day, in a moment as it were, his forts and batteries were destroyed, and the city was captured, and, if I were to retaliate upon him as he deserves, I should reduce the whole to ashes

But I have pity upon the better portion of the community, and though the conduct of the Sultan is detestable in the eyes of God and the Queen; I have likewise, for this once, some pity for the Sultan, because I understand he has been instigated by wicked advisers, and that if I spare him now, he will undoubtedly drive them from his country.

I extend this clemency because clemency is the attribute of the British nation, and because I wish, if possible, to spare this fine country.

I shall send one of my ships of war, from time to time, to inquire into the conduct of the Sultan; and he may rest assured, should I find he adheres to his wicked courses, I will return, I will burn the city to the ground, and I will pursue the Sultan, and expend thousands of dollars until I take him either dead or alive

Let the Rajahs choose between good and evil, let the Sultan also choose the wise alternative—let him rule his country with justice and mercy; and at a future time he may ensure the friendship of the Queen of England, who has the will and the power to foster the good and punish the evil-doer

The Admiral requests Pangeran Moumein to let the Sultan thoroughly understand the contents of this letter the moment he returns to the city

Dated on board her Britannic Majesty's steam vessel Spiteful off the City of Brunè, July 19, 1846.

THE COURT AND HAUT TON.

Windsor, Thursday Evening.—(From our own Correspondent.)—Her Majesty and his Royal Highness Prince Albert walked, unattended, this morning, immediately after breakfast, through the private plantations in the Home-park to the Queen's private kennel, and afterwards visited the Royal aviary. Their Royal Highnesses the Prince of Wales and Prince Alfred rode out at the same time upon their Shetland ponies. The Princess Royal was taken for an early airing in the Great Park, in an open carriage, attended by Lady Lyttelton. The Prince Consort, immediately after his return to the Castle with her Majesty, proceeded to the Royal preserves in the vicinity of Virginia Water, attended by Mr. G. E. Anson. His Royal Highness had most excellent sport, having bagged upwards of twenty brace of pheasants, besides a good sprinkling of partridges and hares. Sir Robert and Lady Peel took leave of her Majesty and Prince Albert this morning, and proceeded to town, from Slough, by the nine o'clock train. Her Majesty took an airing this afternoon, in the Great Park, in a pony phaeton and pair, driven by his Royal Highness Prince Albert.

Departure of Her Royal Highness the Princess William of Prussia.—Thursday forenoon her Royal Highness the Princess William of Prussia, who accompanied the Queen Dowager to this country, from the Continent, on the 28th ult., took her departure for Rotterdam, in the Black Eagle steamer. Shortly before eleven o'clock her Royal Highness, accompanied by the members of her suite, the Earl of Denbigh (Master of the Horse to the Queen Dowager), the Prince Edward of Saxe Weimar, Viscount Barrington, Mr. Bedford, &c., left Marlborough House for the place of embarkation, which was reached shortly after twelve. At the Royal Dockyard the necessary arrangements for the departure of her Royal Highness had been made at an early hour. A guard of honour of the Royal Marines was drawn up, from the stairs to the spot where the carriage stopped, and the passage was covered with green cloth. Four guns of the Royal Horse Artillery were also in readiness. His Excellency the Chevalier Bunsen and Madame Bunsen arrived shortly before twelve o'clock. On the arrival of her Highness the battery fired a Royal salute; and other demonstrations, lacking nothing of respect, were made by the ladies and gentlemen, and the naval and military officers, assembled around. The Princess, on alighting, was received by the Commandant of the garrison, Sir Thomas Downman, and by a numerous staff. Her Highness remained in conversation with the distinguished persons mentioned, for a few minutes; and, during the brief interval, was introduced by the Chevalier Bunsen, to Sir Charles Napier, who happened at the time to be in the yard. Soon after, the Princess and suite entered a boat of the William and Mary yacht, and proceeded, amidst silent but respectful demonstrations from the crowd, on board the Black Eagle. The battery immediately fired another salute of twenty-one guns, and the band played some appropriate airs. The steamer having got under way, with the prospect of a delightful passage, as the weather was most propitious, was out of sight in a few minutes.

Visit of the Queen Dowager to Buckingham Palace.—Her Majesty the Queen Dowager, and her Royal Highness the Princess of Prussia, accompanied by his Serene Highness Prince Edward of Saxe Weimar, went on Wednesday to inspect Buckingham Palace. Her Majesty and the Princess were conducted up the grand staircase to the State rooms, and remained an hour inspecting the different saloons. On leaving the Palace, the Queen Dowager and the Princess of Prussia, accompanied by Prince Edward of Saxe Weimar, and attended by the Royal suite, went to inspect the Wellington Statue, and afterwards proceeded to Westminster Abbey.

Birthday of the Princess of Prussia.—Wednesday was the birthday of her Royal Highness the Princess of Prussia. The Princess received a visit of congratulation in the forenoon from her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, who arrived in town from her residence, Frogmore House, Windsor. The Royal Duchess partook of a déjeuner with the Queen Dowager and her Royal Highness. The Princess also received visits of congratulation during the day from their Royal Highnesses the Duke of Cambridge and the Hereditary Grand Duke of Mecklenburg Strelitz

The King of the Belgians.—The King of the Belgians will, it is stated, leave the Tyrol, and arrive in Paris at the end of the week. In the French capital his Majesty will be joined by the Queen and her youthful family

The Queen Dowager.—Her Majesty the Queen Dowager and her Royal Highness the Princess of Prussia, accompanied by his Serene Highness Prince Edward of Saxe Weimar, took leave of the Queen and Prince Albert on Tuesday morning, and proceeded to town.

Prince Frederick of Hesse.—Prince Frederick of Hesse (brother of her Royal Highness the Duchess of Cambridge) arrived at Kew on Monday evening, on a visit to the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge, and on Tuesday accompanied their Royal Highnesses to town.

CHURCH, UNIVERSITIES, &c.

THE APPREHENDED FAMINE—FORM OF PUBLIC PRAYER.

His Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury, agreeably to the order of the Privy Council, has issued the following form of prayer to Almighty God for relief from the dearth and scarcity now existing in parts of the United Kingdom, owing to the failure of some of the crops of the present year. To be read in all churches and chapels of England and Wales, on Sunday, the 11th of October, and two following Sundays.

A FORM OF PRAYER TO ALMIGHTY GOD.

"O God, at whose bidding the earth, which sustaineth the life of man, hath withholden in parts of these islands the wonted provision of food, and turned abundance into scarcity, withdraw, we beseech Thee, the judgment of which we are justly afraid, that the poor perish not by famine.

"We acknowledge, O Lord, that by our strifes and divisions, misuse of Thy gifts, and forgetfulness of Thy manifold mercies, we have justly deserved punishment. We have sinned; we have grievously sinned against Thee. Yet knowing that Thou art full of compassion, we beseech Thee to pardon the offences of Thy people, to relieve the poor and the needy in their present necessities, and to give and preserve to our use the fruits of the earth in all its seasons.

"But whatsoever may be Thy pleasure concerning us, give us grace to receive Thy dispensations, whether of judgment or mercy, with entire submission to Thy will; endeavouring to abate Thy displeasure by repentance, and showing forth our sense of Thy goodness by faithfully keeping Thy commandments.

"Of ourselves we are unable either to will or to do that which is acceptable in Thy sight. We therefore pray Thee so to open our hearts to the influences of Thy good Spirit, that, showing compassion and mercy each man to his neighbour, and bearing the burdens one of another, we may obtain of Thy favour the supply of our wants, and with hearts knit together in brotherly love, may partake of Thy bounties in peace and contentment, to the honour and praise of Thy name, through Jesus Christ our Lord, Amen."

The prayer is ordered to be read immediately before the Litany; and when the Litany shall not be read, before the prayer for all conditions of men.

Consecration of a New Church at Birmingham.—On Wednesday the Bishop of Worcester consecrated the New Church of St. Andrew, Bordeslay, Birmingham, recently formed into an ecclesiastical district. The clergy and wardens received the Right Rev. Prelate at the church at half-past ten o'clock, and the usual ceremonies having been gone through his Lordship proceeded to consecrate the new edifice.

ACCIDENTS AND OFFENCES.

The Dagenham Murder.—The wife of Sergeant Parsons, against whom charges were made of being in some way implicated in this horrid affair, has died under melancholy circumstances. She had been recently confined, and it is supposed that the particulars connected with the melancholy event had such an effect upon her feelings as to accelerate her death. It is stated that there has been a meeting of the several heads of divisions of the police at Scotland-yard, for the purpose of devising the best means of discovering the murderer or murderers the unfortunate man Clarke. The result of that meeting is, the proposition enlarging the amount of the reward for the discoverer of the murderer from £100 to £500; that, as the police feel that a certain odium has been cast upon the force generally by the non-discovery of the murder, they propose to raise, by voluntary subscriptions amongst themselves, the other £400, in order that the perpetrator may be brought to justice, and that the scale of subscriptions from constables, inspectors, &c., will be settled by the heads of divisions, when it will be left to the men's discretion to subscribe to it

Lamentable Accident at Brougham Hall.—On Saturday evening last after dark, at Brougham Hall, the seat of Lord Brougham, a shocking accident happened to Mr. Walton, the artist, who is on a visit to Lord Brougham, and the second daughter of William Brougham, Esq., his lordship's brother. It appears that the church singers were practising in Brougham Chapel, which is separated from the Hall by a deep cutting in the old London-road, over which Lord Brougham caused an arch to be thrown for the convenience of the Hall, from the terrace to the chapel-yard. Mr. Walton took Miss Brougham, who is about seven years of age, in his arms, and left the Hall by the terrace-door, and was on his way to the chapel, but, it being dark, and the light in the chapel misleading him, he missed the archway, and, with the girl in his arms, fell off the terrace into the road, a height of about twenty-five feet. The shrieks of the girl soon brought assistance. Mr. Walton's head was laid open for nearly two inches, and otherwise severely injured. Mr. W. still remains in a very precarious state. One of Miss Brougham's jawbones is broken, and she is otherwise dreadfully injured, but hopes are entertained of her recovery

Fatal Affray at Harefield, Middlesex.—On Saturday last an affray took place at the village of Harefield, four miles from Uxbridge, between some monkey boatmen who were passing up the Grand Junction Canal, which has terminated fatally to one of the parties. On that morning, between seven and eight o'clock, two boats laden with coal were proceeding up the canal passing through the parish of Harefield. In the boats were four men, whose names are Carpenter, Compton, William Norman, and George Norman, the last mentioned being in command of the party. On arriving at a lock, Norman blamed Carpenter for some negligence in opening the gates, and words ensued, which shortly after led to blows, and the party adjourned to a neighbouring meadow to have their fight out. They fought for about a quarter of an hour, and then sat themselves down on the grass for a minute or two to get wind, but on Norman attempting to rise he fell backward on the grass, and died in a few minutes afterwards. The lock-keeper sent for Mr. Kidd, surgeon, who promptly attended and opened a vein, but life was quite extinct. The body was removed to the King's Arms Inn, in the village. Both Carpenter and George Norman have been taken into custody, and on being examined before the Uxbridge bench of magistrates, were remanded.

The Late Accident on the Eastern Counties Railway.—At the Central Criminal Court a few days since, William Clare, a young man of respectable appearance, surrendered to his bail, and was placed at the bar, charged with the manslaughter of Mr. Hinde. The particulars of this case have appeared in our police reports, and inquiries before the Coroner. It will be recollected that, a short time since, an accident occurred at the Romford station of the Eastern Counties Railway, when several passengers were more or less injured, and one gentleman, named Hinde, was so seriously wounded that he died a few days afterwards. The prisoner was the driver of the engine on that occasion, and he was now charged with the crime of manslaughter, arising from negligence in the discharge of his duty. The Jury returned a verdict of Acquittal.

Collision on the North-Western Railway.—On Wednesday morning, between two and three o'clock, a goods train was on its way to the Watford Station, from the Leighton Buzzard Station, and an engineer, named Edward Gibbs, who had been propelling it behind, was afterwards employed to bring forward a lighter train of the same description. The morning was unusually foggy, so that the driver could not see five yards in front. On arriving near the Watford Station, Gibbs with his engine ran into the other train, and both himself and the stoker, a man named Thomas Cole, were thrown off by the violence of the shock. The men on the other tender, which was in motion, did not feel the shock, and proceeded onwards. Assistance was quickly obtained from the Watford Station, and Gibbs, on being picked up, was found to have both his legs broken in a dreadful manner, having fallen between the engine and tender, and Cole had his right ancle broken. Gibbs was immediately removed to the University College Hospital, where the fracture of one of his legs was reduced. Cole was subsequently brought to the same institution, and it was found necessary to amputate one of his legs. Both are going on favourably, although in a state of considerable danger. The authorities state that Gibbs is greatly to blame in not using more caution, as, having assisted in propelling the first train, he must, when he started from Leighton, have been aware that in a short time he would be in close proximity to it.

The Late Fatal Affray on the Barking Road.—On Wednesday evening an inquest, which has been twice adjourned, was resumed before Mr. William Baker, at the Cock Tavern, Cock-hill, Ratcliffe, on the body of John Harold Levitt, aged 25, who died from injuries he received in an affray on the Barking-road, on Tuesday, the 15th of September. The circumstances of the case have been mentioned in our paper. The deceased was returning from Barking on the 15th ult., driving a horse and chaise, when he encountered a party in a barouche on the road near Plaistow. An altercation ensued, he was severely beaten by several men, two of whom, named Heywood and Boddy, have been identified, and he died of the injuries he received six days afterwards. The inquiry was further adjourned.

The late Earl of Yarborough.—At daybreak on Tuesday morning her Majesty's steamer Lightning, arrived off the Spurn Light, having in tow the Kestrel yacht, with the remains of the above lamented nobleman on board. The yacht was then conveyed up the river as far as White Booth Roads, in the Humber, where the remains were landed, preparatory to their interment at Brocklesby

The Late Sir Charles Wetherell.—Sir Charles Wetherell's personal estate has just been administered to by Lady Wetherell, and a stamp duty paid on £250,000.

THE DISASTER TO THE "GREAT BRITAIN" STEAMER.

We last week gave an account of the accident which happened to the Great Britain steamer on the Irish coast, and now supply such additional circumstances as have transpired, and the latest information respecting the present condition of the vessel.

The subjoined particulars were given by a gentleman of Montreal, who was on board the Great Britain when she went ashore:—"He says that he was in bed and asleep at the time the vessel struck. He was awoke by the concussion, and, on jumping up, heard loud screams from the ladies' cabin. He ran on deck. The night was stormy, and the sea was breaking over the ship, which still continued drifting, and it drifted, he thinks, fully a mile. There was a light visible, and Captain Hosken said it was about a mile and a half distant, and, in reply to a question, said that they were near Ardglass. An officer of the ship was examining the compass, and the Rev. Mr. Tucker, of Bermuda, seeing that it did not work, asked him the reason. He replied, after some time, to the effect that there was something the matter with it. The same officer then examined the compass in the fore part of the ship, and an opinion prevailed that the compass was the cause of the disaster. On hearing this, Captain Hosken solemnly declared that there was nothing wrong with the compass. On the vessel striking, and during the remainder of the night, blue lights were burnt and guns fired, and the scene on board was most distressing. The great majority of the passengers were very ill; the Viennoise children kept crying violently around Madame Weiss; and several passengers, who ought to have shown firmness, betrayed lamentable weakness. Captain Hosken continued cool and composed, and several times referred to his charts. No one retired to rest—all were full of fears; but it was found next day that one passenger had never awoke until morning. At four o'clock in the morning boats came alongside, and several persons went ashore; and, as the tide receded, men waded alongside and carried passengers ashore on their backs; several, however, wished to remain on board, but Captain Hosken insisted on their leaving the vessel, as he could not be answerable for their lives."

The following is a very interesting extract of a letter from a young lady, passenger in the Great Britain, to her friend in London:—"Liverpool, Sept. 26.—We have indeed been in fearful peril. The newspapers by no means represent the extent of the danger. The ship struck the rocks at ten o'clock; I had just gone to my state-room, and the instant I felt the shock I knew something was the matter. In a moment there was a second shock, and all was confusion. Men and women rushed out; the latter from their berths, and some threw themselves into the arms of strangers. We could with difficulty stand. Mr 's first words to me were 'I think there will be no loss of life, but the ship is gone.' 'I think there will be no loss of life!' What fearful words in a dark night, the rain falling, with wind! There was possibility, chance of it, then Oh, I cannot tell you of the anguish of that night! The sea broke over the ship; the waves struck her like thunderclaps; the gravel grated below. There was the throwing overboard of the coals; there were the cries of children, the groans of women, the blue lights, the signal guns, even the tears of men; and amidst all rose the voice of prayer—and this for long dark hours. Oh, what a fearful night! Thy mercy, O God, alone saved us from destruction. The day dawned, and we lay between two long ledges of rock, while another stretched across our front. Five hundred yards to the right or left, two hundred yards in advance, and the ship had been dashed to pieces. Three hundred persons had perhaps been cast in that dense darkness amid the breakers! I cannot think of that night without tears; but I feel, and I gratefully acknowledge, that the hand of an all-merciful Providence was stretched out to protect and save us. God grant that I may never forget either the night or the mercy. You cannot imagine such a scene. We cannot account for the accident, but the conduct of Captain Hosken through the night was admirable. The newspapers say that the ladies went to bed; some of them, at the captain's urgent request, lay down in their dresses. Towards morning I did, in my cloak, upon the floor, and covered with a blanket brought me by a passenger. At dawn, we were lowered over the ship's side, and carried on shore in carts of sea-weed manure. We walked through an Irish bog; and Mrs. —— and I lay down upon the (wooden) floor of an Irish cabin, where we found a plenty of bread, some bacon, and divided an egg among three. With much fatigue we came on to Belfast and Liverpool. Mr. —— was at one time twenty-four hours without eating or sleeping. There was an efficient Coast Guard; but, at one time, the Irish assembled in such numbers, that we feared a riot. To my astonishment and gratitude, all the luggage was saved. We arrived at Liverpool worn out; now we are better."

A meeting of the Great Britain's passengers was held in Liverpool on Monday morning, to hear the proceedings of the committee appointed to confer with Charles M'Iver, Esq., Manager of the North American Royal Mail Company.—Mr Watt spoke as follows: We waited upon Messrs. M'Iver and Co., and they told us that they had examined their contract with the Government. They had it upon their table, and they suffered us to read over the particular passages which applied to this case. The substance is, that their penalty for breaking the contract, in not having a vessel ready to be dispatched, is a forfeiture of £500 sterling for every twelve hours of delay. Independently of that, their contract must be taken as a whole, and a difficulty occurring at one time may produce, they said, a recurrence of difficulties which might extend throughout the whole term of their contract On that ground, they were under the necessity of refusing to send any vessel of theirs. They said, however, in explaining themselves, that, in the event of any difficulty, there is no vessel in the kingdom which they could take up to answer any emergency, and which would pass the Admiralty survey. Any other vessel must be one of certain power, and not exceeding a certain duty to perform by that power. You understand me, Gentlemen—(hear, hear); it is not merely the power, but she must not be required to do more than so much through that power. They said that, in this matter, money was of no consideration with them. They would desire to accommodate, and the rate of fare would be altogether of secondary moment; and I believe this was very much the substance of our interview.—At the request of the Chairman, who said there was now no alternative but to separate without coming to any result, the committee was broken up, and the meeting adjourned sine die

By the subjoined letter from Captain Hosken, it will be perceived he is acquitted of all blame by Captain Claxton, Secretary to the company. It is stated that one of the coast lights was not marked in Captain Hosken's chart, although it is one of 1846:

MESSRS. GIBBS, BRIGHT, AND CO.

Great Britain Steam-ship. Sept 29

Dear Sirs—By the tug I send Mr Smith with all the cargo she can take; a few packages may be touched with the fresh water, but I trust not damaged, all the parcels, &c., are sent; about sixteen packages of cargo are still here. Mr Smith has account of them. I also send al. the useless and troublesome men to get rid of them, and reduce expenses as much as possible. Will you please to send by tug again as soon as possible the largest hemp cable to be got in Liverpool, and a corresponding sized anchor indeed an anchor one-third heavier than the right weight will do better, and two cables; also two sets of good purchase-blocks, and two 4½ falls of white rope (Manilla), and a coil of 3-yarn spun-yarn? I hope they may be here by Thursday morning. We should have two tugs here on Saturday, as the tide on that day will be higher than the day we came ashore. Send also the large Scotch blocks, if you please.

The weather is now moderate, but rainy; the ship makes very little water. I hope to commence discharging coals to-day Please to send copies of this, and of all my letters, to my directors at Bristol. Captain Claxton came yesterday

Many thanks for all your expressions of sympathy and good feeling. I want them all, I assure you, but my conscience acquits me of blame and so does Captain Claxton, who publicly told me so yesterday. I am, yours very truly, JAMES HOSKEN

On Friday evening, (last week), the moderate weather which hitherto had been experienced underwent a change. The wind then increased to a gale, and during the ensuing night and morning blew with violence from the south and south south-east, the storm being accompanied by rain and a heavy sea. The powerful steam-tug despatched from Liverpool to the assistance of the stranded vessel was driven to seek shelter from the bay. During the morning the Great Britain gradually drove further ashore, until at length the strain upon the anchors became so great that the chain and hawser snapped, the upper part of the rudder-post was broken off, and a plate of iron adjoining was carried away

A letter from Liverpool of Wednesday, says:—"The Great Britain now lies broadside on the bay—a worse position than formerly. Most part of her cargo arrived this morning by the Dreadnought steam-tug"

Our Illustration is from a sketch by an obliging Correspondent, taken the morning after the vessel went ashore at Rathmullan; the point of Sleive Donarch in the distance; and the two rocks through which she passed.

We take this opportunity of contradicting, upon the authority of an eye-witness, the statement which has appeared in most of the accounts—that the peasantry behaved like savages. This is far from the fact: they did scramble for the luggage in the same way that London cabmen would, if not kept in order by the police. In the above case, passengers had the annoyance of seeing their baggage separated, and carried of in all directions; but, although this was very trying to witness, and occasioned damage in some instances, still, it was done with the view of saving the property; and no stealing, or "wrecking," took place, as would be understood by the statement we are anxious to correct.

THE MARAZION AND MOUNT'S BAY REGATTA.

This Regatta, the last contested race of the season, came off on Friday, the 18th ultimo, in Mount's Bay.

In consequence of the arrival in Mount's Bay of several crack yachts from Plymouth and Falmouth, more than ordinary excitement was manifested as to the result of the regatta and when a breeze sprang up from about S.E., and gradually but speedily freshened into a single reef gale, additional interest, if possible, was exhibited.

The first prize was

and the following started :—

Mischief, Penzance, John Richards, Esq.	[illegible]	2 16 [illegible]

Mischief carried away the jaws of her gaff, and did not return in the second round.

The Lily of Devon took the lead, followed closely by the Grand Turk and the Mischief. The first-named was overhauled by the Turk soon after rounding the first mark, and during the remainder of the contest it was quite a neck and neck affair. The Mischief, less by 20 tons than her opponents, had the misfortune to carry away the jaws of her gaff in the second round, when, of course, further trial was useless. This was one of the most beautiful, and, at the same time, doubtful, struggles, we ever recollect having witnessed. The Lily and Turk are two splendid cutters, and a more equal match, perhaps, cannot be found. They had as much wind as they could tell what to do with, and each carried on to a degree that made many of the spectators, not exactly au fait in nautical skill, tremble for their safety. They returned close to each other—the difference being in favour of the Grand Turk, 1 m. 35 s.; she was entitled to an allowance of 30 seconds as the smaller boat. Close work upon a distance of about 25 miles! The Mischief did her work well, and her owner has reason to be proud of the boat's qualities

The next start was looked forward to by all hands with considerable impatience; and before they slipped much doubt existed as to the result. About one o'clock the following second-class yachts started for

[illegible]	12 tons	2 43 5[illegible]
[illegible]	12 tons	2 53 31

This was a time race of half a minute a ton. Away they went, and one of the prettiest starts and contests of the day was witnessed. The Psyche (better and more familiarly known as the Jackdaw) took the lead, followed closely by the Ida and the Gipsy Queen. Having to haul close upon a wind to round the first mark, it was soon evident that the Gipsy would maintain a position worthy the station of the Queen of the Travellers, and accordingly besides "looking" nearly a point "more to wind" than the best of her followers, also fore-reached them, and rounded the first mark 2¼ minutes before the Ida and 2¼ minutes before the Psyche, to the amazement of every spectator. It was, however, fully expected that in running, each of her competitors would give her the go-by, but no such thing, she kept her station like a Queen, and rounded the Committee boat first of her class amid the loud applause of her admirers. It will be observed that the Gipsy Queen, although considerably the smaller boat, beat the Ida 54 seconds; the Psyche, 3 minutes and 56 seconds; and the Red Rover, 13 minutes and 36 seconds. The Ida and Psyche are unquestionably fast boats; and so used to be the Red Rover, and probably is now, but, like all loyal subjects, give precedence to Majesty.

The various other matches were well contested, and the rowing gave great satisfaction. A large party afterwards dined together at Marazion at the hotel, and, after dinner, the Trenow Cup was presented to Mr. Fox, who acknowledged the compliment.

The Chairman, in presenting the other prizes, complimented the owners of the successful boats—many other toasts were drunk, and an exceedingly pleasant evening was spent.

NOOKS AND CORNERS OF OLD ENGLAND.

RICHMOND PALACE.

Richmond, from its eminent beauty, was anciently called Sheene, which, in the Saxon language, signifies shining or resplendent. The Royal Palace, of which some portions yet remain, appears to have been founded at an early period, as it was a residence of Edward I. Edward III died in this Palace, it is supposed of grief for the loss of his heroic son, the Black Prince. Anne, Queen of Richard II., likewise died in the same place, and Richard, in consequence, deserted the scene of his bereavement, causing it to be defaced as a memorial of his grief. The building was repaired by Henry V., who founded three religious houses near it. According to Howel, the body of the unfortunate James V. of Scotland remained for some time embalmed at the monastery of Sheene. After the dissolution it was cast among some rubbish, where the workmen wantonly cut off the head, which was taken by one young glazier to Queen Elizabeth, who is said to have been struck with its sweetness, arising from the embalming materials. In 1497 the Palace of Sheene was destroyed by fire, but Henry VII. rebuilt it, and caused its name to be changed to that of Richmond, in memory of the title which he bore previous to obtaining the Crown. Here he likewise died.

During the reign of Mary, the Princess Elizabeth was secluded for a short time in this Palace; and it afterwards became one of her favourite places of residence. Over the gate is a chamber where this Queen closed her career, refusing to be placed in a bed, and impatiently rejecting the consolation of her attendants, full of remorse for the execution of her favourite Essex. Richmond was afterwards the residence of Henry Prince of Wales; and Bishop Duppa is said to have conducted the education of Charles II. in the same place. Some parts of the Palace were repaired by James II.; and his son, the Pretender, is said to have been nursed there.

The Gateway and the cluster of buildings immediately adjoining are all that now exist of the once favourite seat of Royalty. The general character of these remains appears to indicate the building of Henry the Seventh's time.

Several residences have been established upon the site of the old Palace, among which is Cholmondely House, built by George, third Earl of Cholmondely, who placed there his celebrated gallery of pictures. It afterwards became the property of the Duke of Queensbury.

REMAINS OF RICHMOND PALACE.

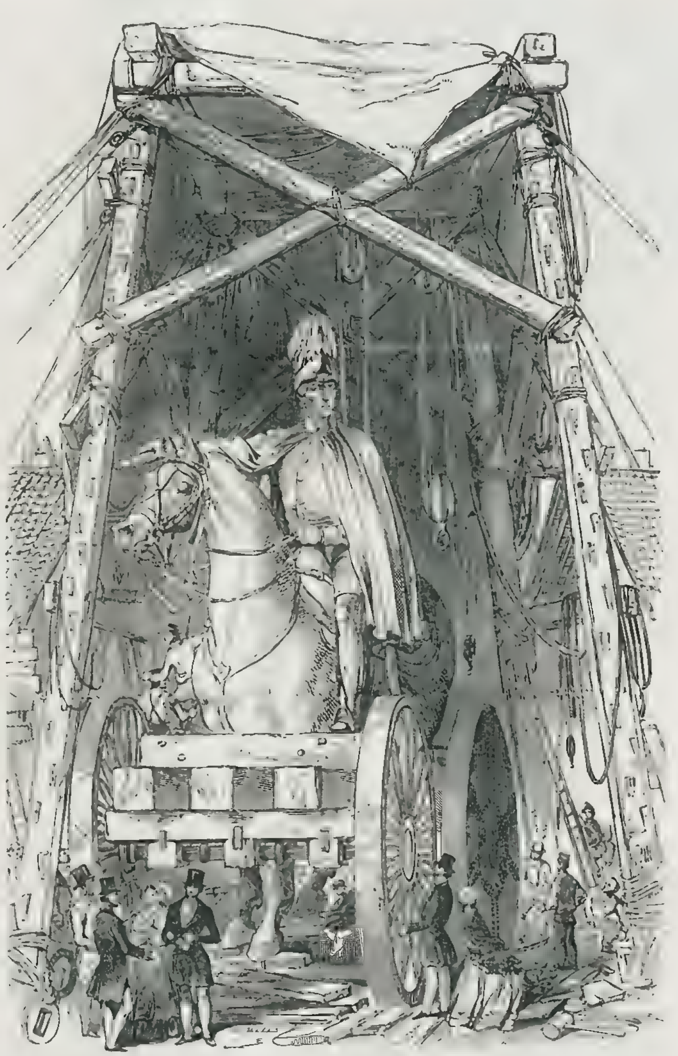
The attractions of Richmond in its fine Hill and beautiful River view are some excuse for the neglect of strangers, who have overlooked this ancient residence of Kings; but it seems curious that even the majority of persons dwelling in the town itself should appear quite unconscious of its existence.

The New Judge.—It is now stated that Mr. Vaughan Williams is to succeed the late Mr. Justice Williams, and not Mr. Dundas.

The Menai Tunnel Suspension Bridge. The foundation stone of this stupendous work, across the Menai Straits, was quietly deposited, in the presence of the engineers of the district and the contractors, on Friday (last week). The erection of the bridge is expected to occupy three years.

The Woolwich Railway.—The works of this line are to be commenced forthwith, the valuation of the property required by the Company having been completed. It branches off from the present Greenwich rail about three-quarters of a mile from the junction of the Dover and Brighton lines, and, passing through the upper end of Deptford, reaches Woolwich by Lewisham and Lee. Upwards of 300 houses are to be demolished in the centre of the town to admit of its passing through. The course it takes is parallel with the boundary wall of the western part of the Dockyard, curving off to the right, south of Woolwich Church, where it continues in a straight direction within 200 yards of the Arsenal gates. It is stated to be the intention of placing two stations at Woolwich—one at that portion of the line near the Plumstead-road, for the accommodation of the military at the Arsenal and Barracks; and the other at the western end of Woolwich, for those at the Royal Dockyard. The railway is expected to be completed in the course of nine months.

THE GREAT WELLINGTON STATUE.



THE STATUE AT MR WYATT'S FOUNDRY.

In accordance with the authorised announcement in our Journal of last week, the removal of the colossal Wellington Statue, from Mr. Wyatt's Studio, in the Harrow-road, to the area of the Green Park Arch, took place on Tuesday (Michaelmas Day), to the entire satisfaction of all parties interested in the event. The weather was bright and fair, and greatly heightened the brilliancy of the processional form in which the Statue was conveyed to its destination: the whole line, from the Harrow-road and Paddington-green, the Edgware-road, Park-lane, and Hyde Park Corner, was crowded with spectators; the house fronts and very housetops were crowded with "desiring eyes;" and the pageant was rich in substantial show, without any of the tawdriness or ineffective meanness common to similar displays. The magnificent appearance of the household troops was in excellent keeping with the massive grandeur of the Statue itself: there was a characteristic fitness in the whole affair, and a simplicity and propriety of taste and arrangement, which drew forth a stream of grateful enthusiasm, from the moment of the starting of the pageant until its glorious reception at Hyde Park Corner. Before, however, we detail the spectacle of Tuesday, we shall briefly relate the circumstances which led to the erection of the Statue; and quote, partly from one of our previous Numbers, the authorised dimensions and other details of this colossal work of art.

ORIGIN OF THE STATUE.

In August, 1836, Mr. Matthew Cotes Wyatt's very clever equestrian statue of George III. was placed upon its pedestal in Cockspur-street, and by the spirited execution of the charger, and the faithful portraiture of the Royal rider, the group excited considerable interest amongst such persons as were able to appreciate its artistical merits. Amidst this class of admirers was Mr. Thomas Bridge Simpson, the intelligent Common Councilman, of Leadenhall-street, who was so struck with the genius of the sculptor, Mr. Wyatt, that he addressed a letter to that gentleman, proposing the erection of a bronze Equestrian Statue of the Duke of Wellington in the City of London. The letter did not reach Mr. Wyatt for several days; but, at length, it was replied to, and Mr. Simpson began to moot the suggestion in the City; a fund was forthwith raised by subscription; the competition for executing the Statue lay between the late Francis Chantrey and Mr. Wyatt; and was decided in favour of the former artist; the Lord Mayor, as one of the Committee, giving the casting vote. Sir Francis did not live to complete his commission, and the statue was finished by Mr Weekes, and inaugurated in the fine area facing the New Royal Exchange, on June 18, 1844. In the following month, at a meeting of the Committee, "several persons bore testimony to the fact of Mr. T. B. Simpson having been the first person to suggest the erection of the Wellington Statue;" and the thanks of the Committee were, accordingly, voted to Mr. Simpson, "for the suggestion, and for his zeal and activity in assisting to carry it to a successful issue."

It should, however, be added that, previous to this consummation, it had been proposed to erect a colossal equestrian Statue of the Duke of Wellington in the western portion of the metropolis; Mr. Simpson taking an active part in the proceedings for that purpose, as he had previously done in the City. In May, 1838, the Sub-Committee of the west-end Statue, or "the Wellington Military Memorial," as it was termed, reported that the subscriptions received amounted to about £14,000; and accordingly, on the 28th of that month, the General Committee met, and resolved to erect an Equestrian Statue of the Duke of Wellington, upon the triumphal arch at the entrance into the Green Park, provided the Queen's permission could be obtained for that purpose. The Duke of Rutland, as Chairman of the Committee, submitted to her Majesty, and the Government, the above proposition; the Queen graciously acquiesced; and the Royal gratification is known to have been expressed in anticipation of seeing upon the Park arch, a Statue of the greatest man of the country. In August, 1838, the sanction of the Treasury Board was given, and the Committee resolved that Matthew Cotes Wyatt, Esq., was, "in every respect eminently qualified to be entrusted with the execution of the proposed equestrian Statue."

It is here important to state that Mr. Decimus Burton, the architect of the Arch, strenuously opposed the erection of the Statue thereon, and a good deal of correspondence resulted on the subject. He estimated the additional work necessary for the purpose at £2000, and represented that the arch was not a proper place for the Statue. It would be seen that the monument was not the design of the artist of the arch, and that proportion and unity of design, so important to a work of art, would be wanting. The building (Mr. Burton stated) was small as a triumphal arch, whilst the Statue was one of the largest in the world.

The Sub Committee then commissioned Mr. Wyatt to prepare for their inspection his designs for the Equestrian Statue, of an adequate height and size, and in the attitude, costume, and position, which he would propose. Mr. Wyatt, accordingly, prepared several models and designs, and the Sub-Committee availed themselves of a model of the Hyde Park Corner Arch to consider, which they did, with the greatest attention, the position and relative size of the Statue to be placed on the summit. Mr. Wyatt then prepared a drawing of the Arch, with the Equestrian Statue; of which the Sub-Committee approved. The Lords of the Treasury, however, objected. We have not space to detail the points.

There is one part of the Sub-Committee's Report which it is important to quote. They distinctly state, in justice to themselves and to Mr. Wyatt, that the wooden figure which was exhibited in August, 1838, on the summit of the Arch, was prepared, set up, and at length removed, without the knowledge or concurrence either of the Sub-Committee or of Mr. Wyatt, and without any intimation to them of the intention of the Government to make any such exhibition. They add, that had they been apprised of the wish of the Government for a model, they would readily have taken measures for supplying one which should have conveyed some idea of their own intentions, and of the artist's design. They, however, believe the proceeding that took place had the effect of creating a general opinion in favour of an adequate work of art in that fine position.

The Lords of the Treasury having demurred, as above, the Duke of Rutland, as Chairman of the Committee, applied to the Earl of Lincoln, when he was Chief Commissioner of the Woods and Forests, and subsequently to Viscount Canning, when he was at the head of the same department, for a fulfilment of the promise to place the equestrian Statue on the Arch. Communications passed between them, and efforts were made to induce the Committee to forego "the unfortunate site." The Duke of Rutland, however, pressed the Government to allow the Statue to be placed on the Arch, and permission was given for the place to be prepared for its reception. In May last, Viscount Canning (after the permission was given) again interfered to prevent the erection of the Statue on the Arch, offering other places, and to apply to Parliament to pay the difference in the expense, feeling assured that it could be placed in a position more worthy of it as a national work, more in accordance with the recognised rules of art, and more creditable to the public taste. The Duke of Rutland, in reply, declined a renewal of the discussion, which had been finally settled.

It is scarcely necessary to refer to the repeated discussions, in and out of Parliament, respecting the placing of the Statue upon the Arch. Suffice it to say that it is now understood to be subject to "three weeks'" probation, when, if the location be proved to be injudicious, the Group will be removed.

DESCRIPTION OF THE STATUE.

The great work has been entirely executed at Mr. Wyatt's studio, Dudley Grove House, in the Harrow Road. The Group was modeled by Mr. Wyatt, and his son, Mr. James Wyatt, who studied under his father, and has just completed a very picturesque equestrian statue of her Majesty.

The Model was commenced in May, 1840, and occupied the Artists upwards of three years. The plaister of Paris used in the stupendous work considerably exceeded 100 tons: it was formed upon a turn-plate, or revolving platform, upwards of 20 feet across, travelling upon 40 rollers, and weighing, in itself, several tons. The vastness of the Model required certain precautions to insure its entireness: thus, to give strength to the body of the horse, a beam passes through it longitudinally, like a back-bone, from which spring transverse timbers, like the ribs of a ship. From the body of the horse was a line of iron bolts, beneath which, in the early stage of the modeling, were placed props for security in shifting the figure by means of the platform, so as to obtain the most desirable positions for light, &c.

In order to reach the different parts of the Statue, a travelling stage, with a shifting floor, was constructed, so that it might be adjusted to any height.

The entire Group, we should here explain, represents the Duke of Wellington, as he appeared on the Field of Waterloo, upon his favourite horse, "Copenhagen," in a standing position. The Duke sat to the sculptor for the portrait; the head is remarkably fine, and the likeness good: the warrior wears his customary short cloak, which the artist has skilfully draped, so as to give it something of the grace of classic costume.

The general practice of casting statues need not be detailed here. The material is bronze—a compound of zinc, copper, and tin. For melting it, Mr. Wyatt erected two great furnaces; the first employed was capable of melting only twelve tons at a time, whereas, it was found desirable to cast the remainder of the Statue in larger, and, consequently, fewer pieces; a second furnace was, therefore, built, capable of melting twenty tons at a time.

The mould and core being placed in the pit in the foundry, the bronze was run into it from the furnace; and the body of the horse, and the lower portion of the rider, were thus cast in two portions of about twenty tons each. These were magnificent castings; and the effect of so large a surface of molten compound as the twenty tons presented, is described as very extraordinary. The Statue, or rather Group, was thus cast in about eight pieces. In each case, the mould was placed in the pit imbedded in sand, rammed in as tightly as possible; yet, in casting the front of the horse, by some means, six tons of metal escaped through the mould, the chest of the horse was left vacant, and the casting was consequently spoiled. In order that the legs of the horse should be capable of carrying the great weight they would have to sustain, it was found necessary to cast them solid. The other portions of the work vary from one to three inches in thickness, with strong ribs internally, to give additional strength. It is computed that the whole Group cannot weigh less than forty tons: its height approaches thirty feet: and such is the bulk of the horse that eight persons have dined within one-half of it. The following are a few of the other main dimensions:—

	ft.	in
Girth round the Horse	22	8
Ditto, arm of..	5	4
From the Horse's hocks to the ground	6	0
From the Horse's nose to the tail	26	0
Length of head	4	0
Length of each ear	2	4

The Group being cast in pieces, as above, they have been joined, partly by screw-bolts, two inches in thickness, and partly fused together by a new process, twelve inches at a time; whereas, by the old method, only six inches could thus be fused at once.

In consequence of the colossal size of the Group, there were, for some time, upwards of thirty men employed at once upon the bronze; and, in case of any work being requisite to be done within the figure of the rider, the head was removed, to allow the workmen to descend through the neck. The cleansing, chasing, and finishing occupied a considerable time.

Two very accurate Engravings of Mr. Wyatt's atélier and foundry have been already given in No 219 of the Illustrated London News; and in No. 224 are two Views of the Arch, showing the Statue placed thereon.

THE ARCH.

Our metropolis is embellished with few triumphal arches; although the history of the country furnishes abundant instances for such commemorative structures. In Paris it is otherwise: there the principal entrances are graced with trophied gates and storied columns. The last erected of the arches—the Arc de l'Etoile—is, without exception, the most gigantic work of its kind, either in ancient or modern times; nor can we, perhaps, give a better idea of its colossal dimensions than by stating that eight such structures as Temple-bar, London, would stand within the great arch, that is, four in depth, and as many above them.

The Arch upon which Mr. Wyatt's colossal Statue has just been placed, formed a grand feature in the magnificent plan submitted to Parliament, in 1827, for the re-edification of Buckingham Palace. In this costly design, the above Arch was to form the Royal entrance to the palace gardens, to be laid out to suit the somewhat luxuriant taste of George the Fourth. The garden scheme was never fully realised; but, in 1828, the Arch was built by Mr. Decimus Burton, though, in those veracious guides, the Pictures of London, we have seen this structure attributed to Mr. Nash. Instead, however, of the Arch forming the palace-garden entrance, it has been given up to the public as the entrance to Constitution Hill and the Green Park.

The Arch, as we now see it, is 80 feet in height, exclusive of the supporting stone for the Statue. It has a single aperture, with an architrave, surmounted by an archivolt, without a sculptured keystone, which, we agree with Mr. Elmes, "is an innovation by no means pleasing" The sides are decorated with Corinthian pilasters, and the space on the wall, which corresponds in height with the capitals, has sculptured wreaths of laurel, enclosing the initials G. R. IV. and crowns alternately.

From the four central pilasters, a portion of four columns projects on two solid plinths, each of which supports two Corinthian columns. Above the entablature, on a lofty blocking course, is raised an attic surmounted by an acroterium, on which is placed the Statue. The soffite of the Arch is sculptured in sunken panels. The gates, by Bramah, are of massive iron scroll-work, bronzed with the royal arms in a circular centre: they are handsome, but less original in design than the superb gates of Buckingham Palace arch. Within the piers of the arch are apartments, and stairs ascending to the roof of the attic; the entrances being at the side, which, with the small windows, has a very mean effect.

Mr. Burton's original design, it should, in justice, be mentioned, has not been carried out. He proposed to embellish the main piers with groups of trophies; to place a figure of a warrior on each stylobate; to enrich the attic with a sculptural representation of an ancient triumph; to place a statue, flanking the attic, over each column; and to crown the acroterium with a figure in a quadriga, or four-horse chariot. Had these embellishments been executed, the structure would not have been condemned, as it has been, for its insipidity of design and absence of classic appropriateness.

We may here state that to give security to the immense weight which the attic has now to carry, it has been strengthened at each angle by a cross buttress; and the supporting slab is laid upon a strong brick arch.

PREPARATIONS FOR THE REMOVAL OF THE STATUE FROM THE FOUNDRY.

The vast Group being nearly completed, was hoisted out of the pit in the Foundry, and placed upon an immense car, constructed for the purpose at her Majesty's Dockyard, at Woolwich. To do this, the roof of the Foundry was removed; and a portion of one of the walls taken down to allow the entry of the carriage. This huge car weighs about twenty tons, and consists of a strong platform upon four equi-circumferential wheels, ten feet in diameter; the two front wheels having radiating cast-iron spokes, open; and the hind wheels being covered with sheet iron, somewhat convex in form, and bossed, so as to remind us of an immense ancient British shield. The Statue was slung within this frame or platform, the feet of the horse resting upon ledges, a short height from the ground, thus sinking the weight so low as to preclude all danger of oversetting.

For nearly three weeks past the Studio has, through Mr. Wyatt's courtesy, been visited by many hundreds of the nobility and gentry. We have engraved the Statue, as it appeared upon the car, seen from the upper open end of the Foundry; as well as separate sketches of the Carriage itself.

During Monday, as a considerable portion of the Statue could be seen from the road outside the Foundry, the space was crowded by spectators watching the progress of the workmen. Towards dusk, by means of chain windlasses, ropes, pulleys, inclined planes, plank tramways, &c., the Carriage and Statue were moved just near to the gate, ready to be drawn forth next morning.

TUESDAY.—REMOVAL OF THE STATUE.

However universal the interest of this day's event proved throughout the line by which the procession was to pass, it varied, in degree, at the starting point and destination. The arrangements for the accommodation of spectators at Dudley-grove House were excellent. A large and commodious platform was constructed along the entire front of Mr. Wyatt's house, and upon it were ranges of seats, graced with a brilliant assemblage of beauty, rank, and fashion. As it was understood by the public that the removal would take place as early as ten o'clock, long before that hour the Harrow-road and the streets adjoining were thronged with well-dressed persons. Seats were erected in various places, for which sums of 1s. to 2s. 6d. were demanded and paid. Even the roofs, as well as the windows of the houses in the neighbourhood of Mr. Wyatt's foundry were crowded with anxious spectators. The whole line of route from the Harrow-road to Piccadilly was, indeed, in excitement; and the windows were mostly filled with company, and presented a scene of much gaiety and animation. Paddington-green was nearly filled; and Hyde Park was crowded, towards the Drive and principal walk.

His Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge, accompanied by the Hereditary Grand Duke of Mecklenburg Strelitz, was among the earliest to reach Mr. Wyatt's residence. Their Royal Highnesses were received, on alighting from their carriage, by Mr. Wyatt, sen., who conducted them to the Studio, and there had the honour of explaining to his illustrious visitors the mode in which the Statue was secured to the carriage; after examining which their Royal Highnesses returned to Mr. Wyatt's private residence, and took up their position on a temporary balcony erected for the express accommodation of the Royal party, and a select circle of the artist's friends.

The Duke of Rutland, the Marquis of Londonderry, the Earl of Cardigan, Adjutant-General Sir F. Trench, Sir John Macdonald, Mr. John Wilson Croker, and Mr. Simpson, were, among the members of the Committee, early on the spot. The Duke of Rutland came to town, from Woburn Abbey, expressly to take part in the ceremonial; and Lord Londonderry made the journey from Wynyard for the same purpose.

His Royal Highness Prince George, the Countess of Westmoreland, the Marchioness of Westminster, the Earl of Cardigan, Lord and Lady Fitzroy Somerset, Lord William Lennox, Sir John Beckett, Mr. George Wombwell, Mrs. Milner Gibson, and a very numerous circle of fashionables, were among those who occupied seats on Mr. Wyatt's balcony.

At half-past nine o'clock, the military appointed to take part in the proceedings of the day, arrived on the spot. These included the 2nd Life Guards, under the command of Colonel Williams; the Grenadier Guards, under the command of Colonel Home, and two companies of the Fusilier Guards and Coldstream Guards, under the command of their respective officers.

A strong body of police under Mr. Superintendent Hughes, and Inspectors Shackell and Haynes, with a detachment of the detective force, were in attendance.

At ten o'clock, the Statue and Car were drawn from the interior of Mr. Wyatt's premises, into the Harrow Road; this was done by means of haulage, the ropes being manned by one hundred of the Fusilier Guards, in fatigue dress. A few minutes after eleven, the Statue was fairly drawn into the open street, where it was received with the most tremendous cheering by the assembled crowds; nearly an hour was consumed in turning the carriage into its proper track and in yoking the horses who were to draw it to its destination. These horses, twenty-nine in number, were supplied by Mr. Goding, the brewer, and were driven by ten sturdy draymen, one wearing upon his breast a Waterloo medal. The horses were crowned with laurel, and were yoked, with the exception of the two wheelers, three a-breast. All having been prepared, the police with some difficulty cleared a passage, and, as the clock of Paddington Church struck twelve, the cortège set out amid loud and continued cheering, in the following order of procession:—

Vidette of the 2nd Life Guards
The band of the same Regiment.
Trumpeters.
Two troops of the Life Guards.
A body of pioneers belonging to the Fusilier Guards.
The Carriage bearing the STATUE.
Drawn by twenty-nine horses, three abreast,
And escorted by a troop of 20 Life Guardsmen on either side, under the command of Captain F. M. Martyn.

Immediately in the rear of the Statue were a body of riggers from Woolwich Dockyard, who were succeeded by 100 men of the Fusilier Guards in fatigue dress, the latter being in attendance to hold on by ropes attached to the rear of the carriage, in case of necessity.

The band of the Fusilier Guards.
One hundred of the Fusilier Guards in parade dress.
The band of the Grenadier Guards.
Two hundred of the Grenadier Guards in parade dress.
The band of the Coldstream Guards.
One hundred of the Coldstream Guards in parade dress.
The procession closed with a troop of the 2nd Life Guards.

It was originally intended that the members of the Committee should have taken part in the procession, but this portion of the arrangements was ultimately not carried out.

The principal drayman who had the charge of the wheel horses is an old Waterloo man. His name is Matthias Butcher. He obtained his discharge from the army in 1820, since which period he has been in Messrs. Goding's service. The poor fellow evidently felt no small degree of pride on Tuesday in his possession of a Waterloo medal.

Whilst the carriage was stationary in front of Mr. Wyatt's house, M. Claudet, from the balcony of the Dudley Arms Tavern, opposite, made several interesting pictures of the scene by his Daguerreotype process; and our artists are indebted to this gentleman's courtesy for some aid in their sketches.

During the transit of the Statue from Mr. Wyatt's foundry to the road, that gentleman gave a déjeuner to his friends, the coffee served at which was made by Mrs. Ritchie, a lady who officiated at the last entertainment partaken of by the staff on the eve of the battle of Waterloo.

THE PROCESSION

The shout of wonder and welcome as the stupendous Statue and Car moved on, was very striking; and there was a picturesqueness about the accessories which much aided this effect. The sun was shining brilliantly, and lighted up the stupendous figure; the helmets, cuirasses, swords, and bayonets of the military, flashed in the bright glare; the music of the bands, the firing of guns, and the shouts of the people, made the whole spectacle very impressive. All eyes were, at first, centred upon the Statue; at whose base were clustering the artisans who had assisted in its execution, headed by Mr. James Wyatt, the sculptor. The magnitude of the figure, in comparison with the surrounding groups, more than once reminded one of "hero-worship; but, the shouts and enthusiasm of the people bespoke their grateful triumph. At starting, the National Anthem was played. The progress for some distance being down hill, the fatigue guard acted as a drag, by holding on the ropes at the rear. Then, there was a slight halt: the band played "See the Conquering Hero Comes;" the Car again moved on; and the surprise at its rapidity was very great.

The Procession advanced at a comparatively rapid rate, through the Harrow-road, into the Edgware-road; the carriage passing the occasional curves without difficulty until it arrived at Upper Seymour-street, where a short pause was made, to give the horses breathing time.

Again in motion, the next stoppage was occasioned by the accidental lock of one of the off wheels against a post in the centre of the crossing at the junction of Oxford-street and the Edgware-road.

This was soon overcome; and the cortège moved on, turning down Park-lane, at which point our Artist has sketched the spectacle.

Thence the procession advanced uninterruptedly until it reached Dudley House, where the breakage of one of the carriage shafts caused considerable delay. We here noticed that the colossal hero reached to the top of the lofty verandah of the drawing-room floor of Dudley House. Up to this time, the transit had occupied little more than half-an-hour.

The carriage being repaired, the procession again moved on, amidst the inspiriting strains of the fine martial music, and the cheers of the people.

The sharp turning out of Park-lane into Piccadilly, which had been looked upon as the most dangerous point of the journey, was cleared in masterly manner; and the horses, laying to their work in good earnest, brought the carriage opposite the end of Hamilton-place, in first-rate style. Here another delay of some duration took place, owing to the breaking of a second shaft, there being five to the carriage in all.

Again the procession advanced; and at half-past one o'clock the Statue arrived opposite Apsley House, the band playing "See the Conquering Hero Comes," and then the cheers were redoubled. The scene at this moment was exceedingly animated, the large area in front of the arch being filled with thousands of people, extending far into Hyde-park. The windows of the surrounding mansions presented large parties of elegantly-dressed ladies, and the roofs also contributed their share of accommodation to other spectators.

At Apsley House, a distinguished party was assembled to witness the installation of this tribute to the prowess of the noble proprietor; amongst whom we observed her Majesty the Queen Dowager, her Royal Highness the Princess of Prussia, their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge, their Royal Highnesses the Hereditary Grand Duke and Grand Duchess of Mecklenburg Strelitz, his Serene Highness Prince Frederick of Hesse, his Royal Highness Prince George, her Royal Highness the Princess Mary, the Earl Howe, the Countess of Westmoreland, the Marchioness of Worcester, Viscount Strangford, Lord and Lady Fitzroy Somerset, Sir Andrew Barnard, the Right Hon. H. Pierrepont, Mr. Culling E. Smith, Mr Hardwicke, Lord Charles Wellesley, and the following members of the Committee:—The Duke of Rutland, the Earl of Cardigan, Sir Frederick Trench, Mr. John Wilson Croker, Mr. Simpson, &c.

The Queen Dowager, with the Princess of Prussia, the Countess of Westmoreland, and Lady Fitzroy Somerset, formed a group at the extreme western balcony. Lord Charles Wellesley was in attendance on her Majesty. Both the Queen and her illustrious relative manifested great interest in the scene.

The Statue having been brought opposite the scaffolding intended for its elevation to the summit of the Arch, the horses were detached, and it was then drawn into the desired position by means of two windlasses; at a quarter to four o'clock, the ropes were thrown off, and all was prepared for raising it to its intended site, but it was too late to commence this operation until next day.

After the Statue had been brought opposite the scaffolding, the Queen Dowager requested Mr. Hardwicke to inquire of Mr. Wyatt whether there was a probability of its being elevated during the afternoon, as in that event she should wish to remain and observe the ceremony.

Its being considered unadvisable was communicated to her Majesty, who shortly afterwards left for Marlborough House, accompanied by the Princess of Prussia.

On the arrival of the Statue in the road, the troops formed, the bands continued to play, and the whole scene was very animated. After the Statue had been turned and drawn in near the left foot of the Triumphal Arch, the horse and infantry were formed again, and marched off to their respective quarters; but hundreds of persons continued about the spot for the remainder of the evening inspecting the vast work.

Notwithstanding the crowd, we heard of no accident of any importance, and are happy to add that the conduct of all parties—spectators, police, and military—was highly praiseworthy; and, by order on the one side, and patience and forbearance on the other, the whole of the proceedings passed off without leaving any occasion for regret. In the evening, Messrs. Goding's men, the drivers, &c., thirty-eight in number, were regaled with a supper of roast beef, geese, &c.

Thus vanished Fallacy the First respecting the Great Statue, the removal of which entire was predicted as a rash and unsafe attempt, likely to be attended with all sorts of catastrophes—as breaking-in of the sewers, cutting up the road, and other failures. In all these matters, the vapourers were disappointed; but the mass of the people were delighted with the mechanical precision with which the whole labour was managed.

Mr. Wyatt was present during the day, and actively engaged in superintending the movements of the workmen. He was accompanied by his four sons—Mr. Wyatt (of the Queen's Household), Mr. George Wyatt, Mr. Henry Wyatt, and Mr. James Wyatt.

Mr Wyatt did not accompany the Statue, as has been stated; but proceeded in his carriage through the Park, accompanied by Mr. Simpson; and in his route, received the congratulations of several distinguished personages, on the successful event of the day.

We may here add, that the letters of the Artist's name form the embroidery of the saddle-cloth, in the same way that Sir Joshua Reynolds printed his name, much to the satisfaction of Mrs. Siddons, on the skirt of the dress of his celebrated "Tragic Muse."

THE LATE THOMAS CLARKSON.—Next week we shall present to our readers a Portrait of the venerable Thomas Clarkson, whose death took place on Saturday last. The Engraving will be accompanied by a copious Memoir of the eventful life of the Philanthropist by one of his Relatives.

ERRATUM.—A Correspondent states that, in the ILLUSTRATED NEWS for Saturday, the 26th Sept., the name of the Rev. Robert George Hooper Richards, B.A., of Magdalen Hall, Oxford, is inserted by mistake, instead of the Rev. Robert George Hooper Orchard, who was ordained a Priest by the Bishop of Exeter, on Sunday, Sept. 20th.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 3, 1846.

THE excitement on the Spanish Marriage question is cooling down, and the quarrel will end without perdition of souls. The alliances of Princes are now of very secondary importance, and as to the Royal Families of France and Spain, they have been accustomed to intermarry for centuries without the smallest approach to an amalgamation between the two nations. To "protest" and appeal to old forgotten treaties may furnish occupation for diplomatists, but the people of this country take very little interest in the affair. As to the terms of treaties, is England in a position to insist very strictly upon such an observance?

To get rid of a temporary difficulty, as to the Sugar Duties, an English Minister not more than a year ago, explained away, with an ingenuity worthy of Nisi Prius, all the clauses of the commercial treaty between Spain and England that bore upon ourselves. In fact, to go back a century, or as in this Spanish Marriage case, eight or nine hundred years, for terms and conditions, is little less than absurd; men will not be bound by compacts the living reasons for which have long since perished. We believe the national feeling in all three countries, in Spain, France, and England, has been overrated and overstated by the journals.

As far as England is concerned, no possible interposition of French influence in Spain can make the commercial code of that country more absurd than it is, or more destructive of its revenue and prosperity; any change that is made, must perforce be for the better: so far, we have no reason to be alarmed. If Louis Philippe, in his anxiety to get a rich wife for his son, has thrust his head into a political hornet's nest, it is no concern of ours; and if he kindles a civil war in Spain, those who are concerned in the issue may fight it out among them. In case of direct injury or insult, nothing is clearer than the course England would have to take; but this Royal intermarriage is no casus belli. What reason could an English Minister give to Parliament for plunging into a war for such a cause? Could we land our regiments at Barcelona, and say, fight and destroy, for Isabella's sister must not marry? We could not; no injury can be proved, though the family of Louis Philippe may have gained an advantage. We have more serious matters to attend to at home.

THE accounts of the state of Ireland grow darker and darker. Famine seems to be doing its worst, and the extreme of want is producing revolt and riot; at Dungarvan it appears that the military have been obliged to fire on the people—with fatal effect. This is one of the horrors attending on scarcity; the rebellion it excites is of the worst kind; the aggressors find a certain amount of sympathy and excuse, which, although against our judgment, it is impossible to withhold. The Autumn and Winter will, we fear, be a period of gloom and unusual difficulty; we have no doubt the assurances of Lord John Russell at the Sheriff's dinner, on Wednesday, will be carried out, and that the parts of the empire that are strong will send aid to those that are weak; but it is the misfortune of all such interposition to be slow in its effect; between the time of pressure and the arrival of relief, the evil becomes insupportable, and the mass makes a wild and desperate attempt to snatch a remedy at all risks, with this sad and heart-rending result.

THE Mexican war appears to be at a stand-still for the moment. Those who know anything of military operations will not consider it amounts to a check: a country without roads or means of conveyance is not the place for rapid movements. The fortune of war is proverbially a chequered one, and the American force is not exempted from it. There has been a mutiny or revolt in part of the army; the causes are unexplained, but it was not quelled without loss of life. An American ship of war has also been wrecked, and part of her crew captured by the Mexicans, who will no doubt make the most of the accident in their peculiar manner. But the ability on their part to make an effectual resistance to the invasion does not exist. The whole race seems decayed, and the fabric of society broken down: to such a pitch have misgovernment and oppression been carried, that it is said many provinces of Mexico are perfectly indifferent what Government they fall under, since none can be worse than their own.

PRIVY COUNCIL.—On Saturday last, the Queen held a Privy Council at Windsor Castle. It was attended by his Royal Highness Prince Albert, the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Lord Chancellor, Lord John Russell, First Lord of the Treasury, Sir George Grey, Secretary of State for the Home Department; Viscount Palmerston, Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs; and Sir John Hobhouse, President of the Board of Control for the Affairs of India. At the Privy Council a form of prayer was ordered for the relief of the distress and scarcity now existing in parts of the United Kingdom. The Archbishop of Canterbury was directed to prepare a form of prayer. His Grace had an audience of the Queen.

ARISTOCRATIC MARRIAGE.—On Wednesday (last week) Frederick A. Lushington, Esq., youngest son of Sir Henry Lushington, Bart., led to the altar at Lyndhurst, Hants, Lady Margaret Julia Hay, youngest daughter of William, fifteenth Earl of Erroll. The Dowager Countess of Erroll, Lady Isabella Wemyss, the Hon. Captain and Mrs. Hay, Mr. and Lady Caroline Morant, Sir H. and Lady Lushington, &c., were present at the ceremony.

CABINET COUNCIL.—Another Cabinet Council was held yesterday, at the official residence of Lord John Russell, in Downing-street. Previous to the Council, several of the Ministers had interviews with the noble Lord.

DEATH OF MRS. HIND.—The death of Mrs. Hind, the widow of the late Mr William Hind, who was killed by the accident on the Eastern Counties Railw[illegible] month of July, is announced. On the arrival of her wounded husband Mrs. Hind sustained such a shock, that the physicians pronounced her recovery from its effects scarcely possible. With a view to her [illegible] moved from the scene of distress to Peckham, where [illegible] morning.

COAL PIT EXPLOSION, AND LOSS OF SIX LIVES.—Last Monday morning a dreadful accident from explosion of fire-damp, whereby six lives have been lost occurred at a pit connected with the Clyde Iron Works, the property of Messrs Dunlop, a few miles up the Clyde from Glasgow. The pit in which the accident occurred is called Bogle's Hole, and is situated within a stone-throw of the river-side. The majority, if not the whole, of the men were married, and have left widows and families.

LAMENTABLE LOSS OF LIFE AT THE ABERDEEN RAILWAY WORKS.—Last Monday morning, three arches on the railway works near Aberdeen gave way, burying a number of the workmen. Nine persons were killed, and several others have been severely injured. At present, the immediate cause of the falling of the arches is not known. The building was only level with the keystone, and the arches are said to have burst in the middle.

MURDERS AND SUICIDE AT ELTHAM, KENT.—A dreadful murder of a woman and child, with the suicide of the perpetrator of the deed, took place on Wednesday morning, at Eltham. From the evidence given at the inquest, it appears that Sharruck Rudd Bragg, a bricklayer, had murdered his wife and child, by beating them over the temples with a hammer, and afterwards cut his own throat. When the deed became known, which was discovered through the blood draining from the floor of the bed-room to the room below, the man was dead, but the woman and child, though totally senseless, still breathed. The child, aged five years, died about two hours after the discovery was made; but the woman lingered till about ten o'clock in the forenoon. When discovered, an infant, aged four months, was found by the side of the woman, uninjured. The Coroner said that, from the evidence adduced, no doubt could exist as to the man at the time being insane, and verdicts to that effect were accordingly returned.

LATEST FOREIGN NEWS.

SPAIN.

Our latest advices from Spain state that, as had been arranged, Count Bresson, the French Ambassador, on the 25th ult., had an audience of the Queens Isabella and Christina, to receive their formal consent to the marriage of her Royal Highness the Infanta with the Duke de Montpensier. Three of the Court carriages, attended by a numerous suite of servants in their full-dress liveries, and escorted by a detachment of cavalry, went to the Count's hotel to bring him to the Palace. In the square in front of the Palace trophies were raised; and on his arriving at the foot of the staircase, he was received by all the majordomos on duty, in their full costume. Their Majesties, surrounded by Grandees, Ministers, Ladies of Honour, and Chamberlains, were standing on the platform in front of the Throne. On being introduced, Count Bresson delivered an address to Queen Christina, entreating her solemn consent to the marriage of the Infanta with the Duke de Montpensier.

Queen Christina replied:—"The approaching marriages of my beloved daughters cause me the joy of seeing fulfilled on one and the same day all my hopes, all my desires. By these unions I see insured the happiness of these pledges of my maternal love, as well as a futurity of peace and concord for this magnanimous nation, which I call with pride my country. I give at the same time to your Sovereign the most striking proof of my affection by consenting, with all the effusion of my heart, to the marriage of my beloved daughter, the Infanta, with the Duke de Montpensier. She will thus enter an august family, who by their practice form an example of every private and public virtue."

Count Bresson then addressed Queen Isabella in the following terms: "Madam, Your Majesty has not been contented with insuring your own happiness and that of Spain, by giving your hand to a Prince most worthy of his high destiny, but you have also thought of the happiness of a beloved sister, and deigned to consent to her union with the youngest son of a King who was already bound to your Majesty by so many ties, and to Spain by sympathy, and his admiration for a people standing so high in history. To-day, the Cortes of the kingdom, so enlightened and so patriotic, have, by their deliberations and addresses, partaken in the wishes and intentions of your Majesty; and I come in the name of the King, my august Sovereign, to request that you will first accept his congratulations and best wishes; and next, that you will solemnly confirm the consent already granted by you for the marriage of her Royal Highness the Infanta Donna Luisa Fernanda with his Royal Highness the Duke de Montpensier."

Her Majesty Queen Isabella replied:—"Called by Divine Providence to fill the throne of Spain, the happiness of this great nation has ever been the object of all my endeavours. My heart flatters me with the hope that I have secured it by the union I am about to contract. The Prince who is about to call himself my consort is worthy of the title from his high qualities. I am also indebted to Divine Providence for a companion of my childhood, who has been inseparable from me from my infancy—a sister whom I love tenderly, and whose happiness I wished to insure as my own. May God grant me the consolation of knowing that my object has been attained by giving her hand to the youngest son of your King—to a Prince whose eminent merits already recall the rare virtues of his august father. Encouraged by the vote of the Cortes of the kingdom, whose loyal and sincere congratulations I have just received, I declare to you, Sir, that I repeat and solemnly confirm my Royal consent to the celebration of the marriage of my well-beloved sister, the Infanta of Spain, Donna Luisa Fernanda of Bourbon, to Prince Antoine Marie Philippe Louis of Orleans, Duke de Montpensier. I request, Sir, that you will make this known to your Sovereign, my well-beloved uncle, whose congratulations I accept with the most lively gratitude. And may the Almighty, who so visibly guides and protects him, grant that these two marriages may be pledges for the happiness of our two families, and for the peace and prosperity of the two nations."

Queen Christina afterwards sent the Marchioness De Santa Cruz, the Camerera Mayor, to bring the Infanta, whom the Count thus addressed: "Madam, Heaven presided over your birth; and your Royal Highness has had every gift, every grace bestowed upon you. Happy the Prince on whom the choice of your Royal Highness has fallen, and who is called upon to unite his fate to yours. In saying to your Royal Highness that already the heart of your future husband is filled alone with this happiness, I only interpret the sentiments which he himself will shortly express to you in person, if your Royal Highness shall deign to confirm solemnly on this day the consent you have already granted."

Her Royal Highness, after having obtained the consent of her august mother, and sister, answered:—"Intimately convinced that the counsels of my tender mother, and the advice of my well-beloved sister, can have no other view than the double object of my happiness and the interests of my country, I confirm with joy, Sir, the consent I have already given, and solemnly accept the offer made to me of the hand of a Prince whose qualities are so eminent. It is with happiness, that, on this occasion, I yield to the desires of my family."

Before he withdrew, Count Bresson delivered to her Royal Highness the portrait of her affianced bridegroom, which she accepted with evident satisfaction. On his return to the Embassy, he was received with great respect by the immense crowd assembled on the occasion. Count Bresson distributed 10,000 francs among the poor of Madrid and the servants of the Royal stables.

The Constitutionnel contains the following: "We have just received a letter from the frontiers of Spain, stating that eighty insurgents, amongst whom are several priests, have been taken and shot. At Seu d'Urgel, several priests have been strangled, amongst whom is the Vicar Gazi."

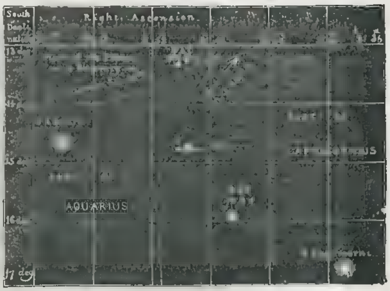
NAVAL AND MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

PRINCE GEORGE OF CAMBRIDGE.—His Royal Highness Prince George of Cambridge has left town for Limerick to assume the command of that district, in the room of Major-General Lord Downes.

COURT MARTIAL.—On Tuesday, a District Court Martial, by order of the Commander-in-Chief, was held at Hounslow Barracks, on Private Mathewson, of the 7th Hussars. The following officers formed the Court:—Major W. Smith, B.C., Royal Horse Guards (President); Captains John C. Trent, Royal Horse Guards; Morant, 12th Lancers, and Monro, ditto; Lieutenants Barry, Charles Sutton Maunsell, and H. G. Sutton, 12th Lancers. The evidence against the prisoner proved that he had used insulting and threatening language to Sergeant O'Donnell. Lieutenant Viscount St. Laurence, the prosecutor, proved the prisoner's previous conviction, under which he had received one hundred lashes, and said that the prisoner was generally insolent and disrespectful to his commanding officers. He had been only six months in the regiment. At the conclusion of the Court Martial, Mathewson was marched back to the guard-room, but the verdict will not be formally announced until the finding and sentence of the Court are confirmed by the Horse Guards.

THE WILL OF THE HON. MR. JUSTICE WILLIAMS.—The late Sir John Williams, Knight, one of her Majesty's Justices of the Court of Queen's Bench, had settled on his wife at marriage a sum of £40,000, and, as she is the survivor, and there is no issue, the same will be at her disposal by deed or will. The trustees, under the settlement, were Lord Brougham, the late Lord Abinger, and the late Sir Robert Wilmot Horton. With a portion of that sum was purchased the estate of Dowsby Hall, Lincoln, producing a rental of £1,200 a year, and the other portion invested in the funds. By his will he directs that his executors shall secure to her an income of not less than £2,000 a year. Devises and bequeaths all his real estate, and the residue of his personal estate, to trustees and executors, to convert the personalty into money, and invest the same, on good security. The funded and personal property was valued for duty at £25,000; the real estate is not to be sold during the life-time of Lady Williams. Bequeaths to her the house in Grosvenor-square as a residence, and leaves her all his furniture, plate, pictures, and books (except law books), also the carriages, horses, &c., and a portion of the residue—the whole being divided into thirty-seven parts. Six parts to Lady Williams, six to Captain A. Jones, four to the Captain's brothers and sisters, four to John Richardson, Esq., four to Mr. Smith, of Altree, four to [illegible], three to the children of the late Rev. F. Howes of Norwich, two to the Rev. Dr. Lally, two to his brother Edmund Lally, Esq., and two to such of testator's cousins, the Miss Bennions, as are living. There are specific pecuniary bequests, viz., to his executors, John Palfry Burrell, Esq., of Gray's Inn, £1,000, and Peter Bellinger Brodie, Esq., of Lincoln's Inn Fields, £500; to his godson, Lord Gifford, £500; the Rev J. Bolden, £500; Mr. Edward Brady, £300; Mrs. Archer, £300; his Clerk, £100; his Groom, £50. This Learned Judge died at his seat, Livermere Park, Suffolk, on the 14th of September, at the age of 70, having executed his will only a fortnight before his death.

LE VERRIER'S NEW PLANET.



(To the Editor.)

THE circumstance of the discovery of a new Planet at any time cannot fail to be highly interesting, and must necessarily attract much attention. The discovery of a Planet in the place assigned to it by theory must be highly gratifying indeed. For some years past, the Planet Uranus has attracted much attention from the circumstance of its anomalous motions; it being apparently beyond the influence of gravitation, and lately from its departing more and more from its predicted places; the amount of these departures have been the base upon which calculations have been made upon the effects of a supposed planet, of a certain size, mass, &c., which would account for the motions of Uranus, and restore it to the government of the same laws as govern the other Planets. The result of these calculations is the discovery of a new Planet, and it must be considered as one of the greatest triumphs of Theoretical Astronomy.

Le Verrier was the first to perform these calculations; and, on Sept. 23rd, Dr. Galle, at Berlin, received a letter from him, requesting him to search for the then hypothetical Planet; and, on the same evening, during a comparison of the heavens with Dr. Brenicker's map, he saw a star of the eighth magnitude not marked on the map, in the constellation of Aquarius, as marked in the Chart engraved above. Dr. Galle immediately compared its place fifteen times with the star marked on the Chart, British Association Catalogue, No. 7648; and the celebrated Encke took five comparisons with the same star. Its motion, however, was so slow, that it was necessary to wait till the next night, which, most fortunately, was such as to admit of other comparisons being made. The same object was found to have retrograded from the place it held on the previous night, and its place in the heavens was found to be as follows:—

Sept. 23, at 12h 0m 14.6s, Berlin Mean Time, the Right Ascension was 21h 53m 17s
Sept. 23, at 8 54 40.6, Berlin Mean Time, the Right Ascension was 21 53 13
and its South Declination was 13deg 24m 8.2s
and it was 13 24 29.7

Mr. Hind, at Mr. Bishop's Observatory, saw the Planet on Sept. 30, and he found it to be situated as follows:—

Sept. 30, at 8h 16m 21s, Greenwich Mean Time, the Right Ascension was 21h 52m 47.15s
and its South Declination was 13deg 27m 20s

The motion agrees fully with Le Verrier's hypothetical motion; so that this is a most splendid discovery. It will be seen in the Chart that it is near to the Planet Saturn.

IRELAND.

RIOTING AND BLOODSHED AT DUNGARVAN.

We regret to hear that serious riots have taken place in the town of Dungarvan, County Waterford, which it is feared will lead to loss of life. The particulars are contained in the following letter, dated:—

"Dungarvan, Tuesday Evening.

"Serious riots, I grieve to say, have taken place in this town. Yesterday vast numbers of people, to the amount of eleven or twelve thousand, marched in here from the surrounding country, and proceeded to attack bakers' shops, from which they took quantities of bread. The mob were about to attack the stores of merchants and others, but, fortunately, a troop of dragoons, which had been ordered in consequence of the apprehension of riots, arrived from Kilmacthomas, and, with the co-operation of the military force already here, prevented further depredations. In the afternoon, however, in the dusk of the evening, some of the populace commenced throwing stones, and the dragoons had to charge them repeatedly. The people, however, still continued throwing stones, and the state of affairs began to look very serious. The dragoons were then ordered to fire; and, it is stated, about twenty shots were discharged. Two men were seriously wounded. They are still living; but several others, it is feared, were wounded more or less severely amongst the crowd, who fled subsequently to the firing. The town has been since perfectly free from disturbance; but dreadful excitement and alarm prevail amongst all classes here. It was owing to the commendable forbearance of the military that much more disastrous results did not ensue.

"These riots are attributable to discontent amongst the peasantry as to the amount of wages on the public works—no definite sum having been fixed as yet. In the first instance, eight pence a day was offered, but the people refused that rate as utterly insufficient. Ten pence was then offered, but also refused. [illegible] the course of yesterday, a written paper was handed from the people to the magistrates, requiring that their wages should be one shilling per day, and that they should be supplied with Indian meal at a corresponding price by the stone, to enable them to give sustenance to their families. My own impression is, that if those terms are complied with, we shall have no further disturbances."

The Myrmidon, steam-vessel, Lieutenant Commander Jenkins, and the Swallow, steam-vessel, Master Commander Bryant, have arrived at Youghal, from Cork, for the protection of public property, and to support the civil power. The Myrmidom has with her the armed boats of the Stromboli, steam-sloop, and the Swallow has taken the Stromboli's field-piece, and the marines belonging to the Madagascar.

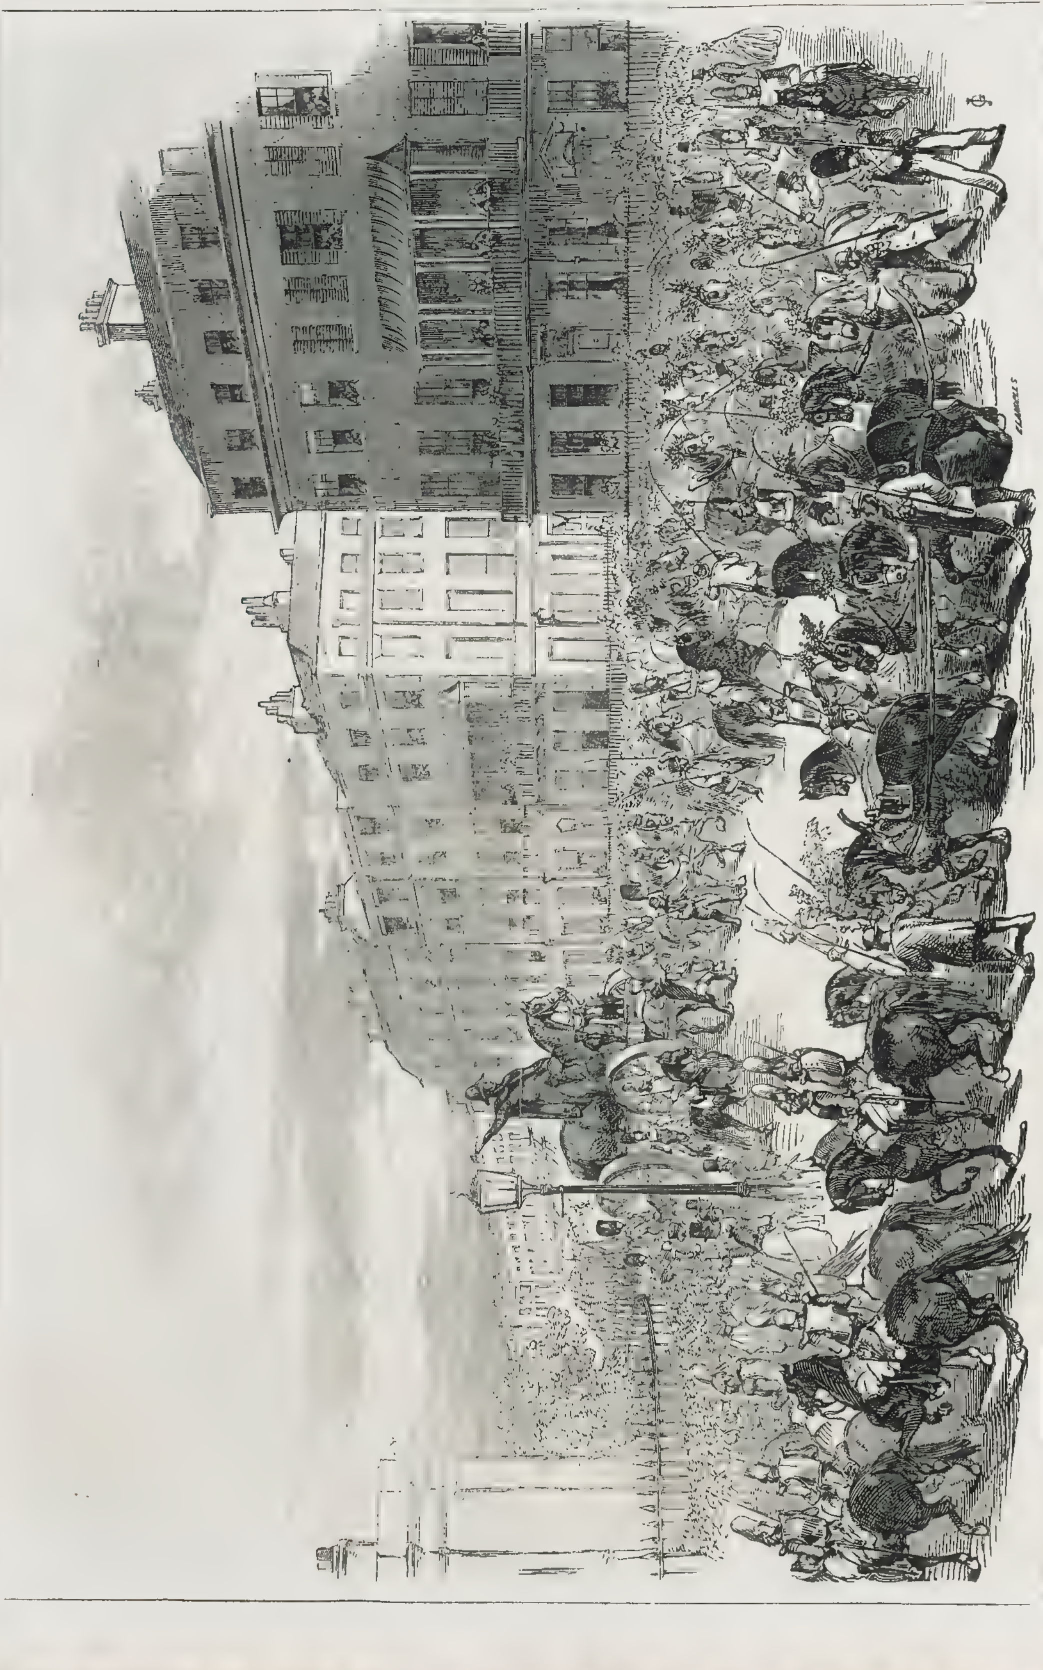
RIOTOUS PROCEEDINGS LAST WEEK.

In a late impression last week we stated that there had been riots in several towns in Ireland, the pretence for which was the scarcity of food.

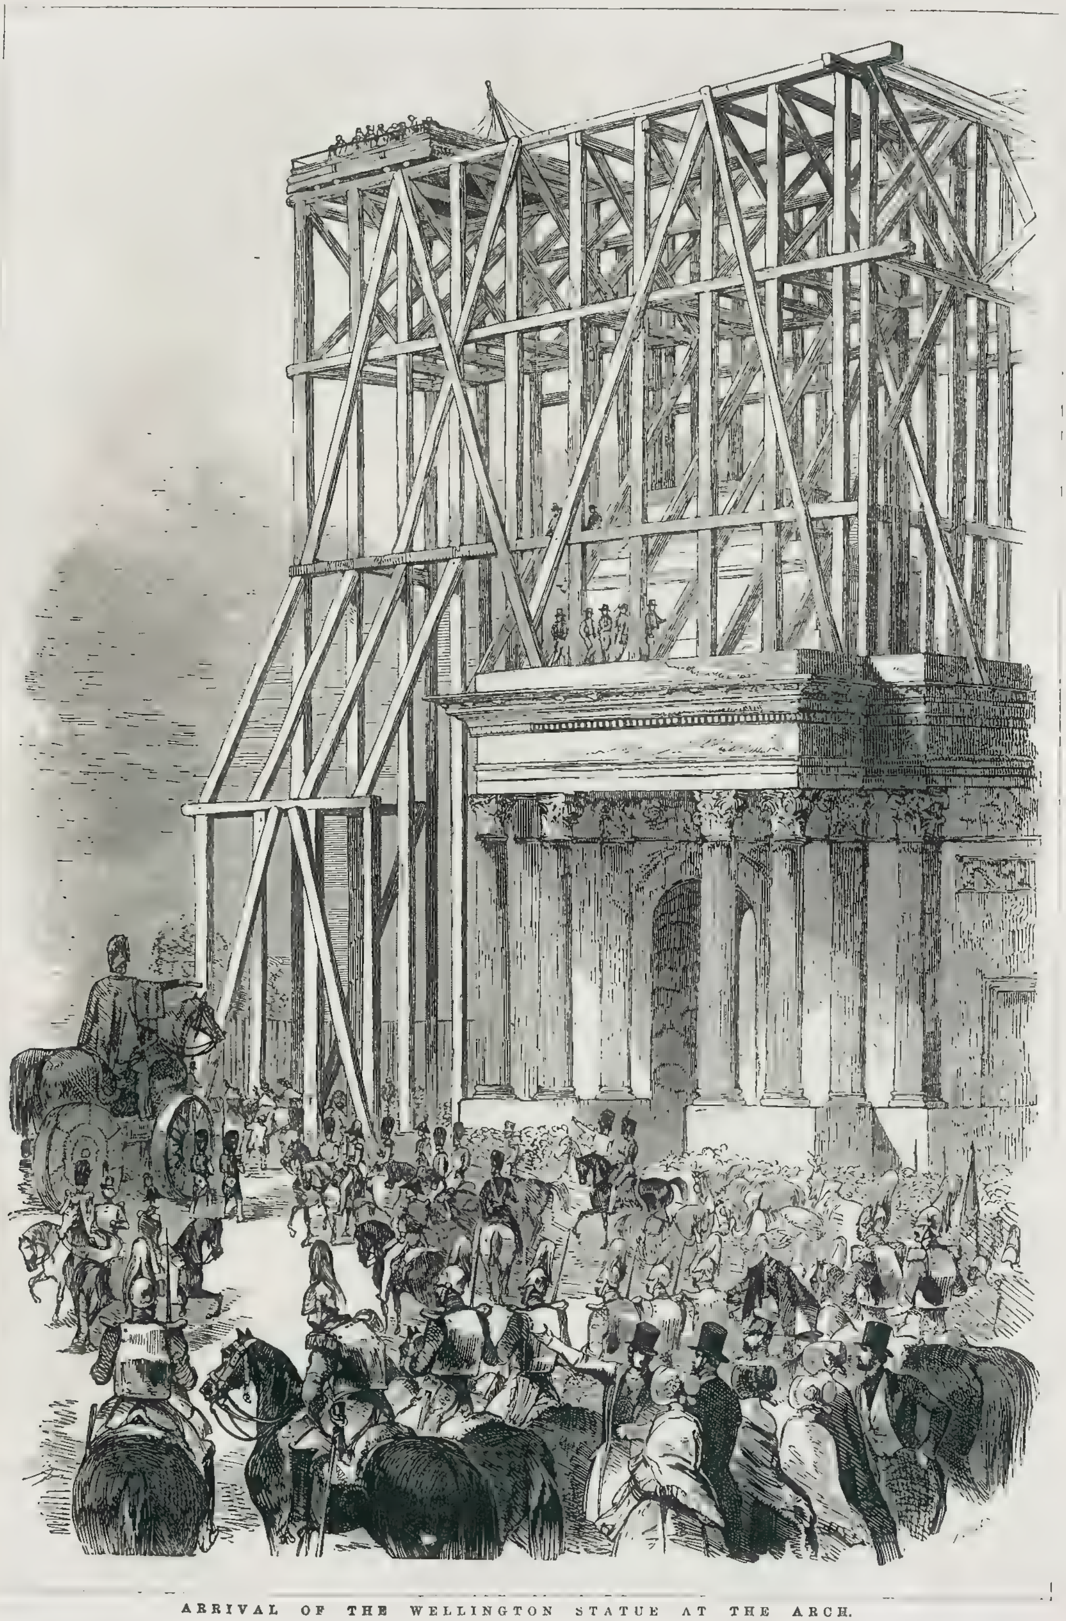
It is stated that on Thursday (last week) a mob of thousands marched down to Mr. Fisher's mill, at Pilltown, just opposite Youghal, on the county of Waterford side, vowing vengeance if Indian meal was not sold for one shilling per stone from the mill, and corn ground for one penny per stone; they then proceeded, armed with sticks, stones, spades, hammers (such as are used in repairing roads), and other weapons, to the Ferrypoint, just opposite the centre of the town, and considerable apprehension was excited that they meant to attack it. The magistrates had the military in readiness immediately to repel them, but they contented themselves with threats of vengeance against the ferrymen and boatmen, should they carry corn or provisions over to the Youghal merchants. The house of a farmer, named Wynne, was plundered; and several other farmers were sworn not to take their corn over to Youghal; and again they marched down to the Ferrypoint to show themselves. An express having been sent to the Admiral at Cove from the magistrates, informing him of the navigation of the river being impeded, and requiring the assistance of a steam-ship, the Myrmidon was immediately despatched, and, having a fair wind, arrived off the harbour at about half tide (three o'clock P.M.) The commander got out all his boats, filled with artillery and marines, and pulled into the harbour; the launch, carrying a nine-pounder in her bow, coming in last; the steamer coming to an anchor about half-past four. This seasonable arrival seemed to deter the country boys, and they again returned to their homes.

RESTORATION OF MR. SMITH O'BRIEN TO THE MAGISTRACY.—Mr Smith O'Brien has been restored to the Commission of the Peace for Limerick, at the suggestion of several magistrates of that county. Mr. O'Brien, in his answer to the letter from the Lord Chancellor's secretary, says:—"The present Government having wisely renounced the principle of excluding individuals from the magistracy on account of their advocacy of the national rights of Ireland, the motives which induced me to resign my commission no longer exist. I shall, therefore, cheerfully resume my functions as soon as reinstated."

FIVE PERSONS DROWNED. A correspondent of the Limerick Chronicle, writing from Kilkee, on the coast of Clare, says: "Two melancholy accidents have occurred here, which elicited very general sympathy. A respectable young woman, Bridget Hanrahan, from Croom, whilst preparing to stand under a cascade, or natural shower-bath, which falls at low water amongst the rocks, was taken out to sea, on Tuesday, by an impending wave and drowned. The body was brought in by an intrepid fisherman, John Daveen, who, with three others, Edward Hickie, Pat Russell, and Pat Robinson, have since met a watery grave by venturing out to sea, to set their nets. More than twenty nets, belonging to other fishermen, were carried away or rendered useless by the unexpected gale and great swell of the sea.



THE GRAND PROCESSION OF THE WELLINGTON STATUE, TURNING DOWN PARK-LANE.



ARRIVAL OF THE WELLINGTON STATUE AT THE ARCH.

GOSSIP OF THE WEEK.

THE Procession and Elevation of the Duke's Statue have occurred most opportunely this week to break the autumnal monotony of town. Rome never thronged round the triumphal car of Consul or Prætor more joyously, than London thronged on Tuesday round the twenty-nine stalwart dray-horses that slowly and solemnly drew the great effigy of the Great Captain of the Age to its aërial pedestal on Constitution Hill.

> They bear him on majestically near,
> Great Goding's horses, strong as Goding's beer.
> How gloriously the brazen image glows!
> Firm is his look as when he faced our foes,
> And eagle-like is curl'd his Roman nose.

The fierce controversy that has been waged for some weeks and months respecting the merits of the Statue, and the capabilities of the chosen site, added much to public curiosity. Never was sculptor more bitterly assailed than the Founder of our new Colossus has been; and, as for the Committee, every epithet implying Vandalism and vulgarity of taste has been heaped on them

> Thick as the leaves
> On Vallambrosa's stream.

Shakspeare makes one of his characters (and Byron has imitated him) speak of the peculiar bitterness of the Old Gentleman's "Arch mock;" and it has been perfectly exemplified in the spirit in which Mr. Burton's Arch has been mocked at as a pedestal. Fortunately, however, there is a seeing as well as a reading public; and the verdict of admiration which the seeing public expressed both of Statue and Site was unmistakeable.

Poor Colonel Gurwood's publication of the Duke's "Despatches" gave England one imperishable "Wellington Testimonial," and Wyatt's foundry has now given her another. High as the merit of the book is, we doubt it proving, like Horace's Odes, and think that Statue and Volume will endure together.

> Monumentum ære perennius,

An inscription will, of course, be necessary: and, bearing in mind the Duke's English ancestry and Irish birth, and the fact of the Statue being cast out of artillery captured in his victories, we think the following not inappropriate. It has, at all events, the merits of rhyme and brevity, two important points for making things easy to be remembered. We therefore submit it to the Committee as an advisable

INSCRIPTION FOR THE WELLINGTON TESTIMONIAL.

> The rider's a Duke, and the bravest son
> Of the isles of the Thames and Shannon;
> And the horse is a genuine son of a gun,
> For he's made of the Frenchmen's cannon.

As for the other Statues of the metropolis, they, must in future "hide their diminished heads." Constitution Hill and "The Duke" will henceforth be the ruling attractions.

> Yes—Charing Cross may be forgot,
> And Pig-tail Place an unknown spot;
> Trafalgar Square, frequented not;
> And no one care to stir a jot—
> The Duke of York to view.
> But round that arch shall England throng,
> Whether her taste be right or wrong,
> To gaze upon the features strong
> Of him who served her well and long,
> Who led at Waterloo.

After the reminiscences of the mighty conflicts which the Duke's Statue brings back to the mind, the present contests of our forces against Kaffirs at the Cape, and Dyaks and Malays in Borneo, seem very pop-gun work indeed. But they show that our men can still fight, and we never are likely to be altogether without a practising ground for fighting in some quarter or other of the world. We are still peppering away at the Kaffrarian moss-troopers who infest our South African Colony: and, in the Asiatic seas, our sailors and marines have been administering a few lessons of good behaviour to a certain piratical Sultan, and his Pangerans, as his great men are pleased to style themselves. Besides the practical hints administered from the guns of H.M.S. Spiteful, and the H.E.I.C.S. Phlegethon, our Admiral left behind him an epistle for the Sultan, after the manner of Lord Chesterfield's letters, to exhort him to act in a more gentlemanly way in future. We hope that he and Pangeran Usop, Pangeran Moumeim, Pangeran Salley, and the rest of the grandees enumerated in the despatches, will take the intimation thus mildly conveyed to them, and render it unnecessary for our men-of-war to be any longer on visiting terms with their batteries. We hope this especially for the sake of the last-named Pangeran, whom we presume to be a distant relation of the celebrated "Sally in our Alley."

At home, also, we are burning gunpowder, but in innocent campaigns against game only. The First of October now gives a fresh impetus to the sportsman's zeal; and, as Byron says—

> Ah, nut-brown partridges! ah, brilliant pheasants!
> And ah, ye poachers!—'tis no sport for peasants.

Not, however, that a taste for poaching is the attribute of the lower classes exclusively. Ovid's old remark, that "Nitimur in vetitum," is true of many a shot of higher grade. There are plenty besides peasants who love to try their luck in a preserve without leave; and, perhaps, find that the excitement of the risk gives extra pleasure to the sport. There was one most incorrigible trespasser of this character, whose acquaintance we had the misfortune of once making; for he was as lax in pecuniary matters as he was in his notions of the sanctity of manors, and his constant scrapes made him a constant borrower. A disaster that at last befel him is duly chronicled in the following stanzas:—

CAPTIVUS AUCEPS; OR, THE POACHING SPORTSMAN IN DURANCE VILE.

AIR—"Not a drum was heard."

> No license to sport o'er the Manor he'd got,
> And his face in his neckcloth he buried;
> As he bolted away after firing his shot,
> And the gamekeepers after him hurried.
> He made his escape, after showing fight,
> And against his pursuers turning;
> But they managed a summons to serve that night,
> His name from his landlady learning.
> The Justices set him a fine next day,
> And to keep the peace they bound him;
> And they marched him off, 'cause he could not pay,
> With a mob of boys around him.
> We met him as off to the gaol he was led,
> And he wanted the money to borrow,
> We silently gazed—but we shook our head—
> When he promised to pay on the morrow.
> We told him of former loans unpaid,
> And for poaching began to upbraid him,
> But little he recked whatever we said,
> When he found that we would not aid him.
> He owned that at last he was fairly done,
> While into the cell retiring.
> Where they lodged the unfortunate son of a gun,
> At his Lordship's game for firing,
> To his friends he said, he had better write home,
> And tell them his dismal story.
> We saw him safe fixed in the Jug of Stone,
> And we left him alone in his glory.

LORD JOHN RUSSELL AND THE POLICEMAN.—On Sunday afternoon, during the time the private gardens and the eastern terrace, at Windsor, were open to the public, Lord John Russell, one of her Majesty's guests, walked from the terrace, and was proceeding across the grass, in the Home Park, towards the iron gates opposite to the Long Walk, a portion of the Royal domain from which the public are excluded. His Lordship had proceeded some distance before he was noticed by one of the Castle policemen, who no sooner saw a stranger (as he supposed) on forbidden ground, and not knowing who it was, sang out, with stentorian voice, "Hallo, you Sir! come back, and get off the grass! Come back, you Sir!" Lord John immediately got off the grass, and returned back towards the York and Lancaster towers. By the time his Lordship had got to within some 30 or 40 paces of the policeman, the official found out his mistake, having been informed the offending party was a person in the suite of some of her Majesty's visitors. He then called out to Lord John (who had evidently been taken by surprise), "You may go on; you are all right enough." His Lordship, smiling at the bystanders, then retraced his steps, and pursued his walk across the Park, towards the avenue of trees leading to the Waterloo Gate.

LORD BROUGHAM.—Lord Brougham arrived at Walmer Castle on Monday, on a visit to the Duke of Wellington, from Brougham Hall, Westmoreland. The learned Lord was to leave the residence of the noble and gallant Duke on Wednesday for Calais, and thence to Paris, in which his Lordship would make a brief sojourn on his way to Cannes, his chateau in the south of France. His Lordship will reside there until the middle of January

DEATH OF THE EARL OF WALDEGRAVE.—We have to announce the death of the Earl of Waldegrave, which took place at the family seat in Wiltshire, on Monday last. Leaving no children, his Lordship is succeeded in his honours by his uncle, Captain (now Earl of) Waldegrave, R.N.C.B., whose eldest son, Viscount Chewton, married Miss Pym, and his daughter, Lady Maria, married Sir Benjamin Brodie's son.

MUSIC.

With the exception of the performance of Haydn's "Creation," by the Cecilian Society, on Thursday, there has been nothing of note since our last publication. The concert that was to have been given at Marlborough House on Wednesday evening, by the Queen Dowager, in honour of her Royal Highness the Princess of Prussia, did not take place, owing to the dearth of artists in town. Grisi and Mario left for Paris on Saturday. Madame Caradori Allan, who has been staying with the Duke of Rutland and Lady Adeliza Manners, at Belvoir Castle, was compelled, in consequence of a severe cold, to forego the honour of accepting an engagement at her Majesty the Queen Dowager's projected concert.

The interest in the musical circles is now centred in the opening of Drury-Lane Theatre, with Benedict's "Crusaders," and the new ballet of "The Offspring of Flowers," composed for Flora Fabbri, by M. Bretin, who is her "Lord and master." Lady Bishop, under the foreign title of Madame Anna Bishop, will make her début on Tuesday next, in Balfe's "Maid of Artois," altered for her by the composer. The new tenor engaged by Mr. Bunn is not Mr. Travers, a cousin of Miss Romer, who has been singing in Italy under the name of Signor Traversi, but Mr. Rafter, a pupil of Crevelli. Mr. Rafter sang at the Philharmonic Concerts last season Mozart's "Cara Immagine," replacing at a short notice, Mr. Lockey, who was ill. He has a good voice and style, and only wants experience to make a very valuable addition to the present small number of tenors in the English market.

Grisi, Mario, and F. Lablache have become subscribers to that admirable institution, the Royal Society of Musicians.

The Italian Opera House in Paris opened on Thursday, with Donizetti's "Lucia," Madame Persiani, Ronconi, and Mario sustaining the principal parts. Coletti, the basso-baritone, was to make his début in Assur, in Rossini's "Semiramide," in which Grisi was to reappear. Mario, Coletti, and Grisi were shortly to appear in Verdi's "Due Foscari." The other artists engaged by M. Vatel, the Director, were the two Brambillas, Angiola, Albini, Amigo, Bellini; Signori Lablache, Tagliafaco, Corelli, Cellini, and Dufiori. At the Académie Royale de Musique the want of a great prima donna is severely felt. Madame Stoltz's voice is worn out; Mdlle. Nau is not in a good state of health; Madame Rossi Caccia is brilliant, but has no histrionic genius; Mdlle. Dameron, the pupil of Duprez, is only a novice of promise; Bettini, the new tenor, is a failure; Gardoni is weak; Duprez's powers are now precarious, but when he does come out, the audiences are always electrified; Barroilhet, the baritone, has been rather better of late as to power—his taste and feeling are undeniable; much is anticipated from Anconi, the new basso profundo; Brémond and Serda have the defect of the French nasal twang. During the indisposition of the veteran Habeneck, who is at Havre, Valentino is the conductor of the Académie band. Valentino some years since gave excellent classical instrumental concerts, in opposition to the Musard quadrille mania.

The Misses Pyne, two charming vocalists, lately sang at the Concert of the Boulogne Philharmonic Society with great success. Mr. Osborne, the pianist, who is distinguished as a composer, performed some of his pianoforte works on this occasion with the best effect.

The great Musard leaves Paris this day for Berlin, having been engaged to conduct the Court Balls. He will give several Promenade Concerts during his stay in the Prussian capital.

A troop of Hungarian singers has lately attracted attention in Germany, by their clever imitations of the sounds of the horn, oboe, and violoncello, as an accompaniment to their national melodies. This must be a strange exhibition

Three new Operas are to be produced in Berlin—the "Two Princes," by Esser; "William of Orange," by Eckert; and the "Armourer of Worms," by Lortzing. Lindpaintner's "Faust" is to be produced at Prague. He is the Director of the music at the Stuttgard Great Opera, where Pischek is engaged, and where Benedict's "Brides of Venice" and "Crusaders" were to be brought out, under the direction of the composer, who is now in that city, his birthplace

Letters from Vienna state that Balfe's reception in that capital has been very flattering.

David's "Desert" was lately performed in Aix-la-Chapelle, on the stage, with the procession of the caravan, and two pasteboard camels.

ANTHEMS AND SERVICES FOR CHURCH CHOIRS.—We noticed a few weeks since, the appearance of the early monthly numbers of this excellent publication, issued by Mr. Burns of Portman-street. The sixth number is now before us, and contains works by Purcell, Palestrina, Tallis, and Farrant. This collection of choral church music will be of immense value, and will be a stepping stone, we have no doubt, to the improvement in our musical services so long and anxiously desired. Whilst parochial choirs need not be dismayed at the arrangements of the present version, so carefully compiled and arranged by the editors, our cathedrals will have many rich sources of ecclesiastical genius opened to them. The type is clear, and the text correct, and the explanatory notes afford evidence of integrity as to the sources from which the compositions have been derived, and good faith in the adaptations and arrangements.

THE THEATRES.

PRINCESS'.

It appears that we have arrived at a very low ebb in our dramatic literature; for not only are our authors of the present day dependent upon France for their productions, but even English novels are obliged to be translated, and adapted to the stage in Paris, before they are at all likely to be presented to a native audience; in the same manner as it is necessary to send certain wine on long voyages to India and back again, before it is considered of any particular value in the market.

"Clarissa Harlowe," as our readers without doubt are aware, is one of our oldest novels—we believe it to be the very first. It was written by Richardson, nearly one hundred years ago; but since that time has somewhat lost its popularity with the Pamelas and Sir Charles Grandisons of the day. In the present year, however, the great feuilletoniste, M. Jules Janin, translated this novel into French, and compressed it into two volumes. It became very popular: indeed, on the Continent it has always been a favourite. Rousseau himself compared it to the finest productions of the leading classical writers. Its renewed popularity turned the attention of the French dramatists towards it, and Messrs. Dumanoir, Clairville, and Guillard constructed a piece from it, and produced it five or six weeks ago, at the Gymnase Dramatique, Mdlle. Rose Chéri, whom some of our readers may recollect at Mr. Mitchell's theatre during the past season, performing the heroine. Its success was so great that we believe on the occasion of the thirty-fifth representation 3.28 francs were taken at the doors; and a parody on it at the Palais-Royale, in which Mdlle. Nathalie plays the heroine, is not less popular. There appears to be in Paris at present a fashion of taking theatrical subjects from our plays and novels; we, however, can scarcely grumble at this. Dumas has just translated "Hamlet" (which possibly may be retranslated to improve Shakspeare's version): our readers know that the ballet of "Le Diable à Quatre" was taken from "The Devil to Pay;" and the ballet of "Betty," now performing at the Académie Royale, and about to be brought out at Drury-lane, is a Terpsichorean version of our "Charles the Second."

The version produced on Monday evening at the Princess' Theatre, does not appear destined to attain the popularity of the Parisian original. It is a well constructed drama; full of situation, and spirited dialogue; and admirably placed upon the stage: but, with all this, there was no mistake about the disapprobation which frequently broke forth And this arose, we believe, entirely from the tendency of the play. The novel has been forgotten—the present race of readers of fiction perhaps have never read it even and therefore it was not a species of received excuse for the questionable nature of the plot, which is founded entirely on the stratagems of Lovelace (Mr. Charles Mathews), to seduce Clarissa Harlowe (Mrs. Stirling), by a series of the meanest and most villanous devices. We can conceive a piece of this nature being highly popular in France: enjoying the same vogue as the "Antony" of Dumas, and other licentious pieces. But, its success with an English audience is another matter. We firmly believe that the situation of the Licenser of Plays might be altogether, and advantageously, abolished; inasmuch as the public are the first to put down, without hope of appeal, any action or sentiment on the boards repugnant to morals or propriety. A proof of this was given on Monday evening, at the close of the play. It will be sufficient for us to say that it is in three acts, and that its incidents follow those of the story pretty closely; the first showing us Clarissa's miserable position in her own family circle, through her refusal of an advantageous match, and her subsequent elopement with Lovelace. In the second we find her in his house; in which take place the incidents of his firing it, after she has taken refuge in her room, that she may be thrown in his way, and the subsequent stratagem of the stupefaction by opium. And the last terminates with her death in the haberdasher's shop.

The part of the heroine was admirably performed by Mrs. Stirling. All her unaffected pathos and gentle natural tenderness were brought out to the best advantage: indeed, to her charming impersonation of the character, the success of the piece, for it may certainly be said to have achieved a moderate one, is to be mainly attributed. Next to her, we must praise Mr. H. Hughes, and congratulate him upon his successful début at this house. He played the part of Macdonald, the creature of Lovelace, with a great deal of discrimination and judgment. He will prove a very great acquisition to the company of this house. Mr. Charles Mathews was less effective as Lovelace; and he was also imperfect. The other ladies and gentlemen call for no particular notice.

In spite of the disapprobation manifested, the applause at the fall of the curtain was very considerable, and "Clarissa Harlowe" was announced for repetition every evening this week.

THE STATE APARTMENTS, WINDSOR CASTLE.—We have authority to state that the issue of tickets to view the State Apartments, recommenced from the 1st of October

THE SCIENTIFIC CONGRESS AT FRANKFORT On the 24th ult., the Congress of German savans at Frankfort was opened. There were one hundred and twenty members present. Dr. Grimm, the celebrated grammarian, was appointed President. The following thesis was treated by Dr. Grimm: "What is a people? A people is a collection of men speaking the same language. That definition (said the learned President) is the most simple, and, at the same time, the noblest that we Germans can acknowledge; it leads us to that future when languages will become the frontiers of nations, instead of rivers and mountains. We must energetically reject that ridiculous distinction between North and South Germany, that unhappy religious feud which leads astray and disunites us. Our ancestors were Germans before they were Christians. Thus we are united by bonds of an earlier date; the Almighty never meant to oppose man to man, as is often the case with men who call themselves ministers of the Most High." Messrs. Welcker, Dahlmann, Jaupp, and other members respectively addressed the assembly, all their speeches tending to prove that the duchies of Schleswig, Holstein, and Lauenburg were dependencies of the great German nation, and were not to be deprived of their nationality.

LITERATURE.

DEALINGS WITH THE FIRM OF DOMBEY AND SON. By CHARLES DICKENS. No. I.

In this work Mr. Dickens returns to that class of writing by which he must be considered to have attained his highest fame. The present number is full of incident; indeed, more than Mr. Dickens usually shows us in his introductory chapters. The leading character, Paul Dombey, is a purse-proud, cold, and selfish merchant, whose heart is set upon handing down to posterity, untarnished, the fair reputation of "Dombey and Son." He has been married ten years, and has no heir until just at the period of the opening of the tale. Dombey has a sister (Mrs. Chick) almost as selfish as himself; and we catch a glimpse of her tender-heartedness in the following scene with her brother, eight-and-forty hours after the birth of his son :—

"'Now, my dear Paul,' returned his sister, rising, 'don't believe it. If you have any reliance on my experience, Paul, you may rest assured that there is nothing wanting but an effort on Fanny's part. And that effort,' she continued, taking off her bonnet, and adjusting her cap and gloves, in a business-like manner, 'she must be encouraged, and really, if necessary, urged to make. Now, my dear Paul, come up stairs with me.'

"Mr. Dombey, who, besides being generally influenced by his sister, for the reason already mentioned, had really faith in her as an experienced and bustling matron, acquiesced; and followed her at once to the sick chamber.

"The lady lay upon her bed as he had left her, clasping her little daughter to her breast. The child clung close about her, with the same intensity as before, and never raised her head, or moved her soft cheek from her mother's face, or looked on those who stood around, or spoke, or moved, or shed a tear.

"'Restless without the little girl,' the Doctor whispered Mr. Dombey. 'We found it best to have her in again.'

"There was such a solemn stillness round the bed; and the two medical attendants seemed to look on the impassive form with so much compassion and so little hope, that Mrs. Chick was for the moment diverted from her purpose. But presently summoning courage, and what she called presence of mind, she sat down by the bedside, and said in the low precise tone of one who endeavours to awaken a sleeper: 'Fanny! Fanny!'

"There was no sound in answer but the loud ticking of Mr. Dombey's watch and Doctor Parker Peps's watch, which seemed, in the silence, to be running a race.

"'Fanny, my dear,' said Mrs. Chick, with assumed lightness, 'here's Mr. Dombey come to see you. Won't you speak to him? They want to lay your little boy—the baby, Fanny, you know; you have hardly seen him yet, I think—in bed; but they can't till you rouse yourself a little. Don't you think it's time you roused yourself a little? Eh?'

"She bent her ear to the bed, and listened at the same time looking round at the bystanders, and holding up her finger.

"'Eh?' she repeated, 'what was it you said, Fanny? I didn't hear you.'

"No word or sound in answer. Mr. Dombey's watch and Dr. Parker Peps's watch seemed to be racing faster.

"'Now, really, Fanny, my dear,' said the sister-in-law, altering her position, and speaking less confidently, and more earnestly, in spite of herself, 'I shall have to be quite cross with you, if you don't rouse yourself. It's necessary for you to make an effort, and perhaps a very great and painful effort which you are not disposed to make; but this is a world of effort, you know, Fanny, and we must never yield, when so much depends upon us. Come! Try! I must really scold you if you don't!'

"The race in the ensuing pause was fierce and furious. The watches seemed to jostle, and to trip each other up.

"'Fanny!' said Louisa, glancing round, with gathering alarm. 'Only look at me. Only open your eyes to show me that you hear and understand me, will you? Good Heaven, gentlemen, what is to be done'

"The two medical attendants exchanged a look across the bed; and the physician, stooping down, whispered in the child's ear. Not having understood the purport of his whisper, the little creature turned her perfectly colourless face, and deep dark eyes towards him; but without loosening her hold in the least.

"The whisper was repeated. 'Mama!' said the child.

"The little voice, familiar and dearly loved, awakened some show of consciousness, even at that ebb. For a moment, the closed eye-lids trembled, and the nostril quivered, and the faintest shadow of a smile was seen.

"'Mama!' cried the child, sobbing aloud. 'Oh dear Mama! oh dear Mama!'

"The doctor gently brushed the scattered ringlets of the child, aside from the face and mouth of the mother. Alas how calm they lay there; how little breath there was to stir them!

"Thus, clinging fast to that slight spar within her arms, the mother drifted out upon the dark and unknown sea that rolls round all the world."

The following sketch of Dombey's "Home Department" is in the author's happiest vein:—

"The funeral of the deceased lady having been 'performed,' to the entire satisfaction of the undertaker, as well as of the neighbourhood at large, which is generally disposed to be captious on such a point, and is prone to take offence at any omissions or short-comings in the ceremonies, the various members of Mr. Dombey's household subsided into their several places in the domestic system. That small world, like the great one out of doors, had the capacity of easily forgetting its dead; and when the cook had said she was a quiet-tempered lady, and the housekeeper had said it was the common lot, and the butler had said who'd have thought it, and the housemaid had said she couldn't hardly believe it, and the footman had said it seemed exactly like a dream, they had quite worn the subject out, and began to think their mourning was wearing rusty too.

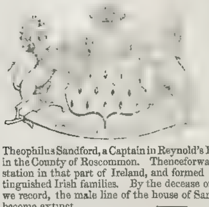
"Mr. Dombey's house was a large one, on the shady side of a tall, dark, dreadfully genteel street in the region between Portland-place and Bryanstone-square. It was a corner house, with great wide areas containing cellars frowned upon by barred windows, and leered at by crooked-eyed doors leading to dustbins. It was a house of dismal state, with a circular back to it, containing a whole suite of drawing-rooms looking upon a gravelled yard, where two gaunt trees, with blackened trunks and branches, rattled rather than rustled, their leaves were so smoke-dried. The summer sun was never on the street, but in the morning about breakfast time, when it came with the water-carts and the old clothes-men, and the people with geraniums, and the umbrella mender, and the man who trilled the little bell of the Dutch clock as he went along. It was soon gone again to return no more that day; and the bands of music and the straggling Punch's shows going after it, left it a prey to the most dismal of organs and white mice; with now and then a porcupine, to vary the entertainments; until the butlers whose families were dining out, began to stand at the house doors in the twilight, and the lamp-lighter made his nightly failure in attempting to brighten up the street with gas.

"It was as blank a house inside as outside. When the funeral was over, Mr. Dombey ordered the furniture to be covered up—perhaps to preserve it for the son with whom his plans were all associated—and the rooms to be ungarnished, saving such as he retained for himself on the ground floor, Accordingly, mysterious shapes were made of tables and chairs, heaped together in the middle of rooms, and covered over with great winding-sheets. Bell-handles, window-blinds, and looking-glasses, being papered up in journals, daily and weekly, obtruded fragmentary accounts of deaths and dreadful murders. Every chandelier or lustre, muffled in holland, looked like a monstrous tear, depending from the ceiling's eye. Odours, as from vaults and damp places, came out of the chimneys. The dead and buried lady was awful in a picture-frame of ghastly bandages. Every gust of wind that rose, brought eddying round the corner from the neighbouring mews, some fragments of the straw that had been strewn before the house when she was ill, mildewed remains of which which were still cleaving to the neighbourhood: and these, being always drawn by some invisible attraction to the threshold of the dirty house to let immediately opposite, addressed a dismal eloquence to Mr. Dombey's windows.

"The apartments which Mr. Dombey reserved for his own inhabiting, were attainable from the hall; and consisted of a sitting-room; a library, which was in fact a dressing-room, so that the smell of hot-pressed paper, vellum, morocco, and Russia leather, contended in it with the smell of divers pairs of boots; and a kind of conservatory or little glass breakfast-room beyond, commanding a prospect of the trees before-mentioned, and generally speaking, of a few prowling cats."

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED.

LORD MOUNT SANDFORD.



GEORGE SANDFORD, third Lord Mount Sandford, died at Stowey, in Somersetshire, on the 25th ult., at the advanced age of ninety. His Lordship, early in life, served in the Army, and held the commission of Captain, 18th Light Dragoons. He subsequently sat in Parliament for Roscommon, and, in 1828, succeeded to the Barony at the decease of his nephew, Henry, second Lord, who was killed in a riot at Windsor. The family from which his Lordship derived, was established in the sister kingdom, at the period of the Civil War, when Theophilus Sandford, a Captain in Reynold's Regiment, settled at Castlerea, in the County of Roscommon. Thenceforward, his descendants held high station in that part of Ireland, and formed alliances with the most distinguished Irish families. By the decease of the Nobleman whose death we record, the male line of the house of Sandford, and its Peerage, have become extinct.

LADY MUSKERRY

LOUISA DORCAS, Baroness Muskerry, died in Merrion-square, Dublin, on the 25th ult. Her Ladyship, distinguished for her accomplished mind and her active benevolence, was second daughter of Henry Deane O'Grady, Esq., of Lodge, county of Limerick (a scion of the ancient Irish family of O'Grady of Kilballyowen), and sister of Viscountess Massarene, and of Lady Edward Chichester. Her marriage to Lord Muskerry occurred in 1825; and by his Lordship she has left three sons.

EPITOME OF NEWS.—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

The German Journal of Frankfort publishes a Russian bulletin from the Caucasus, dated the 28th August. It gives an account of several engagements between the Russian corps, commanded by Prince Argutinski, and the force under Daniel Bey, which is represented to consist of at least 40,000 men. The Russians claim the advantage in all the affairs that took place, but it appears certain that they could not prevent the Circassians from burning several villages before they retreated The Russians had 200 men killed or wounded.

We learn from Constantinople that the head of a band of robbers, who had frequently pillaged the pilgrims to Jerusalem, had been taken, and with 24 of his associates sentenced to the gallies.

The Deutsche Allgemeine Zeitung of the 23rd September states, that Mehemet Ali intended resigning in favour of Ibrahim Pacha, owing to his advanced age.

In consequence of the extraordinary extension of the Goodwin Sands in the direction of the "Bunt Head," it has been found necessary to move the light vessel half a mile further to the westward, in order to cover the shoal; and the buoy that marks the extreme end of the Bunt Head, sixty fathoms further in a south-westerly direction A shoal has also sprung up in the Gull Stream, in the direct track of the navigation.

On Friday afternoon (last week) the ship Lord Dufflyn, of Belfast, ran into and foundered a schooner in the Irish Channel named the John Lloyd, belonging to Belfast. Three only of the crew were saved; the remainder, who it is supposed were asleep in their berths, were either crushed to death or drowned in their hammocks. The survivors of the schooner remained in the boat for twelve hours, and being perceived by the Juliet, of Greenock, from Calcutta, they were quickly taken on board.

M. Gabriel Guerin, historical painter, and conservator of the Museum at Strasburg, while proceeding in a carriage a few days since from Bitche to Deux Points, was upset into a ravine in the neighbourhood of Hornbach, in Rhenish Bavaria, by which he was so seriously injured that he shortly afterwards expired.

A vessel has just arrived in the Regent's Canal from the Greenland seas, with a cargo of ice on board, which, taking into consideration the tonnage of the vessel, may be computed to have comprised from 300 to 400 tons weight of the article.

On the 20th ult. some experiments were made at Mentz, in presence of several members of the Military Commission of the Confederation, with the cotton powder invented by MM. Schonbein and Boelcher, and of which so much has been said. The experiments were perfectly successful. It has, it is said, been proposed to the Diet to award a handsome sum for the communication of the secret, leaving the inventors the power of taking out patents for it in foreign countries.

We learn by a letter from Lemberg, of the 20th ult., that the President of the Regency of Gallicia, the Baron de Krieg was on that day so dangerously wounded by a stag in a Zoological Garden that his life was despaired of.

By the late earthquake in Tuscany more than 8000 persons have been reduced to beggary. The Grand Duke has issued a decree, announcing that the houses destroyed are to be reconstructed without any additional tax on the country. The inhabitants of the different villages destroyed are to be exempt from all taxation until 1848. The port of Leghorn is to furnish building materials free of duty to all who need them.

A letter from Breslau, of the 21st ult., says that for the previous eight days 100 acres of the extensive peat grounds of Nimkau, which skirt the railroad in Upper Silesia, had been on fire, sending forth a dense black smoke. All efforts to extinguish the fire had been found unavailing.

The Cobden Fund was stated on Tuesday at Manchester to amount to £74,000. It was said that the London collection was going on favourably, and it was expected would reach £15,000; the collection in Manchester itself amounted to £28,000.

A letter from Lemberg states that the potato crop has entirely failed in the districts of Sandez and Taslo, and the price of corn is exceedingly high in consequence.

Germany has now open to public traffic 37 lines of railroad, extending a length of 469¾ geographical miles. There are at work on those lines 600 locomotive engines, of which 267 are of English construction, 39 American, 46 Belgian, 16 French, and the remainder German.

The French Government intends turning to account three steam-frigates of 450 horse power each, now unemployed, by making them run by way of experiment between Havre and New York. The Government has no intention whatever, it is said, of establishing a regular service between the two ports, but the experiment will be of some service to commerce, as from this some more correct idea may be formed than has hitherto been the case of the cost and profit of such an undertaking

It appears by the accounts from Denmark, that the new Regency of Schleswig, was installed on the 19th September. M. Scheele was elected President. M. de Moltke, President of the Chancery, made the following important remark in a speech he delivered on the occasion:—"Conformably to the desire of the King, you must never lose sight of the fact, that the duchies of Schleswig and Holstein are independent parts closely united; but only parts of one entire whole, namely, of the Danish Monarchy. No one has more respect for the independence and intimate union of the duchies, than the King; but the maintenance of that union depends upon their permanent union with the kingdom. Separated from the kingdom, they would fall to pieces.

According to late accounts received from South America, propositions for peace have been submitted by Mr. Hood, the English Commissioner, to Buenos Ayres, and the career of the monarchists and pirates of La Plata will probably be brought to a termination at an early day, leaving the Argentine Union and the Uruguay to progress in their republican career—the former under the patriot Rosas, and the latter under Governor Oribe.

A Greek Consulship has been established at Larnaca. The Turkish Government feared the moral effect the colours of the Greek Emancipation might produce on the Christians of Cyprus, and objected to the installation of a representative of King Otho on the island, which has nevertheless taken place without obstacle.

We hear from St. Petersburgh that a communication has been made to two great German Powers, according to which it may be stated, almost to a certainty, that the three protective Powers will shortly make overtures to the Cabinets of St. James's and the Tuileries respecting the affairs of Poland in general, and Cracow in particular.

The commercial letters from Liverpool state that trade is going on quietly and steadily. In Liverpool the advanced rates on cotton have been sustained, and business has been active. At Manchester prices for cloth have improved, and those for yarns are supported.

Mr. Fitzpatrick Vernon, eldest son of the Right Hon. Vernon Smith, has been appointed attaché at Madrid.

It is ascertained that Mr. Waghorn has arrived in London, but it is equally certain (contrary to a current opinion) that he has brought with him no express from India. There seem to have been important reasons for his arrival without the express, which is delayed, it is said, by some obstacle on the other side of the Isthmus of Suez.

Lord Fingal is, we understand, to have the ribbon of St. Patrick, vacant by the death of Lord Thomond.

The first locomotive ever constructed in Hanover has just been handed over to the Hanover line. It was built in the workshop of M. George Egestorff, at Linden, and has been named Ernest Augustus. Its first trial was on the late occasion of the inauguration of the section of the line from Hildesheim to Lehrte, when the engineers present expressed their admiration of its working.

The Admiralty are most busily occupied in devising measures for efficiently and most speedily manning the fleet on an emergency.

Intelligence has been received that a very disastrous affair has occurred in the River Plate, accompanied with the loss of a British ship, and the capture of the British colours by the forces of Rosas. No details, however, have arrived, and it is to be hoped that there is some exaggeration or mistake.

During the year ending on the 31st of August last, the number of persons passing between England and France, at the under-mentioned ports, was as follows:—Boulogne, 46,320; Calais, 12,086; Havre, 10,993; Dieppe, 9693: Total, 79,092.

Le Verrier's planet was found by Mr. Galle, at Berlin, on the night of September 23. It is a star of the 8th magnitude, but with a diameter of two or three seconds. The planet was also observed on Wednesday evening at Mr. Bishop's Observatory, Regent's-park, notwithstanding the moonlight and hazy sky. The following position is the result of instrumental comparisons with 33 Aquarii: Sept. 30, at 8h. 16m. 21s. Greenwich mean time. Right ascension of planet, 21h. 52m. 47.15s. South declination, 13h. 27m. 20s.

The Rugby Railway Company have purchased of the freemen of the city of Oxford, four acres and twenty-six poles of a portion of Port Meadow (and the very worst part of it) for the sum of £1284.

A letter from Christiana (Norway), datad the 14th of September, states that Mr. Stephenson, the Engineer, appointed by the Company to make surveys for a net-work of railways in the province of Aggershuus, has announced to the Minister of the Interior, that very speedily two engineers will arrive from London, and, in conjunction with himself and M. Raederer, Lieutenant of the Royal Corps of State Engineers, immediately commence preliminary operations.

By the packet Petrel, Lieut. Creser, we have accounts from Rio Janiero to the 5th, Bahia, the 19th, and Pernambuco the 26th August. There was no political news. Her Majesty the Empress of the Brazils was safely delivered of a Princess on July 27th; the greatest rejoicings took place in celebration of the event.

Among the articles included in the list of arrivals of fruits and provisions of various descriptions from the Continental States during the past few days, are a parcel of new hops, consisting of 131 baskets and bales, from Leer (Holland), the produce of that country, and the large number of 1351 packages of walnuts, and some packages of cherries, by a vessel from Ancona, of Italian produce.

A little girl, eleven years of age, is said to have been cured of hydrophobia by a French surgeon, who cauterised two blisters which appeared under her tongue a symptom which is stated to be characteristic of the disease.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

THE NEW PALACE AT WESTMINSTER.

The Fine Art Commissioners have made a Report to her Majesty upon the subject of the fresco paintings recommended by them for the decoration of six arched compartments in the House of Lords. The first fresco painting was entrusted to William Dyce, A.R.A. The subject was "The Baptism of Ethelbert," and the Commissioners say

"We have now humbly to Report to your Majesty that the said fresco painting was completed in the month of July last, in the centre compartment of the south wall of the House of Lords, and that we have inspected the same.

The design having been before approved by us, our attention was chiefly directed to the work as an example of fresco painting, a method in a great measure new in this country, and in which we deemed it probable that some defects, arising from want of experience, might be apparent; defects which time and practice might in future efforts have removed. We have, however, the satisfaction to state that the work in question presents no evidence of such imperfections; that, on the contrary, it evinces great knowledge of the process of fresco painting, and great skill in its application; that, further, as regards the effect of fresco painting in the locality, we consider that it promises to agree well with the architectural and other decorations therein adopted or to be adopted. We, therefore, beg leave to confirm our former recommendation, and to propose that the remaining five compartments should be decorated with fresco paintings, when the several designs for the same shall have been approved. And being also of opinion that the satisfactory effect of Mr. Dyce's fresco is to be referred, in a great degree, to the style of design and colouring which he has adopted, and considering it desirable that a certain conformity of style and execution should pervade paintings employed in the decoration of architecture, and which must be seen together, we deem it important, without wishing to impose undue restrictions on the invention or taste of the other artists commissioned or to be commissioned to execute the remaining frescos in the House of Lords, that such artists should be recommended to adapt the size of their principal figures, their style of colouring, and the degree of completeness in the execution of their works, so as to make them agree sufficiently with each other, and with the specimen already executed.

"We have further humbly to report to your Majesty that, having, from time to time, been furnished with drawings by the architect, showing the possible extent to which compartments in the various localities of the Palace at Westminster might be decorated with works of art, we are of opinion that it would not be expedient, with reference to the encouragement of British art, or with reference to the claims which may hereafter be urged for the commemoration of great events, to complete the series of paintings on the walls of the said Palace at the present period; that, nevertheless, in accordance with the principles which have already guided us in deciding on the plan of decoration in the House of Lords, viz., with reference to fresco paintings, stained windows, and statues, proposed for that locality; and also in the selection of statues proposed for St. Stephen's Porch, St. Stephen's Hall, and the Royal approaches; we conceive it to be the duty of this Commission, for the better guidance of present and future artists, and in order to maintain a character of harmony and unity worthy of such a building, to determine a complete scheme for the future decoration of the Palace. We are of opinion that, in determining such scheme, the especial destination of each portion of the building should be attended to; that, in the selection of subjects, the chief object to be regarded should be the expression of some specific idea; and the second, its illustration, by means of some well known historic or poetic incident adapted for representation in painting."

ELECTION OF LORD MAYOR.

Tuesday being Michaelmas Day, was, as usual, appointed for the election of a Lord Mayor for the City of London.

Before one o'clock, the hour appointed for the election, the interior of Guildhall was completely filled.

The Lord Mayor, accompanied by the Aldermen and other municipal authorities, entered the Hall, on their return from St. Lawrence Church, at twenty minutes past one o'clock, the crowd cheering Alderman Wood as he passed. Immediately afterwards, they appeared on the platform, and there were loud shouts of "Wood, Wood, Wood for Mayor."

After a short speech from the Recorder,

Alderman Wood came forward, and was received with loud cheers. He said he was then before them again to ask for their support. He trusted that while there had been nothing in his conduct to deserve reprehension, he had done a great deal to remove misapprehension, and to secure friendship. He was of opinion that whoever aspired to the high office for which he was a candidate, should be able to command the confidence of the body who had the power of electing him. Whatever position he might be placed in, he would submit without murmuring. (Cheers.)

Mr. Wilkinson complained of the gross injustice which had been done in rejecting Mr. Alderman Wood. He hated, as he hated the Evil One, anything in the shape of hypocrisy; and it was because he did so, that he came forward to support Alderman Wood, who, he hoped, would be the man of their choice.

The Common Sergeant then read the names of the Aldermen below the chair, who were qualified to be elected.

On the name of Alderman Wood being put, at least two-thirds of the crowd held up their hands, and about one-third for Sir George Carroll.

The Common Sergeant declared that the choice of the Livery had fallen on Alderman Wood and Alderman Sir George Carroll.

A poll was then demanded on the part of Alderman Hooper.

Mr. Wire announced that he was authorised to say that Alderman Hooper was no party to the application.

Mr. Anderson said that he had demanded a poll that the Liverymen might have an opportunity of expressing their opinion of the conduct of Alderman Wood. If the Livery still returned him, he ought to be Lord Mayor (cheers)—and he would be Lord Mayor (cheers); but, if a majority of the Livery did not support him, of course he would not receive that dignity.

In a few minutes Alderman Wood returned, and said that he had just learned that a poll had been demanded in the name, but without the sanction, of Alderman Hooper. He was taken by surprise by the motion he was not prepared for a contest; it required much machinery and outlay; but, although he was not prepared for it, he would not flinch from it. He would, therefore, throw himself on the Livery; if they wished him to retire, he would do so—(cries of "No, no,")—but if not, he would persevere.

Mr. Secondary James said that a poll had been demanded by two Liverymen, on the part of Sir George Carroll. The poll would commence at three o'clock, and continue between the hours of nine and three for seven days.

The crowd then dispersed. At four o'clock the state of the poll was declared to be—

For Alderman Wood	152
Sir George Carroll	68
Alderman Hooper	31

This announcement was received by a crowded Hall with loud cheers.

Mr. Alderman Wood then came forward to address the Livery, and was received with most enthusiastic cheering. After it had in some measure subsided, he said he thought the meeting would admit that he was not wrong in his anticipations of success. (Hear, hear.) He had done all in his power to explain away imputations that ought never to have existed, and for which he ought never to have been run down in the way he had been. (Great cheering) He had been a magistrate of this City for eleven years, and he appealed to the Livery whether or not he had discharged the duties of that office impartially. He felt proud to think that his brother Liverymen had entered heart and hand in the cause. He called upon the Livery not only to keep him upon the proud pre-eminence in which he then stood, but to return him to the Court of Aldermen by an immense majority. Alderman Hooper had manfully stated that he had no desire to be elected out of his turn, and he had deprecated the whole of the proceedings that had taken place. (Cheers) He was sure that if the Livery would as one man, with one mighty energy, continue to persevere in the good cause, they would be triumphant. (Cries of "We will.")

The Hall was then adjourned till Wednesday morning, at nine o'clock.

On Wednesday the polling commenced at nine o'clock, and proceeded most decidedly in favour of Alderman Wood. At three o'clock the following numbers were exhibited

Wood	602
Hooper	130

Alderman Wood then came forward, and was cheered very much. He said he had the pleasing satisfaction again to return thanks to the Livery for having placed him in so elevated a position on the poll. He thanked them for the confidence they reposed in his integrity. (Cheers.) The result of that day's exertions, on the part of his friends, proved that they were not unmindful of his interests that they had looked with a proper feeling at the position in which he stood, and were determined to give him their support in his efforts to obtain that to which he was entitled. They knew that he was engaged in a contest for the protection of the rights and privileges of the Livery. They were all involved in that contest, and he had only to request their continuance of the efforts they had already made until its close. It had been said that he was afraid of a contest. He never had any fear of the kind. There were those engaged in it about whom he had no apprehensions, and in their hands he should leave it. It had also been said that the contest had been got up privately by him. He most unequivocally denied that he knew anything whatever about it until it was commenced upon the hustings. It was for those who had originated it to answer for themselves. Alderman Wood concluded by calling upon the meeting to bring up their friends next day, and by expressing his conviction that their success would be certain.

At the close of the poll on Thursday, the numbers were—

Wood	[illegible]
Carroll	[illegible]
Hooper	[illegible]

The numbers at the close of the poll on Friday were

Wood	[illegible]
Carroll	709
Hooper	[illegible]

Consecration of a New Roman Catholic Church.—The new Roman Catholic chapel of St. Edward, situate at Mill-wall, Isle of Dogs, Poplar, was consecrated on Tuesday, with all the solemn pomp prescribed by the Roman Ritual. The Right Reverend Bishop Griffiths, vicar apostolic for the London district, officiated. He was assisted by the Right Reverend Dr. Morris, coadjutor bishop of the district, and both were attired in vestments of surpassing richness. High mass was chanted. Bishop Morris afterwards preached an impressive sermon, in the course of which he took occasion to allude to the progress which the Roman Catholic religion has been making of late years. The chapel, which was erected under the superintendence of Mr. William Wardell, architect, is capable of accommodating 400 persons.

THE INAUGURATION DINNER OF THE SHERIFFS.

The Inauguration Banquet of the new Sheriffs, Thomas Challis, Esq., Alderman, and Robert W. Kennard, Esq , took place on Wednesday at the London Tavern, when upwards of 220 guests assembled.

The Right Honourable the Lord Mayor occupied the chair; and amongst the guests were Lord John Russell, M.P., Mr. Masterman, M P., Mr. Lyall, M P., Mr. Hudson, M P., Mr. Bankes, M.P. (the Cursitor Baron), the Lord Chief Baron, Alderman Sir C. Hunter, Alderman Sir J. Duke, Alderman Kelly, Alderman Humphery, Alderman Gibbs, Alderman T. Wood, Alderman Carroll, Alderman Farncombe, Alderman Sir W. Magnay, Alderman Moon, Alderman Musgrove, Alderman H. Hughes, Alderman Sidney, the Under-Sheriffs Bayliss and Tilleard, his Excellency the Belgian Ambassador (M. Beauveux), the Rev. Dr. Russell, Mr. Commissioner D. W. Harvey, Mr. D. W. Wire, Mr. Bircham, the Master and Wardens of the Butchers' Company, the Master and Wardens of the Carpenters' Company, the Master and Wardens of the Haberdashers' Company, and many other gentlemen well known and highly respected in the City of London.

The cloth having been removed, and the usual loyal and national toasts having been duly proposed and most heartily received,

The Lord Mayor gave "Prosperity to the Trade and Commerce of the City of London." Drunk with three times three.

Mr. J. Dillon briefly responded to the toast.

"The Health of Lord John Russell" was then proposed by Mr. Alderman Challis, and was received with great enthusiasm.

Lord John Russell immediately rose, and spoke as follows:—"In returning you my grateful thanks for the honour you have done me, I shall not attempt to enter into any of those difficult debateable questions to which the worthy proposer of the toast has alluded. No doubt, those topics are of the utmost importance. All I will venture to assure you is, that, to those subjects on which he has touched, and to many others relating to the welfare and prosperity of this country, her Majesty's Ministers will give their unceasing and conscientious attention, and will endeavour, whether in administrating, or in proposing measures for legislation, to submit and to carry out such measures as they believe to be best calculated to promote the benefit of the great country to which they have the honour to belong. (Loud cheers.) In so stating, I should say that it is part of the duty of her Majesty's Ministers, in considering this vast empire, to convey from those parts which are strong succour to those parts which, however distant, are weak; and, again, to carry relief from those parts which are in a state of prosperity to those which are unfortunately in a state of suffering and privation. (Cheers) Of this I am convinced, that if you in this city of London, partaking and sharing in the feeling of the whole country, and, indeed, speaking the feeling of the whole country, have a sympathy with all parts of this great empire, then all our fellow-subjects who live in the Queen's dominions may rely upon our assistance in the hour of their need—may rely that we consider them as brethren, living under the same Crown, and as having the happiness to live under the same constitution. And I trust that we may see extended to other parts of the world those blessings of freedom which we have had so long established amongst us, and which, with the light of the Gospel, I trust, will pervade all parts of the globe. (Cheers.) I will only now add, that in proposing to you the health of the Sheriffs, I am sure, from the earnest you have already had, you will be convinced that those gentlemen will pay the utmost attention to the important duties which devolve upon them. (Cheers.) I am sure that any plans of reform and amelioration which may come before them will receive from them the fairest consideration -the result of an anxious desire to promote the welfare of all—of the lowest, of the most guilty, even, of their species; and I am sure that in so doing they will earn the approbation of the citizens of London. (Cheers.) Let us hope that those great problems, many of which have hitherto been hid in obscurity, but which, nevertheless, are matters well worthy of the attention of statesmen -matters relating to the social condition of the community—will receive such attention, that, both here and elsewhere, the condition of the great mass of mankind may be improved; that not only may our gaols be made places of less suffering, and greater hope of reformation, but that, by more attention to the means of instruction, many may be preserved from the guilty course on which they now enter, in utter ignorance of their duty both to God and man. (Cheers.) That ignorance, you must all see, does not, ought not, to belong to this enlightened, free, and Christian country; but it is quite true, as your worthy Sheriff has observed, that in times of the greatest civilisation, and, in a metropolis like this, where the greatest civilisation is supposed to prevail, yet, while that very civilisation is progressing, it does, somehow or other, leave behind it in its progress persons among the poorer classes of society, who, as I believe, receive less instruction, have less information, and oftentimes live in a more miserable and degraded state of existence, than was the case with any portion of the community centuries ago, when civilisation was not so forward. (Cheers.) This is now known to us all. Let us pursue these useful paths of improvement—let us pursue them with the hope that we shall not only do good to such of that description as may be amongst us, but that other nations will strive with us in that honourable emulation, and that we shall seek to surpass one another more in our endeavours to raise the community to which we belong, than in those disastrous acts to which, by a false notion, glory and renown have been attached. By so doing, we may hope to have an era before us, not only of future prosperity, but an era in which we may reflect that we have done our duty to all our fellow men—in which we have endeavoured to improve their condition not only in point of wealth, but have striven to raise them in that moral relation which shall constitute our highest pride as men and Christians. (Cheers.) I beg leave to give you the healths of the Sheriffs. (Loud cheers.)

Mr Sheriff and Alderman Challis responded to the toast. He could assure them that they entered upon their office with a full appreciation of the responsibilities which attached to it. Whatever influence the office could command, should be devoted to purposes of general utility and practical beneficence. (Cheers)

Mr. Sheriff Kennard reiterated the sentiments of his colleague, and added that it would be his greatest pleasure, as it would be his highest reward, to merit that good opinion which the kind reception of their health had led him to believe they entertained. (Cheers)

Lord John Russell then gave the "Health of the Lord Mayor."

The Lord Mayor expressed his extreme gratification at the manner in which his health was received. He had only six weeks to remain in office, and he trusted that during that period he should continue to give that satisfaction to his fellow citizens which up to the present time his conduct had elicited. (Cheers.)

Mr. Sheriff Kennard then proposed "The Lord Chief Baron and the Judges."

The Lord Chief Baron in responding to the toast remarked that he had always felt, and never more fully than since he had had a seat on the bench, that the pure administration of justice was mainly indebted in this country to the large share in its administration which belonged to the people themselves, and they might rely upon it that it was mainly to the institution of trial by jury that the administration of justice, both civil and criminal, had obtained, as he believed that it had, such general acceptation throughout the civilized world. (Cheers.)

After a number of other toasts, including the health of the Cursitor Baron, of the members for the City, responded to by Mr. Masterman, of the Aldermen of London, and of the late Sheriffs, the company separated at a late hour.

Railway Metropolitan Termini.—The London and South Western Company have now got possession of nearly all the property necessary for the extension of their line to Hungerford-bridge, and the most active preparations are making for commencing the construction of the works without delay. There will be a magnificent station at Hungerford-bridge. The extent of the erection may be inferred from the fact that its cost will exceed £100,000. The expenses of constructing the extension line from Nine Elms to Hungerford-bridge, including the purchase of property, will not, it is supposed, be under £600,000, making, with the station, £700,000, or the enormous sum of £350,000 per mile. The South Western Company, though making their principal station at Hungerford-bridge, do not mean to stop there, but are to extend their line to London-bridge, where means will be adopted to connect their station with that of the London and Brighton, the South Eastern, and the various other companies which have their termini on the east side of London-bridge. It is calculated that the expense of extending the South Western Railway from Hungerford-bridge to London-bridge will be about £400,000, making the sum altogether expended by that company, in carrying its line from Nine Elms into the centre of London, upwards of £1,000,000. The extension to Hungerford-bridge is expected to be finished in eighteen months, and that to London-bridge in three years.

Revival of the Chartist Agitation.—On Monday evening a crowded meeting, consisting of upwards of 1500 persons, a great portion of whom were females, took place, at the Crown and Anchor Tavern, Strand, for the purpose of adopting a national petition to Parliament, praying for the enactment of the People's Charter. The meeting had been convened by the Executive or newly-appointed members of the Convention, most of whom were present, including F. O'Connor, Esq. A supplementary resolution was proposed by Mr. F. O'Connor, to the effect that the Government should be called on to raise ten millions sterling by Exchequer Bills, for the relief of the distress in Ireland, to be called the Church Restoration Fund, the interest and repayment of which should be payable from tithes, and by bishops and other dignitaries, parsons, and other salaried officers of the State Church, and the sum to be applied for the purchase of land in Ireland, and the location of Irish people upon it, at its present value.

Treatment of the Poor in St. Pancras Workhouse.—Last Saturday afternoon a special meeting of the vestry of St. Pancras was held at their rooms in Gough-square, for the purpose of considering the report of the directors and guardians in reference to the recent charges made against them at an inquest held by Mr. Wakley, M.P., on the 8th and 9th instant, on the body of Mary Ann Jones. The adoption of the report was moved by Mr. Churchwarden Howorth, and seconded by Mr Goodwin, when a stormy discussion arose, in which the conduct of the directors and guardians was censured. Mr. Mann moved an amendment, to the effect "That a committee of ten or more members of the vestry be appointed to inquire into the whole management of the workhouse, as also the duties of the officers therein employed." Mr. Boulton seconded the amendment, which was supported by Mr. E. P. Smith and Dr. Birmingham. On a division, the amendment was negatived by a majority of twenty-three against five, and the original motion was carried Another Rise in the Price of Bread.—On Monday the bakers increased the price of their bread in several parts of the metropolis. The price of the 4lb. loaf was increased to 8½d.

Mortality in the Metropolis Last week a smaller number of deaths was registered in the metropolitan districts than occurred in the corresponding weeks of any of the six previous years. During the week which ended on Saturday last no more than 808 deaths were registered; whilst the lowest number during the thirteenth week of the third quarter of any of the preceding six years was 857 deaths in 1840. The average of the whole series of weeks, exclusive of the last, is 916. It appears, therefore, that the deaths of the past week were 49 below the lowest number in the corresponding weeks of six years, and 108 below the average. Those caused by epidemic and endemic diseases appear from the present report to be remarkably few, exhibiting a marked contrast to the returns made in August.—The number of births during the past week was 1250.

AGRICULTURAL PICTURES.—"THATCHING."—DRAWN BY DUNCAN.

AGRICULTURAL PICTURES.—THATCHING.

Here we have "the Thatcher, busy at his work;" though the thatching of sheds and barns is rather the business of a regular hand than of a farm-servant, who, however, should be capable of thatching stacks and hay-ricks in a neat and substantial manner

In Thatching buildings which are to last many years, the straw is prepared as or ricks; but the ends of the handfuls, as they are put on a lathed roof, are kept down by means of long rods, which are tied to the laths of the roof by means of strong tar twine. A much thicker coat of straw is put on; and rye-straw, which has a solid stem, is preferred, as more lasting, and less liable to be filled with water than hollow straw. Instead of straw ropes, split willow is used, and the rods which are inserted are much nearer each other, and more carefully secured As this kind of thatching is a peculiar trade, it requires a regular apprenticeship to be master of it: but a very little practice will enable any one to protect his stacks sufficiently by a thatched covering.

Buckingham Palace —Workmen have begun the hoarding for inclosing the Palace, preparatory to commencing those extensive alterations and improvements which it has been resolved to make in it.

Royal Exchange Improvements —The extensive premises forming the corner of Threadneedle-street and Old Broad-street, in the rear of the Royal Exchange, are forthwith to be pulled down, for the intended improvements. These premises embrace a long range of shops and warehouses, extending to the Hall of Commerce, which, when cleared away, will afford a free view of the back fron of the Exchange.

ANGLING NOTES FOR THE MONTH.

Michaelmas has come; Satan, the archangel's antagonist, has cast his hoof over the blackberries; haws are red on the thorn and hips on the briar; the leaves of the aspen are now shook dead from the tree by the breeze which but lately made them dance; the swallows are off to southern climes; and, doubtless, the geese would follow them, if they had but strength of wing, and were cognisant of the fate which impends over so many of them; the sun does not get up till past six o'clock, and scarcely shows his face through the misty clouds till about eight; the streams have lost their brightness, and often appear muddy, even when there has been no rain: "sweet simmer's awa';" the flush of the Angling season is over; and we are now about to bring our Monthly Notes to a close. We should have liked to wind up with the Salmon, for rod-fishing in the Tweed will be open for nearly a fortnight yet; but as we cannot manage to reach there with our line at present, we must e'en be content with the Chub.

The Chub is caught in most of the rivers of England; and in Northumberland and Cumberland is known by the name of the Skelly. A young Chub bears a considerable resemblance to a Dace, but is more "chubby," and thicker about the head Chub weighing from three to four pounds are not unfrequently taken, but rarely weighing five. They spawn about the end of April, or the beginning of May. Their favourite haunts are pools, with soft or clayey bottoms, where the bank of the river overhangs, or is shaded by trees. As they are very timid, the Angler, in fishing for them, should go very gently to work, and be careful to keep himself out of sight: a rough-spun "brother Bob," who makes himself more free than welcome everywhere—who would feel pleasure in thrashing even a post, and who whips the water most unmercifully—has but little chance of catching his brother loggerhead, the Chub.

In Summer, the Chub is frequently angled for with the artificial fly; but the most tempting bait for him, from June to September, is a grasshopper or a cockchafer, dropped gently on the water by means of a short line. They will, also, in the same manner, take a wasp, a bee, or a large blue-bottle fly, which may be allowed to sink for a foot or two, and then be gently drawn back. In Spring, or in early Summer, before the weather becomes warm, they readily take a small red worm near the bottom They generally bite best when the water is rather clear; and, as they are gregarious, where the Angler catches one, he may generally calculate on catching more. Large Chub are sometimes caught when spinning a minnow; there are, however, but few persons who think it worth while to fish expressly for Chub in this manner.

The Chub is but little esteemed for the table. "He is objected against," says Walton, "not only for being full of small forked bones, dispersed through all his body, but that he eats waterish, and that the flesh of him is not firm, but short and tasteless. The French esteem him so mean as to call him un vilain: nevertheless, he may be so dressed as to make him very good meat" Seeing who sends meat, and who sends cooks, it is no wonder that the Chub, naturally "waterish, and full of small forked bones," should often be spoiled in the dressing. As we can scarcely suppose that "good old Father Walton" was one of the proverbial cooks alluded to such as Ude, Soyer, Mrs. Glasse, Meg Dodds, or Dr Kitchiner—we conceive that we are rendering a service, not only to the fish eating public, but to society at large, by here giving his receipt for dressing a Chub. On this subject, the "Patriarch of Angling" would appear to have derived his information from patriarchal times; for, though we have sweet herbs for stuffing, and verjuice and butter for basting, there is not a word said about the sauce "First, scale him" Mrs. Glasse would have said, "first catch him"

"and then wash him clean, and then take out his guts; and, to that end, make the hole as little, and as near to his gills, as you may conveniently, and especially make clean his throat from the grass and weeds that are usually in it; for, if that be not very clean, it will make him to taste very sour. Having so done, put some sweet herbs into his belly, and then tie him with two or three splinters to a spit, and roast him, basted often with vinegar, or rather verjuice and butter with good store of salt mixed with it Being thus dressed, you will find him a much better dish of meat than you, or most folk, even Anglers themselves, do imagine, for this dries up the fluid, watery humour with which all Chubs do abound." Now, an ordinary cook would be very apt to ascribe the sourness of a Chub dressed in this manner to the vinegar, or the verjuice, used in basting it, even though the grass and weeds had been allowed to remain in the throat. "But take this rule with you," Walton continues, "that a Chub newly taken and newly dressed is so much better than a Chub of a day's keeping after he is dead, that I can compare him to nothing so fitly as to cherries newly gathered from a tree, and others that have been bruised and lain a day or two in water"

In the three last months of the year, and also in winter, Chub are considered to be in the best condition. As the weather becomes colder they lie deeper in the water; and, after September, the best mode of Angling for them is at bottom. A rod, from twelve to fifteen feet long -such as is used in fishing for roach—is the best, with a winch and a running line and foot-length of fine strong gut. Use a light float, and keep the bait just clear of the bottom. The most taking bait is the pith of the back-bone, or the brains of an ox; and it is also advisable to bait the ground with small portions of the brains before you begin to fish. A piece about the size of a nut may be put upon the hook. At this season, well-soaked greaves, a piece of fat bacon, and paste made of cheese worked up with a little lard or butter, are also recommended as good baits for Chub. In cold weather, the best time to fish is about mid day

Till Spring returns, we leave other Anglers—either more enthusiastic, or having better opportunities—to continue fishing for chub, roach, perch, grayling, and such other fish as are still to be caught. Our Angling for the season is now closed: here we unsplice our rod, and wind up our line. For the present, to all Anglers who may have read our "Notes" we heartily bid farewell; and could we but think that they have interested those whom we have chiefly wished to please, we should look forward to another season with brighter hopes. N. Y.

ANGLING NOTES FOR THE MONTH.—THE CHUB.

SPLENDID METEOR.

(From a Correspondent.)

The following is an account of the appearance presented at Cambridge by the [illegible] meteor which was seen [illegible] on the night of Friday, the 25th ult. At about a quarter before [illegible] the air [illegible] illumined, as if the whole heavens were in a blaze [illegible] of an unnatural, pale blue. It was attended with no noise. On looking up, a long stream of blueish-white was seen shooting due North, and continued to within 45° of the horizon. It left a luminous trail, which was visible six or eight seconds. But, what was particularly remarkable, at the point where the meteor evidently started, (or exploded), about two or three degrees south of the zenith, a pale zig-zag light was floating, as if some artificial fire-work had been discharged. (See Fig. A.) In a few seconds, it had arranged itself as at B, having a large wooly nucleus of a distinct ordinary fire-colour. This became gradually thinner, and the vapour assumed the form C, reminding one of an imperfect fairy ring. It then slowly changed to D and E. At first, it was so dense as to obscure the stars behind it, which became gradually visible through it, as it became rarer; and, when in the forms D and E, it had a perfect resemblance to the Milky Way, with which it was in juxtaposition on the West. An interval of full ten minutes elapsed before the phenomenon had completely disappeared.

SPLENDID METEOR.

PARISIAN FASHIONS FOR OCTOBER.

At the present moment the Fashions for toilette are constantly fluctuating. The ever-changing temperature of the weather necessitates fresh alterations in dress almost every hour, and nothing can afford a greater contrast than the bright coloured light-textured toilettes of summer worn one day, and the more sombre habiliments of winter, which it is found necessary the next to adopt. Yet, as the change in the weather seems to confirm itself, a gradual and decided alteration is taking place in dress, and the taffetas d'Italie glacé, striped or brocaded, and the checked or brocaded foulards, will soon supersede entirely the mousselines de soie and organdies, which have been worn with such charming effect during the late oppressive heat. In the form of dress, a change also is perceptible; the basquines, or lappets encircling the waist, are gradually abandoned, and dresses are made rounded at the waist, and only slightly lengthened in front.

Straw Bonnets are still worn; but they are now trimmed with dark coloured ribbons. The Pamela shapes are quite gone out of fashion; and the winter Bonnets will be made much closer to the face, and rounded at the cheeks.

A new form for Mantelets is contemplated. They will be made in velvet, and lace will be generally used as trimming.

Caps, as well as bonnets, are trimmed with dark colours. Shaded velvet ribbon is generally used for morning Caps; and those for the evening are trimmed with dark ribbons, and large maroon-coloured roses, with velvet foliage.

Our neighbours over the water make a more rapid progress in Fashions than we do, this year especially, as a great impetus has been given to the inventive powers of the marchandes des modes, by the composition of the splendid trousseau destined to the Infanta of Spain, and the Queen, her sister. We have often before remarked how much the Fashions for dress in Paris take their character from the political events of the moment: on this occasion, it is less extraordinary that such should be the case. The "coiffure Luisa," and the "chapeaux Montpensier," are imitations of the same articles of costume provided for the Spanish Princesses. Twenty thousand pounds sterling have already been expended for the dresses and bonnets of the two Royal brides. Materials for winter wear have necessarily been provided beforehand. The "blue Nemours" is still the favourite colour; and the variety of new patterns, whether flowered, striped, plaided, or brocaded, is inconceivable. The Moire Antique, which unites all the gloss of satin to the rich effects of a watered silk, bids fair to obtain great favour among our élégantes. Brocaded stuffs, in gold and silver and tulle, spotted with the same, form conspicuous materials both in the head-dresses and ball-dresses of the two young Princesses. The heads of those magasins most resorted to in England, such as those of Vouillon and Lauré and others, who are now on the look-out for novelty, cannot but withdraw many new ideas in toilette from the activity with which invention, in this department of commerce, is at work in Paris; and next month, though it will yet be very early in the season, we shall hope to give our fair readers a satisfactory bulletin of intelligence which may guide them in their selections for winter costume.

NORTH STAFFORDSHIRE RAILWAY.

On Wednesday week, the commencement of the works of this important Railway was celebrated by great rejoicings at Stoke-upon-Trent, the day being kept as a general holiday. The spot chosen was near the Shelton New Road where a piece of ground was staked off, for the ceremony of turning the first turf; Mr. J. L. Ricardo officiated with the spade, and Mr. Alderman Copeland with the wheelbarrow; but, just as Mr Ricardo was putting the turf into the barrow, the crowd broke the ring; Mr. Ricardo lost his hat in the confusion, and after mounting his horse rode off the ground with the spade over his shoulder

Notwithstanding this contretems, the affair of the day was conducted with much ceremony. The barrow and the electro-plated spade were borne to the ground by four navigators, there was a public breakfast at the New Town-hall, at Stoke; a ball in the evening, at which the Duke of Sutherland's quadrille band attended; and the out-door merry-making concluded with a brilliant display of fireworks.

COMMENCEMENT OF THE NORTH STAFFORDSHIRE RAILWAY.

GOLD; OR, THE HALF-BROTHERS.

BY CAMILLA TOULMIN.

CHAPTER XI.

"My dear Catherine," said Mr. Joyce to his daughter one day, "you would do me a great favour, if you would behave to Mr. Sefton this evening with a little more cordiality than you generally do. And above all, do not choose the opportunity of his presence to descant on the merits of his younger brother; who may be all you say, but I suspect the theme is very far from being agreeable to him; and believe me, my dear girl, the reasons which urge me to conciliate Mr. Charles Sefton are not trifling ones."

He sighed as he spoke, and turned his head from the windows, although the increasing gloom of a January afternoon of itself lent a friendly shade to his countenance. By a brighter light, however, it might have been seen that he was considerably altered during the last few months. His clothes hung loosely about him, and showed that he was thinner; his eyes seemed sunken; and anxious thoughts and added cares had impressed themselves legibly on his countenance.

Catherine, on the contrary, looked better than ever. The autumn sojourn on the coast had restored the roses of health to her cheeks; and there was a calm light in her eye, which until lately had seldom dwelt there—the light that is kindled by the consciousness of serenity and the enjoyment of home affections. For Catherine Joyce had at length exorcised the demon of suspicion, and had permitted her warm heart to cling tendril-wise round her kind step-mother and young sisters.

"Dear Papa, what is it you mean?" she replied, laying her hand on his arm and looking intently at him—for she had been startled by the peculiar earnestness of his manner, and now for the first time remarked how ill he was looking. So gradual had been the change, that there was little wonder those about him had failed to observe it.

"I mean, my love, just what I say."

"I think you mean more than you say," she exclaimed, in return; "and if you tell me what it is, I shall be able to shape my conduct much more cleverly by the light of such knowledge, than in the darkness of my present ignorance."

Mr. Joyce sank back in an easy chair, with the air of one who was going to repose a confidence; and Catherine drew a low stool to his side and seated herself, partially averting her head for a reason of her own.

"You must be aware, Catherine, that Mr. Sefton's attentions have been somewhat particular—in short, that he admires you very much."

"If it be so, Papa, the admiration is all on one side, for I do not like him a bit."

"I hardly know whether to be glad or sorry of this," returned her father. "Mr. Sefton is not every thing I most esteem; at the same time—as far as worldly prospects are concerned—it would be an excellent match, for he is known to be enormously rich. It is said that he has almost doubled his fortune, by successful speculations, within the last year."

"I have no desire to share it," said Catherine, gently but firmly.

"And be assured I will never urge you to do so."

"Thank you, thank you," she exclaimed, pressing her father's hand; and she added, not without a blush, "this is most kind after the pain I have already cost you."

"Nevertheless," he continued, "I must own to you that I am so deeply involved in money transactions with Mr. Sefton, that I am anxious to conciliate him in every way—and not even to irritate him by such a seeming trifle as a young girl's cold reception of him in her father's house."

"Involved in money transactions!"

"Yes, Catherine, it is but too true. The speculations into which I was persuaded to enter have not been so fortunate as his own; he has supplied me with the means of meeting my liabilities, and the consequence is that I am so much in his power, that all I possess would scarcely meet my obligations to him; and though at the worst I trust to escape the disgrace of an insolvent, it is but too probable that we must reduce our establishment, and curtail expenses in every possible manner."

"But I shall soon be of age—there will be my fortune to meet this extremity," she exclaimed with generous enthusiasm.

"Heaven bless you for the thought, my child;" and the recollection of how nearly he had once been asking her to risk her property in the very speculation which had turned out so unfavourably, lent a tenderness to his tone; and it may be there flashed through his mind a rapid view of the strange evil-seeming events out of which so much good had come, namely, the prevention of his applying to her on such a subject—even if his adviser had continued to urge it, which he had not—and the restoration of her affections to their proper channel. "Heaven bless you for the thought, Catherine; but I have had a bitter lesson, by which you may profit, and not a farthing of your principal will I touch."

"Well, well, we shall see. Meanwhile I promise to behave very civilly to Mr. Sefton; he shall take me down to dinner, and I will sit next him. And," she added with a sort of levity that people sometimes assume to hide deep feeling, "to heighten the effect of my civility, I must make myself very charming, and so will run away now, and think of preparing to dress."

It was quite true, however, that Catherine Joyce did think a little more than usual about her appearance on that day; and took out two or three dresses from her wardrobe before she could decide which would be the most becoming. But when at last the palm had been awarded to a rich pink watered silk, with which her fine pearls contrasted very admirably, knowing she had abundance of time for her toilet, she sank into a reverie which lasted so long that after all she dressed in a hurry. Two or three carriages had already deposited the dinner guests, and loud knocks were following each other in rapid succession, before she entered the drawing-room, looking a little flushed from haste and excitement, but very radiant and sparkling—the invisible quiver quite full of arrows for conquest.

If that reverie, which had been so deep as to abridge the time she had reserved for her adornment, could have been translated from its unuttered and almost unutterable thoughts, into the clearness of a soliloquy, it would have run something thus, with not a few of the wavering contradictions which might almost be established as the only consistencies of human character:—

"No harm if I should delude him into proposing for me—he is a creature without really a heart to be touched. Or, suppose he has feeling, it would only be revenging the wrong received from one of the sex on another. And yet I could not do this with a nobler character. Oh, no, I should sink myself to the level of the being I despise, and could not meet the remorse I should feel for having tortured an honest heart! It is a dangerous game to play, that of the coquette; and not the nicest in the world. It is like using tools that soil one's fingers: but then my father: to give him time and charm the serpent! Only till I am of age, though; and then I can and will do as I like. I wonder if I shall feel amused at the writhing of the slave in his chains—for in my heart I know I can forge them. I wonder if I shall ever be in love again! Pshaw! that was not love after all. Only a shock—a plunge—rather invigorating in its after effects than otherwise; and what an escape that I was not dragged down—down, and utterly stifled by it! Of this I am sure, that my heart will now be as much more difficult to win, as it will be better worth possessing than it was before the wounds, which, perfectly healed as they are, raise a prejudice against its value in the eyes of very young people, I suppose. Dear Margaret—I must not take her into my confidence; no, she is a great deal too happy in her love to understand my excuses for a flirtation with her brother-in-law that is to be—selfish, narrow-minded, ugly, money-grubber that he is." And so she mused on, as I have said before, until she had to dress in a hurry at last.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

PHEASANT SHOOTING.

> Ah! nut-brown partridges: ah! brilliant pheasants;
> And oh! ye poachers: 'tis no sport for peasants.
> BYRON.

LAST week we essayed a chapter on the Curiosities of Sporting Literature: we purpose attempting another—in the present. As rare a thing as the Ring would have been esteemed by the exclusive set that cultivated the Turf in "the days of our fathers of yore," and suspended the canaille, "naso adunco," we question whether it would have frighted the squirearchy of the good old times so indignantly from their sporting propriety, as the sight of a modern Battue. After all, the betting circle is only another phase of snobbery: a glaring one, to be sure; but, generally speaking, it is the resort of "people that nobody knows" in search of the genteel who, of course, are made to pay for their whistle. But the battue: what shall be said of its rise, progress, and recognition in this land of fair play? What business has it here? Let the chasse of other countries butcher bacon, and call it hunting the wild boar: let it victimise venison, and do to death its does, under the pretence of deer-stalking: is that any reason that Fashion should turn purveyor to the poultry man in merry England? Is it comme il faut? Is it lawful?

> Slaughter grows murder, in this case, in short,
> And turns to massacre what would be sport.

These reflections are in season. The day before yesterday was the anniversary of the opening of the campaign against the British Bird of Paradise. Well, to such end, most probably, it was born. According to naturalists, unless pheasants were shot, presently the great globe itself would be transformed into a pheasantry; and anon, the fowls, having consumed all their natural food, would turn cannibals, until the last pheasant stood among the ruins of his race's nests, like Mrs Shelley's "Last Man." Brilliant bird though it be, nevertheless it was made for our use, but not for our abuse. Nature never intended it for the battue; for that contrivance, gentle reader, is the coxcombry of cruelty. Your exquisite, half asleep from the morning's polka, tortures far more than he kills of the afternoon pheasants at which he condescends to point his Manton. Only for the philanthropic glass of Curaçoa administered by his valet before letting him out, the odds are he had not bagged a head, but left the sufferers to languish out life—this with a fractured wing, that with a disabled leg. Poor victim of foreign vice! poor sacrifice to the battue!

> Ah! what avail his glossy, varying dyes,
> His purple crest, his scarlet-circled eyes,
> The vivid green his shining plumes unfold,
> His painted wings, and breast that flames with gold

No, no, friend of boon woodcraft; none of this alien pastime for thee! Pheasant Shooting has begun—but not its butchery—for the English sportsman. He goes forth, in these rich autumn mornings, into the fields and woods. But he will do better to postpone it for a week or so longer, because very rarely the nides at this season have attained good maturity. When he does sally forth, however, it will be attended by a brace or leash of short-legged spaniels. He takes no setters with him, because he knows that dogs cannot be masters of more trades than one, any more than men. His spaniels are slow, mute, and full of patient perseverance: they hunt close round him. If in cover, he has his retriever at his heels. As pheasants are prone to run for the sides of covers and adjacent hedge-rows when disturbed, you see him beat all these carefully, on once more emerging into the open. Here he reckons on fair shots, uninterrupted by boughs and stems of trees. If there has been rain during the night, he begins with these hedgerows, as the dripping of the trees, he knows, has driven his quarry abroad. As the season is early, so is his beating close; for oftentimes in October he has found a whole family in a tuft of underwood he could have covered with his pocket-handkerchief. Later in the year you will see him in the turnip-fields, towards two or three in the afternoon. These he beats with a steady pointer, taught to quarter his ground by signal from his master's hand. If, perchance, you meet him homeward-bound—towards a dinner not served as a substitute for supper—his keeper is carrying a bag just bulging a little; but there is really not more than five brace in it—there's not, upon our word. Did you ever see a more contented countenance? No flush of gory rivalry is there, but the honest tint of air and exercise, that have received a little additional from a fair day's PHEASANT SHOOTING.

TATTERSALL'S.

MONDAY.—The run this afternoon was chiefly in favour of Sir Tatton Sykes, Sting, Tom Tulloch, and the Baron, and it will be seen that their positions were thereby considerably improved. Several other horses were backed, but not in sums, and the business generally was on a limited scale.

AQUATICS.

ROWING MATCH.—The Scullers' Match between W. Bromley, of the Lower Water-gate, Deptford, and H. Cox, of the Upper Water-gate, took place on Tuesday. The race was for ten pounds aside, and the honorary distinction of champion of Deptford. The distance selected was from the Halfway House up to the Dreadnought, a course of something like eleven miles. It was a capital start, both being away at the same moment, and at a very dashing pace. In the course of a few strokes Cox took the lead, closely followed by his opponent. Mile after mile they were rowing at great speed, with but little difference between them; and, as they approached the lower part of Woolwich Arsenal, Bromley gradually drew up to his opponent, and some very fine rowing on both sides resulted in Bromley shortly passing him. Cox made a smart spurt to regain his place, but Bromley went stroke by stroke further away from him, and won by eighty or a hundred yards.

ROWING MATCH FOR THE SILVER OARS.—A spirited match took place on Monday for two pair of silver oars, presented by Messrs. Cownden and Wentzell, the boat-builders, to the frequenters of their establishment. It was in three heats, with eight pair of oars; the distance being from the Ship, Fore-street, Lambeth, up round a boat moored off Nine Elms, down round a boat opposite Messrs. Searle's Reach to the starting place. The competitors were Blenkhar, Price, Thomas, Hawes, J Price, Lawson, Sewel, Perry, Sanderson, Larby, Curson, Regan. The grand heat was won by Sanderson and Larby.

CRICKET.—A single wicket match between Messrs. Felix and Mynn, for the championship, commenced on Tuesday at the White Hart Cricket-ground, Bromley. At one o'clock Mr. Felix took the bat. This innings lasted an hour, and the batting and bowling were of the most superb order, sixty-five balls were delivered, only two wide, and one run only was obtained—score three. Mr. Mynn now went in, about twenty-six balls were bowled, no wide—runs four. At four o'clock, Mr. Felix went in for his second innings. About 167 balls were bowled, nine wide, one no ball; but though in for one hour and a-half, got literally not one run, though from the wide and no balls he headed his opponent by nine. At half-past five the stumps were drawn. Mr. Felix resumed his play on Wednesday, but after receiving twenty-four balls, went out without increasing his score. Mr. Mynn now went in with a score of 9 against him, to win in one short quarter of an hour; however, he obtained them. This is the second match this year in which Mr. Mynn has proved victorious over Mr. Felix,

COUNTRY NEWS.

RURAL FETE AT BEARWOOD.—Another of those congenial gatherings of landlord and tenant, master and servant, which of late have happily become of more frequent occurrence, took place on Saturday last, at Bearwood, the residence of John Walter, Esq. It has been the custom of Mr. Walter, for several years past, to assemble all who bear any relation to him, either in the character of tenant or servant upon the estate, for the enjoyment of a jovial holiday under his own roof At about two o'clock the party assembled formed themselves into a procession, and, preceded by a brass band from Reading, marched to the lawn, where tables were arranged to accommodate the company, among whom were Mr. W. B. Ferrand, M.P.; Major Court, the Rev. Mr. Hayes, the Rev. Mr Willmott, Mr. E. W. Gray, and other friends of the host. After removal of the cloth, several toasts were given, and Mr. Walter, in a humorous speech, proposed the "British Legislature," coupling the name of Mr. W. B Ferrand, M P. Mr. Ferrand, in reply, disclaimed any participation in the recent legislation of the House of Commons, and said he had no doubt that in the course of a few sessions they should find Mr. Walter rising in his place in the House of Commons to present a petition—say from the distressed agriculturists of the parish of Wokingham. (Laughter.) Then Mr. Walter would proceed to express his condolence and sympathy with the unfortunate petitioners, telling the House that he advised them, in their days of strength, to accept a fixed duty—that they rejected all notice of such a compromise when it was practicable, and "Free Trade" was the consequence. (Hear, hear.) Mr. E. W. Gray, late Mayor of Newbury, said there was a "fixed duty" to which, he was sure, the meeting would give their unanimous assent. That duty was to drink the health of their host, "Mr. Walter, with long life and happiness to him, and a seat in Parliament." Mr. Walter thanked the meeting for their usual demonstrations of regard. He hoped they now met even under better auspices than before (Hear, hear) He had read with the greatest pleasure within the last few days, accounts of meetings partaking of the same character as the present, and receiving the countenance of the highest personage in the realm—(cheers) also of the ex Prime Minister, and of a noble Lord in their own neighbourhood; and he trusted that ere long the better practice would universally prevail. ("Hear," and cheers.) Other toasts followed, and the conviviality of the afternoon was not a little enhanced by the vocal efforts of several of the guests.

THE MANCHESTER COMMERCIAL ASSOCIATION AND THE SALT MONOPOLY OF INDIA.—On Monday the directors of the Manchester Commercial Association, together with a few of the members more intimately connected with India, had a lengthened interview with D. C. Aylwin, Esq, of London, on the subject of the salt monopoly of India; the injurious and oppressive nature of which was very ably and fully pointed out by that gentleman. Mr. Alywin's statement was discussed in all its bearings by the members of the Association present, and the further consideration of the subject was deferred until the next meeting.

OPENING OF THE EAST LANCASHIRE RAILWAY.—Another line of railway communication was opened to the public on Monday last, connecting the town of Bury, and the important villages of Radcliffe, Nuttall, Ramsbottom, Edenfield, Rawtenstall, &c., with Manchester. Including about four miles of old railway next Manchester, this line gives a railway communication of eighteen miles, from Manchester to Rawtenstall, and thus connects another important manufacturing district of East Lancashire with its metropolis. At Bury the trains pass a field to the right, in which it is said Sir Robert Peel was born, leaving Clamber Hall (in which he certainly passed his boyhood) to the left.

THE NEWMARKET AND CHESTERFORD RAILWAY. The "first turf" was raised on Wednesday morning at Dullingham, in the presence of Lord George Manners and several other directors, and a large assemblage of the inhabitants of Newmarket. The line, which is to be completed by the autumn of 1847, has been leased for 999 years to the Eastern Counties Company, at a guaranteed five per cent. on the capital and a share of all the surplus profits of the united lines, less two per cent,

FALLING OF THE NEWCASTLE TUNNEL.—Early on Wednerday morning a portion of the tunnel lately made on that part of the Newcastle and North Shields Railway, which is to form the extension to Tynemouth, gave way. The part which has fallen in is a little to the east of Northumberland-square, North Shields, and is about fifty yards in length. Doubts are entertained as to the stability of the rest of the structure. The extension was to be opened for traffic in about a month.

THE POISONING CASE IN ESSEX. The child of Lydia Taylor, for attempting to poison which Mrs. Chesham was committed to Chelmsford gaol, having died on Sunday, an inquest was on Wednesday held on the body by Mr. Lewis, at the Cock-inn, Manewden, near Newport. The evidence was much the same as that on which Mrs. Chesham was committed to take her trial for the attempt to poison the child. The mother distinctly swore to three or more several attempts on the part of Mrs. Chesham to tamper with the child. She also deposed that Mr T. Newport, the father of the child, made a proposition to her, before she left her mother's service, to take some stuff, which she refused. The surgeon proved that the child died from inflammation, but from what cause that arose he could not say. The inquest was adjourned for a fortnight, that the contents of the stomach might be analysed.

VICTORIA PARK.—The operations for planting have been actively recommenced, and it is anticipated that the whole will be completed before the termination of the coming spring. In its present state, the park retains all its attractions with the East-enders, and the average of visitors has for many Sundays past exceeded 10,000. The gates at the entrance in Bonner's Fields having been placed up, all persons are excluded at night, except those passing through on business or residents, a night park-keeper being stationed for the purpose. Building is going on very actively and extensively in the neighbourhood.

THE MARKETS.

CORN EXCHANGE (Friday).—The present week's arrival of English wheat have been but moderate, and the show of samples of that grain here to-day was small. The accounts respecting the potato crop being still unfavourable the demand was steady, and, in some instances, selected parcels produced a trifle more money, the value of other qualities being firmly supported. Foreign wheat—free as well as in bond—moved off readily, at an advance on the quotations of quite 1s per quarter The show of barley was by no means large. Most kinds were in good request, at very full prices. The quantity of malt on show was not large, yet no advance took place in the quotations. Fine parcels of oats were in good request at a further advance in the currencies of 6d per quarter. The middling and inferior kinds were quite as dear Beans, peas, and flour fully supported late rates

ARRIVALS.—English: wheat, 4320, barley, 3250; oats, 740. Irish: Wheat, —; barley, [illegible] oats, 11,050. Foreign: wheat, 5500; barley, —, oats, 1230. Flour, 2070 sacks and [illegible] barrels; malt 2200 quarters.

Flour, American, 28s to 30s; Baltic, 30s to 31s per barrel

The Seed Market.—Linseed cakes have advanced fully 10s per 1000. In all kinds of seeds only a moderate business is doing, at late rates.

Linseed, English, sowing, 55s to 60s, Baltic, crushing, 38s 9d to 41s; Mediterranean and Odessa, 41s to 42s Hempseed, 36s to 38s per quarter. Coriander, 12s to 14s per cwt. Brown Mustard-seed, 11s to 15s, white ditto, 10s to 13s. Tares, 5s 6d to 7s 0d per bushel. English Rapeseed, new, £21 to £22 per last of 10 quarters. Linseed cakes, English, £11 10s to £12 0s; ditto, foreign, £8 10s to £10 0s per 1000; Rapeseed cakes, £5 0s to £5 2s per ton. Canary, 46s to 52s per quarter. English Clover-seed, red, 45s to 50s; extra, 25s to 55s; white, 60s to 62s; extra, up to 68s. Foreign, red, 40s to 48s; extra, 50s; white, 60s to 62s; extra, 75s per cwt.

Bread.—The prices of wheaten bread in the metropolis, are from 8½d to 9d; of household ditto, 6½d to 8d per 4lb loaf.

Imperial Weekly Average.—Wheat, 53s 1d; barley, 36s 10d; oats, 23s 7d; rye, 35s 7d; beans, 42s 7d; peas, 45s 0d.

The Six Weeks' Average.—Wheat, 49s 6d; barley, 31s 4d; oats, 23s 4d; rye, 32s 8d; beans, 40s 10d; peas, 39s 5d.

Duties on Foreign Corn.—Wheat, 8s 0d; barley, 2s 0d, oats, 1s 6d, rye, 2s 0d, beans, 2s 0d, peas, 2s 0d.

Coffee.—Privately, as well as at public sale, the transactions in this article are small. In prices, however, we have no material alteration to notice.

Rice.—Bengal is held at higher rates, but the business doing is trifling. Good white is held at 21s; and commons, 19s per cwt. In other kinds of rice the transactions have been but moderate.

Provisions.—In Irish butter some extensive sales have taken place this week, at further enhanced currencies. Carlow and Clonmel, landed, 94s to 100s; Cork, 94s to 96s; and other sorts, 90s to 94s per cwt. For arrival, several sales have been concluded, at higher rates. Dutch is wanted, and the best parcels move off steadily, at 100s to 106s per cwt. Bacon is heavy, and the turn lower. The top quotation is 66s, the lowest 50s per cwt. In middles, very little doing, and there are sellers at 50s to 56s per cwt. Lard moves off slowly, at 76s for the best Waterford, bladdered. In other kinds of provisions—if we except barrelled beef and pork—exceedingly little is doing

Oils.—A good business is doing in rapes, at 34s for pale, and 33s for brown. Linseed oil steady, at 25s to 25s 6d, on the spot. Irish oils firm, and rather dearer.

Tallow.—This article is still improving in value—44s having been paid for new Y C., on the spot. For forward delivery, a good business is doing, at 44s to 44s 3d for the last three months. Town tallow is now 42s 6d, net cash, with an active demand.

Hay and Straw.—Meadow hay, £2 10s to £4 0s; clover, £3 10s to £5 3s; and straw, £1 8s to £1 13s per load.

Hops (Friday).—The best new hops continue in good request, at fully, [illegible] a trifle beyond last week's prices. In the middling and inferior qualities, only a moderate business is doing Very few parties are inclined to back the duty higher than £200,000 New Sussex pockets, £3 16s to £4 12s; New Weald of Kent ditto, £4 2s to £4 15s; New Mid and East Kent ditto, £4 15s to £6 12s per cwt.

Smithfield (Friday).—The supply of beasts on sale here, to-day, being large, and the weather somewhat unfavourable to slaughtering, the beef trade was in a very inactive state, at barely the late decline in the quotations. There were in the market 500 foreign beasts, 1570 do. of sheep, and 48 lambs, in full average condition. The numbers of sheep were small; yet the mutton trade was rather dull, at Monday's prices. Lambs were in short supply, and heavy inquiry, at late rates. In calves, a full average amount of business was transacted, at ad advance in the currencies of from 2d to 4d per 8lb. Pigs moved off slowly, without alteration in value. Milch cows sold heavily, at from £16 to £19 10s each, including their small calf

Per 8lb. to sink the offals:—Coarse and inferior beasts, 2s 10d to 3s 0d; second quality ditto, 3s 2d to 3s 4d; [illegible] 3s 6d to 3s 8d [illegible]

[illegible] Friday.—The [illegible] was heavy to-day at barely stationary prices.

Per 8lb. by the carcase.—Inferior beef, 2s 8d to 2s 10d, middling ditto, 3s 0d to 3s 2d; prime large ditto, 3s 2d to 3s 4d, prime small ditto, 3s 4d to 3s 6d, large pork, 3s 6d to 4s 4d; inferior mutton, 3s 6d to 3s 10d, middling ditto, 4s 0d to 4s 2d; prime ditto, 4s 4d to 4s 6d; veal, 3s 10d to 4s 10d, small pork, 4s 6d to 4s 10d; lamb, 4s 8d to 5s 8d.

ROBERT HERBERT

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

There was some approach to improvement in the Consol market at the beginning of the week, the price on Tuesday being 95⅞ to ¾ for Money, and 95¾ ⅞ for Account. The uncertain state of political affairs, both as regards Spain and America, afforded sufficient reasons, however, to speculate for the fall. The seizure of California is regarded in a more unfavourable manner than the marriage of the Infanta of Spain, both having a depressing tendency on prices. Notwithstanding this, money proved so easy, both in the Foreign and Railway markets, on the settlement of the two accounts, that a slight improvement again occurred, and, after fluctuating about ½ per cent. during the week, the closing price was 95⅝ for Money and Account. India Stock is firm at 259. Long Annuities are 10⅛. The Exchequer market has improved materially, the closing quotation being 15 to 18 premium This tends to show that no scarcity of money exists, although the rate continues well maintained. Accommodation can be procured directly from the Bank or private bankers, at about 3½ per cent.; but the discount brokers cannot procure sufficient below these rates to offer any competition, hence the steadiness of price. Should, however, the present unfavourable state of political affairs terminate, money would doubtless become easier, and the English Funds, consequently, improve.

Although, during the past account, there have been some fluctuations both in Spanish, Portuguese, and Mexican Stock, still the transactions have been so limited that no difficulty was found in arranging the settlement, the easiness of money affording additional facility. Not much business has been done in any of the Foreign Stocks since, and the fluctuations of the week have been of the most unimportant character. Mexican, on Monday, was 25 to ⅛; it closes at 25⅛ for Account. Spanish Five per Cents quoted 26⅛ to ⅜; the last price is 26⅝ for Account. Brazilian is, ex div., 85. Dutch Two-and-a-Half per Cents are 56⅞; the Four per Cent Certificates, 92¼.

Although the Share Market continues inanimate, a better feeling was prevalent towards the close of the week. The difficulties that must arise in the formation of the new lines, with regard to materials, labour, and the raising of the capital, is considered so formidable, that no great opposition to the established lines can be for a long period anticipated. This continues to induce quiet purchasing at the present reduced rates. In the dividend-paying Companies, the state of the market will be seen by referring to the closing list subjoined: Ambergate, Nottingham, Boston, and Eastern Junction, 2⅛; Birmingham and Oxford Junction, 5¾; Bristol and Exeter, 84½; Chester and Holyhead, 23¾; Direct Northern, 1½; Eastern Counties, 21⅞; Ditto New, 6⅛ pm.; Ditto Perpetual, 5 per Cent., No. 1, ¾ pm.; Ditto, ditto, No. 2, ⅞ pm; Ditto, York Extension, 1⅛; Great Southern and Western (Ireland), 30½, Great Western, Quarter Shares, 20; Ditto New, 5½ pm.; Lancaster and Carlisle, New, 10¼; Leeds and Bradford, 74½; London and Blackwall, 9; Ditto New, 5⅛; London and Brighton, 59½; London and Croydon, 21½; London and North Western, 199; Ditto Quarters, New Shares, 16½; Ditto Fifths, 20½; London and South Western, 69½; London and York, 1⅞; Lynn and Ely, 16; Lynn and Dereham, 12; Manchester and Birming., Quarters (B) 12½; Manchester, Buxton, and Matlock, ⅞ pm.; Midland, New, 34¾; Newcastle and Berwick, 26; Newmarket and Chesterford, ¾ p; North British, 34½; Carlisle Extension, 3¾; North Staffordshire, 2½p; Preston and Wyre, 32; Scottish Central 18⅝; Shrewsbury and Birmingham 3⅝; Shropshire Union ½ dis; South Eastern and Dover, 39⅛; Luxembourg, 1⅝; Namur and Liege, 1⅛; Northern of France Constituted 14; Paris and Lyons Constituted, 5½, Paris and Orleans, 48½; Paris and Rouen—; Paris and Strasburg Constituted, 4⅞.

SATURDAY MORNING.—The Consol Market did not vary yesterday, the closing quotation was 95⅝ for money and time. Exchequer Bills were a shade better. The Foreign Market was flat without any variation worthy of remark, and the Railway Market offered no circumstance worthy of record.

FEATHER BEDS PURIFIED by STEAM.—HEAL and SON have just completed the erection of machinery for the PURIFYING of FEATHERS on a new principle, by which the offensive properties of the quill are evaporated and carried off in steam, thereby not only are the impurities of the feather itself entirely removed, but they are rendered quite free from the unpleasant smell of the stove, which all new feathers are subject to that are dressed in the ordinary way

OLD BEDS redressed by this process are perfectly freed from all impurities; and, by expanding the feathers, the bulk is greatly increased, and consequently the bed rendered much softer.

The following are the present prices of new feathers

Mixed	1s. 0d. per lb.	Best Foreign Grey Goose	2s. 0d. per lb
Grey Goose	1s. 4d.	Best Irish White ditto	2s. 6d.
Foreign ditto	1s. 8d.	Best Dantzic ditto	3s. 0d.

FOR STOPPING DECAYED TEETH.—Price 2s. 6d.

Patronized by her Majesty and his Royal Highness Prince Albert.

MR. THOMAS'S SUCCEDANEUM for Stopping Decayed Teeth, however large the cavity. It is placed in the tooth in a soft state, without any pressure or pain, and soon becomes as hard as the enamel, and will remain firm in the tooth for many years, rendering extraction unnecessary, arresting the further progress of decay. All persons can use Mr. Thomas's Succedaneum themselves with ease, as full directions are enclosed. Price 2s. 6d. Sold by Savory, 220, Regent-street; Sanger, 150, Oxford-street, Butler, 4, Cheapside, Johnston, 68, Cornhill, and all Medicine Vendors in the Kingdom.

Mr. Thomas continues to supply the Loss of Teeth on his new system of self-adhesion, without springs or wires. This method does not require the extraction of any teeth or roots, or any painful operation whatever, and is much less expensive than others. Mr. THOMAS, Surgeon-Dentist, 64, Berners-street, Oxford-street.

TO LADIES.

ROWLAND'S KALYDOR.—This preparation, eminently balsamic, restorative, and invigorating, is equally celebrated for safety in application, as for unfailing efficacy in thoroughly purifying the Skin of all Pimples, Spots, Blotches, Freckles, Tan, and Discolorations, producing a healthy freshness and transparency of Complexion, and an admired softness and delicacy of the Hands, Arms, and Neck. Its purifying and refreshing properties have obtained its exclusive selection by the Court, and the Royal Family of Great Britain, and those of the Continent of Europe, together with the “élite” of the Aristocracy and “Haut Volée.”

Beware of SPURIOUS “KALYDORS” containing mineral astringents utterly ruinous to the Complexion, and which, by their repellant action, endanger health. The GENUINE article has the words “ROWLAND'S KALYDOR” on the Wrapper. Price 4s. 6d. and 8s. 6d per bottle.

 All other “KALYDORS” are FRAUDULENT COUNTERFEITS!!!

The genuine is sold by the Proprietors at 20, HATTON-GARDEN, London, and by Chemists and Perfumers.

TROWSERS! TROWSERS!! TROWSERS!!!—A good fit in this garment can seldom be obtained.—R. GRAVES, Fashionable Trowsers' Maker and Tailor, 313, High Holborn, after many years' experience and study, is enabled to assert, without fear of contradiction, that he can fit gentlemen with this garment better than any other person in London. The characteristic of his fitting is a gentlemanly style, with perfect ease for stooping, sitting, walking, or riding. A well-assorted stock of the newest designs to select from.—R. GRAVES, 313, High Holborn.

BERDOE'S WATERPROOF PALLIUM, a Light Over-coat, for all Seasons.—The attention of the respectable public is confidently invited to the above truly gentlemanly and universally admired garment, which so decidedly conveys its own recommendation as to need no other. Its superior claims to the patronage of all who dislike the appearance of slang, vulgarity, or meanness, will, on examination, be at once apparent. It is really thoroughly impervious to the rain, and not so merely in name. Made only by W. BERDOE, Tailor and Over-coat Maker, 69, Cornhill (north side), and, in a few days, at 96, New Bond-street

H. J. and D. NICOLL, Registered PALETOT Manufacturers and TAILORS to their Royal Highnesses Prince Albert, Prince George of Cambridge, his Grace the Duke of Wellington, &c., respectfully beg to announce that the same moderate prices are still maintained, and that the Fashionable OVER-COAT is made of Llama Cloth, of a substance as suitable for winter wear so as much as that which has obtained general approval during the past summer.—To be had only, in London, at 114, Regent-street, and 22, Cornhill, and of the recognised agents in the country

Ladies requiring cloaks for carriage, promenade, or travelling, will find at this establishment every style and variety (including the latest adoptions from the French articles), studiously suited to our own climate, and for all occasions. The plaids and tartan materials for warm cloaks are superior to any that have hitherto been produced. An additional Suite of Show Rooms, No. 251, Regent-street, will be added to the London General Mourning Warehouse in the course of a few days; and these will be exclusively appropriated to the exposition and sale of Cloaks and Mantles. All the novelties of the season are now being made up, and may be had in velvet, satin, silk, tartan-pattern cloaks, &c., at Nos. 247 and 249, Regent-street, the London General Mourning Warehouse, W. C. JAY, Proprietor

RECOVERY OF HAIR.

TO MESSRS. ROWLAND AND SON, 20, HATTON-GARDEN, LONDON.

Gentlemen,—Having been bald for many years, and having been induced by a friend to try your invaluable MACASSAR OIL, I am now happy to state that I have succeeded in establishing a perfect growth of hair. I feel it due to you to render this acknowledgment, and also to give you liberty to make what public use of this you choose.

I am, Gentlemen, your obliged servant.

Portera House, Enniskillen, July 23rd, 1846. JOHN GREHAM, D.D.

ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL is the only article that really possesses nutritious virtues for promoting a luxuriant growth of the human Hair, preventing it from falling off, or turning grey, and for cleansing it of scurf and all impurity.

CAUTION.—The words “ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL” are on the wrapper of each genuine bottle

THE NEW HOUSES OF E. MOSES AND SON.

First, reader, your attention let us fix
On Nos. Eighty-five and Eighty-six;
Right facing Aldgate-church are these display'd,
To furnish you with clothing ready made
Neat, strong, and matchless goods are purchas'd here
And not a single article is dear
Next your attention we would beg to call
To No. Eighty-four, the “Private Hall.”
Here you ascend the stairs of solid oak
To gain the Room where orders are bespoke
This show-room with its giant chandelier,
Eclipses all that's witness'd far and near.
Here a secluded Habit-room you view,
And here there is a room for Vestings, too;
Other apartments follow in rotation,
To answer one design, ACCOMMODATION
The next compartment we survey, must be
The Hat depot of MOSES—Eighty-three
There's not another Hat-mart in the Town
Which casts such lustre on the human crown.
On turning round the corner, you behold
The Warehouse where the Hosiery goods are sold.
This House, whose trade is constantly alive,
Is in the Minories, No. One-four-five.
On passing to the right you'll find, next door
The Establishment for Outfits—One-five-four.
And here, good reader, our description closes
Our brief description of the House of MOSES.
We trust you'll not omit to give a call—
Not to ONE Warehouse only—but to all.
We mark the prices on our goods in trade,
From which, of course, there's no abatement made.
If any thing that's sold is found to lack,
We change the goods or give the money back.
We do, to please you, all that CAN be done,
Do all “YOU” can for MOSES and his SON

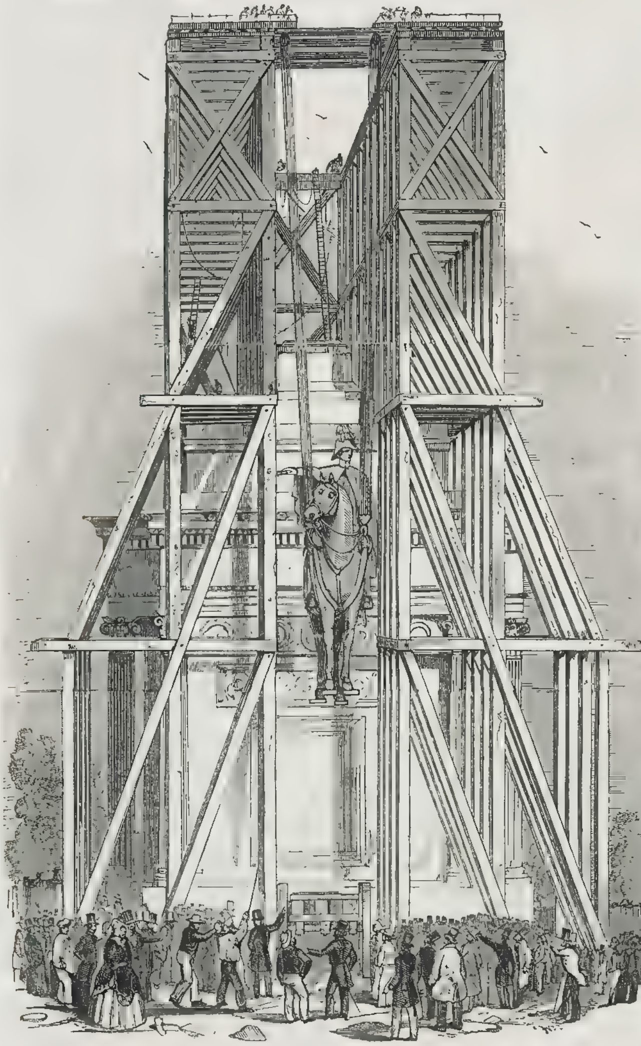
For particulars of Self-Measurement, and other essential information, obtain the new book, entitled “Past, Present, and Future,” which may be had gratis, and post-free, of the Proprietors, E MOSES and SON, 154, 155, 156, 157, Minories, and 83, 84, 85, and 86, Aldgate, City, London

E MOSES and SON, Tailors, Woollen-drapers, Clothiers, Hatters, Hosiers, Outfitters, and General Warehousemen, regret to be obliged to guard the public against imposition, but, having learned that the untradesman-like falsehood of “being connected with them,” or it's the same concern, has been resorted to in many instances, and, for obvious reasons, they have no connection with any other house in or out of London; and those who desire genuine cheap clothing, should, to prevent disappointment, call at or send to the Minories or Aldgate, opposite the Church, City, London.

NOTICE.—The entrance to the Bespoke Department is at 84, Aldgate.—No business transacted at this Establishment from sunset Friday evening till sunset Saturday evening, when it is resumed till twelve o'clock

OBSERVE.—This Establishment WILL BE CLOSED on MONDAY, the 5th, and TUESDAY, [illegible] and will RE-OPEN on WEDNESDAY MORNING, at Seven o'Clock

WANTED.—Several young men in the Ready Made and Bespoke Department, and several youths, from the age of 14 to 16 years, as Cashiers. Apply on Wednesday next, the 23rd, at 85 and 86, Aldgate, at Nine o'Clock.



RAISING THE WELLINGTON STATUE.

WEDNESDAY.—THE RAISING OF THE STATUE.

The stupendous labour of raising the Wellington Statue to the summit of the Green Park Arch was commenced at an early hour on Wednesday morning. A body of riggers from Woolwich Dockyard, under the direction of Mr. M'Mullens, assisted by a number of labourers, were first occupied in changing the position of the Statue, as deposited the day before, from south to east; and in order to accomplish this end, the whole mass of figure and carriage, weighing altogether sixty tons, was lifted by the tackle, and then shifted into the desired spot. This feat fully proved the competency of the mechanical appliances provided to perform the allotted task: accordingly, the preparations were carried on until three o'clock, when the signal was given to "hoist away." The figure was raised by means of strong six-inch cables fastened round each arm, or thigh of the horse, which were then hooked on to the blocks used in the ascent. Through these blocks, four in number, triple sheaved, and expressly made for this occasion, ran six ropes, also quite new, and made of the strongest yarn, each rope being calculated equal to en tons. Upon the traversing platform above, were four "crabs," or powerful windlasses, worked by eight men each. The scaffolding, erected for the purpose by Mr. W. Ellis, (of Park-place, Paddington,) under the direction of Mr. Wyatt, was of itself 115 feet in height, having taken upwards of 200 loads of timber in its construction, besides scaffold poles and planks.

The removal of the various fastenings and bolts by means of which the Statue was secured to the Car, occupied no less than six hours, viz., from nine A.M. to three P.M. At a quarter past three, the Statue having been properly secured in the slings, began slowly to move. On mounting to the platform on the summit where the men were engaged in working the "crabs," it was curious to observe how slight was the manifestation of force employed in the important operation. Eight men at each "crab" sufficed to work it, two additional men being employed in holding and coiling the rope as it wound off the machine. Thus, thirty-two men were enabled, by the united leverage of the four "crabs," and corresponding "falls," to raise considerably more than a ton each, they being placed at a height of one hundred and fifteen feet above the object which they were lifting. The operation proceeded with great caution on the part of Mr Ellis and his assistants; and it is highly gratifying to be able to state that no accident of any description occurred. At six o'clock, the Statue was raised to the height of about forty feet, having gone up at the rate of three inches every minute during the two hours and three quarters that were consumed in the process, as far as it had been achieved.

Meantime, the shades of evening were gathering round, and subsequently night o l in. The moon soon after rose; and, though clouded in the commencement of her career, shone brilliantly.

The riggers, who had for some time disappeared rom the scaffolding, now again began to mount the ladders and "man the yards;" and, soon after, the large moveable platform aloft, on which were the windlasses, by which the Statue was carried up, commenced its horizontal locomotive efforts; and, before nine o'clock, the platform, Statue, and all, had been backed westward, and fairly landed on the proposed site. Thus vanished Fallacy the Second, which predicted the failure of any attempt to raise the colossal group entire.

The neighbourhood of Hyde Park was thronged throughout the day by a great crowd of persons, who seemed much interested in the operations. Amongst other noble and distinguished personages who visited the works were the Duke of Cambridge, the Duke of Mecklenburg Strelitz, Prince George, Lord A. Fitzclarence, Earl of Bandon, Earl of Cardigan, Lord Morpeth, Lord C. Wellesley, Lord Strangford, Sir J. Macdonald, Sir F. Trench, Mr. P. Borthwick, M.P., &c Her Majesty the Queen Dowager also watched the proceedings for a considerable period from one of the windows of Apsley House.

During the day, Mr. Wyatt was honoured with visits from a great many of the nobility. The Duke of Cambridge and the Grand Duke of Mecklenburg Strelitz came early in the afternoon, and passed some time within the enclosure.

The Premier also honoured the artist with a visit, as did Viscount Morpeth. The latter ascended to the summit of the Arch, and viewed the plinth on which the Statue was intended to be placed; and we understandthe noble Viscount complimented Mr. Wyatt in very warm terms on his complete success in producing a magnificent work of art.

Lord Charles Wellesley, who has kept open house in the absence of his father during the past two days, paid Mr. Wyatt a visit in the course of the day.

THURSDAY.—FIXING OF THE STATUE.

Before the works were discontinued on Wednesday evening, the figure was raised to an elevation which would admit of its being placed in its position in a very short time, when the crown of the arch on which it is to rest was prepared for its reception. The masons and other workmen resumed their labours on Thursday morning, and at one o'clock, the grooves, in which the large bolts that project through the feet of the colossal horse fit, being pronounced by Mr. Wyatt to be sufficiently complete to admit of the figure being fixed, orders were given to the persons who had the management of the traversing machine to proceed with their operations; and in a few minutes afterwards Mr. Wyatt, and the members of the Committee who were in attendance, had the gratification of seeing the Statue move steadily, and without the slightest accident occurring, into its destined position. Immediately after, the work of securing it was proceeded with, and in a very short time, the figure was firmly fixed.

We are happy to say that not the slightest accident occurred to the machinery, or to any one of the numerous workmen employed in the stupendous task o raising the Statue.

A great number of persons were present during the morning, but the crowd was not so great as on Wednesday. The Duke of Rutland, Sir F. Trench, and other members of the Committee, occupied the front windows of Apsley House.

Until the scaffolding is removed, it is scarcely possible to form a distinct idea of the appearance the Statue will present. The general impression, however, appears to be that, so far from being too large in its proportions for the Arch, if anything, the Arch is too large and lofty for the Statue. Thus falls Fallacy the Third—that the Statue, if so placed, would, from its colossal size, become the principal in the Group, and take precedence of the Arch.

We cannot conclude, for the present, without expressing our acknowledgments of the courtesy and consideration shown by Mr. Wyatt and Mr. James Wyatt, and by every member of their establishment, in affording facilities to our several Artists, in completing their graphic Illustration of the great work; as well as to ourselves in chronicling its artistic and mechanical details; in short, its history, from the moment of the suggestion to the consummation of this truly magnificent Group—destined, we trust, for centuries, to commemorate the bravery of the British Hero; the skill of the British Artist; and the gratitude of the British Nation.

CHESS IN GERMANY.

The two following games were played some months ago, at Berlin, between the late Dr. Bledow and Mr. Mongredien, the President of the Old London Chess Club.

(a) This is certainly inferior to bringing out the K's Kt to B's 3rd.
(b) Dr. Bledow opens the present game with care and judgment.
(c) Taking the Kt would evidently have cost him the loss of "the exchange."
(d) A very good move.
(e) Q takes R would have been better, but in any case the position was in favour of the first player.

(a) From this period, Mr. H.'s game is irretrievably lost, as, should he move his King, he would of course lose his rook, and on the interposition of Pawn he is checkmated in a given number of moves. We would especially direct attention to the position of the game as it now stands.

PROBLEM No. 141.

This matchless stratagem by the celebrated Mendheim has never, we believe, been published in England.

In this position Black checks both King and Queen, whereupon White moves and mates in eight moves.

FICTIONS OF DIPLOMACY,

BY the term "legal fictions" are understood certain forms, which, for the sake of convenience, treat imaginary persons and things as real existences. To ordinary minds it may appear strange enough that a falsehood must be created in order to deal properly with truth. Nor does the Law stand alone in this respect; another branch of human government has its "fictions," quite as unreal, but much more extensive. Politics and Diplomacy rejoice in many startling fictions; one or two it may not be out of place to notice, as they are being talked of with unwonted earnestness, in connection with the pending Royal Alliances—matters in which Diplomacy has always found the most abundant employment for its "inky fingers." The fictions we allude to, are the phrases that now meet us everywhere—"the Balance of Power," the "Independence" and the "Integrity of Nations." Amid all the clamour made about these things, what are they really? what do they represent?

To begin with the grandest sounding, "the Balance of Power"—what is understood by it? It is about to be destroyed it appears by the Spanish Marriage, and England must interfere to prevent the catastrophe; the interference to be effectual must be one of force; force is war, and as we should find ourselves plunged into a conflict for "the Balance of Power," we ought certainly to know what we are asked to fight for, and whether we might not be wasting our substance for a shadow.

The Balance of Power is a political theory that has influenced the political intercourse of nations for some century and a half. It was a sort of compact between the States of Europe, knit by fear and suspicion, which led them to unite together against any one or two, who might seem anxious to aggrandise themselves to the peril of the rest. Questions of territory, marriages, successions, all affected "the Balance of Power," which, always varying, could rarely be adjusted without war; Monarchs were perpetually throwing their swords into the scale to keep the equipose; but, as the rise and fall of nations depend more on natural qualities than Campaigns or Cabinet Councils, or even Royal Marriages, "the Balance of Power" as a theory is falling into discredit, being almost as impracticable as the theory of perpetual motion. It is difficult to say what was the precise state of things which was to be kept unchanged, but we believe the position of Europe at the beginning of the eighteenth century, was nearly what the theory set out with, and to maintain that statu quo, countries could at one time be plunged into war with each other as if every movement of a neighbour was a direct injury. Blood, treasure, lives, energies were all wasted to prevent some "annexation" of territory, or some "alliance" of Royal persons, when both measures, after all the clamour about them, often proved the most disastrous and futile, the sources of weakness and canfusion to the very parties whose ambition they gratified.

The importance of these alliances is overrated; even in more remote ages, when the Royal power was more absolute in all countries than it is now in any, they were of no effect in producing unity while language, interest, and feelings, divided the respective people. The frequent marriages between the Crowns of England and France, never made one power of the two nations; on the contrary, they were scarcely ever at peace; there is far more friendly feeling between them now that such alliances are, by the Constitution of England, impossible. The intermarriages of the Royal Families of France and Spain have been quite as useless; long and bloody conflicts, the last not the least, told that the two people are thoroughly alien to each other; nothing will ever unite or assimilate them; to suppose that France and Spain can ever form one Empire—that, separated, they will ever act as such—is one of those phantoms the fear of which we ought to have outlived. No; the true power of nations will increase if the people possess the qualities that acquire it; against them a conspiracy of Cabinets to keep them weak would be useless; on the other hand, such a compact cannot save a decaying people from the result of weakness—unimportance.

They may retain their place on the map long after their influence is gone; they continue to be states, but they cease to be powers. Some respect is paid to them for the sake of their former renown; it is a feeling akin to that which in private life follows those "who have seen better days." All know that they are poor, but remember also that a time was when they were potential "on 'Change," and could shake the markets with a nod. Respect and forbearance to remind them painfully of their misfortunes by any overt act of contempt are their due; but to pretend to them they are now as great, as rich, and influential as ever, and to deal with them as if they were so, would be a mere mockery: yet this is the pleasant farce acted by diplomacy towards those decrepit states who have descended to the refuge which historical charity keeps for decayed nations. It endeavours to give weak, pauperised, and powerless countries, the influence, place, and functions of mighty empires; it keeps up the old traditions of greatness, without regard to the changes of time and circumstance. For instance, in order to preserve "the Balance of Power," the European States have guaranteed the "Integrity of the Turkish Empire:" there never was a more glaring instance of attempting to rottenness the semblance of strength: the power and energy of the Moslem race have departed from them; her "Integrity" has been guaranteed, and Egypt, Syria, Greece, have been taken from her; her "Independence" has been assured, while it is notorious that she is wholly governed by the European Ambassadors. She is doomed: her decay is from within, and no possible sacrifices to the "Balance" theory can avert her fall. A greater power than diplomacy is working against her; no human force will much longer preserve to Mahometans a dominion over Christians and Europeans; that Constantinople will again become a Christian capital, is among those events which may be predicted with the greatest confidence.

The truth is, that Nature has marked out the great channels in which the stream of human life, with all the outward manifestations of power, is to flow. As far as the theory of "the Balance of Power" adapts itself to those tendencies, it becomes a true one; but new developments of human power set it at defiance—it cannot check them. The whole Empire of Russia has grown up since "the Balance of Power" was made a principle in European politics; it has absorbed European kingdoms, stripped Turkey of many provinces, and pushed its Eastern frontier to the centre of Northern Asia; was this no disturbance of the old "Balance of Power?" If the idea cannot be enforced, let it cease to be held up to us as a principle of action; why should the world be set on fire for phrases?

The changes that are of real importance to the world, are those which raise and consolidate nations; these go on imperceptibly, while a Royal marriage makes all Europe ring with a clamour; against that Governments are urged to war, with as much earnestness as if we were in the middle of the fifteenth century. To a nation so indifferent to the alliances of its own Sovereigns, and so little affected by them as England, it is more curious that appeals on such exploded absurdities as "the Balance of Power" should be made. If the Spanish people so deeply hate the French match, let them show their aversion, and prevent it; if they will not, it is no business of ours. That there has been some underhand dealing in the way in which the affair was brought about, is true; but some men would rather attain an end by a crooked path, even when they might do it as well by a straight one; but that does not alter our position towards the French and Spanish people, with neither of whom have we any cause of quarrel; and we fully agree with the conclusion of a contemporary, that "the three races of French, English, and Spanish, may come to understand each other, respect each other, and trade equally with each other, in despite of the mean trickery, selfish alliances, and superannuated pretensions of Courts and Princes. If diplomacy has failed to secure the freedom and independence of the Peninsula, let us set to work the larger diplomacy of the press, and of all modes of enlightening and influencing public opinion. Let us take care and not make this quarrel between the French and English Governments a quarrel between the French and English people."

BREAD RIOTS IN PARIS.

A serious riot occurred in the Faubourg St. Antoine, Paris, on Wednesday (last week), in consequence of a rise in the price of bread. We subjoin all the particulars which the Paris papers supply. The following paragraph appeared in part of our impression last week, and will explain the origin of the riot:

"A rather serious disturbance took place on Wednesday night in the Faubourg St. Antoine, Paris, occasioned by an augmentation (of four centimes) in the price of the four pounds loaf. The inhabitants of the Rue du Faubourg St. Antoine and adjacent streets, principally inhabited by cabinet-makers, white-smiths, &c., assembled in considerable numbers, at seven o'clock in the evening, and proceeded to the bakers' shops in the vicinity, in order to lay in provisions of bread, in consequence of the rise in price which was to commence on Thursday morning. The quantity left after the sale of the day was soon disposed of; and the crowd increasing became riotous, soon broke the shop fronts and several of the gas lamps. This scene continued for some time, and about half-past nine the mob commenced raising a barricade across the Rue du Faubourg St. Antoine, with the stones of the Rue Lenoir, which they unpaved with incredible celerity. The Horse Municipal Guard soon afterwards arrived, and rode among the crowds several times, but they always opened their masses and gave them free passage, closing immediately behind them. A batallion of the 48th Foot, headed by its Colonel, afterwards came to the spot. They were received with cries of "Vive la Ligne!" and the tumult having lasted until near midnight, the populace began gradually to disperse, and the streets became comparatively quiet. The rioters did not, however, separate without making an appointment for rendezvous at the same quarter on Thursday evening. The bakers having been prevented baking in the night, carts, loaded with bread, on Thursday morning arrived from all quarters, and the bread they contained was sold in the street."

We translate the following from La Presse:—"At No. 159 of the Rue du Faubourg St. Antoine, a little higher up than the Hospice des Enfans Trouvés, is the shop of M. Astier, a baker, who usually sells to workmen bread of the second quality.

"As the price of bread was on the next day (the 1st instant) to be raised considerably, the unfortunate men were anxious to lay in as large a stock as possible at the old price; so that, towards seven or eight o'clock, there was no more bread to be procured either at M. Astier's shop, or at No. 165. The bakers discontinued giving credit as much as possible; and a report was spread throughout the neighbourhood that they would not sell any more bread. This report led to assemblages of the people, and riot.

"Not a stone of the bakehouse of M. Astier was left whole. All the lamps of the Rue du Faubourg St. Antoine, from the fountain at the angle of the Rue de Charonne to the Rue Moreau, were broken. In the Rues Lenoir, Moreau, St. Marguerite, and de Cotte, to the marché Lenoir, the lamps were much injured.

"Many of the windows at the bakehouse at No. 165 were broken. The authorities having been apprised of the riots, sent agents upon the spot directly, who requested the assistance of the Municipal Guard; but the Municipal Guard not being sufficiently numerous, they were worsted, and one of them was seriously wounded. This individual having been carried by his comrades to the house of M. Marchand, restaurateur, No. 146, a shower of stones was thrown, which broke the windows of that establishment. At ten o'clock, a reinforcement arrived, and the rioters dispersed themselves in the faubourg. A band of them went along the Place Maubert, and made an attack upon a baker's shop; but a post of the Municipal Guard having put them to the route, part dispersed in the Faubourg St. Jacques and the Rue de Seine."

On Thursday evening (last week), the assemblage in the Quartier San Antoine became again so numerous along the whole of the Rue du Faubourg and the adjacent streets, that the magistrates were obliged to take strong measures. Troops of the line, horse and foot municipal guards, sergens de ville, and police officers in plain clothes, marched simultaneously into the Place du Trone and the Place de la Bastille. On their way they were hooted, and in some instances pelted. They were at length compelled to charge. Many of the mob, who were almost all in blouses, took refuge in the house No. 45, which was immediately surrounded by the armed force, and several of the rioters, all young persons, were arrested. By ten o'clock the mob was entirely dispersed, and all remained quiet throughout the night.

Another disturbance was attempted in the Faubourg Saint Antoine, on Saturday evening, owing to, or rather on pretence of, the rise in the price of bread; but the streets of that turbulent quarter were watched by so many and such strong patrols of cavalry and infantry, that the rabble were easily dispersed.

The Gazette des Tribunaux announces that the number of captures effected, in consequence of these disturbances, amounts to 74. M. St. Didier has been instructed to prosecute the parties for tumultuously assembling for the purposes of devastation and pillage.

General Failure of the Potato Crop. The Scotch papers give a lamentable account of the present state of the potato crop in Scotland, and of the prospects of the poorer classes during the impending winter. The failure of the potatoes appears to be universal throughout Scotland, but it is only in the Highlands, and more especially in the Highlands of the western mainland and the Hebrides, that anything like famine seems to be apprehended.

Bankruptcy of a Railway Company.—On Tuesday, Mr. Lawrance and Mr. Plews were engaged before Mr. Commissioner Evans at the Court of Bankruptcy in opening a fiat of bankruptcy against the whole of the Directors of the Tring, Reading, and Basingstoke Railway Company. This is the first fiat that has been issued under the 9th and 10th of Victoria, chap. 28, entitled "An Act to facilitate the dissolution of Railway Companies," and it was sued out upon the petition of Mr. Charles Fly Blunt, of Montague-place, engineer. The assets, it is said, will amount to £16,000 or £18,000. The Commissioner said, he did not see that the Company had committed any act of bankruptcy according to the terms of the statute. Mr. Lawrance then referred his Honour to that clause which provides, that on proof by advertisement in the London Gazette, that a meeting of shareholders has been held, and declared the Company insolvent, an act of bankruptcy shall be deemed to have been committed. The learned Commissioner referred to the section in question, and then adjudicated the Directors of the above railway (upon production of the necessary papers) to be bankrupts, and they will, therefore, appear as such in the Gazette. It was stated that the private property of the Directors is not liable under the Act.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

PARISIANA.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Paris, Wednesday.

Prosists, poets, comic and tragic writers, painters and musicians, all are off to Madrid; nor does another species of the irratibile genus still more congenial to Spain, and its habits lack a representation. Alexandre Dumas is gone to represent the melodrama; just as some people, instead of considering corn as the source of sound human nutriment, deem its great value the production of alcohol, so the greater majority of good countrymen estimate the most important events just in proportion as it can produce more or less excitement and amusing stimulation.

In the meantime, curiosity is on the tip-toe of expectation; Paris takes the Castillian tournure, the ladies are adopting the basquina and black dress of the Madrilenjas, whilst our beaux give their mustachios and imperials the long twist of Philippe II., and wear huge cloaks overlapping the shoulder like news-mongering Dons at the Puerta del Sol at Madrid. The Hervés of the new dramas and comedies, like that just produced at the Theatre Français, are all Don Gusmans and Don Juans; whilst the Cirque Olympique is endeavouring to get up a ball fight further to illustrate the revived policy "il n'y à plus de Pyrenées." Great has been the astonishment of our gobemouches at the assertion of M. Dumont, the Minister of Public Works, who has just returned from a running peep over England and Scotland in rail-road trains. His portly excellency assured M. Guizot, and the gaping Deputies at his levee yesterday, that he had not found a man in Birmingham, Manchester, Liverpool, or Glasgow, who gave one thought to the Montpensier marriage, and, consequently, argued the travelled, sapient statesman, Lord Palmerston is playing a discordant solo for his personal satisfaction. If busy, industrious Englishmen are so indifferent to Spain, I, on the other hand, can assure you that the heads of all Paris are on the road to Madrid—so much so, that there is scarce a bit of news to pick up, except what is Spanish; unless it be such mere bagatelles as a recital of the way in which C. Lafitte, the banker, has [illegible] his new thorough-bred chesnut horse he bought in Yorkshire—which, all the gobemouches assure us, is lodged in a drawing-room, with a porphyry manger, silver chains, and silk trappings, with a desire that the groom will not speak to him too sharply; or the election of old Musard, Jullien's predecessor, to be Mayor of Auteuil, on which occasion, of course, the whole district was seized with a general tarantella or galop, and poured into the streets and lanes to indulge the fantastic toe; so that it looked as if we had a return of the dancing epidemy of the middle ages. Another topic is the quarrel of J. Janin, "the immortal author of Richardson's 'Clarissa Harlowe,'" with the Débats, of which he has been for years the principal ornament. On hearing that the proprietor of this journal had sent Alexandre Dumas to Madrid as historiographer, it appears that the very substantial representative of those very thin and magical initials, J. J., sent in his resignation; however, both parties have too much need of one another not to make up the quarrel. Whilst Alexandre Dumas is chronicling the marriage of his young patron, the Duke, the walls of his new Theatre Montpensier are rising rapidly, and one might think most conspicuously, if one looks to the crowds of idle badauds who are always thronging the Boulevard to look at it, and appear as if they would enter before it is finished. There are rumours of some of the first actors of the classical drama engaging in its performances; and, if so, we should have this singular result, that, in the decline of the drama in Paris, the great artists would seek the same refuge they do in London at the Surrey and Sadler's Wells. Adolphe Adam has not had so much good fortune as "the Novel Briaræus." As soon as he got his patent and licence for a third lyrical theatre he lost his better half a partner who had the money whilst he had the talent. However, it appears he has now found another child of Mammon to second him. This addition of two new theatres to those of Paris is an unexpected revolution in the tastes of society; for, until the last two years, we were expecting the same abandonment and closing of theatres as in London, where, in by-gone days, you possessed twice as many as in Paris, which was natural, since, in our settled climate, and with our peculiar peripatetic habits, we have out-door recreations in open air without number, which fog and rain in your capricious clime must prevent all wise people to undertake.

Amongst the departures for Spain, which have given rise to most observation here, is that of the two eldest daughters of Queen Christina, and of her husband Munoz, who were completing their education in the suburbs of Paris. Their going so far to partake of the marriage cake, is a proof that Madame Munoz is obliged to renounce for the time her much longed-for trip to Paris, although her hotel here, and her villa at Malmaison had been for some time in active preparation. One cannot imagine a worse journey, and one more detrimental to their education, than that these unfortunate children are going to undertake, and it makes one feel how precarious must be the position of their royal sister, now about to be married to a half idiot Prince, that their mother should not dare to gratify her wish to escape to Paris.

We have just heard that Rossini, in spite of the fast advancing progress of his last new opera at the Académie de Musique, has put off his advent for a month longer. The wags here pretend that as that great German composer, the mild-tempered Mendelssohn Bartholdy, was lately arrested on crossing the Rhine, being mistaken for a rebel and a conspirator, Rossini fears he in his turn might be taken to prison under the idea that he is Don Carlos.

FRANCE.

The marriage of the Duke de Montpensier seems to create additional excitement in Paris, as the day for the celebration of it approaches.

The Paris papers have daily published telegraphic despatches of the route of the French Princes towards Madrid.

The first was dated "Behobia, 2d instant, 11 o'clock, A.M.:"—"The Princes have just entered Spain. Their reception at Irun was most brilliant and cordial."

Another despatch dated Bayonne, October 3, says:—"The Princes were welcomed with the greatest enthusiasm on their road to Tolosa, where a magnificent fête was offered to their Royal Highnesses. The concourse of people was immense. Their Royal Highnesses leave this morning for Vittoria, where a similar reception awaits them."

The French Government received on Sunday a telegraphic despatch, dated Vittoria, Saturday evening, 3d October.

It announced the arrival of the Dukes of Montpensier and Aumale in that city, at six o'clock on the evening of that day. Throughout the whole of their passage they had been received by the authorities with every possible testimony of respect. Their reception by the populace had been marked by enthusiastic acclamation. Everywhere the Princes made the liveliest impression.

The following telegraphic despatch was received on Monday by the French Government:—

"Bayonne, Oct. 5.—The Princes left Vittoria yesterday morning, at seven o'clock, for Burgos. They have arrived at Miranda, where everything passed off admirably, and they again proceeded on their journey at eleven o'clock."

The despatch received on Tuesday was as follows:

"Burgos, Oct. 5.—The Princes arrived here yesterday evening at six o'clock. Their Royal Highnesses have met in Castille with the same reception as in the Basque provinces. In every place the greatest anxiety was manifested to welcome them, and they received the loudest acclamations. The Princes proceeded on their journey this morning, at eight o'clock, for Buitrago."

The Toulonnais of the 1st instant has the subjoined account of the return of the Prince de Joinville and his fleet to Toulon:

"The Mediterranean squadron, which, on leaving the Gulf of Spezzia, was on its way towards the coast of Spain, received orders to return to Toulon, where it came to anchor last evening. This return of the fleet has produced some sensation. It is generally supposed that the Government wished, under present circumstances, to avoid any probable rencontre on the coast of Spain between the French and English squadrons. On their arrival in this roadstead the ships were ordered to complete their stocks of provisions. The Prince de Joinville came on shore yesterday, and went to the residence of the Maritime Prefect, but his Royal Highness preserves a strict incognito. This afternoon the different authorities went on board the Souverain to compliment his Royal Highness."

The Siècle announces that disturbances have taken place at Genetard, in the department of the Saône-et-Loire. The peasants had assembled at several places where it was said corn had been accumulated. The Sub-Prefect of Charolles, together with a company of the 49th Regiment, in garrison at Macon, marched against the peasants, and order was restored; but considerable apprehension of a scarcity prevailed throughout the country, and further agitation was apprehended.

There have been some attempts at riot at St. Omer, in consequence of the injunction against the National Guard carrying their arms at the inauguration of the statue of the Duke of Orleans. The authorities have been assailed with hootings, hisses, and outcries, among which were "Death to Tyrants!" "Bread at Five Sous!" The "Marseillaise" was sung, and several windows broken. But the troops were called out, and the rioters were dispersed, and as it was made public that the Duchess of Orleans had sent 6,000f. on the occasion of the inauguration, the populace calmed down, and the disturbances were not renewed.

On Sunday night, at the moment when the Salle Valentino, Paris, was at the height of its gaiety, and the dancers were in the midst of a rapid polka, a young woman, elegantly dressed, and apparently in brilliant health, suddenly stopped and fell. Her high colour subsided, and she was considered to have fainted. As the bystanders found it difficult to restore her to sensation, a medical man was sent for, and he declared her to be dead! An aneurism had broken, and the hemorrhage consequent on it had produced death

The King, on Sunday, reviewed, at the Carrousel, several regiments of the garrison of Paris, several batteries of the 5th Regiment of Artillery, and two regiments of light cavalry, viz., the 3rd Lancers and the 8th Hussars. The review commenced at one o'clock, and lasted an hour. When the King passed along the ranks, and particularly during the defile, his Majesty, who was accompanied by the Duke de Nemours, the Prince de Joinville, who had just arrived from Toulon, and a numerous and brilliant staff, was received with loud acclamations. The King, although he had nearly accomplished his 73rd year, appeared to be in excellent health. His Majesty distributed several decorations to officers and non-commissioned officers of the regiments about to leave Paris

Lord Normanby delivered to M. Guizot on Monday a copy of the second protest presented by Mr Bulwer to the Spanish Cabinet.

The French Rentes fell on a report of the recall of Mr. Bulwer, and Lord Normanby not dining with the King of the French on Tuesday, the 73d anniversary of his Majesty's birth-day

The Prince de Joinville arrived at Paris from Toulon on Monday.

Lord Brougham is now in Paris.

SPAIN.

Letters from Madrid of the 30th ult. state that the preparations for the double marriage were proceeding with the utmost activity. They occupied no less than 6,000 individuals, who were paid by the Ayuntamiento. The French Princes were expected on the 6th. The Senate had granted Ministers the authorisation to levy taxes, by a majority of 99 votes to 1, which was supposed to be that of General Serrano. The British fleet was off Tetuan, on the coast of Morocco, on the 24th, and was to return in a few days to Gibraltar. M. Bernardo da Silva Cabral, former Minister of Justice of Portugal, embarked on the 23d at Cadiz for Marseilles

The General Officers of the Army at present in Madrid waited on her Majesty on the previous day with the object of felicitating her on her marriage, and that of her sister. General Pezuela, as Captain-General of New Castile, was at the head, and addressed the Queen, her mother, and sister, in terms of felicitation.

The Queen replied in a few words, and permitted the generals to kiss her hand.

A letter from Tolosa contains the following interesting account of the reception given at Irun and Tolosa to the French Princes:—"The Princes entered Irun amidst the acclamations of the people, the houses being decked with various ornaments, the bells ringing, and the troops under arms. They were received with all hospitality at the residence of M. Lardizabal, who had prepared for them a splendid breakfast, at which, according to the custom of the country, they were waited on by beautiful young girls, and the honours of which were performed by Mdme. Lardizabal. Amateur performers of the town played a variety of select pieces of music. General Harispe, the Prefect, and Sub-Prefect of the Basses of the Pyrénées accompanied the Princes to Irun. At 11 o'clock their Royal Highnesses left Irun, and were greeted along the road with numerous manifestations of welcome at every place they passed through. On coming within sight of Saint Sebastian the Ayuntamiento of the town came out as far as Astigarraga to compliment them. On reaching the gates of Tolosa another triumphal arch was prepared, and the members of the foral deputation were waiting under it to receive the Royal travellers Having delivered an address to them, the Princes were conducted to a mansion lately occupied by the Marquis de Bargas, where by the Queen's orders every preparation was made to receive her august visitors. Tolosa had prepared for the gratification of their Royal Highnesses one of its national entertainments called Comparsas, so celebrated throughout Spain. In the great square under the windows of the residence of the Princes, was erected a vast platform or stage, and the balconies of all the surrounding houses were filled with spectators gaily clad in the different national costumes. Lively tunes, played by a well composed band, announced the approach of the dancers. First came a number of youths dressed in white tunics, sprigged with gold, crowned with sparkling diadems, and each carrying a species of guitar or lute. These were followed by a double rank of dancers, male and female, in robes of blue and white, and rose-coloured jackets with white pantaloons, all of them belonging to the first families of the city. While the bearers of the lutes took a station at the foot of the estrade, the dancers ascended and formed themselves into a semicircle. Before commencing their dance two of the young ladies, each with her cavalier, came from the group, entered the house in which were the Princes, and asked their permission to dance before them. This permission was of course granted, and the Princes came out on the balcony. While the dancers were promenading preparatory to the dances, the band of young musicians played and sung a cantata written and composed in the picturesque words and airs of the Romancero, in honour of their Royal Highnesses. As this closed, the dance gradually became animated. At six o'clock a splendid dinner was served, and there assembled around the Royal Dukes a number of distinguished personages. After dinner the Hôtel de Ville was brilliantly illuminated, and a grand display of fireworks was exhibited on the banks of the Oria, the river that runs through Tolosa. When these were over dancing commenced with great vigour by the people, who executed the fandango and sorsico with all the national ardour."

THE UNITED STATES

By the New York packet-ship Yorkshire, Captain Bailey, we have advices from that city to the 2nd, one day later than was brought by the steam-ship Britannia.

The news being only one day later, possesses but little interest beyond that communicated by the last arrival.

The internal affairs of the United States are entirely unimportant. Mr. Bancroft was expected to leave New York for London by the Great Western, on the 8th of October. Mr. M'Lane had had an audience with the President at Washington. We learn from St. Louis that two Mormon spies had been shot by the anti-Mormon mob at Nauvoo. This, it is feared, is the commencement of a sanguinary conflict between these factions

The tone of the American journals in regard to Mexico seems to indicate a less confident belief that pacific effects will follow the return of Santa Anna to the Government.

The details received from the United States force in Cahahuila possess considerable interest. The utmost activity prevailed at Camargo in the despatch of the troops enroute to the interior. All the regulars, with the exception of one regiment, had left the depôt: and General Taylor, according to the latest despatches received at Washington, expected to make a further advance with the volunteers by the 1st of September at the latest. General Wallis's brigade had left on the 2nd of August, with orders to advance towards Monterey as far as the village of China, and to remain there until further advised. The reports made to General Taylor as regards the state of the roads were very unfavourable.

THE CAPE OF GOOD HOPE

POSITION OF AFFAIRS WITH THE KAFFIRS.

The Maria Somes, transport, has arrived at Portsmouth, from the Cape of Good Hope, after a short passage, having sailed on the 4th of August, bringing accounts of a later date than those previously received, but none of any importance respecting the Kaffir war. Sir Peregrine Maitland, the Governor, who was on the frontier, with plenty of troops, had chased the Kaffirs across the plains, and expected to come up with them in two days. The Resistance, troop-ship, had arrived at the Cape, with the 45th Regiment on board, from Monte Video. The French had assembled no less than 1500 troops on an island about 180 miles north of Madagascar, preparatory, it was surmised, to some contemplated expedition against Madagascar It will be remembered that the Maria Somes is the transport which encountered so severe a hurricane in her passage from Colombo to the Cape, with part of the 90th Regiment, and that she owed her safety on that occasion to the laudable exertions of the troops. So much was this vessel in jeopardy, and so necessary the great efforts made to prevent her foundering, that her pumps were completely worn out by them, and they were replaced by new ones on her arrival at the Mauritius.

The Cape of Good Hope Gazette of July 31, says:—"Thousands of oxen, and cows, and horses, it is said, have passed the Kei, to which point it will give our troops some trouble to follow them. The balance of account on the week, as far as we have information, is all in favour of the Kaffirs. While our troops have been toiling through the Kaffir country, encumbered with 250 waggons, without meeting with an enemy, or a single head of cattle, the Kaffirs have made a dash into the colony, and, impoverished as it was, have swept off at least 600 head, besides a good many horses, the larger proportion within a circuit of ten miles of Graham's Town."

The following is from the Graham's Town Journal of the 25th of July "This frontier is still infested by the enemy; but, from all we can gather, in very small, scattered parties, and which lurk in the rugged, bushy kloofs, watching for opportunity to spring upon the unguarded herd, and to carry off any stock which can be seized without any great personal risk. From the information received from the N. and N E. boundary, affairs in that direction are not more cheering than in our immediate front. The Tambookies, under Mapassa, are, it is said, fully prepared to take the field, and will muster, it is supposed, from 1500 to 2000 men. Fortunately, we have an officer in command in that quarter, in whose ability and energy the colony has confidence. From across the northern boundary, the accounts are also calculated to occasion uneasiness, though, at present, they rest upon rumours, and not upon authenticated facts. These rumours state that the emigrant Boers and Griquas were engaged in active hostilities; that the British resident agent, Captain Warden, had interposed between the belligerents, and had lost a few men in an encounter with the emigrants. These, we repeat, are the current rumours, but which are somewhat at variance with the previous accounts received by us from that direction."

THE OVERLAND MAIL.

The regular Overland Mail, viâ Marseilles, arrived on Wednesday. Some of the news contained in the papers was anticipated by the Waghorn express, viâ Trieste, the arrival of which we noticed in part of our impression last week; but the present express enables us to publish the following intelligence from Calcutta up to the 15th August.

The most important news was from Lahore. Lall Sing's expedition, under Misr Bhagwan Singh, against the Dewan of Mooltan, had been unsuccessful. The Delhi Gazette, of the 29th July, has the following particulars:—

"News reached us last night, giving an account of the complete failure of the force sent from Lahore, under Misr Bhagwan Singh, who had intended making a night attack, and carrying all before him. Dewan Moolraj, however, was 'wide awake'; and, having received secret information of the plan concocted, he completely outmanœuvred his opponents, by turning their flanks; and, having got into their rear, he 'opened the ball' at midnight with great activity; 300 men of the Durbar are said to be killed or taken prisoners, and four of their guns have also been captured. Fresh troops were urgently applied for, and left Lahore to-day for the scene of action."

War, being thus begun, will no doubt spread; and Government has taken measures for the emergency

Lord Hardinge remains at Simla, as also does Lord Gough. On the opening of the cold season, the former enters on a tour of inspection.

The accounts from Scinde continue far from favourable. Scarcity of food has succeeded the fearful inroads of pestilence. This want has been strongly felt at Kurrachee. Her Majesty's 17th have suffered much from fever at Sukkur; they have now come down to Kurrachee, bringing all their sick, amounting to no fewer than 90, along with them. "The European corps and artillery at Sukkur," says the Bombay Times, "had, in the course of four months, lost two commissioned officers, and between 60 and 70 non-commissioned officers and men, out of a strength of 900." Sir C. Napier goes home for certain.

Parish of St. Bride.—The Rev. Mr. Marshall has just been appointed vicar of the important parish of St. Bride, rendered vacant by the recent translation of the Rev. Thomas Dale to the lucrative living of St. Pancras. The vicarship of St. Bride's was offered, in the first instance, to each of the several canons of Westminster Abbey, according to seniority, but declined. The parish of St. Bride contains a population of 8000 souls, and the average attendance in the church is 1500

Mr. Alderman Wood and Mr. Anderton.—A long inquiry took place at the Mansion House on Wednesday, in reference to the charge made by Mr. Anderton against Mr. Alderman Wood, of the non-payment of counsel's fees by Mr. Alderman Wood, as the solicitor to the Irish Society. It was elicited that a payment was made on Monday last of £564 18s., being the full amount due to the respective counsel on account of the Irish Society. In consequence of the absence of the clerks to the counsel, however, the fact of the payment was not known at the time when a contradiction was made by Mr. Anderton to the statement that the fees had been paid. Thus the statement of both parties was correct, although there was an apparent contradiction, and the Lord Mayor said he acquitted them both.

COUNTRY NEWS.

SHOCKING MURDERS AND SUICIDE AT ELHAM, KENT.

In our latest impression last week, we gave an account of the discovery of the murder of a woman and her daughter, with the suicide of the perpetrator of the deed, on the previous Wednesday. It appears that the family of Sharruck Richard Bragg, a bricklayer, lived in a house at Elham, near Canterbury, with other persons, by whom, for some time past, he had been noticed as being in a low desponding way, which had been more striking since he had left the church and gone to chapel. On some occasions he had betrayed to them remorse of conscience, and confessed that he had not acted rightly, but still, by others, it was thought he was jealous of his wife. At a very early hour, on the above day, while his wife was in bed with an infant by her side, he struck her violent blows on the temple with a hammer, which rendered her insensible, and then committed the like diabolical violence on a child of theirs, five years old, which lay in a side bed, but left the infant unhurt; and afterwards committed suicide by cutting his throat.

On receiving information of the horrible catastrophe, Mr. T. T. Delasaux, the Coroner, immediately summoned a jury, and in the afternoon opened an inquiry at the King's Arms.

The following evidence was adduced :—

William Jaggers, of Elham, schoolmaster, stated that he had lodged at the house of the deceased for about ten months. The family consisted of Sharruck Richard Bragg, his wife Mary, and two children, the eldest named Ellen, aged about five years, and an infant, aged about four months. The conduct of the deceased man towards his wife and children had been most kind; he (witness) had never heard an angry word uttered by him towards either of them. About four weeks ago, the deceased went into his room, and said he expected he should be transported, on which witness said, "I suppose you have committed some great crime that deserves transportation." He replied that he did not know that he had. Witness did not then consider that he was acting like a man in his proper senses. He said he had been a bad man to his wife, and upon witness asking what he had done, he replied, he had not acted rightly towards her, but did not say in what manner. The deceased had frequently appeared low and melancholy during the last month. Witness spoke to him about ten o'clock on the previous Monday night, when they had been to chapel together. He did not then appear low. Witness went to bed about half-past ten on Tuesday night. The deceased, his wife, and children, had retired before that time, but at what hour he did not know. When he went to bed, he did not hear any noise in the bed-room of the deceased. About half past five on the Wednesday morning, he heard something heavy fall on the floor in the chamber of the deceased; shortly before which he believed he heard the wife of the deceased groaning. About five o'clock he heard a person call the deceased by the name of Sharruck, and he believed he heard him answer. The wife continued to groan, and for some time the groans continued louder, appearing to be at a greater distance. About six o'clock witness got up and dressed himself, and on looking out of the window saw a little girl knocking at the front door. He went down stairs and opened the door, but the child was gone. He then discovered some blood lying on the floor of the foreroom, which is under the chamber of the deceased, and on looking up he perceived more coming through the ceiling. He thereupon called Mrs. Quested, desiring her to go and open the bed-room door of the deceased. He occupied a sitting-room and bed-room in the same house. He had seen in the wash-house of the deceased a hammer similar to that produced; it had been used for breaking of coals. The wife of the deceased was a quiet well-conducted woman.

James Bragg, bricklayer, brother to deceased, saw him the previous night, about seven o'clock, and had some conversation with him. Accompanied him to North Elham, for some cabbage plants, which he (deceased) had bought. Deceased had laboured under a depression of spirits for the last month. Was at work with him about three weeks ago; he was then strange in his conversation, and different from what he had been in the habit of being. Endeavoured to get him to divulge the cause, but he did not do so clearly. Witness was of opinion that he was jealous of his wife, but he did not say from what cause. He said, "If I was to die, there is another man ready to marry my wife."

Sarah, the wife of James Bragg, deposed to deceased's spirits having been much depressed for the last six weeks, but from what cause she did not know. The depression of spirits commenced at the period he left off going to church, and attending chapel. She was one of the first to enter the bed-room that morning after the deed, and found a razor covered with blood lying in a chair. She took the infant from the bed, the mother being perfectly insensible, and groaning. The other child was also groaning, and was covered with blood. She was lying in a side-bed. The deceased man was lying on the floor quite dead.

James Beattie, surgeon, of Elham, deposed that the injuries to the woman appeared to have been inflicted by a blunt instrument, like the hammer, and by a right-handed person. He believed the first blow must have rendered her insensible. He found the left temple and left mallor bone of Ellen Bragg, the child, fractured, with a large lacerated wound over the mallor bone, which injuries were sufficient to have caused death, and were, doubtless, inflicted by a heavy instrument like the hammer. The child, who was insensible, died about eight o'clock.

As the proceedings of the double inquiry were so intimately connected, we have blended the evidence; but separate verdicts were returned. In the first place, that the deceased, Sharruck Richard Bragg, committed suicide while labouring under insanity; and that he killed and slayed Mary Bragg, his wife, and Ellen, his daughter, while in that state of unsound mind, and that, therefore, it was not felonious.

Incendiary Fire near Hull.—A very extensive conflagration of farm property has taken place in the East Riding of Yorkshire. The sufferer is Mr. James Watson, of Waudby, about ten miles to the west of Hull, and four east from South Cave, a gentleman who has long been known throughout England and on the Continent, for the superior character of his horned cattle and sheep. There appears to be not the slightest doubt that this great destruction of property is the work of an incendiary. Fourteen stacks, containing the whole of the wheat and hay, and nearly the entire crops of an extensive farm, were destroyed. The loss in money value is about £2000.

Fatal and Melancholy Mine Explosion in Staffordshire. Another fatal mine explosion took place on Saturday, at one of the coal-pits of the late Mr. Horton, at Lyttelton Hall, near West Bromwich. It appears that Mr. John Baylis, the "doggy," or manager of the pit, had gone down, as usual, with the miners, to the number of twenty-four men and boys. As was customary, he tried the workings with the safety-lamp; and, in the first side of the work, he discovered an accumulation of sulphur. He set the colliers to disperse it, and shortly after went to the other side of the work to ascertain whether any sulphur had been forced into it out of the first. In about ten minutes after, the explosion took place. It is impossible to tell how it occurred; but the probability is that it was through the carelessness or negligence of some of the colliers, who are always anxious to get to work as soon as the sulphur is dispersed, taking a lighted candle into the workings—the reckless individual probably paying the penalty of his imprudence with his life. Its effects were very afflicting. Seven of the unfortunate men who were engaged dispersing the sulphur were dreadfully burned, their bodies in some parts being literally roasted by the flame and blackened by the clouds of vapour. Suspended in the skip, about eighty yards down the shaft, which is sunk to the depth of three hundred yards, were John Robinson, the engineer, and William Hadley, a workman engaged in repairing the shaft, when the explosion took place. The hot air, which rushed up the shaft with irresistible violence, carried the skip and the men for some distance upward, when it became unhooked from the rope to which it was attached, and these two unfortunate persons were precipitated to the bottom of the pit, a depth of nearly 800 feet. They were awfully mutilated. A lad named Joshua Cash, about 17 years of age, was dreadfully scorched. He had been at the bottom of the pit at the time, and was enveloped in flames. Mr. Baylis fortunately observed his condition, ran to his assistance, and succeeded in extinguishing the burning clothing which hung about his body. He was carried home, but his injuries were of such a nature as to preclude all hope of recovery, and, after enduring intense agony, death terminated his sufferings on Tuesday forenoon. With the exception of one, they are all married men, having families. On Monday, an Inquest was held at West Bromwich. All the evidence went to show that there was no criminal negligence on the part of the managers of the pit, and that the dreadful occurrence which had deprived these men of life had been purely the result of accident. A verdict to that effect was accordingly returned.

Accident on the Leeds and Bradford Railway. Another accident has taken place on the Leeds and Bradford Railway, which, in this instance, has proved fatal. It appears that on Saturday last, when one of the morning trains from Leeds for Bradford had arrived near Kirkstall Forge, the engine-driver perceived a man walking on the line at the distance of eighty yards in advance. He immediately sounded the whistle twice, but as the man took no heed he let off the steam and reversed the motion of the engine, yet all was to no purpose: before the train could be stopped, the man was knocked down, and the whole of the carriages passed over him. His death was instantaneous. He proved to be a labourer employed on the line, named John Johnson, about 33 years of age. The deceased, from the nature of his employment, must have been aware of the usual times of trains arriving in that vicinity. An inquest was held on the body the same day before Mr. Blackburn, the Coroner for the borough of Leeds, when a verdict of "Accidental Death" was returned.

Will of the Late Lord Metcalfe.—Probate of the will of this deceased Nobleman has been granted to Lieutenant J. Metcalfe. The personal estate in England, and within the province of Canterbury, was estimated for duty at £100,000. His estate of Fernhill, leased to Sir F. Booth, Bart., and the land near Bagshot, now or lately occupied by his Royal Highness Prince Albert, are—under the conditions of the will of his father, Sir Thomas Metcalfe, Bart., from whom the Baronetcy is derived—to accompany that title, and descend to his Lordship's brother, the Political Agent and late Judge of the Delhi Territory in India, now Sir Thomas Theophilus Metcalfe, Bart. The furniture in the mansion at Fernhill he bequeaths to his said brother; likewise the house and furniture in Portland-place, together with such books, engravings, plate, &c., as have come to him by descent or bequests from his father, mother, or late elder brother, Sir Theophilus John Metcalfe, Bart. To Lieutenant James Metcalfe he leaves a specific bequest of fifty thousand pounds sterling; and such other books, engravings, plate, &c. as may have been purchased by him, or otherwise, as also his court dresses, diamond star, collar, and one of the jewels of the Civil Order of the Bath, and all [illegible] jewels not specifically disposed of. The silver [illegible] ribbon, and one jewel of the Civil Order of the Bath, are to be delivered to the Crown, together with the star he received from the [illegible] of his nomination to the Order. Bequeaths to James Macaulay Higgins, Esq., late Civil Secretary and his Lordship's private secretary in Canada, £20,000 sterling. To his Lordship's sister, the Viscountess Ashbrook £[illegible],000; to his sister, Mrs. Georgiana Smyth, an annuity of £500; to his trustees and executors, each £1000. All legacies and annuities to [illegible] in full, free of duty. The residue, real and personal, he leaves to Lieutenant James Metcalfe, who is to take charge of all the papers that were in his Lordship's possession, or with his agents, Messrs. Cockerell and Co., Austin-friars, chiefly private correspondence.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED.

SIR CHARLES WOLSELEY, BART.

Although the possessor of a fair inheritance, and the representative of one of the oldest houses in Staffordshire—a district proverbial for the antiquity of its families—the worthy Baronet, whose death we record, early distinguished himself as the leader of the Radical party of his native county, and, at one period, became so popular an idol of the men of Birmingham, that, when "the sturdy smiths of England's forge," then unrepresented in Parliament, assembled to choose a Legislatorial Attorney to guard their political rights, Sir Charles Wolseley was elected by 50,000 voices. This attempt led to the conviction of Mr. Wooler and others; and, within a very brief period after, we find Sir Charles making a seditious speech at Stockport, for which he was brought to trial, and suffered twelve months' imprisonment. The punishment had the usual result. The demagogue gained increased favour with the multitude, and prepared for greater efforts. In 1820, he was again found guilty of sedition, in conjunction with a schoolmaster named Harrison, and was again doomed to a lengthened incarceration. Still his spirit remained unbroken. So long as Radical meetings were held, so long did the popular Baronet fight the battle of Reform. The last occasion which presented itself for the display of his patriotism was the liberation of Mr. Hunt from Ilchester, when he became one of the required sureties for that gentleman. In the final struggle of 1830, the frost of years had chilled the energies of the Staffordshire Reformer, and other and younger men consummated the great work.

Sir Charles Wolseley, who was born in 1769, succeeded to the Baronetcy at the decease of his father, Sir William Wolseley, in 1817. He married, first, in 1792, Mary, daughter of the Hon. Thomas Clifford, of Tixall, county Stafford, by which lady he had one son, Spencer William, who died unmarried, in 1832: and secondly, in 1812, Anne, youngest daughter of Anthony Wright, Esq., of Essex, by whom he has left surviving issue, two daughters—the elder, Marianne, wife of Francis, Marquis de Lousada de San Miniato; and one son, now Sir Charles Wolseley, Bart., who wedded, some few years since, Mary Anne, eldest daughter of the late Nicholas Selby, Esq., of Acton House, Middlesex, and has issue.

THE EARL OF WALDEGRAVE.

George Edward, seventh Earl of Waldegrave, died on the 28th ult., aged 30. His Lordship was son and heir of John James, sixth Earl, by Anne King, his wife, and grandson of George, fourth Earl, whose youngest son, the Hon. Capt. William Waldegrave, R.N., now succeeds to the family honours. The Peerage was originally conferred on Sir Henry Waldegrave, Bart., the representative of a very ancient Northamptonshire House. He held the appointment of Comptroller of the King's Household, and enjoyed in an especial degree the Royal favour, in consequence of his marriage with Henrietta, daughter of James II., by Arabella Churchill, sister of the great Duke of Marlborough. His Lordship's grandson, James, second Earl of Waldegrave, K.G., acted a conspicuous part in the political drama of his time, and distinguished too by a literary taste, left behind him "Historical Memoirs," from 1754 to 1757. His Countess, the illegitimate daughter of Sir Edward Walpole, became, after Lord Waldegrave's death, wife of his Royal Highness William, Duke of Gloucester, and mother of the late Royal Duke of that title. By the Earl, she had three daughters, of whom the eldest, marrying her cousin, George, fourth Earl of Waldegrave, was grandmother of the nobleman to whom this brief notice refers.

The deceased Peer married, 28th September, 1840, Frances-Elizabeth-Anne, daughter of Mr. Braham, the popular vocalist, and widow of John James Henry Waldegrave, Esq.; but, as he leaves no issue, the honours devolve on his uncle, William, present Peer, who wedded, in 1812, Elizabeth, eldest daughter of the late Samuel Whitbread, Esq., and is a widower, with three sons and four daughters. Of the latter, the second, Lady Maria, married, in 1844, William Brodie Esq., second son of the very eminent surgeon, Sir Benjamin Brodie, Bart.

LORD JOHN SOMERSET.

Lord John Thomas Henry Somerset, Colonel in the Army, and Inspecting Field Officer of the Bristol District, died at Weston Super Mare, on the 3d inst. His Lordship was born 30th August, 1787, the seventh son of Henry, fifth Duke of Beaufort, and Elizabeth, his wife, daughter of Admiral the Hon. Edward Boscawen. He was, consequently, next elder brother of Lord Fitzroy Somerset, and uncle of the present Duke of Beaufort. At an early age, his Lordship entered the army, and served on the Staff at the Battle of Waterloo, obtaining honourable mention in the Despatches. He married, in 1814, Lady Catherine Annesley, daughter of Arthur, first Earl of Mountnorris, and has left one son and two surviving daughters.

THE BARON DE BODE.

This unfortunate nobleman (Clement Joseph Philip Pen de Bode, Baron of the Holy Roman Empire), whose life of sorrow terminated on the 2nd inst., had borne for a long course of years, with unshaken fortitude, a series of disappointments and disasters that have imparted to his career a character of romance, and subjected him to miseries under which most men would have sunk into despair. He was born at Loxley Park, in the county of Stafford, the ancient seat of his maternal ancestors, on the 23rd April, 1777, and, consequently, had completed, at the period of his decease, his 69th year. His father, Charles Augustus Louis Frederick, Baron de Bode, was a German Noble; and his mother, Mary, who died at Moscow, in 1814, the fourth daughter of Thomas Kynnersley, Esq., of Loxley, the representative of one of the oldest families in England, traceable to a period antecedent to the Norman Conquest. From his father, he should have inherited an estate of great extent and value in Alsace, but the confiscations of the French Directory seized upon it, and obliged the Baron to seek his fortune in the service of Russia, where he resided for a considerable time. From the Autocrat he experienced kindness and support—obtained a commission in the artillery, and was given the command of a regiment of cavalry (raised at his own expense), with which he accompanied the van of the Russian army, until the Allied Sovereigns fixed their quarters within the walls of Paris. During the active proceedings of this memorable campaign, the Baron was more than once severely wounded; and, at Leipsic, narrowly escaped with his life.

The intellectual attainments of the Baron de Bode were considerable: he was an observant traveller, a profound naturalist, and a distinguished member of the Ethnological Society.

Peace being established, the French Government paid over to Great Britain several millions sterling, as compensation to British subjects, whose property had been confiscated. Among these, the Baron de Bode demanded £500,000; but the Commissioners rejected the claim, on the ground that he had not fully made out his right as a British subject. With the subsequent history of the case, the public has been familiar for the last 25 years; and of the hardship and unfairness which the claimant experienced, there exists but one opinion. His death was extremely sudden; and, by the verdict of the Coroner's Inquest, it was declared to have been "hastened by excitement of mind, consequent upon the state of his affairs."

Death of Captain Charles Dilkes, C.B.—The death of another of the senior officers on the list, Captain Charles Dilkes, C.B., which took place on the 5th instant, at his residence, Prospect House, Gloucester, aged 6[illegible], has placed a good service pension at the disposal of the [illegible].

Death of Sir Henry Rycroft, Bart.—Sir Henry [illegible] knight harbinger to the Queen, expired on the 3rd inst. at Brighton, in his 81st year. In 1816 the deceased was appointed knight harbinger to the Queen, receiving at that time the honour of knighthood. The residence of the deceased was at Bolney, Sussex, in which county the family have resided many years.

IRELAND.

FATAL CONFLICT AT CASTLECONNELL.

Letters received in Dublin on Wednesday contained confused reports of a conflict between police, military, and country people, which, it was said, took place on Sunday last at Castleconnell, in the county of Limerick. The Ennis paper thus refers to the subject :—"We have just heard, at our going to press, that in some rioting in Castleconnell on Sunday, two soldiers and one of the police lost their lives. We have not heard the particulars, and rumour gives two versions to the tale—one, that the police interfered between the people and soldiers, and another, that the police and soldiers attacked each other."

A private letter is scarcely more intelligible than the foregoing. The writer says, that the country people made an attack (the inciting cause does not appear) upon the constabulary barrack of the town; that the police fired upon the assailants; that, during the melée, a detachment of the 88th Connaught Rangers, en route from Castlebar to the south, arrived in the town, and were called upon to assist the civil authorities; that, in the confusion, a shot fired from the barrack mortally wounded one of the soldiery; and, finally, that a ball (a chance one, it is to be supposed) from one of the muskets of the military, inflicted a fatal wound upon a policeman, who died instantly from its effects.

In the afternoon it transpired that an official account of the affair had reached the authorities in Dublin, and it is said that three lives were lost, namely, one soldier of the 88th Regiment, one of the constabulary, and one of the country people.

THE REPEAL ASSOCIATION.

At the meeting of the Repeal Association, on Monday, a letter was read from Mr. O'Connell upon the present position of Ireland. The letter commenced by renewing Mr. O'Connell's exhortations to form in Dublin a central body, board, or association, from amongst the landed proprietors of Ireland, to take into consideration the present state and future prospects of the people, in order to suggest and carry out means of meeting the horrible emergency in which the country is involved.

After praising a letter, addressed by Mr. O'Neill Daunt, addressed to the landlords of Ireland, and disclaiming the use of physical force, Mr. O'Connell concludes as follows

"But, alas! the evils of famine and pestilence are thickening upon us. I, however, know the intentions of the Government are excellent, and their exertions are in general judicious. It is most desirable that the Lord-Lieutenant should have increased powers. There never was a Chief Governor in this country better able to work out these powers judiciously and usefully. In the meantime, we should, one and all, in our humble sphere, labour to procure bread for the people, and to preserve the peace of the country. But, as food becomes dear, wages must be higher. Everything must be done to preserve the health and strength of the people; and this, in truth, is so all-absorbing a subject, as to banish all politics unconnected with the distress. But the Repeal is not to be lost sight of. The effects of the Union have caused the permanency of distress among the Irish people, which leaves them always (in language now familiar to Parliament) 'on the verge of starvation,' and renders it so difficult to provide for a sudden and casual emergency, such as the present awful times exhibit. It is, therefore, our duty never to forget the sole remedy for all our evils—the Repeal of the Union."

Mr. John O'Connell having read this letter, eulogised the letter referred to therein by Mr. O'Neill Daunt, and said that means should be taken to give it the most extensive circulation. He then adverted to the magnitude of the present affliction, and the absolute necessity of means being taken to save the people from famine.

Alderman O'Brien, M.P., and others urged upon the Government the necessity of using the most prompt measures to supply the people with the necessaries of life.

The week's rent amounted to £116.

THE PROSPECTS OF FAMINE

Sir Randolfe Routh has publicly stated that the commissariat cannot have a supply of Indian corn, or oatmeal, for distribution before December, and that, as there is an ample stock of provisions in the country for the next five months, they must be looked to for the support of the people. Of course Sir Randolfe Routh only refers to the foreign provisions ordered by the Government; but it is a matter of public notoriety that the shipments of corn ordered by the Irish merchants are daily expected, and little doubt exists that before the close of the month a considerable quantity of foreign grain will be thrown upon our markets. Still the jobbers are at work, buying and hoarding up corn in the hope of still higher prices. Sellers, however, are coming forward and accepting the present terms. On Monday wheat opened at an advance of 1s. a barrel; but all demanded at the increased price being forthcoming, and further sales pressed, the price receded, and the quotation may be taken at only 6d. a barrel higher.

Lord Lucan, in answer to an application made to him, says:—"I am of opinion that Parliament must be called together at the earliest possible day, which I have already expressed to her Majesty's Government, or I am convinced the country is lost. I will join in any address to the Queen to that effect, but I cannot sign the requisition forwarded to me, as I totally disapprove of stating that Parliament should be convened solely to consider any Act of Parliament, however mischievous, as the one mentioned most undoubtedly is. Parliament should, and must be, at once assembled to consider the frightful state of Ireland, to provide for the present emergencies, and to legislate against a continuance or a recurrence of so severe a calamity as that with which we are afflicted."

The Government and the Crisis. The Earl of Besborough has taken a most [illegible] step to meet the exigencies of the crisis. Trusting to a bill of indemnity, his Excellency has authorised the construction of reproductive works, including drainage, by presentment under the Labour-rate Act.

Fatal Accident to Major Bevan.—On Wednesday evening (last week), as Major Bevan, of Limerick, was returning from a shooting excursion on a car with three other gentlemen, near his father-in-law's, Mr. Brew, of Wildbrooke, county Clare, he had his loaded fowling-piece with the butt-end resting on the foot-board, and the barrels between his legs, while he was smoking a cigar. By some accident or other, the fowling-piece was slipping off the car, and he stooped forward to snatch it, when the hammer, which was unfortunately down, coming in contact with the foot-board, one of the barrels exploded, and the contents passed upwards into the cavity of the chest, carrying away a portion of the heart, and, proceeding between the sternum and lungs, came out under the windpipe, and entering again under the chin, went through the head. He had only time to say, "Stop! O God! I am shot," and falling forward, he vomited a quantity of blood, and immediately expired, without a groan. Major Bevan was the author of a very interesting work, "Field Sports in India."

Provision Riots.—The Galway and Limerick papers of Saturday have accounts of food riots, or rather of the robbery of bread, corn, &c., by mobs of poor men, who, in most instances, were led on by others not at all distressed, but who are represented as acting thus for the mere love of excitement. Several of these mischievous fellows have been arrested.

Robbery of the Mails.—The mail car from Roscrea to Clonmel was robbed on Sunday morning by two armed men, of the mail bags, and some money which the driver had in charge for his master, Mr. Bianconi.

Another Rise in the Price of Bread.—On Monday, the bakers of the metropolis advanced the price of the 4lb. loaf to 10d. On Wednesday throughout the metropolis the bakers made a still further advance in the price of bread. Consequently the commonest bread cannot be obtained under 8½d., or the best under 10d. per quartern. This is the highest price it has been during the past three years.

Opening of the Hull and Bridlington Railway.—Another important link in the chain of British railway communication was added on Monday, in the opening of this branch, which came off with great éclat. Though nominally only a branch, it is more extensive than the parent line, the Hull and Selby, from which it proceeds, being 32 miles in length.

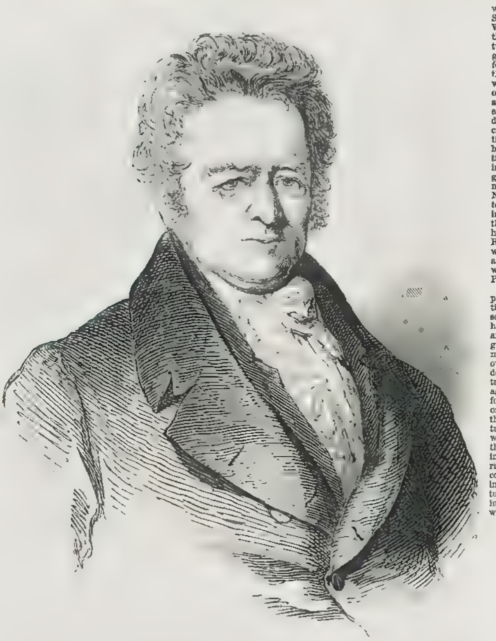
Newmarket and Chesterfield Railway.—The formal commencement of the works upon the Newmarket and Chesterford Railway took place on Wednesday (last week), in the parish of Dullingham, upon the property of the heir of the late General Jeaffreson, the eldest son of William Pigott, Esq. The spot selected was very near the public road, about a mile from Mr. Pigott's residence, Dullingham Hall. A charming day attracted a large concourse of pectators.

THE LATE THOMAS CLARKSON.

BY A RELATIVE.

The late "Patriarch of the Anti-Slavery Cause" was son of the Rev. W. Clarkson, Master of the Grammar-school at Wisbeach. He was born on the 26th of March, 1760. Removed from Wisbeach to St. Paul's School at twelve years of age, he afterwards became a Graduate at St. John's, Cambridge. He took Deacon's orders, being originally intended for the Church; but subsequently abandoned the intention. It was when twenty-five years of age—namely, in 1785—that he laid the foundation of his future distinction in that University. In that year the Vice-Chancellor, Dr. Peckard, announced as a subject for a Prize Latin Essay, the following question, "Is it right to make slaves of others against their will?" Desirous of sustaining the reputation he had acquired by his acquisition of the first prize for the Latin Dissertation of the year preceding, young Clarkson devoted himself so ardently to the composition, that it is known that for several nights he did not allow himself the customary relaxation of sleep, burning a light the whole night. On that occasion he collected and read every work on the subject, and became, in the end, imbued with the conviction that it was a public duty to devote every energy and faculty of his mind to the extinction of Slavery. The persuasion haunted him, and gave his agitated spirits no more rest by day than his literary labour permitted to his corporeal faculties by night. The reading of his Essay, which took place in the Senate House, Cambridge, in June, 1786, was attended with the most brilliant success; and, almost immediately after the [illegible] awarded to him, he determined on a journey to London, for the [illegible] the Essay in a translated form. The seal of an "apostolical call" [illegible], the whole fervour of Clarkson's life bore an apostolic character, would seem to have been impressed on that celebrated journey; and he himself, in his "History of Slavery," ascribes to it the origination of that sacred impulse which afterwards became the pole-star of his life, and which from that moment absorbed every faculty of his mind and heart. He says, in that work, that, as he was riding to London, "he dismounted from his horse when he came in sight of Wade's Mill, Hertfordshire. He seated himself disconsolately on the ground, and, while immersed in painful reflections on the sufferings of the [illegible], the thought flashed upon his mind that it was time for some one to undertake the task of putting a termination to the calamities described in his Essay."

The printing of this Essay, which was published by George Phillips, of George-yard, Lombard-street, in 1786, introduced young Clarkson to several members of the Society of Friends, and other philanthropists, principally connected with the



THE LATE THOMAS CLARKSON, ESQ.

"American Society of Friends," who had long sighed over the wrongs of the Negro race, and yearned for their redress; and who subsequently formed the nucleus of the Anti-Slavery Society. But the publication of the Essay led to a more valuable and efficacious connection, namely, an alliance with the celebrated William Wilberforce, whose attention was first called to the subject by Thomas Clarkson's communications. Attempts have been made to invest the Statesman with the merit of priority of suggestion; but there cannot be a doubt that the deceased philanthropist of Wisbeach had been at least two years engaged in incipient measures for the suppression of the Slave Trade before the attention of the former was called to its enormities; although the question had been agitated by Granville Sharpe and others, previous to Clarkson's Essay. In consequence of the co-operation of these two eminent men, Mr. Wilberforce brought the subject into Parliament for the first time in 1787, while the distinguished subject of this memoir took upon himself to agitate the question out of doors; and, with this view, gave lectures, and got up meetings, at Manchester, Liverpool, Chester, Gloucester, Worcester, Bridgewater, and Bristol; directing the whole force of his great talents and single-minded zeal to win converts, vanquish prejudice, or rouse public indignation. Unsparing in self-devotion, and untiring in vigilance—scorning fatigue, and defying enmity—it was during this mission that his life was endangered at Liverpool, by a suborned and numerous band of ruffians, who intended to push him off the pier-head into the sea, and nearly effected their murderous purpose. It was on the same occasion that he says, "he corresponded with no less than 400 individuals, and travelled 36,000 miles." Petitions were in consequence of these active means poured into Parliament; while successive motions against the Slave Trade, were made by Mr. Wilberforce.

The two leading men of the day, Pitt and Fox, who, in the first instance, held themselves aloof from a formidable contest with the Slave Trade's profitable and powerful interests, were gradually won over; and, in 1788, Pitt became instrumental in bringing forward a general parliamentary discussion. The 7th of May, 1788, was the date of that splendid, celebrated, and important discussion, in which Fox and Burke, Pitt, Grey, and Whitbread, took a conspicuous part in depicting and denouncing the atrocities of the Slave Trade; and the generous and illustrious band of philanthropists in and out of doors was shortly afterwards joined by Romilly, Mackintosh, and Buxton, Macaulay, Stephen, and Allen. An investigation of the entire subject was instituted by the Privy Council; counsel were heard, witnesses examined, and a report was drawn up and published. The agitation and interest of the question caused the formation of a Committee of twelve gentlemen, who devoted themselves to the purpose of collecting and publishing evidence. With a view to this object, the labours of Thomas Clarkson were indefatigable; and it was at this period (1789), during the heat of the French Revolution, that he took the bold step—which few but men imbued with that moral grandeur of soul which constitutes genius would have ventured on—of going to Paris, to obtain the co-operation of the French Government. The Revolution was then in its most vehement state of agitation, and he was entreated by his friends to disguise his name. But this he refused to do, confiding in the rectitude of his cause, and resolving to go straightforward to his purpose. On this occasion he conferred with the unfortunate Louis XVI.; was introduced to Petion, Brissot, the eloquent Vergniaud (the Charles Fox of France), and the "Societé des Amis des Noirs;" was warmly befriended by Neckar and Lafayette; was presented with the privilege of citizenship, and was publicly honoured with a seat in the French Convention during the discussion that Mirabeau, at his instance, moved, and which resulted in the abolition of all Slave Trade bounties, as a step to ulterior measures. His exertions, on his return to England, were resumed in aid of the legislative measures of Wilberforce, whose Bill for the Total Abolition of the Slave Trade passed both Houses in 1801. But a long interval, during which Slave dealing cupidity maintained an incessant struggle against the measure, ensued. At length, on the 25th of March, 1807, (being the closing act of the Fox and Grenville Administration), the Abolition of the Slave Trade became the law of the land. But though that nefarious traffic was abolished by England, much remained to be done.

Negro Slavery existed in the most malignant form in the West Indian Colonies and in America; and the contest was resumed by Clarkson and his philanthropic colleagues in order to suppress that criminal branch of the parent evil. In his work on the Slave Trade and Slavery, the deceased philanthropist has recorded the various fortunes of the battle of humanity that ensued; and which, in 1823, originated the Anti-Slavery Society. More fortunate than Wilberforce, he not only lived to witness the triumph of those exertions, when twenty millions were magnanimously given by England as a compensation for the total abolition of slavery in the British Colonies, but survived to witness the successful accomplishment of that great measure in the creation of a free and populous Negro nation, every individual of which, progressing daily in the comforts and refinements of civilisation, will forever regard him as their original liberator, founder, and benefactor. Of the redeemed Negro nation, he is the "Pater Patriæ." He was in his seventy-fourth year when that great, magnanimous, and magnificent measure of Emancipation was carried. Nor was he idle during the anxious interval above described. Still untiring in his exertions, he, in 1818, attended the Congress of Aix-la-Chapelle, where he had a conference with the Emperor of Russia, who, not only promised that he would abolish the Slave Trade as far as his dominions were concerned, but would use his influence with his brother Potentates for the same purpose.

Thomas Clarkson's last appearance in public was at the "Anti-Slavery Convention" of 1840, of which the Duke of Sussex was the President; but his declining health preventing his continual attendance, he addressed a private letter to a great and good Abolitionist, (now no more), on the State of Slavery throughout the world, from which we cannot deny ourselves the gratification of extracting the following remarkable passage "As to myself, I was literally forced into the cause. I was thinking one morning, more seriously and solemnly than I had before thought, on the multitudinous sufferings of the unhappy people who are now the objects of, your sympathy. The tragical scenes which occurred in their several situations, passed in horrible review before my mind; and my compassion for their sufferings was so intense, so overwhelming, that they actually overpowered me, and forced me into the resolution which I dared not—which it was at my peril at that time to resist—the resolution of attempting their deliverance. Thus was I forced into the work. Much remains to be done; but take courage—be not dismayed go on: my heart beats as warmly in this sacred cause now, in the eighty-first year of my age, as it did at the age of twenty-four, when I first took it. And I can say further, with truth, that, if I had another life given me to live I would devote it to the same object."

It was shortly after this, that the Freedom of the City of London was unanimously voted to him; his bust was placed in Guildhall; and, not long before his decease, a very gratifying tribute was paid to his public virtue and merits, by a subscription for his Portrait, set on foot in his native town of Wisbeach, where an admirable likeness of him was placed in the Town Hall. The annexed engraving is from the painting by Haydon, at the Anti-Slavery Society's Office, in New Broad-street.

For several years past he had been principally confined to his sitting-room. Here he was accustomed to sit, with a small table before him, on which a book was constantly seen, in which he noted down everything of importance which crossed his mind. Until two o'clock he was thus engaged, or in attending to his correspondence. He did not read or write after two; but, during the afternoon and evening, enjoyed the social circle, and entertained his family or friends by his wit and by his wisdom. At ten, punctual to a moment, he was ready to retire to bed—frequently not to rest, on account of the excessive pain he constantly endured from a disease in his feet.

It is not generally known that, since 1840, he has written a Commentary on the New Testament, except the Book of Revelations! Here are quotations and interpretations from Syriac-Greek, Hebrew, Latin, &c., written after he was beyond the age of eighty!

The benevolence of Thomas Clarkson did not consume itself, as has been insinuated by some, on the slave; but, in the village of Playford, the poor have lost a very dear and valuable friend. Upwards of twenty widows have long been sustained by his bounty; several schools for the poor he supported; and there is not a poor neighbour around Playford Hall who cannot testify of his benevolent regard. In fact, it is said there is not a poor person in the village who does not sleep under blankets furnished by his bounty. As he could not get about, and Mrs. Clarkson very little, their amiable and excellent niece, the lady of the Rev. Mr Dickinson, has been the almoner of their bounty; supplying food, medicine, and clothing, wherever it has been needed; and work and food for the poor in the next parish, when, they have been discharged, and left with their families destitute.

Thomas Clarkson was 87 years of age on the day when, his labours being consummated and crowned with success, death removed him from the stage on which he had played so illustrious a part, on Saturday, September 26th, 1846.

A "mighty man has indeed fallen in Israel;" but the exemplary spirit of his life remains. Thomas Clarkson was one of those great spirits who arise but once or twice during the lapse of centuries to operate some great change on the structure of society, or on the destinies of mankind; men of real genius, whose ideas become permanent facts, and whose single-minded labours tend to remodel the future world. He was one of those pacific victors, who has won for himself a more enduring niche in Fame's temple than was ever acquired in our great monumental fame by poet, warrior, or statesman. These are the men whose "name shall endure for ever under the sun among the posterities," amidst the blessings of future generations.

Celebrated alternately by Darwin, Brougham, and Wordsworth, while his equally untitled and single-minded colleagues, Wilberforce and Sharpe, have each their monument in Westminster Abbey, the position of Thomas Clarkson in the van of the daily accelerated march of universal Christian civilisation undoubtedly entitles him to a similar tribute among the "aristocracy of virtue" and the "kings of mind." How apposite for this occasion was the beautiful poetical apostrophe of his friend Wordsworth to the great deceased

Clarkson! Oh thou true yoke-fellow of Time!
Duty's intrepid liegeman! See, the palm
Is won and by all nations shall be worn.
Crime's bloodstained writing is for ever torn.
Thou henceforth wilt possess the good man's calm—
The great man's guerdon. Thou at length shalt find Welcome repose, stanch friend of grateful humankind.

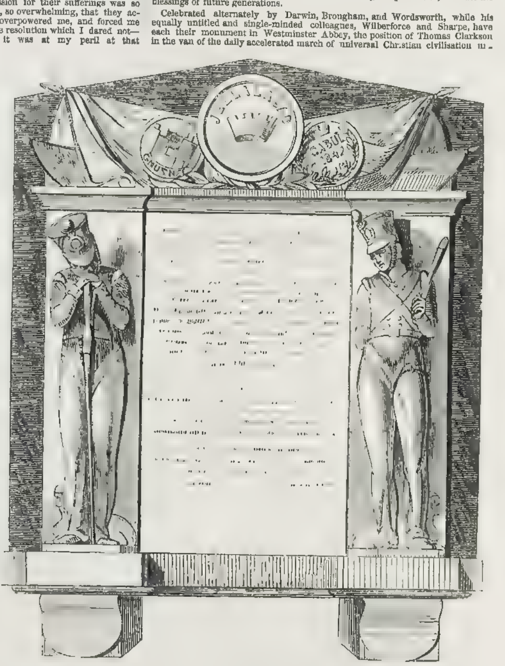
We have been favoured by a Correspondent with the following account of the funeral of the lamented philanthropist, which took place on Friday, the 2nd inst., in the burial-ground of Playford Church, near Ipswich. In accordance with the expressed wish of the deceased, the obsequies were of the most simple and private character. The body was enclosed within a shell, laid in a thick leaden coffin, the outer coffin being of oak, covered with black cloth, unornamented, save by a silver plate, inscribed with the name of the deceased, and the dates of his birth and death. Soon after one o'clock, the cortège left Playford Hall for the church, in the following order:—The Mourning Coach, containing the Rev. J. D. West, of Rushmere, the officiating Clergyman; A. Biddell, and J. D. Harmer, Esqs. Next, the Hearse, with the Body, on each side of which walked the labourers in the employ of the deceased, who were to be the bearers. Then followed Three Mourning Coaches. In the first, were Master Thomas Clarkson, the only Grandson of the deceased, as Chief Mourner; the Rev. W. W. Dickinson, Mrs. Dickinson, the Rev. Foster Maynard, and Mrs. Dyce: in the next Coach, Robert Buck, Esq., Alexander Staldane, Esq., John Corsbie, Esq., and Mrs. Corsbie: in the last were J. A. Hardcastle, Esq., Joseph Sturge, Esq., and Captain Shawe, R.N. Two private carriages followed, containing the domestics of the establishment in suitable mourning. At the outer gate of the domain, upwards of twenty of the neighbouring gentry, and others from a distance, met the procession and joined in preceding the corpse, among whom we noticed John Beaumont, Esq., George Ransome, Esq., Sheppard Ray, Esq., Joseph Soul, Esq., of London, J. D. Piper, Esq., the Rev. D. Ross, and Henry Taylor of Woodbridge, and many others, who ranged themselves, uncovered, right and left, at the entrance to the church, as the procession entered into and came from the edifice. The arrangements were as simple as possible, and altogether conformable to the unpretending character of the deceased. The poor of Playford and its neighbourhood paid their last homage of respect in attending as spectators: the church was full to overflowing. It was also observable, that many of the Society of Friends were in the procession and at the service, who, out of respect to the deceased, made no scruple about removing their hats on the occasion.

PLAYFORD HALL, THE SEAT OF THE LATE THOMAS CLARKSON, ESQ.



TABLET TO THE MEMORY OF THE HEROES OF JELLALABAD, GHUZNEE, AND CABUL.

MEMORIAL TO THE HEROES OF AFFGHANISTAN.

This handsome Monumental Tablet has just been completed by Mr. Denman, of the Quadrant, to the memory of the officers, non-commissioned officers, and privates, of the 13th Light Infantry, or Prince Albert's Own, who fell in the late Affghanistan war. It is 6 feet 6 inches in height, and 4 feet 6 inches broad; with an inscription tablet of white marble, upon a black ground; the former flanked by two full-length statuettes of privates of the regiment, with their muskets reversed; and surmounted by the colours of the regiment, and fac similes of the medals granted for Jellelabad, Ghuznee, and Cabul. The whole design is supported upon two bold trusses, and will be placed in Canterbury Cathedral. The tablet bears the following inscription:—

"Whilst serving in Affghanistan, between the years 1838 and 1844, either from the fatigue of service, or in action with the enemy, there perished of the 13th, Prince Albert's, Light Infantry, Lieut.-Col. W. H. Dennie, C.B.; Brevet Major G Kershaw; Captains George Fothergin and William Sunderland; Lieutenants Edward King, Richard Edward Frere, John Byrne Hobhouse, and F. P. C. Scott; Sergeant-Major W. Airey; 12 sergeants, 11 corporals, 3 buglers, and 264 privates. And also, shortly after their return from that country, Major J. G. D. Taylor, Capt. W. A. Sinclair, and Assistant Surgeon W. Baines. In memory of whom their surviving brethren in arms of the same regiment have caused this tablet to be erected."

PRINCE LEOPOLD OF SAXE COBURG.

Among the unsuccessful suitors for the hand of Isabella of Spain, was Prince Leopold Francis Jules, of Saxe Coburg and Gotha. It was expected that he would have been supported by the English Government; but this does not appear to have been the case. He is closely connected with the Royal Families of England and France: he is cousin to his Royal Highness Prince Albert; and his brother Augustus is married to the Princess Clementine, daughter of Louis Philippe; his brother Ferdinand is the King Consort of Portugal. Prince Leopold was born on the 31st January, 1824.

PRINCE LEOPOLD OF SAXE COBURG.

DRAINAGE OF THE LAKE OF HAARLEM.

At a time when every improvement in the art of draining, reclaiming, and irrigating land is an object of national importance, we have the pleasure of laying before our readers a sketch of the origin and progress of the Drainage of the Lake of Haarlem by the Dutch Government; a work which stands unrivalled in the history of hydraulic engineering.

At the commencement of the sixteenth century, a number of small lakes occupied a large portion of the Province of South Holland, lying between the towns of Amsterdam, Haarlem, and Leyden. Four of these Lakes, lying contiguous to each other, covered an area of about 15,000 acres; gradually the barriers of soft alluvial soil that separated them, were destroyed by the action of the waters, and the four Lakes became merged in one. The degradation of the shores still continued, until, at the commencement of the eighteenth century, the waters covered an area of 45,000 acres, with an average depth of 13 feet below low water in the Zuyder Zee. This Lake constitutes what is now known as the Haarlem-mer-Meer. The people of Holland saw with much alarm, the rapid extension of its boundaries, and, at an expense of about £33,000, succeeded in partially arresting its progress; but the annual cost of repairs of the works of defence have for a considerable period amounted to between £3000 and £4000. Many projects were proposed for Draining the Lake; but political and financial causes, and the magnitude of the interests concerned, prevented the execution of any of these plans.

At length, on the 9th of November, 1836, a furious hurricane from the west drove the waters of the Lake upon the City of Amsterdam, and drowned upwards of 10,000 acres of low land in the neighbourhood. On the 25th of December following, another hurricane from the east drove the waters in the opposite direction upon the City of Leyden, the lower parts of which were submerged during forty-eight hours, and 19,000 acres of land were inundated. The enormous loss occasioned by these two storms induced the Government to determine on the Drainage of the Lake; a credit of 8,000,000 florins was voted by the States-General; and in May, 1840, the King, William I, appointed a Commission, composed of eleven members, to superintend the work: their number was subsequently increased, in 1842, to thirteen, under the presidency of M. Gevers van Endegheest, whose father, in 1806, presided over the directorial commission for the well-known great canal and sea-sluices at Katwyk, by which the surplus waters of the Lake were provided with an outlet to the North Sea. Thus father and son will have had the honour of presiding over two of the greatest hydraulic works of modern times. Since 1839, a Canal has been cut round the Lake to isolate it from the neighbouring waters, and to afford the means of navigation to the enormous traffic which has hitherto passed over the Lake, amounting to 700,000 tons per annum. This Canal is 37½ miles long, 130 feet wide on the west side, and 115 feet on the east side of the Lake, with a depth of 9 feet of water. On the side next the Lake, the mouths of all water-courses entering it have been closed by earthen dams, having an aggregate length of 3000 yards, made in 10 feet depth of water.

Other great works have been executed by enlarging the sluices at Katwyk on the North Sea, and at Spaarndam on the river Y, at the base of the Zuyder Zee, where an auxiliary engine of 200-horse power has been placed to assist in discharging the water from the canal during the time of high water.

The water of the Lake has no natural outfall, being below the lowest practicable point of sluiceage. The area of water enclosed by the Canal is rather more than 70 square miles, and the quantity to be lifted by mechanical means, including rain water and springs, leakage, &c., during the time of drainage, is estimated at probably 1,000,000,000 tons.

In determining the motive power to be employed, two points were to be kept in view; first, the cost of evacuating the Lake; secondly, the cost of annual drainage; for, when once drained, the site of the Lake can only be kept dry by mechanical power. The annual drainage will probably amount to 54,000,000 tons of water, to be lifted on an average 16 feet; but it may occur, that as much as 35 millions of that amount must be discharged in one month.

With the exception of a few small Steam-engines, the wind has hitherto been the motive power employed to work the hydraulic machines used in the Netherlands to keep the country dry. And the power of 12,000 Wind-mills having an aggregate average power of 60,000 horses, is required to prevent two-thirds of the kingdom of the Netherlands from returning to the state of morass and lake, from which the indomitable energy and perseverance of the Dutch people have rescued what is now the most fertile country in Europe

In 1840, it was found that the average consumption of coals by the Steam-engines used in England and Holland for draining land, was 15 lbs. per nett horse power, per hour.

The Harlemmer Meer Commissioners were convinced that the old means must be put aside, and new ones adopted to suit the magnitude and peculiarities of their work. Accordingly, they determined to erect three gigantic Steam engines (from the designs of their engineers, Messrs. Joseph Gibbs and Arthur Dean, of London) of a peculiar construction.

The first of these Engines, called the Leeghwater, was completed last year, and has been experimentally worked during several months. The result has been most satisfactory to the Commissioners—the consumption of coal has been reduced to two and a half pounds per horse power, per hour, or one-sixth part only of the average consumption of the ordinary draining Engines; nor has the performance of the Engine, as regards the quantity of water lifted, been less successful; it will raise 112 tons of water 10 feet high at each stroke, and is capable of discharging 1,000,000 tons in 25½ hours.

It is impossible to foresee the future results of this great improvement in the economy of the Steam-engine for lifting great bodies of water to a comparatively small height; it will completely revolutionise the present system of drainage in the Netherlands; and in the south of Europe and the Tropics may be productive of enormous benefits, if applied to the irrigation of lands bordering the rivers, which, in the dry season, are frequently ten or twelve feet below the level of the surrounding country.

A short description of the Leeghwater Engine may prove interesting to our readers; we have, therefore, engraved a diagram of the Engine and Pumps. It has two steam cylinders, one of 84 inches diameter (A), placed within another of 144 inches diameter (B B); both are fitted with pistons; the outer piston is of course annular, and the two pistons are united to a great cross-head, or cap, C, which is furnished with a guide-rod, or spindle (c); both pistons and cross-head are fitted with iron plates, and together, with parts of the Engine attached, have an effective weight of nearly 90 tons.

The Engine House is a circular tower, on the walls of which are arranged 11 large cast iron balance-beams, which radiate from the centre of the Engine. Their inner ends, furnished with rollers, are brought under the circular body of the great cap, and their outer ends are connected to the pistons of 11 pumps of 63 inches diameter each, the stroke of both ends is 10 feet; and the discharge from the pumps 66 cubic metres, or tons, of water per stroke.

The action of the Engine is very simple: it is on the high-pressure-expansive-condensing principle.

The steam is admitted first beneath the small piston; and the dead weight of 90 tons is lifted, carrying with it the inner end of the pump balances D, and of course allowing the pistons to descend in the pumps E.

The equilibrium valve then opens, and the steam in A passes round to the upper surface of the small, and annular pistons; puts the former in a state of equilibrium, and presses with two-thirds of its force upon the annular piston, beneath which a vacuum is always maintained—thus, the down stroke of the Engine, and the elevation of the pump pistons (F) and water, is produced by the joint action of the descending dead weight in the cap and pistons, and the pressure of steam on the annular piston.

The steam is expanded from six to eight times its original volume.

The Engine has two air pumps, of 40 inches diameter, and 5 feet stroke each.

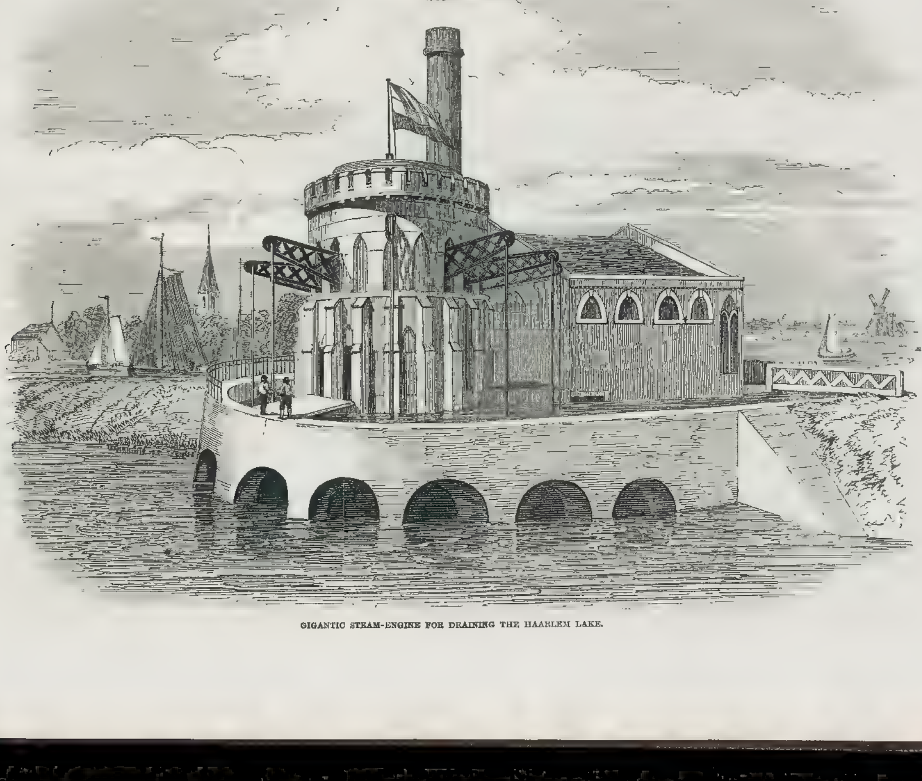
The water is lifted by the pumps into the Canal H, from which it passes off towards the sea sluices.

The total weight of iron employed for the Engine, pumps, &c., is 640 tons.

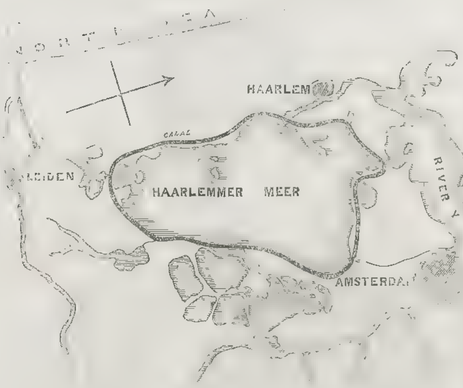
The cost of the machinery and buildings, £36,000.

Two other Engines of equal size and power are now being constructed by Messrs. Harvey, of Hayle, and Messrs. Fox and Co., of Perran, in Cornwall, who also manufactured the Leeghwater: no higher encomium can be passed upon those Establishments, than the simple fact of their being entrusted with the manufacture of these, the three largest Engines in the world.

The united action of the three Engines will discharge about 2,800,000 tons of water per twenty-four hours; and, allowing for contingencies, the Lake will be pumped out in about 400 days, at a total cost, including the price of the Engines, buildings, &c., not exceeding £140,000. By the old system of Steam Engines, the cost would have exceeded £240,000; and to do the same work in four years,



GIGANTIC STEAM-ENGINE FOR DRAINING THE HAARLEM LAKE.

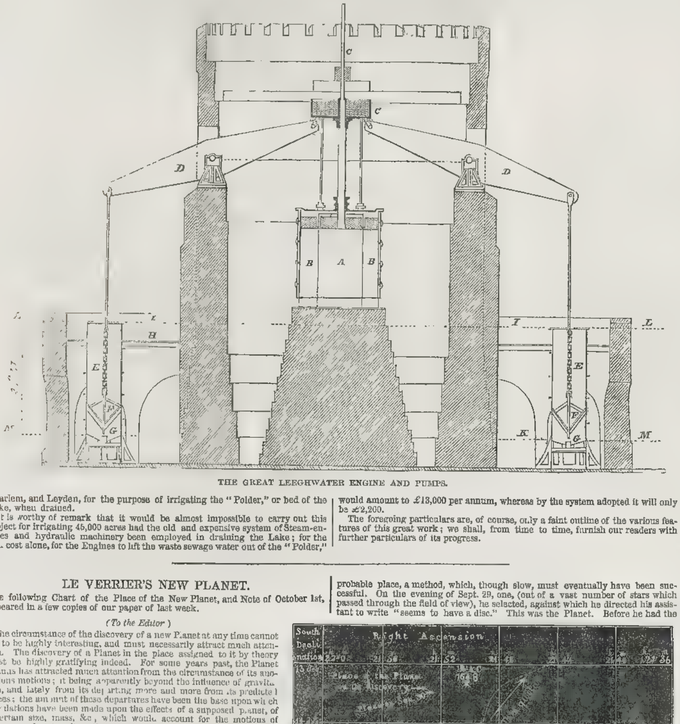


THE LAKE OF HAARLEM.

by wind, would require 114 first-class windmills, at a cost of £308,000. The annual cost of keeping the Lake drained by wind would have been £6100; by the old system of Steam-engines, £10,000; and by the improved system, will be 1500l.

Holland, like England, is now turning its attention to the useful employment of the sewage water of its towns.

The Haarlemmer Meer Commissioners, having "gone a-head" in steam matters, are now considering a plan for using the waters of the towns of Amsterdam, Haarlem, and Leyden, for the purpose of irrigating the "Polder," or bed of the Lake, when drained.



THE GREAT LEEGHWATER ENGINE AND PUMPS.

It is worthy of remark that it would be almost impossible to carry out this project for irrigating 45,000 acres had the old and expensive system of Steam-engines and hydraulic machinery been employed in draining the Lake; for the coal cost alone, for the Engines to lift the waste sewage water out of the "Polder," would amount to £13,000 per annum, whereas by the system adopted it will only be £2,200.

The foregoing particulars are, of course, only a faint outline of the various features of this great work; we shall, from time to time, furnish our readers with further particulars of its progress.

LE VERRIER'S NEW PLANET.

THE following Chart of the Place of the New Planet, and Note of October 1st, appeared in a few copies of our paper of last week.

(To the Editor.)

The circumstance of the discovery of a new Planet at any time cannot fail to be highly interesting, and must necessarily attract much attention. The discovery of a Planet in the place assigned to it by theory must be highly gratifying indeed. For some years past, the Planet Uranus has attracted much attention from the circumstance of its anomalous motions; it being apparently beyond the influence of gravitation, and lately from its departing more and more from its predicted places; the amount of these departures have been the base upon which calculations have been made upon the effects of a supposed planet, of a certain size, mass, &c., which would account for the motions of Uranus, and restore it to the government of the same laws as govern the other Planets. The result of these calculations is the discovery of a new Planet, and it must be considered as one of the greatest triumphs of Theoretical Astronomy.

Le Verrier was the first to perform these calculations; and on September 23rd, Dr. Galle, at Berlin, received a letter from him, requesting a search to be made for the then hypothetical Planet; and, on the same evening, during a comparison of the heavens with Dr. Bremicker's map, he saw a star of the eighth magnitude not marked on the map, in the constellation of Aquarius, as marked in the annexed Chart. Its motion, however, was so slow, that it was necessary to wait till the next night, which, most fortunately, was such as to admit of other comparisons being made. The same object was found to have retrograded from the place it held on the previous night, and this was the Planet. It will be seen in the Chart that it is near to the Planet Saturn.

Blackheath, Oct. 1, 1846. JAMES GLAISHER.

(To the Editor.)

As I stated in my note of Oct. 1., there have been anomalies in the motion of the Planet Uranus for a long time, and such that he appeared to be beyond the influence of gravitation, or that there must exist a disturbing body of whose existence we knew nothing, and that the deviations in question might be due to the action of an unknown Planet. About four months since, Mr. Adams, of St. John's College, Cambridge, and M. Le Verrier, an eminent French mathematician, concluded, independently, from theoretical calculations, based upon the indications afforded by the anomalous motions of the Planet Uranus, in fact by resolving the inverse problem of the perturbations, that all these anomalies could be accounted for by supposing a disturbing Planet to move in an orbit at twice the distance of Uranus from the Sun; and subsequently, Le Verrier more recently inferred, from a most elaborate investigation, that the mass of the disturbing Planet was 2½ times that of Uranus, a result that Mr. Adams also arrived at. Consequently, if it were so large as this, it would present a disc discernible in our powerful telescopes.

These mathematicians agreed in fixing 325 deg. of heliocentric longitude as the most probable position for the Planet. These remarkable calculations of Le Verrier and Mr. Adams, pointed out a position of the New Planet which has proved very nearly to be the true one.

It is but due to add, that during the last two months Professor Challis, of the Observatory at Cambridge, has devoted nearly all his [illegible] Northumberland telescope in mapping the stars in the neighbourhood of the probable place, a method, which, though slow, must eventually have been successful. On the evening of Sept. 29, one, (out of a vast number of stars which passed through the field of view), he selected, against which he directed his assistant to write "seems to have a disc." This was the Planet. Before he had the opportunity of verifying his suspicion, the news of the discovery reached him; he was, however, the first person who saw it in England, and he saw it before the news of the discovery reached him; the fact of his having been anticipated in the discovery, does not detract at all from the merit due to him for his perseverance &c. in the searching and the finding of it. (See Professor Challis's letter in the Cambridge Chronicle.)

On Sept. 30 it was observed by Mr. Hind, at the Observatory of Mr. Bishop, Regent's Park. The places observed are as follows:

	h. m. s.		h. m. s.	North Polar Distance deg. m. s.
Sept. 23 at	12 0 14.6,	Berlin Mean Time, the Right Ascension was	21 53 17	103 24 [illegible]
—— 24, at	8 51 40.6,	Berlin Mean Time, the Right Ascension was	21 53 13	103 24 [illegible]
—— 29, at	16 10.	Greenwich Mean Time, the Right Ascension was	21 52 49	103 26 30
—— 30, at	8 16 21,	Greenwich Mean Time, the Right Ascension was	21 52 47	103 27 20

The motion thus shown agrees fully with Le Verrier's hypothetical motion; so that the effects of this Planet have been felt, its mass and distance approximately determined, and its motion indicated from Theoretical Astronomy before the Planet had ever been seen, and all agrees with observation so far as can at present be determined. It is found to have a disc, and its diameter cannot be much less than 40,000 miles, and may be more; its motions are very slow; it is at present in the Constellation of Aquarius as indicated by theory, and it will be in the Constellation of Capricornus all the year 1847. It may be readily seen in a telescope of moderate power. In whatever view we take of this noble discovery it is most gratifying—whether at the addition of another Planet to our list; whether at the proving the correctness of the theory of Gravitation and that the then most distant of the Planets is as much under its influence as are the other Planets, or in any other view, it must be considered as a splendid discovery, and the merit is chiefly due to Theoretical Astronomy.

This discovery is perhaps the greatest triumph of Astronomical Science that has ever been recorded.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 10, 1846.

WHEN Lisbon was overwhelmed by the Earthquake, the "Authorities," terrified at the extent of the calamity, flew to Pombal, the Minister asking what was to be done? His reply was short and decisive: "Feed the living, and bury the dead!"

In such dreadful cases of necessity, the most direct and quickest expedient is the best; it may be quite opposed to all ordinary rules and principles; but they are not made for exceptional cases. The Portuguese Minister, doubtless, knew that a Government should not undertake to be the constant purveyor of the food of a City or a Nation; but, when a great calamity comes, the Government is the only organised body to which a people can look for assistance; it exists on that condition; why is it supported at ease through years and cycles of prosperity, if it is to fail the moment a difficulty tries it? It is precisely at such periods of pressure it is most required. But the Executive in England is so unaccustomed to interfere in the dealings of daily life, that it seems now unwilling to exert itself to the full extent required by the scarcity in Ireland. From all parts of that afflicted country, we hear complaints that everything is doing, but nothing is done; action is always in a future tense that it never gets out of. The forms required to be gone through, under the Acts of Parliament that give employment to labour, take some time; and when, at last, the work is begun, the people find no supplies of food purchasable, or, from the objection to "interfere with private enterprise," at such a price that their wages are insufficient. Hence arise discontent, riot, and bloodshed.

The Government have the name of doing something; and it is possible that, in the dire distress of the time, the people overrate what it can do. The uncertainty that prevails among the upper classes of society adds to the confusion: what work is to be done, how it is to be done, whether roads or drains are the most advisable, how they are to be paid for, on whom the money is to be charged, and how it is to be repaid, are all matters of debate; and the discussion is to be continued still longer, for a meeting of Landed Proprietors is to be assembled in Dublin. We hope they will have provided something for the people to do before they come together; hunger cannot wait for reports and resolutions. The Government has consented to extend the facilities of the Public Works Bill to reproductive labour on private property. This is a prudent and well-advised concession: it will give many an interest in employing labour who would not be very zealous in the promotion of public works from which they would derive no benefit. Indeed, as far as all legislative measures and precautions go, the Government have not been deficient either in foresight or exertion.

But a great difficulty still remains. Even when wages are gained, there is little food in the market. Hence the tumults caused by any attempts to ship corn to this country. And we must admit, that, to a starving multitude, the spectacle of ship-loads of corn being taken away from where it is so grievously wanted is a painful and exciting one. This feeling is not confined to Ireland prices are rising all over Europe. France is uneasy; and, in Paris itself, there has been a bread riot. The prospect on all sides is gloomy; but to our difficulties we must oppose hope and strenuous exertion. If it comes to the worst, the Executive Government must depart more widely from the maxims of political economy; and, by organising a commissariat for the people, as it has often done for armies, try if it cannot bring food within the reach of the wages that can be gained by the employment it has done its best to promote.

THE GREAT WELLINGTON STATUE.

This stupendous Statue was fixed upon its pedestal on Thursday week, at one o'clock, in presence of a large concourse of spectators. It was then secured with iron clamps at the feet. Admiral Sir Byam Martin, Vice-Admiral Matson, Commodore William Henry Sheriff, late Captain Superintendent of Chatham Dockyard, and a number of naval and military officers, have since visited the Statue, and expressed their entire approbation of the way in which the whole of the arrangements of the raising were made and carried into execution.

The manner in which Mr. M'Cullum, boatswain of Woolwich Dockyard, and the riggers under his direction, have accomplished the raising, has surprised many persons; but Mr. M'Cullum does not consider the feat more than an ordinary task. It was accomplished by forty-four men; eight at each of the four "crabs" for coiling the ropes, two holding on, and one at each stopper. Some idea of the strength of the framework may be formed, when it is computed that it supported a weight of about ninety tons, at a height of upwards of 105 feet from the ground. This is ascertained by calculating the weight of the Statue, the ropes and tackling, and the number of persons, of whom there were always upwards of sixty, including strangers, on the scaffolding, until the Statue was raised to its proper position. So excellently were all the parts adjusted, that four men, with two single ropes, moved the Statue backwards and forwards on the tramway, when Mr. Wyatt adjusted it on the Thursday, after it was raised to the top of the arch. The expense of ironwork and labour, including the carriage, exceeds £500; and, with the timber, the total expense of raising the Statue will exceed £900

On Sunday, the Group attracted groups of spectators throughout the day.

The removal of the scaffolding has since been commenced; and, very shortly, the forest of beams and spars will have disappeared; and a fair opportunity be thus afforded of judging of the merits of the great work, and the fitness of its location. Meanwhile, the wits and small jokers will have recovered from the exhaustion to which their recent expenditure of ammunition must have subjected them.

COURT AND HAUT TON.

THE COURT AT WINDSOR.

Her Majesty and Prince Albert, the ladies and gentlemen of the Court, and the domestic household, attended Divine service on Sunday morning, in the private chapel of Windsor Castle. The Hon. and Rev. C. Leslie Courtenay officiated. Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, and her Lady in Waiting, Lady Anna Maria Dawson, also attended the service. The eastern terrace and the private gardens were more than usually crowded on Sunday afternoon with visitors, the bands of both the regiments in garrison at Windsor playing in front of the private apartments from four o'clock till nearly dark. Shortly after four o'clock, her Majesty, leaning on the arm of his Royal Highness Prince Albert, attended by the Lady and Maids of Honour in Waiting, Lord Waterpark, Lord Bloomfield, Lord Falkland, Mr. Ormsby Gore, Colonel Bouverie, Colonel Buckley, and several other members of the Royal household, walked across the pasture, receiving the loyal salutations of her subjects, by whom the Queen was surrounded, and proceeded through the orangery into the Home Park. The Queen and the Prince, after promenading in the private plantations for nearly an hour, and visiting the kennel and Royal aviary, returned to the Castle.

Windsor, Thursday Evening.—(From our own Correspondent.) Their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge, accompanied by his Serene Highness the Prince Frederick of Hesse, Viscount Palmerston, and Sir Stratford and Lady Canning, arrived at the Castle, yesterday evening, upon a visit to her Majesty. Her Majesty and the Prince Consort, who were accompanied by the Prince of Hesse, walked this morning to the Queen's private kennel and the Royal aviary. The Royal family were also taken out for their usual airings

The Queen Dowager.—There is a rumour that the Queen Dowager is likely to become the occupant of the Royal Palace at Brighton.

The Princess of Hesse.—The Princess of Hesse embarked on board the Black Eagle, at Rotterdam, at two o'clock on Saturday afternoon, attended by her suite, and Mr. Bedford, Gentleman Usher to the Queen Dowager. The Princess landed on Monday afternoon, and immediately went to Marlborough House, arriving there at half-past two. The Princess left Marlborough House at three, attended by Earl Howe and the Earl of Denbigh, for the terminus at Euston-square, taking their departure by railway for Cashiobury, on a visit to the Queen Dowager

Another Aristocratic Marriage at Gretna Green.—The Morning Post announces that on Saturday last, Lady Rose Somerset, fourth daughter of the Duke and Duchess of Beaufort, eloped from Badminton with Captain Francis Lovell (of the Life Guards) for Gretna Green The Ladies Blanche and Rose Somerset, with their youthful sisters, had been staying at Badmington some days, during the absence of their noble parents, who were on a visit to Sir Charles Morgan, at the Hon. Baronet's seat, Tredegar, Monmouthshire. The extreme youth of her Ladyship (who only completed her seventeenth year in February last) has, says the Morning Post, been the sole objection offered by her noble parents to the ratification of the desired union. Captain Lovell's position as the representative of an old English family was such as to render him in every respect a worthy suitor for her Ladyship's hand, and the Gallant Officer, up to the latest moment, had been a constant and welcome visitor at the hospitable table of the Noble Duke.

ACCIDENTS AND OFFENCES

Inquest on Baron de Bode.—An inquest was held on Monday, at 18, Grove-end-road, St. John's Wood, by Mr Mills, on the body of Clement Joseph Philippe Pen Baron de Bode, aged sixty-nine, who died suddenly, on Friday evening (last week). A memoir of the deceased appears elsewhere. Mr Augustus Wilkins (son of the deceased) was sworn, and said that he resided at Whetstone. Very frequently visited at the Baron's house. During his father's last illness, which commenced a month ago, he had remained with him continually. Deceased had frequently complained of violent pains in the head and chest, especially during the last fortnight He had been under the homœopathic treatment of Dr. Epps, who had attended him nearly six years. Dr. Epps called on him in the middle of the day on Friday, but had not visited him during the three preceding days, as the deceased had so much improved in health. On Friday witness was with his father during his supper; he was then in cheerful spirits, but presently complained of shooting pains, and observing that the supper had disagreed with him, asked for a glass of water. Witness handed it to him, but while drinking it deceased fell back into his son's arms, and died almost instantly. Witness sent his brother to Dr. Shute, who came immediately, but life was extinct. Theodore Henry Shute, of 21, Wellington road, was called into deceased on Friday evening, but when he arrived life was extinct. He had made a post mortem examination, and considered the immediate cause of death to be loss of power in the heart, from ossification, and effusion in the pericardium.—By the Coroner: Could give no specific reason for death occurring on that evening, except perhaps increased excitement. But still, from the extensive ossification displayed by deceased, death might have happened in the absence of all excitement.—Mr. Mills having addressed the Jury, they unanimously gave a verdict of natural death from ossification of the coronary artery, produced by natural causes, but hastened by anxiety of mind, consequent on the state of his affairs.

Another Fatal Gun Accident.—A melancholy occurrence, which has thrown a family into the deepest distress, took place in the neighbourhood of Ware, Herts, on Thursday morning (last week). Mr. W. Gopsill was strolling in his orchard with a loaded double-barrelled fowling-piece, and being attracted by a very large apple on one of the trees, he incautiously tried to knock it down with the butt end, holding the barrels in his hands, in a direct line with his body. It is supposed that a small branch of the tree raised the hammer, and caused the fatal discharge. The whole contents were lodged in the abdomen, creating a frightful external laceration. Two medical men were promptly in attendance, but in spite of their unremitting attention he lingered in extreme agony throughout the afternoon, and expired about half-past ten.

Colliery Explosion near Durham.—At an early hour last Sunday morning, a great deal of smoke having been observed issuing from the mouth of the downcast shaft of the Alexander Pit, at Rainton, near the city of Durham, the property of the Marquis of Londonderry, fears were entertained that during the night an explosion had taken place, and on some of the officers of the pit descending the shaft, they found that their fears were too fully verified. It appeared that, shortly after three o'clock on the preceding day, the workmen had left the pit, when there was not the least appearance of danger from an explosion. The only person who was left in the shaft on the Saturday night was a pitman named Richard Stott, aged about ninety years, who had charge of the furnace used for ventilating the shaft. When the deputy overman descended the shaft the following morning, he found Stott lying beside the furnace, quite dead, his body exhibiting the usual appearance of a person who had been killed by an explosion of fire-damp. On proceeding towards the stable, it was found that the whole of the horses, seventeen in number, had also fallen victims to the explosion. On Monday afternoon an inquest was held on the body of Stott, and a verdict of "Accidental death" returned.

POSTSCRIPT.

Sentence of the Court Martial on Private Matthewson On Wednesday afternoon an order was issued at Hounslow Barracks for the 12th Lancers, with the prisoner Matthewson, and the officers and men of the 7th Hussars then remaining there, to assemble at four o'clock that afternoon, and on their doing so, the finding of the late Court Martial was read, with the sentence, the latter being imprisonment for six months, including solitary confinement at various portions of that period, not exceeding two months.

LATEST FOREIGN NEWS.

Portugal.—Letters from Lisbon to the 2nd inst. have reached us. The Portuguese Government, as usual, is in great pecuniary difficulty, and the Bank refuses to advance any money. This determination will probably lead to a resignation of the Ministry. There is a complete panic in the money market. The Miguelite insurrection is completely put down for the present, but troops are concentrated upon various points in anticipation of another outbreak.

The United States The Marmion has arrived with New York papers of one day's later date than those by the Yorkshire, whose arrival is noticed in page 226. The only matter of political interest contained in the papers is a long proclamation issued by Santa Anna to the Republic of Mexico on his landing at Vera Cruz. This document is of a rather discursive character, but it is most particularly directed against Paredes, and the scheme, which it charges him openly with forming, of reimposing monarchy on the Mexican people. As regards the United States, it is singularly cautious and abstemious in its language, as it is about the whole question of foreign war. The defeats on the Rio Grande are ascribed to deliberate treachery on the part of Paredes, who is accused of sending insufficient and ill-supplied armies there, in order, by their defeat, to compel the Mexican people to take refuge in the protection of a Monarch furnished from Europe, against invasion from the United States. There is nothing about peace with the United States, or any misunderstanding with the Government, nor any allusion from which a reliable inference can be drawn of Santa Anna's future purpose as to that country. He professes himself to be "the slave of public opinion," and what that may require of him he will endeavour to fulfil. The New York papers mention that Niblo's theatre and garden had been entirely destroyed by fire. The loss was estimated at 45,000 dollars.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

THE ELECTION OF LORD MAYOR.—RETURN OF SIR GEORGE CARROLL.

The polling commenced on Monday, at the usual hour. There was a majority at the close of the day's poll for Sir George Carroll; but the manifestations in the Hall continued to be decidedly in favour of Mr. Alderman Wood. The numbers on the gross poll for the day were these:—

Wood	1312
Carroll	1083
Hooper	288
Moon	3
Farncomb	1

Mr. Bennock said that, having stated on Saturday that Mr. Wood promised to place himself right with the Livery, he was shown by the Chairman of his Committee an account between between him and the Irish Society for three years. At the end of 1842 or 1843, there was a balance struck, which showed a sum of nearly £1000 in Alderman Wood's favour. That amount went on increasing to a sum of about £1300; which, from December, 1844, had not been paid till February or March, 1846; so that they would see Mr. Wood was kept out of a certain amount of money to which he naturally looked for the payment of other debts which pressed on him. Therefore, if any man, or body of men, were responsible for the non-payment of the pecuniary liabilities of Mr. Wood, it was the Society from whom he expected this money. Such was a statement of the facts as shown to him, and it was corroborated by the Alderman himself. This Society, or rather a section of it, led the way in this persecution of Mr. Alderman Wood. The Sub-Committee published the statement without the authority of the General Committee. They did so unjustifiably, and in opposition to the rules and regulations governing that body. (Hear, hear.) And what did this Society themselves do with the funds at their disposal? Not long ago they voted £500 to defray the expenses of a visit to Ireland—of course, in order to benefit the occupiers on their estates. (Laughter.) He did not care whether it was Wood or Carroll, or whether nobody occupied the civic chair; but as it was to be filled by somebody, he considered it to be his duty to say that an honourable man should not be excluded in consequence of calumny. The only charge against Alderman Wood was that he had not paid some counsel. He could now tell them that the last farthing due to counsel had been paid. ("When?") He did not know when, nor did he care. It was sufficient for him to know that they had been paid. The hon. gentleman concluded by hoping that virtue and innocence would triumph. (Loud cheers.)

Ald. Wood returned his thanks for the position he had occupied that day. To his great surprise he perceived that morning in the newspapers a document signed by the Secretary of the Irish Society. He had been absent from the hall to look over the accounts, and see how he stood with respect to these gentlemen and their assertions. They said that his accounts were settled in 1842, and that they had no anxiety to reduce the accounts. Why, the first item in the account of 1843 was £12 13s. paid to the taxing officer for taxing his previous bill. His bill in 1842 was £3179, against which he got £2100. His account in 1843 was £1329, against which he got £500 in December, 1844, and from that day to the present they never paid him one farthing. (Hear, hear.) It was said that he received £10,000 in the course of the suit, leaving it to be inferred that he received it from them. The fact was, that he had succeeded in every point of a most difficult and protracted suit, the arguments on which continued on one occasion for twelve days, and he saddled his opponent with all the costs. (Hear, hear.) They also said that he kept his carriage from the profits of the suit. Why, what he got from it would not grease the wheels of it. (Laughter.) He had succeeded in this important suit, and his reward was volunteered calumny, from a society who professed to keep everything secret.

On Tuesday the election presented a new aspect. Although the last day of polling, it assumed the appearance of the first day of contest. It was evident from the commencement that the Livery were roused. They began to pour in upon the part of Sir George Carroll in considerable numbers, and at the final close of the poll, at four o'clock, the gross numbers exhibited for him exceeded the numbers for Alderman Wood by nine.

Shortly after four o'clock the state of the poll was shown to the impatient crowd to be as follows

Carroll	1653
Wood	1644
Hooper	324
Moon	3
Farncomb	1

These numbers agree with the official declaration

The Hall was in a state of uproar upon the exhibition of the majority for Sir Mr. Alderman Wood, Mr. Bennock, and Mr. Holt having also made speeches, the hall was adjourned to Thursday

A Special Court of Aldermen was held on Thursday, for the purpose of receiving the Sheriffs' report respecting the election of Lord Mayor. At 11 o'clock the Lord Mayor entered the court, and was soon afterwards joined by the body of Aldermen. Several papers relating to the Talacre Mining Company, and the trials which took place in Ireland on the subject were read. After a few observations from Mr. Alderman Copeland, Mr. Alderman Wood defended himself from the imputations which had been cast upon him, and said that the papers which had been presented bore out all the allegations which he had made. It was moved by Mr. Alderman Challis, that the subject be referred to a committee, upon which a lengthened discussion arose, in the course of which Aldermen Sydney and Moon requested of Mr. Alderman Wood to postpone his claims for the present year. Mr. Alderman Wood said that he had no objection to an impartial inquiry; but he feared that, with the prejudices entertained against him by the Court of Aldermen, he could not expect that He was willing to submit his case to any two honourable men of the city of London associated with the Court of Aldermen Alderman Copeland moved, as an amendment, that the names of those who had signed the former report against Alderman Wood should be left out of the new committee. He had heard from Mr. Alderman Wood that he would submit to an investigation. The amendment was lost by a majority of eight to two; upon which Mr. Alderman Humphery moved that the Court proceed to receive the Sheriffs' report. This amendment was also lost by a majority of ten to five. Alderman Copeland then called for a division of the Court, when it appeared that the following Aldermen were for referring the papers to a committee:—Aldermen Kelly, Copeland, Sir P Laurie, Sir J. Duke, Sir C. Hunter, Moon, and Challis; and the following for proceeding to receive the Sheriffs' report: Aldermen Humphery, Wilson, Magnay, Gibbs, Farebrother, Hughes, and Sydney. The Lord Mayor having given his casting vote in favour of proceeding to election, the Court did so. At a quarter-past three o'clock, the civic procession ascended the hustings, when the learned Recorder declared that the choice of the Court of Aldermen had fallen on Sir George Carroll, to fill the office of Lord Mayor, for the ensuing year.

Deaths in the Metropolis. The number of deaths in the metropolis recorded by the registrar-general during the past week, was 935. This is in excess of the average number of deaths in the first weeks of the autumnal quarter of recent years by 46. There were 58 victims to "violence, privation, cold, and intemperance," and 66 died of "old age," one of whom was 105 years old.

The Cobden Testimonial.—The metropolitan subscription to the Cobden national testimonial, together with several very handsome contributions forwarded to the committee during Wednesday, now amounts to £12,700. The grand total of the fund is nearly £77,000.

City of London Pension Society.—The members of this Society met on Monday last at the London Tavern, to elect four pensioners, two male and two female, to be placed for support on the funds of the institution. L. Gole, Esq., took the chair, in the absence of Luke James Hansard, Esq., who was expected to have presided, and called upon the meeting to express its opinion as to the propriety of confirming the adoption of the Report of the Directors, and the resolution, both of which were agreed to at the last meeting of the Society. The opinion of the last meeting as to both was unanimously confirmed, after which the polling commenced, and continued until three o'clock, when it was announced by Mr. Richardson, Secretary, that the four duly elected pensioners were William Petty, having in his favour 767 votes, Thomas J. Owen 676 votes, Susan Westcott 1554 votes, and Sarah Kingsley 1156 votes. The meeting then separated, their thanks having been voted to the Chairman and the Scrutineers.

The Model Prison, Clerkenwell.—This prison, intended as a house of detention for untried persons, is to be ready for use by the commencement of next year.

A letter from Venice, of Sept. 25, says:—"The news of Count de Montemolin's escape has caused some surprise here. One of the three Moncenigo Palaces, situated on the grand canal, had just been purchased on account of this prince, and in his name. The sum given for it is about 350,000f. It is supposed that the Count de Montemolin will fix his residence in this city, particularly as his marriage with a Princess of Modena has been announced in certain circles as being altogether decided."

A letter from the Russian frontiers dated the 16th of Sept., says, that during the last visit of the Emperor of Russia to Warsaw, a Polish deputation, among whom were some nobles of Gallicia and Poland, waited on his Majesty. All agreed in making the same proposals, namely, alluding to a general brotherly union which should unite all the Sclavonian race in opposition to Germany. The Emperor is said to have rejected with evident disgust the unexpected proposal, and especially to have said, in respect to the bond of brotherly union, that it was quite new to him; for that he had indeed heard of the hatred existing between the Russians and the Poles, but never of any reciprocal affection.

We learn from Athens, that two very fine ancient statues, one believed to be of Apollo and the other of Ceres, have been found in a house near Vostizza, in Achaia. The Government has taken measures for their preservation, and it is expected that they will be placed in the museum at Athens. There has also been found in Sparta a sphinx of admirable workmanship, which was immediately sent to the museum.

Two vessels have arrived within these three or four days from the United States laden with ice to the amount of several hundred tons.

Letters from Odessa of the 18th September state that a fleet of no less than 150 merchant vessels arrived at that port the day before, thus effectually putting an end to the scarcity of shipping which had so long prevailed. These vessels were chiefly Greek and Italian, only six of them being British. From 350,000 to 400,000 quarters of wheat had been brought for shipment on board these vessels, chiefly for Italy and the south of France, and from 110,000 to 150,000 quarters remained on sale.

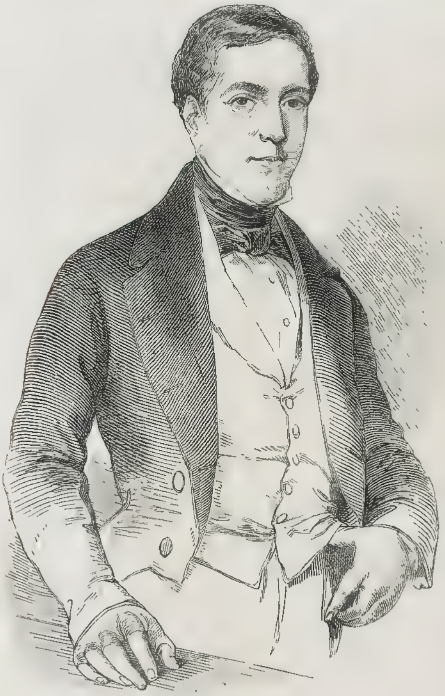
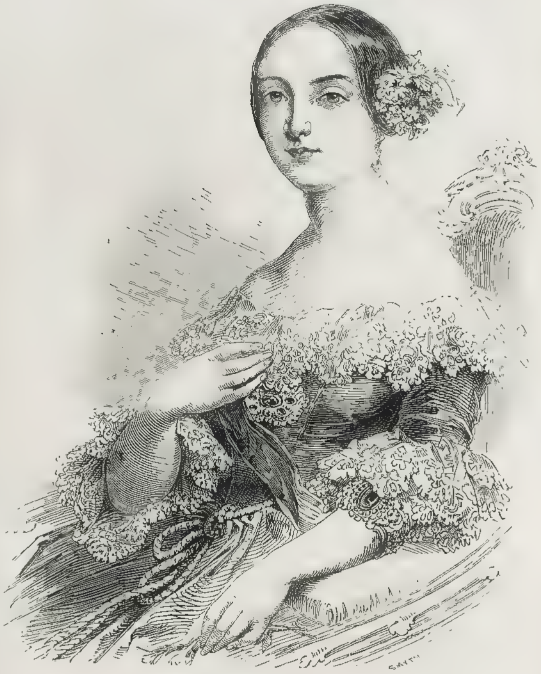
THE SPANISH MARRIAGES.



DON FRANCOIS D'ASSIS.



QUEEN ISABELLA II.

Maria Isabella Louise, or Isabella the Second, Queen of Spain, is the eldest daughter of the late Ferdinand VII., who abrogated the Salique Law in her favour; set aside his brother, Don Carlos, and left her the succession to the Throne Isabella was born on the 10th of October, 1830; her father died on the 29th of September, 1833 Don Carlos immediately claimed the Sovereignty; but the Ministry and the Army remained faithful to the young Queen and her mother Christina, who had been appointed Regent by the King's will. For some years, Carlos carried on a civil war; but he was at last driven from Spain, and the authority of Isabella established. The young Queen was declared of age, and took the oath to the Constitution on the 10th of November, 1843. Her marriage has been a matter of much discussion and speculation; many candidates have been proposed, but the preference has been given to Don Francisco d'Assis. Queen Isabella is said in person to resemble rather too strongly her father, Ferdinand, whose countenance was heavy and stolid; but she has a good figure, and possesses some accomplishments. The French papers state that she sings and plays agreeably, and is a good linguist. Nearly the only thing for which she was remarkable in her childhood was an immoderate fondness for sweetmeats—the appetite growing, we presume, with indulgence. Her apartments were perfect museums of confectionary. Christina, her mother, who may still be considered as the real ruler of Spain, is the daughter of the King of the Two Sicilies, and was born on the 27th April, 1806. She has eight other children besides the Queen of Spain and the Infanta, by her second husband, Munoz.

Maria Louisa Ferdinanda, the Infanta, is two years younger than the Queen, having been born on 30th January, 1832. Report describes her as far the superior of her Royal sister, both in beauty and intelligence. She will be the youngest wedded Princess in Europe.

Don Francois D'Assis Marie Ferdinand Duke of Cadiz, the King Consort elect, is the eldest son of Don Francois de Paula, younger brother of Don Carlos; he is, therefore, first cousin to the Queen. He was born on the 13th of May, 1822. He is a Colonel of cavalry in the Spanish service. It has been stated that the Queen was disposed to prefer Don Enrique, his younger brother, Duke of Seville, and Captain in the Spanish navy; but he refused to consent to various conditions sought to be imposed upon him.

Antoine-Marie Joseph Louis D'Orleans, Duc de Montpensier, is the seventh and youngest child of Louis Philippe; he was born on the 31st July, 1824; he accompanied his Royal father when he visited our gracious Queen at Windsor. His marriage with the sister of Isabella has been long spoken of as probable, but it was expected it would be deferred till the Queen had borne an heir to the Crown. The English Government, when applied to, refused to support any candidate for the hand of the Royal sisters, and left it wholly to the Spanish people and Ministry.

"CHOOSING THE WEDDING GOWN."

PAINTED BY WILLIAM MULREADY, R.A.

The very best Picture of the Royal Academy Exhibition of the present year, or, indeed, of any Exhibition for very many years, was that charming little Picture which hung on the east-end wall of the Great Room—usually concealed from view by a three-deep semicircle of people pushing to get near it. We refer (but there is scarcely any necessity to name it after so particular a reference) to a small Picture on panel, by Mr. Mulready, R.A., called "Choosing the Wedding Gown," a happy idea, addressed to the common sympathies of all, and most happily carried out in every part and portion of the Picture. We abstained from engraving it among the Illustrations which we gave of the Royal Academy Exhibition, because it was our wish to do full justice to Mr. Mulready's genius, and afford our Engravers an opportunity of copying it at leisure, and with the Picture more immediately before them than the rules of the Royal Academy will necessarily allow. The delay is very immaterial indeed, if the work has gained in consequence and value; and we feel that, had we attempted it at the time, we could have given but a comparatively unfair translation of so fine a work; the delay was, therefore, wise in all respects; and, we will take upon us to add, without fear of contradiction, very much to the advantage of Art and of our Subscribers.

This charming Picture—one of the very best specimens of our English School of Art—was painted for John Sheepshanks, Esq., of Rutland Gate, Hyde Park, the munificent collector of works of the English school, and by far the most liberal patron Mr. Mulready has ever had. The subject originated in a clever design made by Mr. Mulready for Mr. Van Voorst's edition of the "Vicar of Wakefield."—"I chose my wife," says the Vicar, "as she did her wedding-gown: not for a fine glossy surface, but such qualities as would wear well." Mr. Mulready has since purposely departed from the particular character given by Goldsmith to the Vicar and his bride; but it is only right to mention the incidental circumstance which originated the Picture, as nothing can be too minute when it illustrates a work of so much excellence as this last great effort of Mr. Mulready's pencil.

It would be difficult, perhaps, to imagine a subject better adapted to exhibit Mr. Mulready's genius to advantage than the subject of "Choosing a Wedding Gown." And how admirably has he treated it—how well the story is told! Contrast the different thoughts expressed on the faces of the plausible old shopkeeper, and the young, thoughtful-looking bridegroom in the background. How differently they think about the same thing! Compare the bride testing the texture of the dress before her, with the shopkeeper's wife listening to the wants of a country boy, who has come to the counter for a ball of cotton, or perhaps a paper of needles. Look at the accessories throughout. How admirable in every respect! You could not remove the very ring in the trap-door without a detriment to the unity of the whole composition.

Mr. Sheepshanks is proud—and proud with reason—of his recent acquisition. He calls it the very pick and pink of his collection. High praise, indeed, considering the vast variety of fine works his taste has been the means of bringing about him. He really prefers it to a picture of the same size, and on the same wall—the inimitable "Duncan Gray" of the inimitable Wilkie. They are pictures of the same size, and somewhat of the same character; they therefore challenge comparison, though Mr. Mulready, with his fine appreciation of Wilkie's excellence, and the modesty so essentially a part of true genius, shakes his head, we are told, when he hears his own work brought into competition with so admirable a specimen of Wilkie as his "Duncan Gray." It is somewhat curious, in the history of these two Pictures, that, in point of finish, each is, perhaps, the very best specimen of the master. There are two "Duncan Grays" at least, beneath the surface of the present Picture; and two subjects, at least, called "Choosing the Wedding Gown" beneath the surface of the Picture exhibited at the Royal Academy. Both are finished up to the last point of perfection in that line. Mieris is hardly finer, with all the advantage of age to mellow what was crude at first, into that subdued and harmonious tone, so charming in his pictures.

It is not too much to say of this fine specimen of Mr. Mulready's pencil, that it will be improved by time, and that posterity will see more to admire in it than we are enabled now to do, with even "the prophetic eye of taste" to assist us in coming to a conclusion. There is no loose or dishonest painting, as it is called, in any part of the Picture. The richly-coloured brocades on the stool in the foreground are finished up to the extreme touch of well-sustained elaboration; the band-boxes in the background (never were band-boxes so honoured in painting before) court the touch to satisfy you that they are really what they seem; and the dog on the floor is elaborated to the minutest hair, that Landseer might take a lesson from the extreme fidelity of its finish. And yet this elaboration of the minutest parts is not that Balthazar Denner kind of detail which ignorant people so often mistake for more artistic excellences; it is anything but that; it is not a servile copy of what is set before you, but something infinitely better—a good selection at the first, and a close and minute adherence afterwards.

It would be wrong to allow our subscribers who have not as yet had the good fortune to look upon this fine Picture for themselves, to carry off the idea that its chief excellence consists in the minute character of its finish. The leading merit of the Picture is the way in which the story is told; the finish is quite a secondary consideration. Colour is in painting what language is in poetry; and it is what Garrick called the "concoction"—that is, the life and marrow—of all fine works in literature and art. Here, then, the "concoction" is good, for the story is well sustained, and there is a dramatic interest throughout.

Let us add, in conclusion, that our young and rising artists, one and all, may take a lesson from the history of this picture. Mr. Mulready has spent more time upon it than will constitute a whole year's work; time well bestowed, when a picture of real excellence, such as this, is the result.

LITERATURE.

Genealogical and Heraldic Dictionary of the Landed Gentry of Great Britain and Ireland. By John Burke, Esq., Author of "The Peerage and Baronetage," &c., and John Bernard Burke, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law. 2 vols., large 8vo. Colburn.

We can readily believe these two bulky and closely-printed volumes, of some 1700 pages and twice as many columns, to have required, as the authors state, "deep research, indefatigable perseverance, and unremitting labour," involving a cost of nearly £6000. The time consumed in preparing genealogical works almost exceeds belief; and the patience and pains-taking requisite for such a task would astound those wordy politico-economic speculators, who predict and print with a forty-prophet power. Why! we have heard of the historian of one of our midland counties, consuming three months in attempting to settle a point in a descent, and failing to do so, at last!

The work before us "comprises the genealogical history of that class in society, which holds the next place to the privileged order—the untitled country gentlemen—a class, though, be it remembered, not one degree below the other, in antiquity of descent, personal accomplishment, and national usefulness; nay, the Chiefs of the Houses from which the nobility spring, are generally to be found in this division of the Aristocracy, and for the simple reason, that the eldest son and heir being already provided for, the field of adventure belongs, almost exclusively, to the junior branches of the family, who, thus forced upon the arena, achieve by their prowess or their talents—the sword or the pen—fame, wealth, and eminence."

In what may be termed the "curiosities" of genealogical and heraldic history, this great work is very attractive; for, it is not a mere catalogue of dry descents; but the columns are rich in historical anecdote, briefly told, to be sure and they abound with records of chivalrous and stirring incidents, such as illuminate the records of old English families, and shine through layers of the dust of ages. We will quote an amusing instance. Thus, under "Dyott of Freeford," we read that Anthony Dyott, Esq., of Lichfield, Barrister-at-Law, was appointed in the 40th of Elizabeth, Recorder of Tamworth, with an annual salary of 40s., and was Representative in Parliament for several years of the borough of Lichfield; and his son John was, probably, the Dyott whom Shakspeare mentions in the second part of "King Henry IV.," act iii., sc. 2, as "Little John Doit, of Staffordshire," who was swinge-buckler with Shallow, and Jack Falstaff, then a boy, at Clement's Inn.

The Fulfords of Great Fulford, Devon, are of Saxon origin; and, as it appears by records and registries in the College of Arms, they were seated at Folefort in the time of Richard I., and have continued in possession of the same name, in the male line, by uninterrupted descent, during a period of more than 600 years. The mansion is still in good repair, though one of the most ancient in the west of England. One of the family, Sir Baldwin Fulford, Sheriff of Devon, 38 Henry VI., Knight of the Sepulchre, and Under-Admiral to Holland, Duke of Exeter, High Admiral of England, is styled by Prince, as "a great soldier and a traveller of so undaunted resolution, that, for the honour and liberty of a Royal lady, in a castle besieged by the Infidels, he fought a combat with a Saracen, for bulk and bigness an unequal match (as the representation of him cut in the wainscot of Fulford Hall doth plainly show), whom yet he vanquished, and rescued the lady."

Some of the descents are of formidable length. For example, Hughes of Gwerclas extends nearly through eleven very closely-printed columns; and, Mr Burke assures us that few families can establish a loftier lineage, or deduce their descent through more numerous stocks of historic distinction. This is a genealogy of twenty-eight descents, extending over ten centuries.

We could multiply these instances a hundredfold; but we must conclude with our testimony to the great care bestowed upon the production of this work by the Messrs. Burke, whose names are very highly accredited in this class of works. The "Dictionary of the Landed Gentry" is, unquestionably, a great national work, in its objects and purposes; and we trust that it will receive all the encouragement which so complete and costly an undertaking well merits. It is printed and otherwise produced in the best style.

THE THEATRES.

DRURY LANE.

This house opened for the winter season on Saturday evening last, the principal attraction being a new ballet, arranged by M. Bretin, called "The Offspring of Flowers," in which Mdlle. Flora Fabbri sustained the principal character. The incidents are not altogether new, belonging to that class in which some supernatural beauty is to try and win the affections of a mortal; in which, if she succeeds, she loses her celestial attributes. Of this kind, with variations, are "La Sylphide," "Alma," "The Peri," and many others. In the present ballet, Enrico, a page (M. Bretin), is in love with the Princess Estelle (Madame Therese Theodore), who is, however, destined by her father to become the bride of Prince Julian of Galicia (M. Theodore.) The Page and the Princess are surprised by the Duke (Mr. Howell), during a stolen interview. His anger is, of course, very fearful, as that of ballet Dukes has always been from time immemorial. He sends his daughter into the castle, and tells her to prepare to be married immediately. To Enrico's great disgust, the fickle young lady appears too ready to accept his offer; and, tired of life, he is about to stab himself, when a benevolent fairy, Gossamer (Mdlle. Adèle), arrests his hand, and transports him, in the words of the libretto, "to a blissful region, where nymphs of the most lovely beauty shall charm his every sense, and the surrounding glories of nature combine to make him also forget her by whom he is forgotten." Arrived at "The Retreat of the Fairies," Enrico's heart is proof against all their fascinating endearments. Gossamer, therefore, determines to raise a spirit "more radiant in beauty than the undying light of the Paradise which seems to condense its purest and most brilliant rays into a halo around her"—that's the book again. The fairy touches a flower, and Ersilie (Mdlle. Flora Fabbri) rises from it. At first she is timid, and cannot understand anything around her. Enrico inspires her with new sentiments; and, devoting himself to her for ever, they go off in a ship "to participate in the pleasures of a terrestrial world." We are next introduced to a grand ball room in the Duke's castle, where a crowd of nobles, ladies, &c., assemble to do honour to the nuptials of Estelle and the Prince. A crown is on the table, bearing an inscription, "For the most graceful." The ladies of the Court, after aspiring to win the prize, very properly give it to Estelle, when its possession is challenged by a new comer. This is Ersilie, led in by Enrico, masked. She dances a Spanish pas with such enchanting grace, that everybody changes their opinion, and the crown is awarded to her. She is proclaimed the queen of the fête; and, at this point, the libretto suddenly changes into praise of a "universal gas burner," that saves over-so-much per cent., so that we are not altogether made acquainted with the final destiny of Ersilie; but we may conceive, reasoning à priori, that it is all very delightful.

The ballet was perfectly successful; and Mdlle. Flora Fabbri won golden opinions from the audience. Warmly as we have before expressed ourselves concerning this very clever danseuse, we can add that she is immensely improved since last season. Her acting, upon first waking to her new existence, was most expressive; and her subsequent scene, in which she learns to dance, and becomes almost alarmed at the revelation of Enrico's love, admirably conceived. Without being absolutely pretty, her features are exceedingly agreeable and intelligent; and she can materially assist her very graceful pantomime by the meaning she throws into them. There is, also, a freshness and abandon in her dancing, very captivating—that appearance of real enjoyment which is one of Cerito's most attractive attributes. Her great success was in a Spanish dance, La Castigliana, a pas with castanets, full of character and graceful attitudes, which was loudly applauded and encored. We were less pleased with the tours de force which she performed with M. Bretin; there was the appearance of too much effort in them, compared with her pas seuls; but this was scarcely the fault of the lady. We could not see her dance before the mirror, which, from its situation, is lost to nearly a third of the house on the O.P. side. The position might be advantageously remedied Monsieur and Madame Theodore are useful additions to the second ranks; and the two German sisters St. Louin had an effective dance in the first act. A little part of a fairy was made something of by Mdlle. Adèle. M. Bretin deserves praise, as much for the construction of the ballet, as his excellent dancing in it; and the music, by Signor Scaramelli, is very light and catching, contributing in a very great degree to the success of some of the figures, more especially a lively galop in the ball-room scene. Some pretty evolutions by the coryphées with coloured shawls were much applauded. They are after the manner of those in the "Maid of Cashmere," but comprise several novel arrangements. "The Offspring of Flowers" is announced for performance every evening of Mdlle. Fabbri's engagement; and revivals of the "Diable à Quatre," "Peri," "Giselle," and "Paquita," are promised. The houses have been very fair, considering the early period of the season.

We cannot compliment the artist upon the new act-drop. The idea of carrying on the architecture of the proscenium is good, and, if we mistake not, was adopted at this theatre before; but we must protest against the figures in the centre, which are sorry substitutes for Stanfield's beautiful paintings.

HAYMARKET.

"The Fortune Hunter" is the name of the first new piece, from the pen of Mr. Bayle Bernard, produced at this house in the present season; but we do not altogether think so highly of it as of one or two other dramas from the same clever source. We have for some time entertained misgivings as to the real degree of entertainments derived from Irish fun by London playgoers. It strikes us that the laughter elicited is more conventional than spontaneous. We do not say this in depreciation of this school of writing—which has many admirers, and more especially, as we are told, in America; but we doubt the ability of a metropolitan audience to enter fully into it. Speaking as one of the mass, rather than as a critic, there is a wearying sameness in all Hibernian comicality and character, in novels as well as in plays. The principal rôles are all alike, whether they are confined, in the one case, to saying, "Are ye there, now?" or "By my sowl?" or "St. Parthrick;" or, in the other, to constant soldiering, duelling, and steeple-chasing. With the novelists especially it is always a great relief to us when they leave the "Arrah, now, you spalpeen" line of writing for the more general delineations of character, in which they are, without an exception, spirited and truthful. Possibly we have no real interpreter of the Irish character now on the stage. The late Mr. Power, it is true, carried all before him; but it was by a rare union of animal spirits, perception, and cultivated judgment, combined with other advantages, social and personal. We always prefer to see Mr. Hudson exerting his agreeable talents in light English comedy parts, and we are sure he would have been equally effective, in the present instance, had he personated some sea-side town adventurer instead of Captain Mountgarret—a capital name, by the way. Commend us more especially to Mr. Buckstone, who, as a visitor to Margate, appears in yellow slippers, a straw hat, and a white paletot, lined with plaid His conceit of making the most of his time by bathing twelve times a day, and only going to bed to dry himself, was amazingly comical, and highly relished. There was also a very lively scene of the tea-gardens, with a swing at work, vocalists singing in the orchestra, and guests feasting in the bowers. Although not altogether, we repeat, so effective as Mr. Bernard's plays in general, yet "The Fortune Hunter" caused great laughter; and a neat "tag" was delivered by Mr. Hudson amidst general applause. Taking the sense of the house, the piece is entirely successful.

A three act comedy, by Mr. Planché, called "Queen Mary's Bower," is announced for representation on Saturday.

LYCEUM.

A two act farce called "Which Mr. Smith," adapted from the French vaudeville "L'Almanach de 25,000 Adresses," was produced here on Thursday evening. We are prevented from press of matter from saying more this week than that it was perfectly successful: in our next the plot and acting shall receive proper consideration.

M. Laurent has opened the Adelaide Gallery, as we stated, for a Concert and Ball, on a similar plan to that followed at the Salle Valentino, in Paris. All the steam-guns and electrifying machines have been cleared away: the body of the room, tastefully fitted up, is reserved for dancing, and the galleries are set apart for spectators. Admirable order is maintained by some half-dozen masters of the ceremonies; and refreshments, in the shape of sherry-coblers and other suitable beverages, may be obtained at fair prices. The band is well chosen, and the selection of music excellent; so that altogether we think "Laurent's Casino," as it is termed, is likely to become the most popular resort of the dance-loving jeunes gens of the metropolis during the ensuing winter. There is no reason why an establishment of this kind should not be as well managed in London as in Paris; nor is it necessary that the very moderate price of admission, which is a shilling, should bring with it a questionable company, provided the same order be enforced which the directors appear most anxious to preserve

The Tableaux Vivans appear to be as popular in Paris as in London. By a number of the Entr' acte before us, we see that twelve English artistes are embodying different groups at the Porte St. Martin Theatre. At the same theatre a drama called "Le Docteur Noir," in which Frederick Lemaitre plays the chief character, has proved an immense hit. "Clarissa Harlowe" is still drawing at the Gymnase: and the "Marché de Londres" at the Ambigu-Comique. In the latter piece one of the characters is christened Tom-Bob, a droll instance of French ignorance of our most common names. "Le Temple de Salomon" is a scriptural drama at the Gaité; and the Centrifugal Railway is the great concluding effect [illegible] the Hippodrome Rousseau's "Nouvelle Heloise" has been dramatized at t[illegible] Vaudeville for Madame Albert, who plays Julie. It is said that Mendelssohn is writing some choruses to the terrible drama of Dumas, "Le Tour de Nesle."

The Jockey Club piece underlined at the Adelphi is a translation of a French piece "Le Sport du Turf."

Mr. Honner has lowered the prices of the City of London Theatre to a shilling to the boxes, sixpence to the pit, and threepence to the gallery. This is to be regretted, but the manager says he has been driven to it by competition.

MUSIC.

OPERA AT DRURY-LANE THEATRE, AND DEBUT OF MADAME ANNA BISHOP.

Mr. Bunn commenced his operatic campaign on Saturday night, with Benedict's "Crusaders" and a new ballet. Our speciality is for matters musical, and the Lessee seems resolved that the critics in this department shall not enjoy much [illegible]pose during the season, as three new works will be produced before the month of January, by Lavenu, Balfe, and Wallace. "The Crusaders" was given on Saturday and Wednesday evenings, Wallace's "Maritana" on Monday, and Balfe's "Bohemian Girl" on Tuesday. With the varied merits of these operas, the whole town is familiar, and criticism is quite unnecessary. The principal parts have exhibited no change—Misses Romer, Rainforth, Poole; Messrs. Harrison, King, Weiss, Stretton, and Borrani resuming their former parts. In the singing of the National Anthem, on the opening night, Miss Messent, a pupil of the Royal Academy of Music, gave evidence of promise in one of the verses, although she was very nervous. We must award praise to Miss Poole for the unaffected style with which she sang her solo; and Miss Rainforth's verse, for its beautiful enunciation, would have claimed unqualified eulogium had she not ruined the conclusion by the conventional shake with which our vocalists have been habituated to disfigure our National Anthem.

The new arrangement of the orchestra is well calculated for sound, but an increase of stringed instruments is sadly wanting to contend against the weight of the brass and wood bands. Signor Schira, the Conductor, must, however, not take the movements at such a railroad speed, and will have a hard battle to subdue the accompaniments, but if he be firm he must succeed, and will earn golden opinions. We find that when Mr. Hughes conducts for the ballet, that the orchestra goes better, and this is an intelligible hint for Signor Schira. The choruses, also, require Mr. Tully's careful drilling. Allowances, however, must be made for the beginning of a season, as the forces are not, for some time, in proper working order. Whilst we freely admit that the present Lessee is about the only person capable of keeping the theatre together, we cannot disguise the fact that we are as yet far from having a really efficient lyrical establishment. It will depend upon the support given by the public to Mr. Bunn, whether he will extend his exertions. Our confidence in his disposition, skill, and judgment, is great; but as there is no grant from Government to uphold music in this country, the amateurs who desire to see one great lyrical theatre in London, must be liberal in their encouragement, and then new singers, so much wanted, will spring up, and orchestral improvements may be ventured upon.

The great event, as yet, has been the debût of Mdme. Anna Bishop. This vocalist is the daughter of Mr. Riviere, an eminent teacher of drawing, and first began her musical studies at the Royal Academy of Music. She was first destined as a pianiste. Her first essay as a singer was at Mr. Ella's Soirées Musicales, in 1830. In 1834, she was married to Sir H. R. Bishop, then Mr. Bishop. In May, 1836, Mr. Bishop gave his first Concert at the Hanover Square Rooms, the very day that Balfe's "Maid of Artois" was produced for Malibran; she little thought that, ten years afterwards, she was to be the successor of that great artista, in the same part and on the same boards. In 1838, Mrs. Bishop sustained the principal part in the Earl of Westmoreland's Italian opera of "Il Torneo" her first appearance on any stage. In this work, Miss Fanny Wyndham, now Madame F. Lablache, also played a part. It was Madame Bishop's success in "Il Torneo," at the St. James's Theatre, before a brilliant assemblage of rank and fashion, that turned her attention to the stage; but the opposition of Sir H. R. Bishop to her wishes, finally led to a separation. In 1839, she sang in character at Bochsa's Dramatic Concert at the Opera House, with great success, although Grisi, Persiani, and Pauline Viardot Garcia sang at the same entertainment. In the autumn of 1839, Madame Bishop went abroad, and only returned this year. She gave Concerts or played in Copenhagen, Stockholm (1840), St. Petersburgh, Dorpat, Mittau, Riga, Moscow (1841), Novogorod, Kasan, the capital of Tartary; Odessa, Yassi, in Moldavia; Lemberg, Krakovia, Brunn, Vienna (1842), Presburg, Pesth, Raab, Carlsbad, Frankfort, Mayence, Darmstadt, Manheim, Munich, Innspruck, Trieste; and, from 1839 to 1843, she gave 260 Concerts. In the beginning of 1843, her career in Italy began at Verona. From thence, she sang at Padua, Venice, Rovigo, Ferrara, Florence, Rome, and Naples. In this last-mentioned capital, her success was most brilliant. She was engaged for upwards of two years as prima donna at the San Carlo and the Fondo, at which she sang 327 times; her chief operas being "Otello," "L'Elisir d'Amore," "La Sonnambula," "Beatrice di Tenda," "Il Barbiere di Siviglia," "I Due Foscari," "Roberto Devereux," "La Fidanzata Corsa," &c. At Rome, she played Amina and Lucia for twenty-four consecutive nights. She closed at Naples, Sept. 9, 1845; and since then appeared at the Scala, in Milan; but, in consequence of the opposition given by the public to all the artists engaged by Merelli, a most unpopular director, Madame Bishop left for Palermo, where she sang in Nov. 1845; and then visited Switzerland, Germany, and Belgium. Madame Bishop has been elected a member of all the great European musical societies. Such were her antecedents up to her appearance on Thursday night, in Balfe's "Maid of Artois," of which we have now to treat.

This opera was first produced on the 27th of May, 1836, Malibran sustaining the part of Isoline, the Maid of Artois. Miss Poole, Miss F. Healey, Messrs. Templeton, H. Phillips, E. Seguin, Bedford, and the late Giubilei were included in the cast. Miss Romer, after Malibran's death, has played Malibran's part; but, as it is now some years since the opera has been played, a slight sketch of the incidents may be desirable. The first act is in Paris, where the Maid of Artois has been conveyed by force, by the Marquis de Château-Vieux, to the great grief of herself and lover, Jules de Montangon, who follows her to the French capital; and, reduced to the utmost state of destitution, is enlisted by Sergeant Sans Regret into the Marquis's regiment. Jules meeting Coralie, an attendant of Isoline, is informed of the locality where she is detained. An interview takes place between the lovers, and they are about to fly, when the Marquis enters; and, in a struggle between him and Jules, the former is wounded. Isoline, by a desperate effort, seizes the deed of enlistment, but as Jules has already assumed the uniform, he is arrested for mutiny, and torn away from Isoline, thus ending the first act. In the second, which passes in a French colony, Jules is discovered as a convict, for having stabbed his superior officer. Isoline, disguised in male attire, arrives in Guiana, to share her lover's fate, or, if possible, to free him. The escape is managed, by the aid of Ninka, a negress, after a series of perils, from the fortress to the deserts, the new Governor of the colony, the Marquis, arriving at the end of the act.

The last act passes in the deserts of Guiana, and is highly effective in its dramatic situations. Jules and Isoline are discovered alone in this vast expanse of moving sand: he was wounded in his flight by a sentinel, and from loss of blood lies exhausted on the dreary waste. Isoline, by giving him the last drop of water from the flask, is gladdened by his returning animation; but thirst, the plague of the desert, then attacks her, and she swoons with the horrible sufferings. Just as the lovers are about to perish together, the sound of a distant march is heard, and a procession at length enters, in which is the faithful Ninka, who administers restoratives, and, after an appeal to the humanity of the newly-arrived Governor, the Marquis, he relents, and joins the hands of Jules and the Maid of Artois.

It will be imagined that the entire interest of this drama falls on the prima donna, who sustains Isoline; and with energetic acting on her part, the incidents tell powerfully on the audience. The sensation created by Malibran in the last act was indeed electrical; and when she poured forth the finale at the close, the burst of vocalisation was wondrous. For Madame Anna Bishop the music has been re-written by the composer. This was absolutely requisite, as Malibran's most effective notes were those in the contralto register, and Balfe composed especially for her qualifications. He has done the same for Madame Bishop, whose organ is that now rare one, a pure soprano sfogato, extending from F in the first space up to E flat in alt. Her articulation of the high notes, G, A, B, and C, is not a scream, nor are they drowned by orchestral noise, but are distinctly sung, and given at her will, either p p or f f. For this voice, Balfe has necessarily been compelled to change the concerted pieces in which she sings, and he has also composed afresh all the soli for Isoline save the finale.

Madame Bishop's reception was most rapturous She was called for at the close of the first act, and at the termination of the opera, and the shower of bouquets was immense. She achieved a legitimate triumph by the force of her talent, and she takes her place at the head of English vocalists; but she has unquestionably a serious drawback in the want of physical power. Her style of singing is perfect; nothing can be more beautiful than her method of delivering the notes, but in excited situations, her stamina will not carry her through, without inspiring to the hearer painful anticipations of a break down. Her intonation is generally unexceptionable, and her execution of scales marked with an astounding precision. As an actress, she has dramatic feeling and impulse, but her speaking voice is so much against her, that she ought always to sing re[illegible]tive. She was encored in the last movement of the opening scena, "The heart that once has fondly teemed," in which the beauty of her shake was particularly conspicuous. In the duo with Borrani, "Oh, leave me not thus lonely," and in a new and well-designed trio, "My bosom with hope," her voice told exquisitely: indeed, in all the concerted music, she was indefatigable, and never missed a phrase of beauty. The new ballad of "Oh! what a charm it is to dwell," is a charming composition; but she did not create the sensation in it that might have been anticipated. Some passages of the duo between her and Harrison, in the second act, "And do these arms thy form then clasp," were finely rendered; but it was in the last act that Madame Bishop's genius was developed fully. Her reading of the great scena in the desert was superb, whether regarded histrionically or vocally. The deep pathos with which she sang the concluding prayer, as she sinks exhausted to the ground, produced the most thrilling sensations. She did not rattle forth the finale, "The rapture dwelling," as we have heard Malibran, or her gifted sister, Pauline Viardot Garcia; but it was a brilliant effort without power, quite marvellous as to the divisions that she accomplished, but exciting apprehensions for the fragile form that was emitting such wondrous sounds. Madame Bishop is rather under the middle height, with raven locks, and a flashing eye, and, in her varied costumes of the Parisian Dame, of the Sailor, and the Sister of Charity, looked remarkably well. Altogether, she is a most welcome addition to our lyrical stage; and we may now truly boast of having a prima donna who can really sing.

Mr. Borrani was the Marquis de Château-Vieux; and was encored in the "Light of other Days," transposed a note lower for him. The cornet-à-piston was but indifferent in the accompaniment. Borrani might strive and render himself less absurd in face and figure, for he has a fine voice. Mr. Harrison's Jules evinced signs of improvement in his acting; and, if less boisterous in his singing, he would be still more acceptable. When he sings sotto voce, he produces the greatest effects. Burdini was the Sergeant; Weiss, Synnelet; and F. Jones, Martin. Miss Isaacs, who comes from Manchester, was animated in Ninka, the Negress, but is somewhat coarse. Grieve's scene of the "Desert" was deservedly applauded. The house was quite full.

Sacred Harmonic Society.—The season at Exeter Hall opens on the 4th of November with Spohr's "Last Judgment."

MUSICAL CHIT-CHAT.

Promenade Concerts.—Laurent's Casino, at the Royal Adelaide Gallery, opened on Monday last with a series of Soirées Musicales and Dansantes. An excellent orchestra has been engaged, comprising the talents of Grattan Cooke, Patey, Paton, Pratten, Winterbottom, Carte, Maycock, Laurent, jun., Shargool, Sedgwick, &c., with Miss Clairton, Messers Binge, J. Roe, and Sharpe, as vocalists.—Mr. Allcroft begins his Vocal and Promenade Concerts on the 16th of November at the Lyceum Theatre M. Jullien commences at Covent Garden Theatre on Oct. 26, and will continue until the first week in December, when the extensive alterations for the Italian Opera season, in 1847, will immediately be made; and, as the interior is to be entirely re-constructed, at least three or four months will be required for the architect, decorators, and upholsterer.—Mr. Weippert's Soirées Dansantes commenced on Monday last at the Princess Concert-room, and passed off with great spirit. There is an admirable band, conducted by Mr Weippert, with Zerbini as leader, and aided by Collinet, Handley, Prospère, Egerton, &c.

Mr. H. Phillips.—This vocalist gave his entertainment "Extracts from Operas," on Monday last, at the Mile-end Beaumont Institution. After visiting the north and south of England, he will return to London at Christmas for the season.

GOSSIP OF THE WEEK.

The Duke of Wellington himself has long been designated "the Iron Duke;" his colossal effigy will, we opine, rejoice hereafter in the title of "the Bronze Duke," par excellence. There he sits (the Bronze Duke, we mean) before Apsley House,

> In shape and gesture proudly eminent, and seems to challenge the admiration of the crowds that throng beneath him; invited each to give his mite towards the mass of public opinion that, we are told, is to determine whether the Duke is to keep his place or not. Fortunately, statues are not amenable to political movements; and if universal suffrage is to carry the day, the general verdict of the masses seems likely to be,

> Sedet, æternum que sede bit.

Chaucer, "the morning star of English song," as he has been rightly termed, celebrated in his archaic lays, among other things and personages,

> The wondrous horse of brass
> On which the Tartar King did ride;

and Milton, the noon-day sun of our poetry, wished, in his "Penserosa," that the old bard could be called back to life, to complete his story respecting the said steed, and other half-told marvels.

We, too, heartily wish that the tuneful patriarch could re-appear;

> We'd give full many a modern strain,
> Dan Chaucer were alive again;

but instead of requesting him to resume his old English lay respecting the old "horse of brass" that used to adorn Tartary, we should implore him to try our more modern and intelligible dialect; and beg him to devote his muse to the still "more wondrous" steed that shines aloft on Constitution Hill, and on which rides an English hero, in whom every enemy that encountered him caught a most decided Tartar.

Had anything like such a statue of such a man been set up in ancient times, what a flood of Dithyiambic and Ode would have been poured out on the occasion. Pindar would have strung together Strophe, Antistrophe, and Epode, giving four or five fine lines to the subject, and four or five hundred to some obscure point in the genealogy of some seventeenth cousin of the Duke's great uncle. Horace would have spun sententious Alcaics and lively Sapphics by the score, on such a lordly theme. Our Muses are, however, silent. We have but one song on the occasion to lay before our readers. It is the production of an old Chelsea Pensioner (not Mr. Gleig's), who came, with some of his comrades, to look at their old General.

Suetonius, and other classic writers, have preserved for us some snatches of the songs which the Roman soldiers used to sing round the triumphal cars of their commanders. They are rough, but emphatic; and the stanzas of our Waterloo Medalist, on the Testimonial to the Great Captain of the age, are decidedly of a similar character.

THE CHELSEA VETERANS' COURT-MARTIAL ON THE DUKE'S STATUE.

Air—"Darby Kelly, oh"

Come, boys, let's march,
To view the Arch,
Where sits in state our hero, oh
Who won the day
At red Assaye,
Likewise at Talavera, oh.
From Indian seas,
From the Pyrenees,
From Spain, and France, and Flanders, oh,
The voice of Fame
Repeats his name—
Our first of all commanders, oh!

Aye, there's the Duke,
W[illegible]
He had at Waterloo, my boys;
I saw him there,
When to our square
He rode, and cried "Stand true, my boys."
The Frenchmen's shot
For hours came hot,
The cuirassiers charged fast, my boys;
But we'd no fear,
For the Duke was near,
And we knew we'd win at last, my boys.

God bless his Grace!
To see that face
Has cheered me oft in Spain, my boys;
When fast as foes
Against us rose,
We beat them back again, my boys.
Oh, great and small,
He thrashed them all—
The Duke was quite impartial, oh!
And their Emperor's self
He laid on the shelf,
Having first disposed of each Marshal, oh!

What's this they prate?
Is the horse too great?
Think what he's got to bear, my boys:
The Duke's renown
Might well break down
A stouter steed than's there, my boys.
No place too high
For his Grace, say I—
Where's he that dare deny it, oh?
So, boys, draw near,
With a hearty cheer,
For Wellington and Wyatt, oh!

While the appeal to public opinion has been going on at the West End, respecting the propriety of the Duke's remaining at the top of the Arch, a smart contest has been waged (on Monday and Tuesday) at the East End, respecting the propriety of Alderman Wood's remaining at the head of the poll, where he was placed at the end of last week in the contest for the Mayoralty. Charges, too unpleasant and too serious to joke about, were freely and strenuously urged against the persevering, but oft-baffled, aspirant to civic supremacy; and eventually his rival, Carroll, collared him at the chair, and won by a nose. We beg to say that we speak metaphorically, and merely mean that Carroll, after being in a minority till the last hour of the last day, ultimately won by a majority of nine; which, in jockey phraseology, is equivalent to our first statement. The result of the election verifies the old saying, "Ex quovis ligno non fit Mercurius;" which we should translate, "It is not every Wood that can make a Lord Mayor."

There were three other Aldermen named in the voting. Alderman Moon was one of them, and had the splendid number of three votes. Certainly, whoever it was that put him up against his will, the Moon was on this occasion produced only to be eclipsed. We hope that when the worthy Alderman himself stands forward, we shall be enabled to welcome him prophetically to the air of "Rise, gentle Moon," and see him in full effulgence.

A real new celestial luminary is now exciting the attention of the scientific world. Our system is enriched, as M. Arago terms it, with a new Planet; but as the great acquisition keeps itself about three millions of miles beyond the orbit of our earth, we fear we shall have some difficulty in realising our share of increase of opulence which the Illustrious Stranger is supposed to confer on its brother Planets.

There are some rather amusing details in the correspondence of Herschel, Galle, Arago, and others respecting the mode in which this new Vagrant of the Heavens was detected. Poor old Uranus, who had been previously supposed to be the last, though not the least of the circulars round our sun, had been of late observed by several astronomers to be very much out of order. Indeed, the worthy old Planet's perturbations were such as to be wholly unaccountable, and it was evident that they did not originate from the legitimate influences over him of any of his ancient companions. Sir John Herschell tells us that he asked M. Bessel "to discover the position of the unknown body, in order that a hue and cry might be raised after it." We suppose that the philosophical "hutesius et clamor," ran somewhat thus.—

> Tell me, Savans, have you seen
> A Planet pass this way—
> C[illegible] been,
> A[illegible]way?

For in those regions the [illegible] Uranus's supposed delinquencies was at last [illegible] We [illegible] that the [illegible] of the [illegible] is now [illegible] to have been perfectly correct, [illegible] his apparent deviations from the right path are quite satisf[illegible] accounted for.

The Command of the South-Western District in Ireland.—His Royal Highness Prince George of Cambridge arrived in Dublin, on Tuesday morning from London, en route to Limerick, there to assume the command of the south-western district, in succession to Major-General Lord Downes.

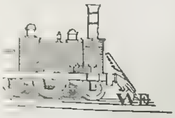
No. XIV.

RAMSGATE, ITS RESOURCES AND PROSPECTS.



BELIEVE there is not a greater popular delusion suffered to go unchallenged, than that English seaside watering places are pleasant spots to emigrate to. We have been undergoing transportation for seven days to the penal settlement of Ramsgate, and never before suffered, we expect in common with everybody else, from such a ghastly gasping after the belief that we were having "a delightful visit" as during that time.

It is not secluded: we can stand solitude to any extent, and glory in the seaside paradise of shooting jackets, starfish, no straps, periwinkles, wet feet, seaweed, and coloured shirts beyond all enjoyment. It is certainly not lively. The most strenuous efforts of a few strong-minded individuals could not turn Sackett's library into a ball room; and there is something comically dreary in the afternoon turn-out upon the pier "to see the boat come in," an exciting spectacle which may be witnessed every minute at Hungerford Market or London-bridge, and much better got up. The struggle to combine Regent-street with relaxation is a painful failure; and we must confess our only excitement was being permitted to ride a kicking donkey, to Pegwell-bay, in old clothes. This was real enjoyment. At least we thought so; so did our colleagues; and two or three pairs of marvellous eyes, who accompanied us, expressed the same opinion. But you would never have forgotten the looks of the fine old dismal conventional Ramsgatonians, who go there every year because they were there the last, had you seen them. It required the greatest moral courage to face their scowls, as well as the recommendations of the boys to "get inside."

The measure of Ramsgate revelry is divided into four goes of excitement, viz Going on the Sands; Going out Sailing; Going on the Pier - and Going to Sackett's.

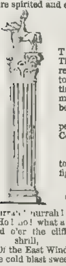
Going on the Sands, is a weak pastime, principally confined to watching children bury one another in the sand with small wooden spades a performance which, like a pantomime, however interesting on first representation, somewhat flags in interest on repetition. The sands, however, have one advantage to the youthful labourers. Like a slate, the sea washes out all they have done every tide, and leaves them a fresh surface to begin upon. The most popular operation was that of digging a hole, and then triumphantly sitting with their feet in it, or making a circular trench, and erecting a fort in the middle. A few many-seasoned novels were employed as weapons to kill the time so long looked forward to. Arm chairs were quoted at a penny the session; and spades fetched fourpence at the adjacent wonderful bazaars of other things that nobody can by any possibility ever want in any position of social or public existence.

Going out Sailing, is also a slow business—slower than a few friends after a dinner party for a carpet polka, or a good old standard comedy, or a wedding breakfast, or the outside half of yesterday's Times, or a Charing-cross and Bank omnibus and that is saying a good deal. On the mornings on which we saw the "pleasure"-boats depart, there was not a breath of wind, in spite of the frantic efforts of the crew to raise it. The boat was announced "To sail for two hours. Fare, there and back, eighteen pence." This bringing down time to absolute distance was very novel, and gave us some hopes that "the middle of next week"—a position people are often threatened to be kicked into might be a more tangible locality than we have hitherto supposed it to be.

Going on the Pier is really sad. The pastime consists in putting on gay attire, and then walking up and down to stare at your fellow exiles, and assume a supercilious expression towards all whom you do not know. The Pier is the chief straw that the sinking ennuyes clutch at. An emigrant ship—we believe from Genoa—had put into the harbour during our stay. It is impossible to conceive a more squalid scene of dirt, misery, and wretchedness than it presented; pigs, poultry, and human animals; children gnawing bones, and women cooking unknown refuse in pipkins for food, all huddled together; but this appeared to be the great attraction, and here did the company congregate. But when the boat had come in, and they had seen the emigrants, nothing remained to do, and they all wandered back again to yawn and wish it was dinner time.

Going to Sackett's winds up the day; and the excitement here consists in spending shillings you can find other uses for, in chances for things you can turn to no use at all. A gentleman at the piano sang "Come, let's be gay," and laughed the chorus; and a boy, as sharp as the American's "little end of nothing shaved down to a point," pursued you incessantly, with a request that you would sign a paper and make one for a tea-caddy, as though he had been a demon after your soul. It was difficult to find out what costume ought to be observed, although everybody evidently strove after an effect of some kind. One young gentleman in a flimsy moustache, a frock coat, and a white neckcloth, evidently went in for a compromise between various styles of morning, evening, and military toilette. When you had spent as much money as you pleased, you came away. If you had got no ticket you were cross; if you had won any you were awake at night thinking what you should take out.

Two things certainly were first rate: the instrumental music at Sackett's, and the comforts at Hiscock's Hotel: we may state this without running the risk of advertisement duty. But, great reform is needed at Ramsgate, or the spirit of the visitors will get far before it. A stout crusade must be made next year against the whole programme of old conventional amusements; and something a little more spirited and entertaining substituted for them.



THE TESTIMONIAL MANIA.

T appears that the last epidemic is that of erecting statues. This has already broken out in the City, where several highly respectable individuals have been accused of wishing their busts to be lugged, head and shoulders, into the Mansion House. As the scarcity of subjects, however, has rendered it necessary to make, in some instances, two statues of the same individual, we beg to propose the following:

Allegorical group: Faith, Hope, and Charity: representing a person treating a poor friend to a return ticket for the Eastern Counties Railway.

A Bust of a Boiler on the same line

A monumental tablet, inscribed with the name of Mr. Brown, to commemorate his spirited conduct in paying for it. A small figure of Modesty—perfectly unique.

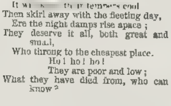
THE SONG OF THE DEMONS

OF THE THIRD-CLASS CARRIAGES ON THE SOUTH-EASTERN RAILWAY

Hurrah! hurrah! here are more to kill
Ho! ho! what a goodly crowd!
And o'er the cliff comes the whistle shrill,
Of the East Wind, sharp and loud.
The cold blast sweeps down the chalky steeps,
And shatters each panting chest;
But what care we who the car-people be,
They might go, an' they chose, with the best.
Ho! ho! ho!
On they go—
Sooner or later we'll lay them low.

Come on—come on—on the frost-wind's wing,
Here's another open train!
And sow, with the storm, in each fragile form,
The seeds of disease and pain.
And wither the baby's quivering frame,
And fetter the pulse of age;
And in demon whirl, round the fever-lipp'd girl
The war with her quick breath wage.
Ho! ho! ho!
On they go—
Ours the powers that lay them low.

Sweep down in rain, on the penny train,
Make every seat a pool;



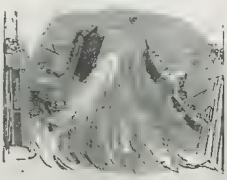
And drench to the skin the mean hearts [illegible],
It will [illegible] their tempers cool
Then skirl away with the fleeting day,
Ere the night damps rise apace;
They deserve it all, both great and small,
Who throng to the cheapest place.
Ho! ho! ho!
They are poor and low;
What they have died from, who can know?

OUR BOULOGNE COMMISSIONER

tells us of a pleasing style of advertising tables d'hôtes lately adopted there, which he calls the advertisements a la maitre d'hotel. The table, at which the ordinary is to take place, is set out in great style, in a room on the ground floor, near the foot-path, with open windows, so that strangers may look in and say, "This looks well; I think we will dine here to-day." Preparations are made as for a large company, which, alas! is sometimes found to end in six; and the banquet, in the morning, has the air of a stage feast, apples and vases being in abundance. Great pains are taken with the napkins, and we sketch the most popular fashion.

It is folded backwards and forwards, like the paper which the ingenious race-course wizard turns into a salt-cellar, a sentry-box, and a church-window; and then is stuck into a tumbler and allowed to fall over the side. The brains of the waiters are taxed to produce fresh forms, there is often much talent hidden in a napkin.

We ourselves present our readers with the following sketch, which may be relied upon, of



THE "MAGICIAN" AND "QUEEN OF THE FRENCH" LEAVING BOULOGNE HARBOUR LAST TUESDAY

We have frequently heard of the ups and downs of life, but never practically experienced them until the morning in question. With the majority of passengers the ups appeared to have the preponderance.

GOLD; OR, THE HALF-BROTHERS.

BY CAMILLA TOULMIN.

CHAPTER XII.

Susan Clifford had recovered her health and good looks, and something more than her former tone of mind. By dint of many persevering efforts, she had obtained a temporary engagement in the country, and had left home, accompanied by her mother, to fulfil it. Meanwhile, Mrs. Sefton and Margaret, on whom Trevor's mother already looked as a dear child—and whose character developing itself to her understanding, had won its sanction in addition to the love which for her son's sake she had been willing to bestow—remained in town; with poor Hester still under the same roof, the trio living, for the present at all events, as one family.

"Letters from Madeira!" was the joyous exclamation of Mrs. Sefton, as she met Margaret almost at the door one day on her return from her daily duties, and the latter knew by the tone of the mother's voice that Trevor was at least well, that the news could not be very bad. "But I am a little jealous," added Mrs. Sefton, with a smile; "yours is much the thicker of the two, quite a packet in fact; and I am all impatience to know if it contain any additional intelligence, or is only"——

"Nonsense!" said Margaret, filling up a moment's pause with an interjectional common-place, but expressing a world of sympathy and emotion in an affectionate kiss.

It would be an unpardonable breach of most sacred confidence to reveal the contents of the letter which Margaret received with a trembling hand, and hastened to her own chamber to peruse; but it may just be hinted that its bulk was most certainly increased by a minute description of the events which are recorded in a preceding chapter, not omitting the singular discovery of the identity of Mr. Geoffrey Smith with Hester's early lover. To Margaret, as to some "other self," he poured out those details which made up the sum of his trying position; leaving to her discretion to repeat them to his beloved mother, according as she should judge if the confidence would be to her an additional care, or a consolation to herself. Margaret felt that it must prove both, and yet judged rightly for all parties by making to Mrs. Sefton a full disclosure. She had already learned the outline of Hester's story, and be sure this strange filling up neither lessened her interest in that stricken being, nor indisposed her to endure the fitful fancies and harmless eccentricities of which she was now so often a witness.

And the talk over Trevor's letter had delayed the opening of one which lay on the table for a full hour unregarded, though its contents proved scarcely less important! The post-mark was faint and blurred, and nobody had guessed that it came from Susan. The hand-writing was bolder and larger than hers had ever seemed before; nay, the very letters had taken eccentric forms, sprawling this way and that, as if in an intoxication of freedom. And truly, the hand which formed them had reeled with new and unexpected delight. Many persons profess to judge a stranger's character, and even acquirements, by his handwriting; and I will not gainsay a power I have seen most strangely exemplified. And this I know, that, by a kindred but commoner instinct—for it is hardly knowledge—we may always judge of the mood in which the pen has been guided by those with whose writing we are intimately acquainted.

Susan's letter contained but a few sentences; not more than might easily have been compressed within the smallest gilt-edged flower-bordered sheet that ever winged its way from the warehouse of Dobbs or of De la Rue; but she had chosen one of the largest letter-paper, and had covered it with her few, but joyously unsteady, hieroglyphics. And the glad tidings? They were that a new era had opened in her existence—that she was no longer the toiling automaton—the fourth-rate drudge; but that she had been proclaimed the Interpreter of Passion—the Actress of Genius!

If the letter had been penned with trembling fingers, with not less emotion was it perused by Margaret. Hers was that quiet wisdom, not eloquent of words, but deep and true, piercing by its intuitive sense to the facts of things; and, while her heart overflowed in joyful grateful tears, as she leaned her head on Mrs. Sefton's shoulder, and sank into her open arms, it was with broken sentences that she made her understand how the change must have worked. For Margaret knew that it was the torch of Suffering which had carried light into her sister's soul; which had kindled to Genius the dormant powers of her mind!

The next day brought a calmer letter; but one which only repeated, with more minuteness, the particulars of her success. It told how managers of various theatres had journeyed from far and near to witness her performance, and how their munificent offers had taught her already to appreciate the value of her services "But," she added, with that high-toned feeling which, alas! does not always abide with the prosperous, "here I shall remain for a month or six weeks at least. I do not forget that dear good Mr. C—— (who cancelled the agreement by which he might have bound me, and trebled my salary the morning after my first appearance) was the only one of these fine gentlemen who had the discrimination—ahem! vanity, you will say, but I am getting very vain—was the only one who had the discrimination to guess at my ability, or who was willing to give a poor, obscure, and struggling girl a chance. I know not which might be the moving influence; perhaps they both combined; and for either or both I owe him a debt of gratitude, which I trust I may never grow so heartless as to forget. Meanwhile, his treasury must be the first I fill. Come to me, Margaret," she continued, "you must come and witness my triumph, and Catherine, for she too will rejoice in it."

How sweet it was for Margaret to have, at such a time, so dear a counsellor as Mrs. Sefton! One who united with the years and experience of a mother the warm, right sympathies which are too often corroded or chilled by the harsh contact of the world, or the cold hand of Time. She, like Margaret, could see, though, perhaps, but dimly at first, the vista which was opening for them; and could divine how much of the cloud of their destiny would be raised, and how much of light would stream in, at the touch of the magician Gold.

"Let us go, by all means," said Mrs. Sefton; "let us all go. It is the opportunity for which we have so often longed of trying what change of scene might effect for poor Hester. And what could be more likely to rouse her mind from its apathy than participating in this success of her sister?"

"We can afford it too!" exclaimed Margaret, and the phrase from her lips was full of meaning; for she knew that the fable of the Dead Sea Apples is seldom more fully realised then when the poor and struggling snatch at a pleasure, a recreation, an "appearance" beyond their means. "We can afford it" she said, "for not only does this banker's draft from Susan relieve us of all present cares, but her engagements for the next few weeks will bring in a revenue of a year's income." And, literally oppressed with the prospect of ease before them, again she burst into tears. That Catherine Joyce, however, should also be of the party was hoped for by both, and the next day it was proposed. She had already rejoiced in the rejoicings of her friends, and now she pronounced herself "stupid" for not having been the one to originate the excursion to M——.

"Go with you," she exclaimed, and, clapping her hands with almost childish glee, "Yes, and be delighted. And do you know" she added "a week's absence from home just now will be the most charming thing in the world. Nay, my dear Margaret, don't look so grave or frightened; I have not quarrelled with mamma, or become wearied of my little sisters, or, I believe, done any of the naughty things for which you used to scold me,—but—but I have got another love affair on my hands, and sadly want something to ruffle the course of it." As she spoke she sank into her chair with a mock gravity that melted quickly into a smile, and convinced Margaret that whatever the confidence which was coming might be, it was of a very different nature from the not-to-be-forgotten scene of the preceding year. There was something, however, which jarred upon her feelings when she grew to understand the real state of the case, and that her friend was receiving, if not encouraging, very devoted attentions from the brother of Trevor Sefton, and this without entertaining the remotest idea of rewarding them with her hand—should he ask it. It is true that Catherine's conduct appeared more mysterious than it really was; since she respected her father's secret too much to betray that his entreaty had been the original spring of her actions.

It is not worth while to dwell on the journey to M——, undertaken so hurriedly, that the enjoyments of many sorts which it involved seemed, when they were passed, like a dream. Two incidents, however, must be mentioned. The first was that from one of those long corridors so often found in hotels, Catherine and Margaret beheld—themselves being in deep shadow—Mr. Frederick Drayton, as he descended the wide well-lighted staircase of the hotel, at which they halted for an hour or two, while waiting to be conveyed the last stage of their journey. He was attired, as usual, in an ultra style of fashion, and wore the brightest of polished leather boots, and the most delicate of lemon-colour gloves. That, from behind the curtains of their private box, they looked round at night to discover if he were in the theatre, displayed, I think, only a pardonable curiosity.

The second incident, however, and one which interested them infinitely more, was the effect that Susan's powerful acting produced upon her sister. Hester's eye kindled with a light which had not been seen there for many years; and, though she trembled with emotion, and even shed tears, her expressions were full of appreciation and of delight; and when she spoke of Susan's altered prospects, her words displayed a degree of good sense, which her friends had looked upon as departed for ever!

THE "GREAT BRITAIN" STEAMER.

We are sorry to say that the efforts made to extricate this splendid vessel have, for the present at least, proved abortive. According to the latest intelligence it blew so strongly into Dundrum Bay on Tuesday, and the surf ran so high upon the beach, that no attempt was or could be made to get the Great Britain off.

As this was the highest tide, all further attempts to float the vessel have been abandoned until the next springs, which will not be until the 3rd and 4th of November. The vessel on Tuesday was carried higher up on the beach, and is now embedded in hard sand. Persons can walk round her, and horses and carts can approach on either side. It appears that Captain Hosken will take every advantage during the three weeks which will intervene between this and the next springs, to lighten the vessel as much as possible, by taking out everything on board, including as much of the machinery as can be removed without opening any part of the decks. Men will be employed also in stopping the leaks, which, no doubt, have retarded the exertions made since Saturday to get her off, for, as fast as the tide rose, water came in, and the pumps could not keep her free. For carrying on the next operations, therefore—stopping the leaks and lightening the vessel her present position on the beach is favourable.

On Tuesday, steam tugs were unable to approach within two miles of her, and then the gale came on so furiously that they had to take shelter in the bays along the coast. The Dreadnought started for Liverpool towards nightfall, and was the first to bring the intelligence that, until the next spring tides, no further efforts can be made to get the vessel off.

Another account says:—"The Great Britain must now winter in Dundrum Bay, and such, according to the best information we can obtain, is the intention of her commander. She now occupies a most favourable position for this purpose, having during the gale of Tuesday been carried so far up the beach that in ordinary tides she will be out of danger from the sea. At low water she will be left high and dry, and, happily, upon a hard sandy beach, where there is little chance of her being imbadded. Her bearing is now N.N.W. to S.S.E., and according to the information of a competent judge she does not appear strained

"In the meantime every preparation will be made to render the position of the ship secure. The erection of a breakwater for her protection is said to be contemplated: and measures will be taken to repair the leak which has proved so disastrous to the fortunes of the ship."

The following letters in reference to the Great Britain, were posted in the Underwriters' Rooms, Liverpool, on Wednesday

Great Britain Steam-ship, Oct 5.

Dear Sir,—My letter of yesterday and the weather of last night, if you have had the same, will [illegible] prepared you for what I have now to acquaint you. As the tide rose the sea in[illegible] and about seven o'clock we found the ship making much water; worked the pumps [illegible]. The anchors again came home; and, on the flowing tide this morning, finding the ship making at least two feet of water per hour more than the pumps threw, I thought it [illegible], and force her as high as possible. Captain Claxton, R.N., who came on board last evening, coincided in opinion with me and we did so, letting go all our cables and hawsers. The ship is now so high, that I do not think she will take much more harm. Captain Claxton leaves as soon as he can, at present the surf is too high. I presume you will communicate our situation to the underwriters at Liverpool and Glasgow. I shall make the [illegible] of our situation until I have further directions from my directors and the underwriters. Until then, I shall, as I have done, keep the entire management in my own hands.

I remain, &c. (Signed) James Hosken.

Messrs. Gibbs, Bright, and Co.

Warren Point, Oct 6

Sir,—I returned from Tyrellan this morning, and regret much to inform you that the Great Britain had ten feet water in her hold yesterday morning's tide, and is now high up on the [illegible] with her stern about S E. We had severe weather on Sunday and part of yesterday. I fear now there will be little chance of getting this fine vessel off the shore.

Thomas Court, Esq. I am, &c., Leonard Watson.

The Journal des Débats contains a letter from Adolphe du Pinbusque, a passenger on board of the Great Britain, addressed to M. Philarète Chasles, one of the editors of that paper, in which he mentions some circumstances not before noticed. M. Pinbusque, alluding to the night of the accident, says, "I went on deck a few minutes before nine, and found myself alone with the Captain. I asked him in English what was the name of the lighthouse which I saw so close to us on our right. He replied (if I understood him correctly) that it was the lighthouse of the Isle of Man; but, at the same time, whether my question raised any doubt on his mind, or whether it merely directed his attention to it more particularly, he asked for his night telescope, and directed it towards the lighthouse. He remained so long in this attitude that I was surprised. Nevertheless, it appeared to me, that after a long observation of the light, he seemed to feel that he was not mistaken, for he did not correct any thing that he had told me, and did not give order to the steersman to change the course of the vessel. On my return to the saloon, I mentioned what had taken place to three passengers, among whom was an old captain of a packet, now a cotton planter at Louisiana. Scarcely half an hour had elapsed, when the vessel experienced a sudden shock from the rear. The shock was so strong, that the passengers, who were walking in that direction, were thrown down. 'We have grounded,' was the cry in every direction. 'We are lost.' The vessel was stopped. The steamer, which drew several feet of water, both fore and aft, was struck in the centre by a sand bank, and this gave the vessel a sudden jerk, which made us fancy ourselves upon a rock." The letter proceeds to describe the confusion which prevailed, and says that when the passengers went on shore, the Bay of Dundrum presented a most interesting scene for an artist

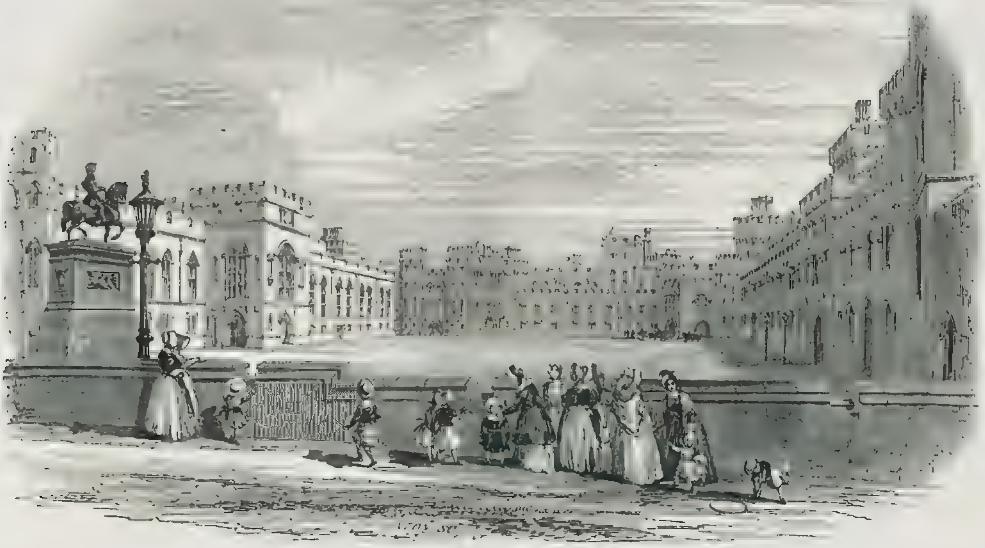
SECOND VERSE.

Ye old oaks of Windsor,—how bravely ye bear
The convulsions of earth, and the storms of the air;
Thy bark it is scathed where the lightnings have reft,
But thy root and thy wide-spreading branches are left!
Many ages may pass—thou mayst outlive them all;
What a gap should the king of the forest but fall!
But he clings to the spot where his childhood first sprung,
And he loves the green sward where his cradle was flung.
Oh, the old oaks of Windsor,—how bravely they stand,
The glory and pride of our own native land!

WINDSOR CASTLE.



THE GREAT QUADRANGLE, WINDSOR CASTLE.

THE QUADRANGLE.

We resume our Illustrations with a View of the Interior of the Quadrangle sketched from the west, at the base of the Round Tower. To the left is seen the bronze statue of Charles the Second, erected at the expense of Tobias Rustat, a follower of the Court at that period, and at one time Under-Keeper of Hampton Court Palace. On one of the hoofs of the horse is inscribed "Josias Ibach Strada, Bremensis, 1679 fudit." The pedestal, by Grinling Gibbons, is very fine: Walpole says of it:—"The fruit, fish, and implements of shipping, are all exquisite; the man and horse may serve for a sign to draw a passenger's eye to the pedestal." Evelyn tells us that this statue cost £1000: he adds:—"Toby Rustat is a very simple, ignorant, but honest and loyal creature." Upon a shield on the east side of the pedestal is a Latin inscription, to this effect:—"Tobias Rustat humbly gave and dedicated this statue to his most gracious master, Charles II., the best of Kings, in the year of our Lord 1680." Beneath the pedestal, Sir Samuel Morland, master-machinist to Charles the Second, constructed an engine for supplying the Palace with water, from Blackmore Park, near Winkfield; but this machine has long been superseded by a powerful engine supplying from the Thames.

First, on the north side of the Quadrangle, is King John's Tower. The space between this and the massive square tower, is occupied by the Queen's Audience Chamber, at which the suite of State Apartments commences; and the Queen's Presence Chamber, at which the détour terminates. In the rear of these apartments is the State Staircase. The projecting mass is the State Entrance to the Castle, in a line with which is the vestibule, continued through to George the Fourth's Tower, in the North Terrace. Immediately opposite, on the south side of the Quadrangle, is George the Fourth's Gateway, directly facing the Long Walk; so that you may stand upon the North Terrace, and see uninterruptedly through the north side of the Quadrangle, across the Court, through the Grand Entrance, to the colossal Statue of George the Third, some three miles distant. The formation of this magnificent vista through the Castle was an after-thought of George the Fourth.

Over the four-arched State Entrance is the Guard Chamber, which we shall describe hereafter, and beneath the battlemented parapet is a very handsome clock. The long line of windows beyond light St. George's Hall. Between the two towers at its extremity, on the east side of the Quadrangle, is the Visitors' Entrance. Then commences the Grand Corridor, which extends through the remainder of the east side, and the whole of the south; except at the south-east angle, where is the entrance for her Majesty.

At King George the Fourth's Gateway, which forms the principal entrance into the Quadrangle, on the south side, was commenced the great restoration by Sir Jeffry Wyatville; the first stone being laid by the King himself, Aug. 12, 1824. "With regard to the Quadrangle," says an excellent descriptive article in the "Penny Cyclopædia," "the architect is said to have experienced very great difficulty in managing to have his own way, the King being loth that it should be encroached upon, for fear that any loss of space there would diminish grandeur. Some general communication along the whole extent of the private apartments was, however, indispensable;" and this has been provided in the Corridor we have mentioned: it extends from the Visiters' Staircase and Ante-room, at the north end to near Edward the Third's Tower, 450 feet, but not in a direct line. "That branch of it which runs north and south has eight windows on its west, the other fourteen on its north side; and, between these divisions, the Corridor takes a bend, passing, as it were, behind what is called the Oak or Wainscot Breakfast Room, which is built over the porch that forms the Royal Entrance. One side of this room forms a spacious bay, whose windows, like those of the Corridor, command a fine view of the whole Quadrangle and Keep."

Our interior Illustration is

as it is called in the cheap catalogue just printed; or, the Ball Room, for which purpose it is generally appropriated. This is a fine apartment, 90 feet long, 32 feet broad, and 33 feet high; opening into St. George's Hall, at the southern end; and terminating at Cornwall Tower, on the North Terrace, in which is the noble window shown in our Engraving.

The walls and ceiling are gorgeously ornamented in the style of Louis Quatorze—gold upon a warm drab ground, beautifully executed: the emblematic designs over the doorways are very characteristic; as is also the fretwork, serving as an outer frame to six pieces of tapestry, representing the story of "Jason and Medea." They are not placed according to the incidents in the narrative, but so as to fit into the several compartments of the wall. The west side of the room (that opposite the fire-places) contains those representing the marriage of Jason and Creusa; the combat of the soldiers born of the Dragon's teeth; and the flight of Medea to Athens, after having murdered her two sons. On the east side are Jason pledging his faith to Medea; Creusa consumed by the fatal Robe; and Jason carrying off the Golden Fleece. These tapestries are from the celebrated Gobelin works; they are of great price, but of little worth as compositions: they are said to have decorated the rooms of Marie Antoinette; and, if we remember rightly, were presented by Charles the Tenth to King George the Fourth.

Opposite the window is a magnificent Malachite Vase, presented to Queen Victoria by the Emperor Nicholas of Russia; and on either side is an elaborately worked Prussian granite tazza, presented to King William the Fourth by Frederick William the Third, King of Prussia. There are two noble chimney-pieces, of white marble and or-molu; above which are mirrors; as well as in lofty plates flanking the window, and at the opposite end of the apartment. The draperies are of rich crimson silk damask, as are also the chairs and fauteuils, which have richly-gilt frames. There are two circular tables, of classic design. From the ceiling hang four gorgeous lustres, of or-molu and cut glass; but additional light is given from candelabræ placed around the room, upon state occasions. The floor is parqueted, and has a Wilton carpet. The upper end of this splendid room communicates, as we have stated, with St. George's Hall; and the door to the left of the Illustration opens to the Waterloo Chamber, described in our Journal of September 26, 1846.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

Season still with sports your serious hours.—DRYDEN.

Among the hosts of counts in the bills of indictment preferred by the prosecutors—we had nearly written persecutors—of woodcraft, it is singular they should have overlooked that which is certainly one of its cardinal objections. The boon exercises of flood and field are types, which, in the piping time of peace, bear record of hearts ardent of enterprise, and hands trained to effort. The practice of modern sporting, at least in this country, is a familiar application of the principle of the olden chivalry. But the fashion of the time has robbed it of an auxiliary, than which it could have better spared a more efficient ally. By the fashion of the time is meant that social change which accompanies the march of civilization, we will call it, out of courtesy to conventionalism. The day was when "the field," in certain of its relations, was not held unbecoming the presence of a maiden of condition. The day is, when has passed from it—probably, for ever—an occasion on which bright eyes were wont to rain especial influence. The last within our experience constitutes the present theme.

Hawking gave place, on the discovery of gunpowder, as Hunting must before the general application of steam to the purposes of travelling. Still it grew less, by degrees, as will the Chase till both shall be of the things that were. Falconry, to all fitting intents and purposes, became extinct, in this kingdom, within the last seven years. It is true we still have an Hereditary Grand Falconer; but, the establishment of that functionary, in reference to his title, is not, as the man says in the play, "in a concatenation accordingly." The late Lord Berners—a classic name in woodcraft—was the last of the falconers, in the true reading of their occupation.

Years ago, there used to be a fair held at the village of Valconsvaard, near Bois-le-Duc, in the Low Countries, for the sale of hunting-hawks. It was a colony of men who made a business of catching and training those birds. They were taken when emigrating south, in the winter months, from Norway, Sweden, and Denmark—where alone the thorough blood is produced. The writer of this article spent a week, in the summer of 1834, with Lord Berners—on every day of which there was a hawking party: this was at that Nobleman's seat in Suffolk.

Is it necessary to state that the proper quarry of the falconer is the heroic? As the pursuit of the hare to the fox-hunter is the flight of the hawk at any meaner fowl to the legitimate follower of the falcon.

One of the most striking features at Didlington was the Heronry. It was close to the house, on the borders of a piece of ornamental water; and there the herons dwelt, in vast communities. The kennel of the hawks was at "The High Ash," within the domain. It contained some ten or a dozen birds, and three Germans, to hunt them. During the day, the hawks were kept hooded; at night, their night-caps were removed. As a sport, the ideal of a gentle sylvan pastime is your falconry. The devoir of the cavalier engaged in it is to save the heron; hence, it is—or was—void of offence for the daintiest of dames. And right fair and well-favoured was the maid that, on the occasion at issue, took her pleasure on the Suffolk Wolds. Our place of meeting was generally some wizard heath, without trace of man's abode or handiwork. No sound broke the silent solitude, save the tinkle of the tiny silver-toned bells, worn by the hawks around their legs. Anon the quarry was discovered, returning homewards from the feeding fens, and then arose the musical cheer, "Heron a la vole!" Would ye have authority for Hawking being no rude sport? Let Juliet speak—

> H[illegible] voice,
> To lure this "tarsel" gentle back again!

Mark that bright girl—list to her gleeful tone—sweet as the matin hymn of the skylark! There is a falcon on her wrist: they pluck the hood from its eyes she poises it, so that the course of the heron comes within scope of its fierce glance; and now it is enlarged! Away, away it soars! and ride for your lives is the maxim of the company. You see not—care not whither ye rush; look and thought are bent upon the airy encounter. The chace haply points towards the horizon: imagine a burst after the setting sun! If you are fortunate enough to be up at the take, you observe that a "lure"—the counterfeit presentment of a pigeon—is thrown to the falcon on which when it fastens, it is hooded, placed on the fist, and set aside for the day. Occasionally, two hawks are enlarged at the same time; but this is productive of inconvenience, as they are prone to fight with each other. Such are the circumstances under which Hawking used whilom to lure lords and ladies abroad, to disport more wholesomely than eke in the polka, or the promenade in Hyde Park. Purge vice of its grossness, and you cleanse it of much of its offence: eschew the graftings of civilisation on the popular pastimes: deal with the turf and the chase, the flood and the field, in the character of healthful exercises and legitimate excitements, and it shall be lawful to Season still with sports your serious hours.

TATTERSALL'S.

MONDAY.—The Cesarewitch betting embraced a numerous field of horses, but only two, Tom Tulloch and The Terrier, were actually in favour, while, on the other hand, several were at a discount, and particularly the Baron, Sting, Jonathan Wild, and Sir Tatton Sykes. It is thought that at least 25 will start.

THURSDAY.—There was a very full muster this afternoon, and business was the order of the day, our quotations embracing a great number of horses, many of which, by the way, were in such small favour as to make it a question whether they ought to be returned. In this respect, our list assimilates to the formidable daily catalogue of railway prices, in which a host of bubble schemes are kept before that prince of flats, "the public." Money enough, however, was laid out on these nominal favourites to fix their prices; but, for this very reason, it is the more necessary that we should give the names of the horses in bonâ fide favour, and these were the three first favourites in the list, Sir Tatton Sykes, Kesheng, Dulcet, Glossy, Khondooz, Cherry (Morella filly), and Auricula. A striking change will be found in the Cambridgeshire betting—the sister to Joanna colt was backed heavily and became first favourite.

THE MARKETS.

CORN EXCHANGE (Friday).—The arrivals of English wheat for our market this week have been somewhat extensive, yet the show of samples here to-day was by no means large. Monday's surplus supply was mostly cleared off at that day's prices, yet the trade was in a very s[illegible] little business doing in foreign wheat, free or in bond. The ho[illegible] to give way much in price. We had barely any malting barley on show. This article was quite as dear, so, also, were the grinding sorts. Superfine malt—both old and new—moved off steadily, at full prices. In other kinds very little was doing. Oats, beans, peas, and flour, were quite as dear.

ARRIVALS. English wheat, 7260; barley, 5130; oats, 3880. Irish: Wheat, —; barley, —; oats, 3880. Foreign: wheat, 3690; barley, 5430; oats, 7050. Flour, 4150 sacks and 2780 barrels; malt 3940 quarters.

English.—Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 53s to 63s; ditto white, 58s to 70s; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 53s to 58s; ditto white, 58s to 65s; rye, 37s to 39s; grinding barley, 28s to 30s; distilling, 31s to 33s; malting ditto, 35s to 40s; Lincoln and Norfolk malt, 60s to 65s; brown ditto, 55s to 56s; Kingston and Ware, 66s to 67s; Chevalier, 67s to 68s; Yorkshire and Lincolnshire feed oats, 25s to 30s; potato ditto, 31s to 33s; Youghal and Cork, black, 25s to 27s; ditto, white, 27s to 30s, tick beans, new, 37s to 39s; ditto old, —s to —s; grey peas, 41s to 46s; maple, 41s to 46s; white, 55s to 57s; boilers, 58s to 60s, per quarter. Town-made flour, 56s to 60s; Suffolk, 49s to 50s, Stockton and Yorkshire, 42s to 50s, per 280 lbs. Foreign.—Free wheat, —s to —s; Dantzig, red, 50s to 60s; ditto white, 60s to 66s per quarter. In Bond. Barley, —s to —s; oats, new, —s to —s; ditto, feed, —s to —s; and peas, —s to —s per quarter. Flour, American, 28s to 30s, Baltic, 30s to 31s per barrel.

The Seed Market. A steady demand still exists for cakes and Linseed at very full prices. In all other articles a limited business is doing.

Linseed, English, sowing, 55s to 60s. Baltic, crushing, 38s 9d to 41s; Mediterranean and Odessa, 41s to 42s. Hempseed, 36s to 38s per quarter. Coriander, 12s to 14s per cwt. Brown Mustard-seed, 11s to 15s, white ditto, 10s to 13s. Tares, 5s 6d to 7s 0d per bushel. English Rapeseed, new, £21 to £22 per last of 10 quarters. Linseed cakes, English, £11 10s to £12 0s; ditto, foreign, £8 10s to £10 0s per 1000; Rapeseed cakes, £5 0s to £5 2s per ton. Canary, 46s to 52s, [illegible]

Bread.—[illegible] wheaten bread in the metropolis, are from [illegible] to 9½d, of household ditto, 7d to 8½d per 4lb loaf.

Imperial Weekly Average.—Wheat, 54s 0d; barley, 36s 9d; oats, 24s 3d; rye, 35s 5d; beans, 43s 4d, peas, 45s 4d.

The Six Weeks' Average.—Wheat, 50s 11d; barley, 33s 11d; oats, 23s 6d; rye, 33s 5d; beans, 41s 5d; peas, 40s 10d.

Duties on Foreign Corn.—Wheat, 7s 0d; barley, 2s 0d; oats, 1s 6d; rye, 2s 0d; beans, 2s 0d; peas, 2s 0d.

Tea.—We have to report a very inactive demand for all kinds of Tea, yet the quotations rule about stationary.

Sugar.—All kinds of raw sugar moved off steadily, at full prices. Refined goods are, however, [illegible] 62s [illegible] per cwt. English crushed 33s.

Rice.—The market is rather scantily supplied with this article; nevertheless, owing to the high prices demanded by the importers, the transactions are on a limited scale. Good white Bengal is worth 20s per cwt.

Provisions.—We have to notice a very active demand for Irish butter, at a further advance of from 1s to 2s per cwt. Carlow and Clonmel, landed, 97s to 102s, Carrick, 97s to 100s; Cork, 95s to 96s; Waterford, 94s to 95s; and Sligo, 89s to 91s per cwt. Dutch butter is in active request, at 1s to 2s per cwt more money. Best Friesland, 108s to 112s, and inferior kinds, 78s to 90s per cwt. English butter, the supply of which is large, is rather heavy, at 106s to 108s for the best Dorset, inferior and good sorts, 98s to 104s; and Devon 98s to 100s per cwt. Fresh steady, at 11s to 13s per dozen. The best parcels of bacon move off steadily at full prices; but other kinds are neglected. Prime small Waterford, landed, is worth 60s to 68s; and inferior and heavy, 50s to 58s per cwt. On board, or for forward delivery, very little is doing. A few parcels of prime Irish hams have sold at 90s to 100s per cwt. All other kinds of provisions are quite as dear.

Tallow.—Russian is in good request, at 46s 3d for prime Y C. on the spot. For forward delivery, a good business is doing, at 45s to 45s 6d per cwt. Town tallow firm, at 42s 6d to 43s, [illegible].

Oil.—Palm [illegible] good; linseed dull, at 24s 9d to 25s per cwt.

Hay and S[illegible] Meadow hay, £2 10s to £4; clover ditto, £3 10s to £5; and straw, £1 6s to £1 11s per load.

Wool.—There is more doing in English wools, at full prices; but foreign and colonial com[illegible].

Potatoes. This market is active, and prices have an upward tendency.

Coals (Friday).—Morrison's, 17s, Russell's Hetton, 17s 9d, Stewart's, 18s 6d, Caradoc, 17s 6d; Kelloe, 18s 3d, Tees, 18s 6d, Riddell's, 17s; and Wylam, 16s per ton.

H[illegible]ng the wants of the dealers, the demand is in a very inactive state, and, in some instances, the quotations (which are ruling unusually low) have a downward tendency. The duty may be called £210,000. New Sussex pockets £3 15s to £4 7s; Weald of Kent ditto, £4 4s to £4 14s, Mid and East Kent ditto, £4 10s to £[illegible] per cwt.

Smithfield (Friday).—For the time of year, the supply of beasts on offer here, to-day, was [illegible] g quality. The primest Scots, &c., were mostly disposed of at [illegible] but the value of all other kinds had a downward tendency. There [illegible] 10 oxen and cows, 370 sheep, and 20 calves from abroad. Although the numbers of sheep were small, the mutton trade ruled dull, at barely late rates; and a clearance was with difficulty effected. The supply of calves was smaller than for some time past; yet the sale for that description of stock was heavy, at a decline of 2d per 8lb. Pigs were a slow inquiry, at unaltered currencies. Milch cows were dull, at from £16 to £18 each, including their small calf.

Per 8lb. to sink the offal:—Coarse and inferior beasts, 2s 10d to 3s 0d; second quality ditto, 3s 2d to 3s 4d; prime large oxen, 3s 6d to 3s 8d; prime Scots, &c., 3s 10d to 4s 0d; coarse and inferior sheep, 3s 10d to 4s 0d; second quality ditto, 4s 2d to 4s 4d; prime coarse-woolled ditto, 4s 6d to 4s 8d; prime South Down ditto, 4s 10d to 5s 0d; large coarse calves, 3s 10d to 4s 4d; prime small ditto, 4s 6d to 4s 10d, large hogs, 3s 8d to 4s 6d, neat small porkers, 4s 8d to 4s 10d. Suckling calves, 18s to 30s, and quarter old store pigs, 16s to 18s each. Beasts, 948; cows, 111, sheep, 5430, calves, 254, pigs, 500.

Newgate and Leadenhall (Friday).—We had a very slow inquiry this morning at barely stationary prices.

Per 8lb. by the carcase:—Inferior beef, 2s 8d to 2s 10d; middling ditto, 3s 0d to 3s 2d; prime large [illegible] large pork, 3s 6d to 4s 6d; [illegible] ditto, 4s 0d [illegible] 4d; prime ditto, 4s 6d to 4s 8d; veal, 3s 8d to 4s 8d; small pork, 4s 8d to 4s 10d. ROBT. HERBERT.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

There has scarcely ever been known a period when an absence of business, like the present, has prevailed. Consols have scarcely varied a fraction during the week, with the exception of Wednesday, when a slight advance occurred, which was [illegible] books for the present account, and considerable "carrying over" appears probable. No alteration in prices seems likely, until after the opening of Reduced and the Three-and-a-Quarter per Cents. In the Discount Market, money is a shade more in demand, at a slight advance, notwithstanding which, Exchequer Bills have been gradually improving in price. The state of the Market, at the close of the week, will be seen in the subjoined list of quotations.—Three per Cent. Consols Annuities, 95⅞; Three per Cent. Annuities, 1726, 95; India Bonds, under £1000, 28 p.; Consols for Account, 95½; Exchequer Bills, £1000, 1½d., 19; Ditto, £500, 19; Ditto, Small, 19.

The Foreign Market partakes of the dulness that prevails in the English House. Mexican has not materially varied, although doubts begin to be entertained as to the probabilities of Santa Anna's sanctioning the recent conversion, if he should again resume the Presidentship. The price on Monday was 25, and at which it (nominally) remains, no bargains having occurred for the last day or two. Spanish Actives are tolerably firm; the speculators considering it probable that, after the Royal marriages, some terms will be offered to the holders of the Five per Cent Stock, with regard to the overdue coupons. The closing quotation is 26⅝. The Three per Cents are firm at 37⅛ to 37⅝. In Portuguese, no transactions have occurred for some days. It ranges from 41 to 43. The prices of the only securities dealt in at the close of the week will be found annexed: Brazilian Bonds, Account, 87; Grenada Bonds, 1 per Cent, 21¼; Ditto, Deferred, 4; Spanish 5 per Cent, Account, 26⅞; Ditto 3 per Cent, Account, 37⅞; Belgian, 4½ per Cent, 97½, Dutch 4 per Cent. Certificates, 92½.

Absence of business has produced its usual effect upon prices in the Share Market, a gradual decline having occurred. The established lines cannot, however, be otherwise than good investments, at the present range of prices. Competition cannot be anticipated, under the most favourable circumstances, for three or four years at least. But, looking at the probable state of the Money Market, and the difficulty of procuring a steady supply of labour when a general commencement of the new lines occur, as well as the increased value of material, every probability seems in favour of a much longer period intervening. Opinions of this description are current among private capitalists, who are quietly investing, but prices are not affected by such operations. Unless the jobbers purchase, which they only do when the public generally are inclined for speculation, prices do not largely vary. At present, this is certainly not the case, and the Market is, consequently, dull, many of the leading dealers not regularly attending. The list of prices affixed will display the state of things at the close of the week: Ambergate, Nottingham, Boston, and Eastern Junction, 2⅛; Birmingham and Gloucester, 127; Caledonian, 20¾; Direct Northern, 1¾; Eastern Counties, 21¼. Ditto, New, 6¼ pm.; Ditto, York Extension, 1⅝; East Lancashire, 17½; Edinburgh and Northern, 10; Great North of England, New, 51⅝; Ditto, New, 19; Great Western Half Shares, 77; Ditto, New, 6½; Hull and Selby Quarter Shares, 21¾; Ditto Half Shares, 51, Lancaster and Carlisle, 58; Leeds and Bradford, 74, London and Blackwall, 9; Ditto, New, 5; London and Brighton, 58; London and Croydon, 21¼; London and North Western, 194; Ditto, Quarters, 20½; Ditto, ditto, New Shares, 15¾; London and South Western, 67; Manchester and Leeds Fifths, 7¾; Ditto Sixteenths, 7½; Ditto Extension, ⅝ pm.; Manchester and Birmingham, 72; Manchester, Buxton, and Matlock, ⅝ pm.; Manchester and Southampton, 1⅛, Midland, 134; Ditto, New, 33; Newcastle and Berwick, 24¾; Norfolk, 133; North British, 32¾, Ditto Half Shares, 14¾; Ditto Quarters [illegible]; North Staffordshire, 1⅝ pm; Oxford, Worcester, and Wolverhampton, 6¼. Scottish Central, 18; Shrewsbury and Birmingham, 3½; South Eastern and Dover, 37½; Ditto, No. 1, 21⅛; Ditto, No. 2, 12⅛, South Wales, 3¼; West Riding Union, 1¼ pm.; West Cornwall, ⅝; York and Newcastle, 40½; Ditto, New, 10¾; Boulogne and Amiens, 14⅝; Luxembourg, 1⅛; Namur and Liege, 1⅝; Northern of France Constituted, 13½; Orleans and Vierzon, 14½; Orleans and Bordeaux, 8¼; Paris and Lyons Constituted, 5⅝; Paris and Rouen, 36½.

SATURDAY MORNING.—Consols receded yesterday about ¼ per cent., but afterwards closed at 95⅝ for Money and Time. Russian Stock improved to 114½. In Shares there was nothing of consequence done.

THE CORN TRADE.—The ascertained destruction of the POTATO Crop in the United Kingdom—and the admitted failure of the grain and pulse crops, and, it is apprehended, of the potato also, in France—render early and correct information, on the stock of grain available to meet the exigency, of more importance than for very many years past. No trouble nor expense is spared to furnish the latest and best intelligence in the MARK-LANE EXPRESS, which has been for many years the authority in the CORN TRADE IN ENGLAND and in FOREIGN COUNTRIES.—May be had, by order, of all Booksellers, price £1 10s. 4d. per annum.—Office, 24, Norfolk-street, Strand.

LORD GEORGE BENTINCK stated at the meeting at Coleshill, on the 9th of September, that by the destruction of the POTATO crop, as proved, food to the value of £10,000,000 had been lost; and that France, through the failure of the crops, would require 2,000,000 quarters of grain. This vast demand must cause great excitement, and render correct information as to the supply, and the quarters from whence it may be obtained, of the highest importance. No trouble nor expense is spared to furnish the latest and best intelligence in the MARK-LANE EXPRESS, which has been for many years the authority in the CORN TRADE IN ENGLAND and in FOREIGN COUNTRIES. May be had, by order, of all Booksellers, price 7d.—Office, 24, Norfolk-street, Strand, London.

FARMERS' CLUBS.—An arrangement has just been made, by which the result of the discussions entertained upon practical questions in the LOCAL FARMERS' CLUBS will be given in the FARMER'S MAGAZINE. Nearly Two Hundred Columns of Agricultural Intelligence will be continued, with ENGRAVINGS of the BEST and MOST PERFECT ANIMALS which obtain the Prizes of the leading Agricultural Societies. The series of PORTRAITS of PATRONS of AGRICULTURE, and EMINENT BRITISH FARMERS, with Biographical Memoirs, is in continuation: Mr. J. Grey, of Dilston, and Mr. Smith, of Deanston, have just appeared. Price 2s. May be had of all Booksellers.

Office, 24, Norfolk-street, Strand.

"TENANT RIGHT."—That an ALTERATION in the CONDITIONS upon which land has been hitherto occupied and cultivated, affording greater security to the TENANT FARMER for the investment of his capital, and a wider scope for the exercise of his judgment, as well as a considerable change in the Law of Landlord and Tenant, will be greatly accelerated by the Repeal of the Corn-Laws, is perfectly manifest; in fact, a system of "TENANT-RIGHT" must be established. The MARK-LANE EXPRESS has always advocated the rights of the Tenant-Farmer, and will continue so to do unflinchingly.—May be had, by order, of all Booksellers, price 7d., or £1 10s. 4d. per annum.

POEMS: BY CAMILLA TOULMIN.

"She has learned the secret of writing to the age, by writing about the age."—Critic. "Miss Toulmin generally sings because she has first thought, and puts the Muse forward only because the Muse has something to say. * * * For the most part her lightest essays are suggestive."—Athenæum. "They are penned in the right vein of poetic fervour, be[illegible] which we trace a strong current of philanthropy, ever aiming to exalt the condition of hu[illegible]kind."—Illustrated London News. "Occasionally there is a pensiveness in the stro[illegible] earnest sympathy of Miss Toulmin, which is singularly touching."—Sun. "True is the ring of both (sincerity and sympathy) in these fugitive poems."—Examiner. "Her 'Astrology and Alchemy' is striking. * * * No mere mocking-bird melody."—Dublin University Magazine. "In 'The Death of the Pauper Peasant,' 'The Cry of the Felon,' the lines to 'Night,' and 'To the Brave Hearts,' as well as in many other of the poems, here given, she embodies and enunciates those truths which are but now beginning to be understood and acted on."—Kentish Independent.

London: WM. S. ORR and Co.; Dublin, JAMES M'GLASHAN; Glasgow, DAVID CHAMBERS, 98, Miller-street.

DR. MADDOCK on DISEASES of the LUNGS and HEART.—"We earnestly recommend this work to the attention of the suffering [illegible]y. The author is evidently a man of much ability and experience, and his arguments are most convincing, and his proofs in the shape of 'cases' give them weight and authority."—Maidstone Journal. Third edition, price 5s. 6d., with plates.

ROWLAND'S ODONTO, or Pearl Dentifrice; a white Powder for the Teeth, compounded of the choicest and most recherché ingredients of the Oriental herbal. It extirpates all tartarous adhesions to the teeth, and ensures a pearl-like whiteness to the enamelled surface. The breath, also, from the salubrious and disinfecting qualities of the Odonto, attains a sweetness and fragrance truly grateful to its possessor. Its invaluable properties have obtained its selection by the Court and Royal Family of Great Britain, and the Sovereigns and Nobility throughout Europe, while the general demand for [illegible] at once announces the favour in which it is universally held. Price 2s. 9d. per box.

CAUTION.—To protect the public from fraud, the Government Stamp, with "A. ROWLAND and SON, 20, Hatton Garden," engraved thereon, is affixed on each box. All others are fraudulent counterfeits!

THE BEST ENGLISH WATCHES.—A. B. SAVORY and SONS, Watchmakers, No. 9, Cornhill, London, opposite the Bank, request the attention of purchasers to their stock of London-made PATENT LEVER WATCHES, which are manufactured by themselves in their own house. In silver cases, with the detached escapement and jewelled; the prices are four guineas and a half, six, and eight guineas each; or in gold cases, 10, 12, 14, and 16 guineas each. The very large stock offered for selection includes every description, enabling a customer to select that which is more particularly adapted to his [illegible]

WINDOW BLINDS.—TYLOR and PACE having recently opened their new Establishment, No. 3, Queen-street, City, three doors from Cheapside, invite the attention of the public generally to their extensive assortment of every description of WINDOW BLINDS, consisting of Venetian Blinds, Painted Transparencies, Spring and Roller Blinds, Wove Wire, and Patent Zinc Blinds, and Outside Shades and Sun Blinds in every variety. All departments of the manufacture being conducted on their own premises, TYLOR and PACE are enabled to supply the above at very reduced prices. Wholesale and export orders executed on the lowest terms.

TROUSER STRAPS SUPERSEDED by L'AGRAFE, or NEW TROUSER FASTENER.—This invention is offered to the Public as superior to any Fastener yet introduced. It is light, durable, and cleanly, and fastened to, or detached from the boot with facility. The sole of the boot being free from any appendage, its value and comfort will be obvious to the military, and others accustomed to horse exercise. Sold wholesale by G. RIDDLE, 172, Blackfriars-road, EDMONDS and ROURKE, 4 and 5, Gresham-street, West; and retail, by Tailors and Bootmakers generally.

H. J. and D. NICOLL, Registered PALETOT Manufacturers and TAILORS to their Royal Highnesses Prince Albert, Prince George of Cambridge, his Grace the Duke of Wellington, &c., respectfully beg to announce that the same moderate prices are still maintained; and that the Fashionable OVER COAT is made of Llama Cloth, of a substance as suitable for winter wear so as much as that which has obtained general approval during the past summer.—To be had only, in London, at 114, Regent-street, and 22, Cornhill; and of the recognised agents in the country.

BERDOE'S WATERPROOF PALLIUM, a Light Over-coat, for the present Season.—The attention of the respectable public is confidently invited to the [illegible] truly gentlemanly and universally admired garment, which so decidedly conveys its own recommendation as to need no other. Its superior claims to the patronage of all who dislike the appearance of slang, vulgarity, or meanness, will, on examination, be at once apparent. It is really thoroughly impervious to the rain, and not so merely in name. Made only by W. BERDOE, Tailor and Over-coat Maker, 69, Cornhill (north side), and, in a few days, at 96, New Bond-street.

AUTUMN and WINTER MANTLES and CLOAKS.—The periodical arrangement for the supply (British and Foreign) of the CLOAK and MANTLE Department at the LONDON GENERAL MOURNING WAREHOUSE is now being completed for the season. Ladies requiring cloaks for carriage, promenade, or travelling, will find at this establishment every style and variety (including the latest adoptions from the French articles), studiously suited to our own climate, and for all occasions. The plaids and tartan materials for warm cloaks are superior to any that have hitherto been produced. An additional Suite of Show Rooms, No. 251, Regent-street, will be added to the London General Mourning Warehouse in the course of a few days; and these will be exclusively appropriated to the exposition and sale of Cloaks and Mantles. All the novelties of the season are now being made up, and may be had in velvet, satin, silk, tartan-pattern cloaks, &c., at Nos. 247 and 249, Regent-street, the London General Mourning Warehouse, W. C. JAY, Propri[illegible]

AN INFALLIBLE HAIR DYE.

ROWLAND'S MELACOMIA; the most successful liquid preparation ever known in this or any other country, for DYEING the HAIR of the Head, Whiskers, Mustachios, and Eyebrows a natural and permanent Brown or Black, so exactly resembling the natural colour of the hair as to defy detection. It is perf[illegible] nature, is free from any unpleasant smell, and can be used by any lady or gentleman with the greatest ease and secresy. Its effect is so permanent, that neither water nor perspiration will influence it; and it is entirely free from those properties (usual in hair dyes) which give an unnatural red or purple tint to the hair. Price 5s.—Prepared by A. ROWLAND and SON, 20, Hatton-garden, London; sold by them, and by Chemists and Perfumers.

OPENING OF E. MOSES AND SON'S FUR DEPOT. 157, MINORIES, Entrance, 83, Aldgate, corner of the Minories, opposite Aldgate-church.

On TUESDAY, OCTOBER 20, 1846, will be opened to the Public a "New Branch" in the Business of E. MOSES and SON, on entirely "New Principles." The Proprietors have long had in contemplation what may be termed "An Universal Attire Depot," and the new feature about to be added is a decided advance towards the accomplishment of this most comprehen[illegible] project. The extensive Fur Warehouse of E. Moses and Son will be stocked with an immense assortment of Ladies and Gentlemen's Furs, posse[illegible]ng every possible recommendation. The Stock will consist of "Sa[illegible]" "Musk," "Ermine," "Chinchilles," "Koluskey," and every other species of Fur Materials adapted i[illegible]n Winter Attire.

Prior to manufacturing the Fur, E. Moses a[illegible] them to the closest scrutiny, and special care was observed that no materials were made up but what were thoroughly well [illegible] Equal attention has been bestowed by E. Moses and Son on the making-up of the [illegible] and trial of the Boas, Flat and Round Capes, Cardinals, Muffs, [illegible] &c. It will be seen that none but "first class" [illegible]blic by the Proprietors. Economy in this new feature of E. Moses [illegible] Son's trade will be strictly adhered to. The "Fur Trade" (let it be distinctly understood, like that of Tailoring), has long taxed the public with most extortionate and unwarrantable prices. But a new principle shall distinguish this new branch of business at E. M[illegible] Son. Large profits shall be succeeded by small, and high prices by low. Every article, ac[illegible] to its relative value, will have marked upon it in plain figures, the lowest price, at [illegible] it can be sold, from which no abatement can possibly be made.

OPENING OF THE NEW FUR DEPOT.

Reserve your purchases until the 20th
Behold!—The vast Establishment of Mos[illegible]

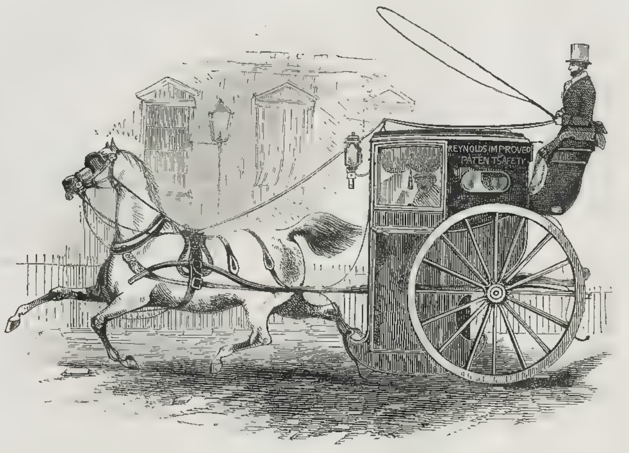
ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL.—The singular virtues of this successful invention for Restoring, Improving, and Beautifying the Human Hair, are too well known and appreciated to need comment. The very fact of its having stood the test of nearly half a century of probation, and obtained the especial patronage of her Majesty the Queen, H.R.H. Prince Albert, the whole of the Royal Family, and of every Court in the civilised world, and the high esteem in which it is universally held, together with numerous Testimonials constantly received of its efficacy, afford the best and surest proof of its merits, and its claims.—Price 3s. 6d.; 7s.; Family bottles (equal to 4 small), 10s. 6d., and double that size, 21s. per bottle.—CAUTION. On the Wrapper of each Bottle of the Genuine article are the words, in two lines, ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL. All others are FRAUDULENT COUNTERFEITS!!!

GENERAL DEBILITY, Pains in the Stomach, and Loss of Appetite, Cured by MORISON'S PILLS, the Vegetable Universal Medicine of the British College of Health, New-road, London.—[illegible]s. Mary Anne Gardener, aged 41, residing [illegible] the Red Cow Turnpike-gate, St. Davi[illegible]'s, Exeter, cured of the above complaints with which she had been afflicted for many years. The particulars of this case are well known to Mr. Havill, of 9, Fore-street hill, Exeter; and also to Mr. Tothill, surgeon, Heavitree, near Exeter.—N.B. The public is hereby informed that no chemist or druggist is allowed to sell Morison's Pills; they are only to be had of the Hygeian Agents. In places where there is not an agent, the Pills can be forwarded by Post, on sending a Post-office Order to the British College of Health, payable to Messrs. Morison. The British College of Health has now upwards of half a million cases of cure, which amply prove the truth of the Hygeian, or Morisonian system.



REYNOLDS'S IMPROVED PATENT SAFETY CAB.

NEW PATENT SAFETY CAB.

Every contribution to the improvement of the public conveyances of the metropolis is of some moment to its in-dwellers as well as to its visitors. The specimen before us has been designed to remedy the general objection made to the driver sitting before the passenger, so as to obstruct his view; and for this purpose, the driving-seat is placed behind the body, which is constructed on the principle of a Brougham. The inventor and patentee of this carriage novelty is Mr. Reynolds, coach-builder, of the New-road.

It is curious to reflect upon the variety of changes devised in our metropolitan public carriages during the present century. Hackney coaches were first established in London more than two centuries since; but, only within our own time has it been discovered that one horse and a small carriage will carry a diner-out as safely to his destination as a lumbering coach, with a pair of horses—and this with a reduction of one-third of the expense. The cabriolet we borrowed from France, in the first instance; but, the small box-like "cabs" of the present day occasionally remind one of the little town coaches of Queen Anne's time. The drivers, too, are no longer huge bundles of coats; nor do they merit the censure Mr. Macculloch throws upon the coachmen: "speaking generally," he says, 'the coaches are the dirtiest, most disagreeable vehicles, that can well be imagined, and the horses and drivers are but little superior; forming a striking contrast to the elegance and commodiousness of the private carriages, the excellence of the horses, and the neatness of the servants."

THE GREAT NASSAU BALLOON UPON THE THAMES.

Yesterday week, Mr. Green's great Nassau Balloon was seen floating up the river Thames; the circumstances which gave rise to this new passage being as follow:—It appears that Mr. Green had been advertised to ascend in his balloon from Cremorne Gardens, on Friday evening; and, late on Thursday night, the Imperial Gas Company declined to supply the gas (as they had done on previous occasions), stating that they could not spare the requisite quantity for the inflation. The announcement was then withdrawn. The public disappointed of a balloon ascent is not, however, a matter "to be made light of;" and Mr. Ellis, the proprietor of Cremorne Gardens, bethought himself of applying to the London Gas Company, whose works are situated somewhat below Vauxhall Bridge. Mr. Hutchinson, the Engineer-in-Chief, consented; Mr. Green was despatched with the Balloon to the Company's works, and it was inflated in the short space of an hour and a quarter. The Balloon was then transferred to a barge, which was attached to the Starlight iron steam-boat, and thus it was towed up to Cremorne Gardens. To clear the two bridges, it was disengaged from the barge, and allowed to ascend into the air, and pulled forward until it had cleared the obstacles. In the same manner, it was transferred from the barge into the Gardens with safety; and, on alighting upon the open space from whence the Balloon usually starts, Mr. Green and his companions, of whom there were several in the car, were greeted with animating rounds of cheers by the spectators. The appearance of the Balloon, when towed up the river, was novel, and attracted crowds of persons The Balloon arrived at the Gardens at a quarter-past five o'clock, and shortly afterwards ascended, taking its course rapidly towards Essex, where Mr. Green effected a safe descent at Leighton.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"J. J. T."—You may get Mr. Bryan's "History of the French and English Chess Match," which no Chess Player in this country should be without, of Hastings, of Carey-street, or at the Office of the "Chess-Player's Chronicle." We cannot undertake to procure Chess Books for Correspondents.

"Long, Long Ago."—See the Chess Enigmas in the present Number.

"J. W." In your solution of Pouziani's six-move Problem, the two first steps are correct, but the third must be Queen to her R's 4th (ch); and the next, Q to her 4th (ch). The last two moves are obvious.

"Junior." You may obtain the little pamphlet of the Stanley and Rousseau Match, of Mr. Hurst, Office of the "Chess-Player's Chronicle," King William-street, Strand—and you will find in it many beautiful and instructive games.

"W. T. G."—Practice—practice is indispensable. Treatises on openings and endings of the game are valuable auxiliaries; but he who plays mainly from book must often be embarrassed by the occurrence of circumstances for which his studies afford no precedent, and in which his theoretical knowledge will sometimes prove an incumbrance rather than a help, unless accompanied by experience for its ready application.

"E. H.," Glasgow.—The solution of Enigma No. 58 is not difficult. Try again: your others are correct.

"G. A. H."—We have already given the solution of No. 1 by D'Orville; but, if you send the position correctly described, we will repeat it.

"L. I. C," Hull.—The second edition of Dr. Roget's "Economic Chess-Board," we believe, is published, but we have not seen it. Write to the Office of the "Chess-Player's Chronicle." Your problem in four moves is very pretty, that in five may be solved with ease in three.

"Sphinx."—Much too simple for publication.

"F. M. S.," Kensington.—Enigma No. 55 is correctly printed. We know of no distinction.

"C. J. S."—Your opponent is wrong. The second Queen has in everything the power of the first. Before attempting to play Chess, these simple rules should be learnt from some Elementary Treatise on the Game.

"Εσσω Οπουδαῖος."—We regret to say we are unacquainted with the game.

"Tension," Brighton.—You have described the situation incorrectly, since the rules of the game will not admit of two pieces standing on the same square at one time.

"Bou Maza," Paris.—Your problems shall be examined. The "Chess-Player's Chronicle" has been published regularly for the last five years. It appears in Monthly Numbers. You may probably get it through Galignani.

"C. F. S."—A small stake is usually played for in all Chess Clubs, it having been found impracticable without some such regulation to induce young players to take proper odds when playing with their superiors. In the marked Pawn Game, "perpetual check" constitutes a drawn game. We have no time to hunt for a particular game in old numbers.

Solutions by "A. Z.," "G. A. H.," "Sopracitta," "Felix," "M. T. F.," "Dombey and Son," and "Guilim," are correct. Those by "Badmansir," "Rufus," "D. P.," "G. B.," and "Argus," are all wrong.

FUNERAL OF THE LATE EARL OF YARBOROUGH.

The funeral of the late Earl of Yarborough took place on Thursday week, at the family mausoleum at Brocklesby; the remains of the deceased Earl having been brought round by water, in his Lordship's yacht, the Kestrel, which arrived in the Humber on the Monday previous, escorted by her Majesty's steamer Lightning, from the Downs. It was not, however, until the Wednesday following, the day previous to the funeral, that the remains of his Lordship were landed from the Kestrel; and this was effected in the retired little creek of Killingholm, situate on the banks of the Humber, about eight miles above Grimsby, and distant about six miles from the mansion at Brocklesby; the Kestrel firing minute guns corresponding with his Lordship's age, sixty-five. The outer coffin, which brought the remains to this country, was enveloped in a Union-Jack, and in this manner was placed in the hearse, which was waiting for its reception, and, followed by a mourning coach with the chief mourners, was conveyed to the mansion at Brocklesby, and inclosed in a superb coffin.

On Thursday, at 11 o'clock, the funeral procession left the mansion. The body was preceded by the crew and officers of the Kestrel; and the late Earl's two sons, Lord Worsley (the present Earl), and Captain the Hon. Dudley Pelham, R.N., as chief mourners. On arriving at the mausoleum, in the grounds of Brocklesby, the coffin was removed from the hearse, the officers of the Kestrel acting as pall-bearers. The service was then read by the Dean of Lincoln, and the body being deposited in the mausoleum, the procession returned to the family mansion. There were upwards of 1,000 spectators, among whom the deepest sorrow was evinced.

After the funeral, the officers and crew of the Kestrel returned to their ship, and she being no longer owned by a member of the Royal Yacht Squadron, the white ensign of St. George ceased to be hoisted on board, and the red ensign was displayed instead. The yacht afterwards got under way with the officers and crew on their return to Cowes.

COMBINATION.

RARELY is it found that the things which are desirable, are possible, even by great efforts, to be attained; if it were so, the world would, in many respects, be a better one: "if to do," says one who knew it well, "were as easy as to know what were good to do, chapels had been churches, and poor men's cottages Princes' palaces." There is the eternal difficulty: knowing that a change would be for the better, is but a small part of the process necessary to effect it; still, efforts, and the beginnings of efforts, are ever and anon made, which show that men do not despair; and these, unimportant as they may seem, should not be altogether disregarded: the speculations of one age have so often become the realities of another, that ridicule is by no means a safe weapon to employ against a scheme which comes before us at present, perhaps, in a questionable shape; it is, in all cases, better to examine than to sneer, especially when a plan, great in its object, is founded on a principle really capable of effecting much more than has yet been wrought out by it. Thus, some benevolent gentlemen have just commenced a crusade against Poverty and the New Poor Law, in which these twin evils are to be fought by the efforts of those most liable to become their victims. In a word, it is proposed to form the whole working classes of the Empire into one immense Mutual Assurance Office, which shall secure for all contributors better dwellings, a raised condition in life, and support in case of want or disease, without the necessity of sinking to the sad level of the pauper, or submitting to the cold charity of a system that, dealing with large masses of human suffering, has nearly lost the sense of individual kindness and mercy. The scheme is grand and benevolent—that must be conceded, as well as a meed of praise to the proposers, for zeal and sincerity; but the success of the plan itself is one of the things rather to be wished than expected. It is not our intention to analyse details, as yet crude and undigested; but the principle upon which they rest—that of Combination—deserves some notice; it is one that has done much for the world, and is destined yet to do a great deal more.

It is scarcely creditable to our superior reason and wisdom that the greatest exertions of men in combination have been made for destruction. Estimate only the amount of human power, moral and physical, concentrated in a great army, like any of those which Napoleon and Wellington often commanded! Here was combination in its most perfect form; thousands upon thousands uniting in action and movement as if they were one body; obeying implicitly the will of a single chief, whether the command is to stand, and "feed death" unresisting, or to rush into active combat, and slay or be slain in the blinding tumult of battle; tedious marches of days or weeks undergone; privations of every kind submitted to; want of food, thirst, the earth for a couch, and the cold skies for a canopy; and to perform all this, an organisation of rank beneath rank, each with its distinct duty, framed with the nicest calculation, till the chain is complete, from the unnoticed unit in the ranks up to the one leader, on whom all this awful host depends! A great army is one of the most wonderful exhibitions of human power drawn from combination; it is wonderful in itself, for the perfection with which the instrument is adapted to its end; still more wonderful when we reflect what that end is, for if that very organised multitude were to act on the instincts and feelings of the individuals composing it, it would, probably, in very many cases certainly, cease to be an army at all; personally, the men feel little of the hatred they display so destructively in the mass. To bring these hosts together, and to move them from point to point, the revenues and wealth of whole nations have been exhausted, and their population drained, till there were scarcely enough left to carry on the common business of life. Thus, the two things most prized by mortals—existence, and the wealth that supports it—are sacrificed to secure that kind of Combination which creates armies. We speak here only of the effort, endurance, and suffering, which these organisations cost, not of their purposes, or the results they have attained.

Recollecting, then, how life and gold are lavished for ends in which the parties engaged have but a very remote interest, it may be asked, could not men combine on something like the same scale for purposes of peace? Suppose a time should ever come, when, instead of armies for war, States will enrol and organise "armies of industry!" Is it quite impossible? The future may have things quite as strange waiting for development. Imagine hosts, like those that slew each other at such combats as Leipsic or Borodino, making but one campaign against an uncultivated wilderness! But half the toil, the gold, the devotion, sacrificed in a single day, to the ambition of one man, would create a whole province of fields and villages! Estimate what War has cost every nation—work the great sum of destruction backwards, and turn it into a reckoning of what the same energy might have accomplished applied to create and improve, and a very different world than the present rises before us! And this or something like it may be realised when men arrive at the conclusion that there may be as much glory in doing battle with nature and the elements as going to war with each other.

Military power is a combination of strength, supported by the wealth of the State, and directed by absolute authority, disobedience to which is a capital crime. But there are many other kinds of Combination, though none have yet been formed on so gigantic a scale, or with such complete success; but there is a tendency to try of what the principle is capable; and, seeing what it has already done, there is every prospect of success in carrying it still further. The advantage of men combining to protect each other from the ill effects of some of the casualties to which life and property are liable, is well understood. Human existence, though, individually, the most uncertain and least to be calculated of tenures, is, in large numbers, capable of being computed with remarkable exactness: the destruction of property by fire and shipwreck can be brought under the operation of the same principle; no one can say that a certain ship or a certain house is safe, but its destruction may be rendered no loss, by making it a part of a Combination which pays that value out of the contributions of the many to which the accident does not occur. The payment to the fund is constant and regular; the loss casual, and small in amount, compared to the sum received. We believe that the policies of the principal London offices are numbered by hundreds of thousands; they, therefore, represent a body of men equal to the population of whole cities, relieved from apprehension of ruin from one of the most fatal accidents to which property is exposed.

The St. Alban's proposition is to extend the principle of Insurance, or rather that of Combination, acted upon by the countless Benefit Societies existing in England, and unite with it a Building Society on a large scale. There can be no doubt there is a vast field of improvement in this direction. It is the fault of Benefit Societies and Sick Clubs that they rest on too narrow a basis: the greater the number from whom the contribution is received the better. They are also badly managed in a hundred ways and offer opportunities for waste and peculation not always resisted. Hitherto the working classes have applied the principle of Combination on the greatest scale in maintaining "strikes," which have often proved disastrous to themselves; there is no reason why they should not try it for a more certain benefit. The great defect of the new plan is admitting "voluntary contributions," and placing a reliance upon the charitable co-operation of the wealthy. This is wholly unsound, and any scheme based on such calculations will fail. In all Combinations, the money thrown together must be certain, and regularly paid—no part of the exchequer can be left dependent on charity; what may be given may be also withheld, and then there is an end to all certainty.

But there is another thing in which, by Combination, the working classes could improve their condition immensely: it is simply adopting the system that has been so successfully worked out by the aristocracy, the professions, and mercantile men. Clubs and large lodging-houses, built to accommodate many families, would return a handsome profit to a capitalist, even at the rents working men pay for the miserable holes and dens they now inhabit. Houses that were built for one family have often a whole family crowded into each room! Nothing is so strange as the carelessness exhibited in the construction of the dwellings even of the middle and comparatively wealthy classes in London. Whole miles of miserable brick boxes, with holes cut in them, are built, and dignified by the name of houses, while they are really little more than huts of baked clay. We believe that capitalists are beginning to learn the advantages of a different plan, and we shall gradually see many families living under one roof, with economy of space and increased comfort. The middle classes can command the change if they please; but it will be adopted for the poorer when it is perceived to be profitable. The model lodging-houses will not have been built for nothing.

These changes are all practicable, and they involve no violent alteration of the frame of society. The error of philanthropists is, generally, that they attempt too much, and would make men different from what they are; community of goods, equality of rights, and various other theories are out of the question; mere absurdities; but better houses, better food, baths, more light and drainage, and, generally, a wiser application of the funds now earned and wasted—all these are possible; and the principle of Combination will yet procure them.

Induction of the New Vicar of St. Bride's.—On Tuesday afternoon the Rev. Charles Marshall, the new Incumbent of the Vicarage of St. Bride's, Fleet-street, was formally inducted. The ceremonial was conducted in the following manner. The Rev. Mr. Dale, the late Incumbent, having briefly addressed the assembled parishioners, Mr. Cook, the Senior Churchwarden, handed the keys of the church to Mr. Dale, who, having opened the door, led the new Incumbent by the right hand into the church, placed the keys in his hands, and delivered to him corporal possession of the church and parish of St. Bride's, with all the rights and privileges thereto belonging. Mr. Dale then retired to the outside of the church, and the newly-invested Incumbent having closed and locked the door, the formal ceremonial of induction was concluded by Mr. Marshall tolling the bell of the church in token of his possession of the church and Vicarage. The Rev. gentleman having concluded this duty, the parishioners were again admitted to the church, and proceeded to the vestry-room, where refreshments were provided by the Churchwardens, and some complimentary speeches were made.

Will of the Late Bishop of Bath and Wells.—It was only on the 1st o October that probate of the will, with seven codicils, of the Right Rev. George Henry Law, D.D., F.R.S., F.A.S., the late Bishop of Bath and Wells, passed the seal of the Prerogative Court of Canterbury, and was granted to his son, the Rev. Robert Vanbrugh Law, rural Dean and Rector of Christian Malford, Wilts. A power was reserved to his other sons, the Chancellor the Worshipful James Thomas Law, M.A., and Archdeacon the Venerable Henry Law, M.A. The personalty was valued for duty at £18,000. The venerable Prelate, by his testamentary documents, made in his own handwriting, between the years 1836 and 1840, has disposed of his property chiefly amongst his family, leaving to his sons and daughters specific and pecuniary bequests, and to each of his grandchildren a legacy, and to a few friends, and to his servants. His gallery of pictures he wished to be offered at a stated price to his successor, the Bishop of Oxford, Dr B[illegible]got. His books to be divided equally amongst his three sons, to whom he has left the residue of his property. At the commencement of his will, and again at the conclusion of the first codicil, are these words:—"I commend my soul into the hands of my Creator, humbly hoping that it may be received into the mansions of the blessed, and that I may again behold those whom I have loved upon earth made saints in Heaven." His appointment to the see was in 1824, the income of which, by the last returns, was £5000 per annum.

High Prices of Provisions in the Metropolis. Within the last few days, the prices of the various commodities for the use of this great metropolis have risen considerably. Potatoes, which this time last year were fetching only 3s. to 4s. per cwt., are now sold as high as from 5s. to 6s., and some as high as 10s. Bacon is also very dear, varying from 8d. to 1s. per lb., an increase of at least [illegible] per cent. Starch, soda, and many other useful articles, as regards the washing department, are also rising in price. Within the last three months, the 4lb loaf has increased as much as 3d. to the consumer, and the various bakers report that, owing to the scanty supply to the London markets, the prices will be still higher.

Births and Deaths in the Metropolis.—The total number of deaths in the metropolis in the week ending last Saturday was 905, showing a decrease of 30 as compared with the returns of the previous week. The number of births in the week was 1178. The last weekly return of deaths was under th[illegible] th[illegible] five years by 63, and under the average of the last [illegible] [illegible] persons who died of old age and decay of nature, at [illegible] there was one at 101, namely, a woman in the town district of Bethnal-g[illegible]

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

PARISIANA.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Paris, Wednesday.

Alexandre Dumas, Theophile Gautier, Macquet, and other Historiographes of the Princes engaged in their singular matrimonial progress to Madrid, with an army à pas de Charge for their tails, have not yet enlivened our dark horizon with the corruscations of their meteoric pens. All we hear is sombre beyond measure. The young Duke de Montpensier, I know, by a private letter, is struck to the heart by the coldness of his reception by the ecstatic Spaniards. It was exactly the same treatment of sullen and contemptuous silence which King Joseph Napoleon's brother experienced on his triumphal entry into Madrid, when every true Spaniard felt his dagger, and also looked daggers in silence—and, in good time, used them with awful effect against our too confident countrymen. Our friends, on the journey, are made to remember that for ages France and Spain were rivals; and, unfortunately, the whole soul and heart of Spain are found in the lower classes; for the grandees—pigmies in size—are morally as non-existent as if they had already joined their ancestors in the charnel-house of their blazonry. These proud-spirited lower classes stick as strongly as ever to hereditary prejudices and feuds; and their hatred of the French is measured by the remembrance of Napoleon's invasion. One amongst several of my more distinguished countrymen, who, in company, have followed the Princes to Spain, writes that, on getting to Vittoria, finding a number of silent Dons surrounding them in the court-yard of the Posada, he observed to the nearest Spaniard, that they would soon be but one nation, perhaps, some day, with a French King. Upon which, the proud Castilian frowned, and lowered on him like a mountain, and repeated to him the old Spanish proverb—"Si Dios no era Dios seria Rey d'Espana, y su cocinero Rey di Francia" (If the Gods were not Gods they would be Kings of Spain, and their cooks Kings of France); upon which the natives uttered a "Ugh! Ugh!" of derisive approbation. My friend, his companion, hurried his departure, and has been since, he says, most economical of compliments. What we feel most anxious about in Paris is to see our truly amiable young Princes safely returned. This feeling is universal at Court; particularly deep with Queen Amelia, who, no doubt, often thinks of the day when the Duchess d'Angouleme, pointing to a picture of the Duke of Orleans, assassinated in his headlong career, in the reign of Charles VII., whispered to the present King the old French proverb—"L'Ambition perd l'homme!" Louis Philippe, much distressed at finding his Chargé d'Affaires excluded from the diplomatic receptions at Windsor, has made advances to all the English of [illegible] Paris. Th[illegible] friend, the eccentric Lord Brougham, is said to have refused. Lord Normanby likewise has avoided the family dinners at Neuilly, although he has been obliged to accept the official invitation for the dinner M. Guizot is about to give, to celebrate his nomination and that of Prince Wallerstein as Ambassadors to the Court of the Tuileries. Count de St. Aulaire, the Ambassador to England, is returned to Paris; but, although his furlough has now expired, no mention is made of his return to London, and, in this crisis of affairs, the young Count de Jarnac will still remain Chargé d'Affaires at your Court. Count Bresson is said to have requested the succession of Count de St. Aulaire at your Court, as a reward of his services, and it is highly probable that when the asperity of present circumstances will have worn off, he will receive this guerdon. Thus will he have reached the highest object of his ambition, for, when at one time in his absence he had been named in Paris Minister of State, he declined the office. His career has been highly fortunate, and withal curious. He had been a subaltern diplomatist at Washington, when the South American revolution broke out. His uncle, the advocate, having won a lawsuit for Prince Polignac's brother, the latter interested himself to get him sent as diplomatic agent and Commissary of France to General Bolivar. He was immediately recalled after his arrival at his destination, because he had told the revolutionary General and President, in his first inaugural speech, that his Royal master, Charles X., fully sympathised in his notions of liberty! He arrived in Paris just as the Days of July, 1830, had ended, and all the diplomatic employés were disbanded. M. Molé, then Minister of Foreign Affairs, found him àpropos with his republican notions, and ready to fill a gap, and made him chief of his Cabinet. He then sent him to London as First Secretary, to watch Prince Talleyrand. In London, the Conference sent him to Brussels; and the struggle he made to get the Duke de Nemours made King of Belgium procured him Louis Philippe's warmest interest, and he was sent as Ambassador to Prussia. I have related to you already how singularly he rose from thence to his present political importance, having effected two of those many marriages by which alone Louis Philippe has managed to get himself re-admitted into the great family of European Sovereigns who had excluded him, and increased so immensely the personal fortunes of the several members of his family.

After Politics—now paramount—the ruling topic of conversation amongst the haut monde in Paris is the separation betwixt the Princess M—— and the Mr. D——, the richest proprietor in Russia. The Emperor has been said, in the papers here, to have been indignant at his plebeian subject having married his beautiful wife, as she is not only of the Buonaparte family, but, through her mother, is related to the Czar's family; and, as a punishment, to have forbidden his returning to her in Paris; at which the Princess, who remained here, was said to have separated from him, not hoping to behold him again, and to have removed her property from his hotel. The truth is, however, that M—— D—— has been married six years to the young lady, and has, several times during that period, returned to and from Russia—the Czar never putting any impediment to the movements of his subjects, but when they are involved in political conspiracies, or implicated seriously in other misdemeanours. What is certain, however, is, that the young and lovely Princess—one of the brightest ornaments to Parisian society—has withdrawn for protection into a convent, and has renounced the Russian millionaire, whose mines of silver, gold, platina, and diamonds have for years been the topic of conversation of the savants, as well as the gobemouches. To crown his fortunes, the Duke of Tuscany has recently made him a Prince.

FRANCE.

The political news from France this week is unimportant; the journalists are still engaged in contests upon the subject of the marriage of the Duke de Montpensier. It will be seen under the head of Spain, that the French Government on Tuesday received a telegraphic despatch, announcing the solemnization of the marriage on Saturday last. A second despatch states that a grand nuptial mass took place on Sunday, in the Church of Atocha.

Lieut.-General De Lamoricière has been elected Deputy at St. Calais, by 207 votes out of 369, in the room of M. Gustave de Beaumont, who had been returned for two seats, and made his selection for Mamers. M. Ernest Portalis, a Conservative candidate, has been elected at Toulon; he replaces his brother, who died during the last short session.

King Louis Philippe went to the Tuileries on Monday, to inspect the preparations made for the apartments of the Duke and Duchess of Montpensier.

Algiers journals to the 6th inclusive, have been received in Paris. The following, from the Moniteur Algérien, is the only article of interest in them:

"We learn through Tlemcen a new instance of the anarchy that reigns in the west of our frontier near Morocco. At the beginning of the last month, the Halafs pillaged a numerous caravan returning from Ouchda to the interior of the empire. It was in vain that it demanded succour from the Caid of Ouchda. The booty taken by the Halafs and their allies is estimated at 50,000 dollars. This is probable from the high price at which the goods have been sold. We are assured that some of the cavalry of Abd-el-Kader were among the robbers. The Caid of Medromah has just given an additional proof of his fidelity in arresting two emissaries sent by Bou Maza to excite insurrection in the town."

Le Messager publishes a report of Captain Bruat, late Governor of the French establishments in Oceania, dated Papeiti, June 3, 1846, giving an account of the late engagements between the French troops and the Otaheitans. It appears that the latter were successively dislodged from all their positions but the last. There were two days' fighting, on the 10th and 30th of May. The French lost two officers and six men; six officers and twenty-one non-commissioned officers and men wounded.

The Epoque states that the King, by an Ordinance of the 6th inst., had pardoned upwards of a hundred prisoners on the occasion of the marriage of the Duke of Montpensier. Among those whose penalties were commuted are five of the accomplices of Quenisset, who was sentenced to death by the Court of Peers in 1841, for an attempt against the lives of the Dukes of Orleans, Nemours, and Aumale. These are Brazier, who was also capitally convicted, Jarasse, Petit, Malet, and Boucheron. Eight other political offenders, implicated in the insurrectionary movements of La Vendée, in 1834 and 1835: four others, condemned for participation in the plot of Marseilles, in 1841; and nine galley slaves, confined in the bagnes of Rochefort, Brest, and Toulon, whose good behaviour was made known to his Majesty, had also experienced the Royal clemency. "Agreeably to the desire of the King," adds the Epoque, "the amnestied were to be apprised of their pardon on the 10th inst., the day of the marriage of the Prince."

Rear-Admiral Baron de Bougainville died on Sunday last in Paris, after four months' illness.

The price of flour has fallen nearly two francs the quintal, at the Halle of Paris.

Lord Brougham, it is said, received an invitation to dine with the French Royal Family, a few days since, but declined to accept the proffered honour.

THE UNITED STATES AND MEXICO.

The Cambria arrived at Liverpool on Wednesday, with ten days later news than that last received. It was expected at New York that the Government of the United States had decided upon a line of offensive operations against Mexico, which is to be immediately and vigorously pursued. It has been decided to take possession of Tampico, with a view to facilitate the operations of the army of invasion. Nearly a million of dollars have been drawn from the New York banks to place funds in New Orleans for the use of the army. Not the least singular part of this Mexican business is the admission of this same Santa Anna into Mexico, when the United States squadron might so easily have prevented it. The British merchant steamer Arab took him from Havana to Vera Cruz, and was boarded off the latter port by a boat from the United States sloop of war St. Mary's. The boarding officer ascertained that Santa Anna was on board, and then gave the Arab permission to pass the blockade. On the other hand, the people, it was understood, were heartily sick of a war, which, as the New York Courier and Enquirer says, "brings coppers to the Mexicans, and nothing but kicks to America."

The answer of the American proposals for peace was that they would be duly referred to the Mexican Congress, which is to assemble early in December, the same period at which the United States commences its annual session. The Washington Union looks upon this as a designed evasion, and as intended, in the ordinary style of Mexican diplomacy, to procrastinate and gain t[illegible].

It [illegible] not appear that Santa An[illegible] on the 20th of August, being still at his farm, an address, or compte rendu, was made to him by General Salas, setting forth what he had done while exercising the supreme power of the Republic, and especially taking credit to himself for having used all his efforts to strengthen the national arms to resist "the invasion and the perfidiousness of the Americans"—and finally defers all power to Santa Anna.

No intelligence had been received directly from the American squadron in the Pacific, through whose agency the flag of the United States had been raised, without any resistance being offered, throughout Upper California. The expedition, which had been in preparation for several weeks at New York, had sailed for California, though none of the transports are cleared for that region directly. The American forces on the Rio Grande have taken up their march for Monterey. General Taylor with his army joined his advance, which, under General [illegible], had reached and occupied Seralvo, a town about midway between Camargo and Monterey, about the 15th ult. He had sufficient force—12,000 men—and adequate provisions for pushing on to Monterey, which he would probably do without loss of time. General Ampudia is in command at Monterey, with an army differently estimated at from 3000 to 6000 men. He has issued a proclamation, forbidding all intercourse between the belligerents on pain of death.

The Great Western arrived at New York on the 30th ult., after having experienced a hurricane. On the 19th a sea struck the ship, which smashed the larboard paddle box to atoms, sprung the spring beam, &c.; a splinter struck the Captain on the head, and would have knocked him overboard, but he was caught in the nettings. On the 21st, she was again in the greatest danger from a tornado, which buried the gunwales of the vessel in the sea. The ship leaked on her arrival in port. A letter of thanks was presented to the captain and officers by the passengers, who also subscribed £[illegible] to be given to the officers and crew for their meritorious efforts.

CANADA.

The New York papers contain news from Montreal of the very late date of the 28th of September. A sad calamity had occurred in the upsetting of a boat near Cedar Island, when crossing the Channel to Point Frederick, by which seventeen lives were lost.

NEW ZEALAND

Papers and letters have reached us from New Zealand, which enable us to give a connected narrative of some interesting events that have occurred in that settlement up to the 27th of May.

On the morning of Sunday, the 10th of May, a party of the force stationed at Porirua proceeded up the northern arm of the harbour to reconnoitre Rangihaeata's position, and the foremost boat approached within a short distance of his pah. They were fired upon by the natives: they did not return the fire, and effected their retreat without loss, under a heavy one from the natives. About [illegible] Rangihaeata's movements, brought word back that that chief was collecting men from Otaki, Wanganui, and other places. They were to repair to Porirua, under pretence of holding a tangi over a chief lately dead. They were expected to muster 200 strong, and were to march to the Hutt, and establish themselves at Taita. This information was communicated to Major Richmond. On Friday, the 15th of May, Muturoa, one of the principal chiefs of Pipitea Pah, waited on Major Richmond, to warn him of his danger, and offer the services of his tribe. The offer was declined. The superintendent, although aware that an overt act of hostility had been committed by Rangihaeata, and although forewarned that the first attack would be made on the Hutt, took no precautions. The officer in command of the troops remained at Wellington.

At daybreak on the morning of Saturday, the 16th of May, a body of natives, about 200 in number, arrived in the valley of Hutt, with the intention of surprising and cutting off the detachment of the 58th, stationed about two miles above the Hutt bridge. Of this party (forty-two in number), fourteen were posted in Mr. Boulcott's barn; the rest were dispersed in tents and buildings in the immediate neighbourhood. Lieut. Page (the officer in command), with his servant, occupied Mr. Boulcott's house. The natives were led by Kaparetehau. The first alarm was given by a sentinel, who, hearing a noise, fired his piece, and endeavoured to rouse the picquet. Immediately three heavy volleys were poured into the tents in quick succession by the natives, who rushed on with loud yells to complete the work of destruction. Four soldiers were tomahawked in one tent. One of them, who was bugler to the company, seized his bugle, but, while in the act of sounding it, a blow from a tomahawk disabled his right arm, and struck him to the ground. He seized the instrument with the other hand, and attempted to sound it, when a second blow nearly severed his head from his body. Lieut. Page, with some difficulty, cut his way through the natives who had surrounded the house, and put himself at the head of the men who had rallied from the tents and out-houses. The 14 soldiers in the barn, with perfect coolness and self-possession, divided themselves into two parties of seven each, who fired by turns, and then retreated into the barn to reload. In the midst of the engagement, seven of [illegible] disbanded on the previous Monday, joined the soldiers, who were inspired with fresh courage, even by this slight reinforcement. The natives, believing that more assistance was at hand, were proportionably dispirited, and gave way. After a smartly-contested action, they retired across the river, carrying with them their dead and wounded.

The loss on the part of the troops was six killed and five wounded. Their names are—Killed: Lance-corporal James Dockrell, privates William Allen, Robert Brett, Thomas Bolt, J. M'Fadden, T. Sonnam. Wounded: Lance-sergeant E. Ingram (severely), privates Patrick Bevan, Thomas Tayler, John Ward. The total amount of killed and wounded among the assailants is believed to have been thirteen. They deny that any were killed, and affirm that only one of them was wounded. The tents were completely riddled with bullets, the Maories firing low, in the belief that the soldiers were in bed. One party fired several volleys into Mr. Boulcott's house. Mr. Boulcott himself narrowly escaped, and a ball struck his servant, Thomas Hoseman, while rising from his bed. The ball was extracted, but the man died of the wound on the 21st. The only other settlers disturbed on the occasion were Mr. and Mrs. M'Hardie. The natives entered their house and drove them from it, but without inflicting any personal injury. The party at Taita effected their retreat, and joined the troops without opposition. As soon as the despatch conveying intelligence of the attack reached Wellington, Major Last directed 50 men of the 99th to proceed to the stockade at the Hutt-bridge, and sent orders to Captain Hardy, in command of that post, to advance with his men to support their comrades. Immediately afterwards Major Last, with Major Richmond, repaired to the scene of action. On his arrival he found the natives keeping up a straggling fire on the troops from the bush on the opposite side of the river. The order was given for the soldiers to advance in extended line, and drive them from the bush. E'Puni, who accompanied Major Last (having been persuaded to relinquish his design of standing aloof), was much struck with the gallant manner in which this manœuvre was executed. During the whole of Saturday and Sunday the natives continued to keep the position originally occupied by the troops, about half a mile in advance of Mr. Boulcott's station. On Saturday they robbed M'Hardie's house, killed his pigs for food, and took away or destroyed all his property. On Monday they returned to Porirua, in obedience to a message from Rangihaeata, who had not accompanied them in person. Ample precautions had been taken to insure the safety of all the settlers.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

The New Barracks at the Tower of London.—We lately made a visit to the works at the Tower, and were much gratified with the bold and noble appearance the new barracks begin to assume. We have already given a sketch of the design for the south or front façade of the building—(See the Illustrated London News, No. 164). And it will be recollected that this front presents two square towers at each end, and two octagonal turrets in the centre flanking the principal entrance, which is a fine Tudor arch deeply recessed, opening upon a vaulted stone passage leading to the back or north tower. The workmen have reached the top of the third tier of windows; at this height the roof of the main building commences, which will be partially hid by a battlemented parapet. The two corner towers have large projecting oriel windows on their south fronts, supported on massive stone corbels; which is a fine feature, imparting a strikingly bold appearance, and at the same time somewhat of the cheerfulness of a residence, supplanting the comfortless single light and fatal loophole which belonged to the military stronghold. Indeed, the whole of the windows have been carried out in their design and detail with strict regard to the style of the period, partaking at once of the simplicity of those in the early part of the 15th century, with the necessary adaptation to modern improvements and uses. The centre window over the gateway is continued through the two stories, divided on the line of the floor by panels, which, we conjecture, will be filled with heraldic insignia. The mullions are worthy of notice for their novelty and exceeding boldness; and the tracery at the top is simple and in good taste. The upper moulded string is divided into compartments by grotesque heads. We can hardly judge yet of its appearance as a whole, but, when the several embattled towers and turrets rise conspicuously above the main building—the fresh masonry in strong contrast with the mellowed ruggedness of the White Tower—we are convinced that its effect will be grand and imposing.

Opening of University College.—The session of this University commenced on Wednesday with a Lecture from Professor Taylor, of Trinity College, Cambridge, on the education of all classes in England.

Reopening of Churches.—The Church of St. Michael, Cornhill, having been repaired and embellished, will be reopened to-morrow for divine worship. St. John the Evangelist, Westminster, which has been closed for nearly two months during the extensive repairs, &c., reopens for public worship on Sunday, the 25th instant. St. James's, Westminster, which is undergoing extensive internal repair and decorations, it is expected will be reopened early in November next.

The Model Lodging-house, St. Giles's. The erection of this building is rapidly progressing. The frontage is rather more than ninety feet; depth, thirty. It is to be divided into three compartments—for married couples, single men, and single women.

The Artesian Wells in Trafalgar-square.—It is in contemplation to sink another shaft at the works in Trafalgar-square, in order to obtain a further supply of water for the neighbourhood.

City Improvements.—On Tuesday, notice was given that all the houses in Old Broad-street and Leadenhall-street, between the Hall of Commerce and the Royal Exchange, are forthwith to be demolished, preparatory to the projected improvements.

Baths and Washhouses in St. George's, East.—On Tuesday afternoon the vestry poll, which had been demanded on behalf of the measure for the adoption of baths and washhouses for the poor in this parish, was closed, when the numbers stood—for the adoption of baths and washhouses, 273; against their adoption, 503; majority against the act, 230. Several of the promoters of the m[illegible] attempted to address the vestry meeting, but in vain. The churchwar[illegible] declared that the resolution for the adoption of baths and washhouses was nega[illegible], and [illegible] the meeting.

Reduction in the Price of Bread.—On Wed[illegible], the metropolitan bakers reduced the price of bread respectively from 10d. to [illegible]d. and from 8½d. to 8d. per four pound loaf,

NATIONAL SPORTS.

AUTUMNAL RACING AT NEWMARKET.

> Good company's a chess-board—there are Kings,
> Queens, Bishops, Knights, Rooks, Pawns—the world's a game
> Save that the puppets pull at their own strings,
> Methinks gay Punch hath something of the same. BYRON.

ALL the world knows, or ought to know, that, out of the annual fifty-two weeks, seven are appropriated at Newmarket to the business of the Turf—an appropriate phrase, and used advisedly. Since the Olympic Games, and the equestrian solemnities at Elis, horse-coursing was never celebrated with the rigid keeping, and finished etiquette, which distinguish all its details at the great modern Hippodrome. The current week, albeit the skiey influences were not propitious, saw it put on the scene with admirable éclat. First claiming notice, are the facilities for transit to the place of action. You have but to pass from May Fair to Shoreditch, threading the rural avenues of Smithfield, and eke the New Jerusalem known by the name of Finsbury, and, trusting yourself to the Eastern Counties Railway—unless it should happen to break its engagements, and your neck—you are delivered, in some couple of hours, at Chesterford, after departure from the Great City. This is convenient, and consistent with the "progressista" spirit of the time, but, compared with the practice of some half-dozen years ago, there is a sad falling off in the poetry of the thing. See how ship-shape your correct man used to do it then; we do not speak of your ultra-exquisite, for extremes of any kind are to be eschewed. We suppose him a sojourner west of Hyde Park-corner. He has been advertised—of course—that the first day's racing commences at such and such an hour; if the July meeting, it will be, perhaps, three p.m. Well, at a quarter past six a.m., his buggy is at the door; he has three miles to do to Charing Cross; and, as his horse cannot comfortably trot less than thirteen miles an hour, as the minute-hand of St. Martin's Church clock points twenty-nine minutes past six, he pulls up at the Golden Cross. In a minute more he is on the box of the Norwich Telegraph, carefully preserved for him on faith of his never-failing half-crown; and, as the chime tells the half hour, "sit fast" cries Mister Bottom, and up the Strand they toddle. While they arrange their load, and tie down the tarpaulin at the Flower Pot, Bishopsgate-street, he draws forth his cigar case, lights his weeds, folds his box coat over his knees, and sets at defiance all encroachment from the morning air. As he glides over Lea Bridge the day comes forth rejoicing; and at Epping Place he falls upon breakfast like a French falconer. At "Owen Edwards's," the waiter without the hat—the man that never was known to wear any covering to his head but its natural thatch—at Chesterford, we say, he proceeds to soda and sherry—and thence, with a light load upon his bosom, to Newmarket, where he is set down at twenty minutes past one.

Thus it used to be in the matter and manner of the wayfaring: now the hot water system commences before you arrive. But, once there, whether the year be 1836 or 1846, alike in the social detail, around are groups of men scattered, habited as English sportsmen alone are; and, looking the business for which they have met together, ye understand the English sport is degrees above mere common pastime. Lilliputian boys, in plain frock coats and faultless boots and breeches, proclaim the nature of their service, and the unimpeachable taste of the masters they serve. Tiny, graceful phaetons, drawn by pigmy steeds of perfect action and symmetry, glide ever and anon along the smooth street. Within recline fair women, the élite of bon ton: the peerless of fashion's paragons. Nothing mal à droit or unseemly mars the harmony of the ensemble. All is gentle and aristocratic in the composition and conduct of the picture. Even the fungus which here and there is seen popping its head outside the frame—the misfit of Nature's journeyman gibbeted in a Whitechapel "Taglioni" and hung in chains of mosaic gold—serves to set off the general effect, by throwing the gentler points into stronger relief. Peradventure, all may not be honourable men—but the tailor and laundress have done their duty by them, and if they have sinned a little they may repent. The prodigal sons of the turf are welcomed back on evincing a disposition to turn from the evil of their ways: "levanting" is a weakness to be repaired by the amende honorable. . . . .

> Time hath, my Lord, a wallet at his back,
> Wherein he puts alms for oblivion.

The two principal Autumnal Meetings at Newmarket are the Second October and the Houghton: with the former of these is our present affair. It commenced on Monday, and spread over the week with a prodigality of sport. True, many of the matches ended in disappointment; but, as Byron sings, affairs of that kind are very susceptible of damage. Of the six days, Tuesday was the cynosure of interest, in every sense of the expression. Leaving, therefore, the others to be represented by the facts to which they gave existence, we will wander a little into the theories of that chief episode of the occasion. The temperature was fearfully low, after the broiling which the preceding six months had made to us a second nature. The attendance was prodigious: not only was the heath strewed with "good company," but with all the phases of snobbery elaborated by "gay Punch." The course was a chess-board, whereon most of the characters which exhibit in that game were pitted in the tug of war—the stern struggle wherein "Greek meets Greek."

> There were four Honourable Misters, whose > Honour was more before their names than after:
> There was the preux chevalier de la Ruse,
> Whom France and Fortune lately deigned to waft here.
> * * * * * *
> There was Dick Dubious, the metaphysician,
> Who loved philosophy and a good dinner,
> Angle, the soi-disant mathematician,
> Sir Henry Silvercup, the great race winner
> There was the Reverend Rodomont Precision,
> Who did not hate so much the sin as sinner;
> And Lord Augustus Fitz-Plantagenet,
> Good at all things, but better at a bet.

The ring was very populous on the adjournment from the town, which took place at one o'clock; and very vociferous were its habitués for custom, but though they were ready and willing to lay against anything, almost at your own price, there were no backers of horses. Never was a more unprofitable gathering, the issue under consideration being of course the Cesarewitch—for in these days nobody wagers about anything else when there is a handicap to be had. Those who were on the "cracks" could not get off, except at a ruinous discount; and as Sir Tatton Sykes was announced to be "scratched," his friends found themselves undeniably in the hole. To what base uses may a brave courser be reduced. Here is a horse that could have won the Derby "in a canter"—the Leger likewise—that was expected to walk over for the Grand Duke Michael, and more likely to carry off both the great autumn Handicaps than one—just able to win a solitary engagement out of the bundle; and "now there"—that is to say in circumstances of unsoundness, and the Vet.'s hands.

The racing which preceded the great event was well calculated for a foil to the pride, pomp, and circumstance with which it took the field. Thirty-one racehorses at the post is a sight to set before a King in any case; but, seen at Newmarket, it is a pageant that would do honour to an Imperial Congress. At three o'clock that gorgeous rendezvous was made; but, as the start takes place at the opposite side of the Ditch from the winning post, it is invisible from the goal, where, at such an anxious moment, men most do congregate. What occurred at the early part of the race matters little; every jock had his own version of it; let it be enough to say that the pace must have been very bad, as the whole company reached the bushes in one magnificent front, stretching across the whole of the course, in array like the coursers of Aurora. Then Tom Tulloch, the popular candidate, compounded, and some four or five got clear of the body of horses. At it these went, Wit's-end and Jenny Wren in advance of the others. This pair ran a very resolute finish, the former winning rather cleverly by a length. Sister to Pergularia was third, though not placed by the judge—not one of the three being in the betting, or apparently ever thought of by the brokers of the odds! The Clearwell, a two-year-old stake, of some account, was won cleverly, in a field of a dozen, by Glentilt, one of the lot said to have been bought by Mr. Mostyn, of Lord George Bentinck. He was ridden by that nobleman's especial jockey, and his victory seemed to give his late noble owner more satisfaction than people are in the habit of feeling at the successes of their neighbours.

Besides other sport which came off, there were seven matches that broke down. The day, however, terminated with spirit—a propriety that distinguished the career of the Meeting. We took leave of it grateful for the good things it had provided—and hopeful of the promise of the Houghton . . . .

> For Time is like a fashionable host,
> That slightly shakes his parting guest by the hand,
> And, with his arms outstretched, as he would fly,
> Grasps the in-comer: welcome ever smiles,
> And farewell goes out sighing.

THE LAST MEETING OF THE YEAR.

THE CESAREWITCH—WIT'S END.

THE year of the Turf is concluded: we mark it,
Albo carbone—in sporting most rich,
At Epsom—at Doncaster—noble Newmarket,
The Derby—St. Leger—and Cesarewitch!
Oh! Son of the Czar, though you now are afar
In Peterhoff Palace, your Highness may lend
A thought on the steed which has conquered the meed
Of your stakes at Newmarket—Squire Wreford's Wit's End.

Wit's End! Merry Momus! 'twould little importune
Most wits to arrive at the end of their race.
The course is so short: yet the Wits of good fortune
Rasp over a long one with rattling pace.
E'en so with the steed and his rider: for rarely
The best man and horse will the victory lend,
When honour is "bright," and the course ridden fairly,
Then Leggery surely is at its Wit's End.

Most splendid the start. There was Cranebrook and Cherry,
Wild Jonathan, Wolfdog, the Terrier, Remorse,
The Conjuror, Keshing, Flahowlagh, and merry,
Tom Tulloch, with many another brave horse;
But all were thrown back save Lord Chesterfield's Jenny,
A line to whose honour we hereby append,
A gallant steed reckon'd and came in the second:
Most keen the encounter 'tween her and Wit's End.

But the Turf year is over; farewell to Newmarket,
And all the Turf glories that graced '46.
King Phyrrus the First who knew well how to "lark" it,
Sir Tatton and Wit's End that placed in a "fix"
Some jockies who could not distinguish his merit.
Thus ever may merit 'gainst long odds contend,
And long may Newmarket in honour and spirit
Be proud of such triumphs as gained by Wit's End.

NAVAL AND MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

GOOD SERVICE PENSION.—The Earl of Auckland has conferred the good-service pension of £150 per annum, which fell to his patronage on the decease of Captain Dilkes, on Captain Edward Harvey (1811).

THE CHANNEL SQUADRON.—By latest accounts from the Channel Squadron, under Vice-Admiral Sir William Parker, Bart., we hear that, from contrary winds, it had been knocking about in the gut of Gibraltar, but the ships had at length emancipated themselves, and were returning to the cruising ground off Lisbon.

RUMOURED BREVET.—The Limerick Chronicle says it is decided to have immediately a brevet promotion in the army—a boon so long expected, and well merited by the service.

NAVAL PROMOTION.—It is stated upon good authority that a great naval promotion will take place early next month, which will have the effect of removing a great number of officers from the service upon the retired full pay list, and of giving promotion to others long entitled to it for their gallant services, many of whom have been upwards of twenty years without being raised a step higher in rank in the royal navy.

THE KAFFIR WAR.

SOME additional Cape of Good Hope papers to the 4th of August have reached us, which give much more satisfactory accounts of the progress of the British troops in the Kaffir country than those previously received.

The last intelligence acquainted us, that on the 16th of July, Colonel Somerset, with his army, had passed the Buffalo at Bridle Drift. The present advices supply us with the important operations of that gallant officer since that period, as detailed by him in his official communication to Lieutenant-Colonel Cloete, from which it appears that, in the pursuit of Pato, he made a rapid and bold incursion into Kreli's territories, where he had a smart engagement with the Kaffirs, thoroughly routing them, killing about 40 of them, and capturing 5000 head of cattle, which he conducted safely through the enemy's country to head quarters. The loss on the side of Colonel Somerset was Field Captain Groenwaldt wounded, one Fingoe killed, and one Fingoe wounded. The Fingoes displayed the most intrepid conduct, and appear to have borne the brunt of the action. In addition to the above important news, we have also received particulars of some successful operations of the troops under the command of Colonel Hare and Sir Andreas Stockenstrom, in the Amatola Mountains. In these engagements it was conjectured that 150 Kaffirs were killed, irrespective of many wounded. The loss on the side of the British troops was inconsiderable.

"Fort Beaufort, July 30.

"No junction yet between the Governor and Lieutenant Governor. The great attack was to have been made this morning on the Chumie Hoek, but no firing heard all day. The impression here is that the enemy will slip into the Winterberg and Baviaan's River, and that the great body of them have fallen back into Tambookieland."

We annex a pair of Portrait Illustrations of the Kaffir tribes, from drawings by a clever artist long resident in the Colony.

KAFFIR MESSENGER.

This man was chosen by Sir Harry Smith to convey letters after the peace with the Kaffirs, in 1835. He carries the letter in a cleft stick, as shown in the Engraving; and he will walk fifty or sixty miles a day.

DAMO, THE KAFFIR DOCTOR, AND RAIN-MAKER.

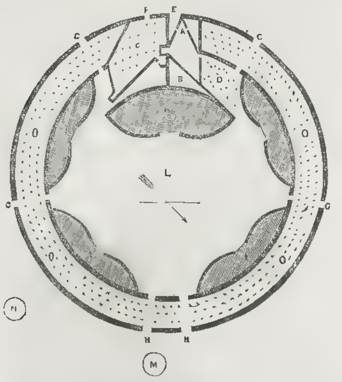
This fellow is one of the most diabolical characters in Kaffirland. He is the only person supposed by the Kaffirs to hold communication with their Gods, and also able to cause rain to fall at his bidding. The portrait represents him "invoking rain." The one or two men chosen for this peculiar office are generally good judges of the weather; and, whenever their prophecies are not fulfilled, they immediately attribute it to the anger of the Gods, who require so many head of cattle to propitiate them. They, the Weather-Doctors, by this means become possessed of large herds of cattle, particularly in dry seasons, when rain is much wanted. Some time ago Damo tried to persuade the chiefs of the Kaffirs to burn an old woman for witchcraft, in causing the death of a chief named Maromi.

We have been favoured by a Correspondent with the annexed Illustration of one of the Kaffir Camps; accompanied by the following details:—

"It appears that one Reteif was appointed Chief amongst the Boers when they had the 'treking' mania, that is, leaving their farms and living together for mutual defence. You must know that a large party of Boers, disgusted at the mismanagement of the Colony, determined to seek that protection for their lives and property in the Deserts which they could not obtain in the Colony. They accordingly sold their all, and steered onward. Numbers stayed so soon as they got beyond the Colonial boundary, the Orange River. Others pushed on to make Natal overland. Their route lay through the country belonging to one Dingaan, who professed great friendship at first; but, so soon as opportunity offered, attacked them several times. They made overtures, wishing to purchase land from him, when he charged them with stealing cattle from him; they assured him that they were stolen by a neighbouring chief; but he would not listen to them unless they captured the offender: they managed to do so, and brought him to Dingaan's kraal. He was so much pleased that he ordered a great feast in honour of Reteif and party, forty in number: they spent the day with him, after laying down their arms at his desire. When they were about to depart, he ordered the grand final dance to commence; and his men, at a given signal, rushed in upon the Boers, captured them, and put them to death. The other Boers had many a desperate struggle with them, but ultimately prevailed. I am acquainted with two young men, sons of Mr. Brownlee, the missionary, who acted as interpreter—they were great favourites of Dingaan's; one of them especially Dingaan offered to make a chief, and give him men, wives, and cattle.

"The original of the sketch was taken on the spot by one of the Boers, a friend and hunting companion of George Kennie, one of the greatest Nimrods of South Africa, often mentioned by Thomas Pringle in his interesting 'Narrative.' It is very correct; and it was with some difficulty that I managed to get it for you: possibly it may be of service to the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS. All the places marked fences in the notes are made of poles stuck into the ground, and wattled with branches of trees.

"Dingaan is celebrated for his many and great cruelties: if one of his party return from an expedition wounded in the back, he is invariably put to death as a coward."



PLAN OF A KAFFIR CAMP.

A, Dingaan's Palace.
B, Treasury. Here the Boers found gold, silver, and furniture, which sold for 7000 rix dollars.
C, Concubines' Huts.
D, Men-Servants' Huts.
E, Dingaan's Private Gate.
F, Concubines' Gate.
G, Poorts, or Gates to the Huts.
H, H, Great Gates.
I, Cattle Kraals, each calculated to hold 3000 head.
K, Kraal in which Reteif and his party were seized.
L, Parade Ground, 920 yards in diameter.
M, Burial-place of Dingaan's Grandfather.
N, Spot where Reteif and his party were put to death, about 600 yards from the Great Gates.

RIOTS IN SWITZERLAND.

There has been a serious riot at Geneva, originating with the Radicals. The following letter from a Correspondent of our own gives an accurate account of it as well as of the real state of affairs in Switzerland:—

"Geneva, Oct. 10th, 1846.

"It is with no small degree of sorrow that I send you an account of the events that have taken place here during the last few days. You will recollect that more than a year ago, there was a serious affray in the interior of Switzerland between the Jesuits and the Corps-francs. On account of this, the seven Roman Catholic Cantons formed an alliance—an imperium in imperio—for mutual support. This alliance was discovered by the other Cantons only a short time since; and at the late General Diet, many of the Cantons declared this alliance to be illegal. Geneva, after a long debate, decided for the Seven Cantons. The Radicals here, however, were opposed to the decision of the Council; and they held an assembly of the people, on Tuesday last, October 6, in the Church of St. Gervais, having broken open the doors, as the Sacristan would not give up the key. On the evening of this day the Radicals barricaded the bridges with large stones, immense beams of wood, coaches, carts, &c. The river Rhone divides the town of Geneva into two parts, which are joined by four bridges. On one side (the Quartier de St. Gervais), live nearly all the poor; on the other (the Haute Ville and the Ville Basse), the rich chiefly reside. The Radicals cried out, from their side, "Liberty or Death!" All the town was in a state of great excitement. The next day, October 7, the Government troops were drawn out on one side of the river; the Radical forces on the other. All the gates of the city were closed; the shops shut up. The Government called on the Radicals to surrender; they would not. At a quarter past three o'clock, P.M., the Government troops commenced firing on the Radicals, with cannon and muskets; the Radicals fired in return. This continued till six o'clock in the evening. The Radicals then set fire to two of the bridges. The next morning, the commander of the Government troops desired them to fire again on the Radicals, but they declined doing so, and, putting down their arms, returned to their homes. The Radicals then entered the Haute Ville and the Ville Basse. The Council of State gave up its power. On the 9th inst., (yesterday) a meeting of the people was held in the Place du Molard, and a Radical Government was formed, at the head of which is a Mr. James Fazy, the originator of these riots. Ten citizens were killed in this revolution, and more than twenty wounded. I think we may expect a civil war in the interior of Switzerland ere long, as the Catholic and Protestant Cantons are now nearly equal in force. I have now to record an event of a more pleasing nature. The erection of an English Protestant Church at Geneva has often engaged the attention of the permanent and occasional British residents in and around the city, and also of many of the numerous travellers who annually pass through it. A committee of gentlemen has, at length, been formed, for the purpose of raising the necessary funds for so desirable an object. Hitherto, the English Church service has been performed in the chapel of the Hospital, kindly lent during the limited time that intervenes between the Swiss services. This arrangement is, however, attended with considerable inconvenience; and, as an English Chaplain is resident throughout the year, it would be desirable to have there, as is found in most cities of Europe, a place of worship, entirely under British management. Upwards of £1500 have already been subscribed at Geneva, one thousand of which is the munificent donation of one individual. The cost of the building will, it is calculated, exceed £3000.

The following is a translation of a letter published in the Journal des Débats:—

"Geneva, Oct. 8.

"It is with the utmost melancholy that I inform you of the fall of our worthy Council of State, which abdicated this morning. I hasten to tell you that its conduct has been throughout firm and honourable. The Saint Gervais quarter was yesterday cannonaded and mitraillé for several hours together; the militia, especially their leaders, behaved in the attack with as much bravery as troops of the line; but all the bridges had been so strongly barricaded by the Saint Gervais people, that it required several hours before an entrance could be opened. The militia then penetrated into the island; but the fire kept up from all the windows, and every nook and corner, was so murderous, that, in order to avoid a carnage, the commandants ordered a retreat. Night passed quietly, but the inhabitants of Saint Gervais availed themselves of it to enter the town individually either by the breach or the lake, so that this morning most menacing popular gatherings took place on the Place du Molard, and in St. Gervais, whilst the Government's forces held but the barrack and town-house. Thus situated, the Government, dreading fresh calamities, and wishing to put an end to bloodshed, preferred resigning en masse, and has entrusted its fallen authority to the Administrative Council of the Town. At this moment the firemen are endeavouring to save the wrecks of the four bridges on the Rhone, which the people of Saint Gervais set fire to last night. The militia have had several killed and many wounded; as yet we know not what loss has been sustained by the insurgents, who, despite the well kept up cannonading and platoon firing, cannot have suffered very severely behind their works. The utmost consternation prevails in our unfortunate town. The most respectable families of Geneva have cruel losses to deplore, among the killed are Colonel Chateauviaux and M. Pavie."

The subjoined letter, describing the progress of the revolution at Geneva, is published in Galignani's Messenger:—

"Hotel des Bergues, Geneva, Oct. 8.

"Having been an eye-witness of the recent outbreak at Geneva, and learning that many exaggerated reports had been circulated regarding it, I send you an account of the circumstances. In consequence of a dispute between the Government and the people, of the merits of which I, as a stranger, do not pretend to form any opinion, the latter determined to maintain what they conceived to be their rights. They accordingly seized the gates, and took possession of the four bridges of the Rhone, which they strongly barricaded, in order to cut off the communication between the two quarters of the town. All attempts at an accommodation having failed, the fighting commenced yesterday, the 7th, towards three o'clock, simultaneously at the Porte Cornavin, on the Place du Bel Air, which commands one of the bridges; and, finally, at the bridge facing the Hotel des Bergues, where two diligences, forming a barricade, were set on fire and destroyed. The cannonading at these several points continued till towards evening, but without producing any decisive result. Last night the four bridges were partially set on fire, and were still burning this morning, but owing, probably, to a heavy rain, without sustaining any very considerable damage. A train, however, had been laid on each, which it was intended to blow up in case the passage should be attempted. In fact, things wore a sufficiently formidable aspect this morning, for we were virtually in a state of siege, and had the Government not felt themselves obliged to yield, they had decided on firing this quarter of the town, and God knows what would have been the result. In anticipation of such an occurrence, most of the strangers left the town, which they were permitted to do, with as much baggage as they could carry. I and my family, together with the undersigned, remained, and we unite in bearing testimony, not only to the irreproachable conduct of the people, who throughout manifested the utmost forbearance and consideration, both for person and property, but also to the extreme civility and attention we have experienced in this hotel, where the proprietor himself has been the most actively zealous in procuring permits of departure for those who chose to avail themselves of them. The report of the killed and wounded is so various that it is impossible at present to form a correct estimate of it. We have had one or two narrow escapes here. One ball pierced the shutter-room on the ground floor, destroying a valuable mirror, and penetrating through an adjoining wall into the room beyond. Tranquillity is at present completely restored, and all further apprehension at an end. I shall feel obliged by your inserting this in your valuable paper, and we remain your obedient servants,

"Charles Randall, Major; James Watson;
"Horatio N. Vigors, Lieut.-Colonel;
"V. F. Vyoyan; V. D Vyoyan."

On the 10th the peace of the city was no longer disturbed, and business had been pretty generally resumed.

AGRICULTURAL PICTURES.—PLOUGHING.—DRAWN BY DUNCAN.

AGRICULTURAL PICTURES.—PLOUGHING.

This Autumnal labour has now commenced. Bloomfield has given us a literal picture of the daily toil.

> Beyond bleak Winter's rage, beyond the Spring
> That rolling Earth's unvarying course will bring,
> Who tills the ground looks on with mental eye,
> And sees next Summer's sheaves and cloudless sky
> * * * * *
> The plough moves heavily, and strong the soil,
> And clogging harrows with augmented toil
> Dive deep and clinging, mixes with the mould
> A fatt'ning treasure from the nightly fold
> And all the cow-yard's highly-valu'd store,
> That late bestrew'd the blacken'd surface o'er
> No idling hours are here, when Fancy trims
> Her dancing taper over out-stretch'd limbs,
> And in her thousand thousand colours drest,
> Plays round the grassy couch of moontide rest
> Here Giles for hours of indolence atones
> With strong exertion, and with weary bones,
> And knows no leisure, till the distant chime
> Of Sabbath bells he hears at sermon time,
> That down the brook sound sweetly in the gale,
> Or strike the rising hill, or skim the dale.

The Artist of our Agricultural Gallery, Mr. Duncan, has backed his picture with one of those delightful autumnal scenes, which Thomson so well describes.—

> But see, the fading many-coloured woods,
> Shade deepening over shade, the country round
> Imbrown; a crowded umbrage, dusk, and dun,
> Of every hue, from wan declining green,
> To sooty dark. There now the lonesome muse,
> Low-whispering, lead into their leaf-strown walks,
> And give the Season in its latest view

"MONSTER CACTUS," AT KEW.

(From a Correspondent.)

Those who visit the Royal Botanic Gardens of Kew—now so liberally thrown open every day, by the Crown, to the public—cannot fail to have observed, in the "Cactus House," a most extraordinary specimen of the Cactus tribe, sent from San Luis Potosi, Mexico, by F. Staines, Esq., as a present to the Royal Gardens. So remarkable was the plant, that an account and figures of it appeared in the public journals, and the attention of the curious has been much directed to it. It was called the Monster Cactus. Its weight was 713 lbs.; and it bore the name, suggested by the use to which the Mexicans apply the spines of Cactus (or Echinocactus), of Visnager. (Visnager meaning a toothpick.)

Gratified by the reception given to this Visnager by the British public, Mr. Staines resolved to transmit a specimen of the same kind still more worthy a place in the Royal Gardens; and, in the summer of 1846, he actually (together with many other fine species) sent the one represented in the accompanying figure, and which is treble the size, and treble the weight of the former "Monster Cactus. Its height is 9 feet; its circumference 9½ feet; and its weight one ton!

The possession of so gigantic a specimen in England is rendered still more remarkable, if we consider the length of journey required from San Luis Potosi to Vera Cruz, vià the city of Mexico. Eight mules were employed to draw it, in a waggon of the country, over the more level ground. In ten days after leaving Mexico, a messenger was dispatched to San Luis Potosi, to say that the waggon had broken down, and that the mules were, besides, quite incapable of ascending the hills with such a load.

"Instantly," writes Mr. Staines, "I sent off more assistance. But to give you an idea of the size, the Visnager, in my presence, could not be moved by the exertions of fifteen men. It required twenty persons to replace it on the waggon, and this was only effected by sliding it upwards on several thick poles, which bent considerably under this heavy weight. Thirty-six enormous palm-mats were necessary to protect it, and these well roped."

On its arrival, it appeared in the most perfect condition, and threw out flowers in a few weeks, from the crown, or top of the plant; but, in the present instance, these efforts, like the reputed song of the swan, were only indicative of its dying state. It had received bruises on the journey or voyage; the decay gradually extended; and, though its bulk and form may for a time remain, it can no longer be numbered among the living plants of the Royal Gardens.

We are sure it will be acceptable to our readers to see the representation of so extraordinary a vegetable production. The Garden still boasts of the former, or original "Monster Cactus," in high health and vigour, and which is reported to possess an antiquity of one thousand years.

"MONSTER CACTUS," AT THE ROYAL BOTANIC GARDENS, KEW.

HENRY LYTTON BULWER,

MINISTER PLENIPOTENTIARY AT THE COURT OF MADRID.

Henry Lytton Bulwer, Esq., the British Minister at Madrid, is a member of one of the oldest families in the kingdom, which has been distinguished in a remarkable degree by the talent of its present generation. The Lyttons of Knebworth Park, Hertfordshire, trace an ancestry up to the first Kings of Wales, and through the Tudors are allied to royalty: the Bulwers of Heydon Hall, Norfolk, have been established there from the Conquest. The late General Bulwer married the heiress of the Lyttons; his three children were William Earle, who succeeded to the Bulwer property; Henry Lytton, the diplomatist; and Edward Lytton, the author of "Pelham," who, on the death of his mother, took her family name of Lytton in addition to his own, inherited her estate, and is now Sir Edward Lytton Bulwer Lytton, a landed gentleman, writing no more novels, but, instead, making speeches at agricultural meetings; and, if the agriculture of Hertfordshire gains by the change as much as literature has lost, the alteration in the honourable Baronet's fortunes will be much to its advantage. It is not many families that have two eldest sons; but it chanced to Mr. Henry Lytton Bulwer to be born into one that had, and of three brothers he alone engaged in professional and official life; as a diplomatist he has been very successful, having held a distinguished position under a Government of different politics to that by which he was appointed He has also won considerable distinction as a writer, from his "France, Social, Literary, and Political," and the "Monarchy of the Middle Classes;" the former work was for a time very popular, and may be still read with profit by those who wish to learn what France is under the new Dynasty Society is sketched with a cleverness and spirit not unworthy of "Paul Clifford" or "The Disowned" Mr. Bulwer sat for some time in Parliament for the Borough of Marylebone, but, on receiving a diplomatic appointment, he gave up politics, and proved himself as zealous and able in the service of the Foreign Office under Lord Aberdeen as when it was under Lord Palmerston, who appointed him. He has served, as Secretary, the Embassies of Constantinople, Brussels, and Paris: he is now Minister Plenipotentiary at Madrid; and, during the agitation of the Royal Marriages, must have been in an embarrassing and difficult position. Personally, he is a great favourite with the Royal Family, and, at the balls at the Palace, was frequently honoured with her Majesty's hand for the dance. He did not then anticipate, perhaps, that the selection of a Royal partner for a longer engagement would hereafter give him so much trouble. He seems to have done all that he could possibly effect under the circumstances. advised and warned, as long as advice or warning could avail; and finally wound up with a "protest" that England will not admit any claim on the part of the children of the Infanta to sit on the throne of Spain—a contingency at present rather remote.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"G. T. N.," Liverpool, is thanked: we shall see.

"An Agent," Slough.—We cannot give any opinion as to the validity of Benefit Societies.

"J. N.," New Road.—"Corner's History of France, for Schools." "Bourne's Principles and Practice of Engineering," 15s.

"G. M. H."—We do not know the origin of the nomenclature of "Bubble and Squeak."

"Omega," Carlisle.—A letter addressed to the Colonial Office will, doubtless, reach Sir H. Pottinger.

"T. G.," Exeter.—"Bainbridge's Fly-fisher's Guide," (Longmans), is a good work.

"A Yearly Patron."—Grayson's Drawing Academy, 1, Banner-street, St. Luke's.

"F. S. H.," Cheltenham.—"Ibbotson's Handbook of Turning," a capital work.

"Harrott S."—Charles Taylor's Treatise on Drawing.

"T. E. E."—"The Guide," &c., 2s.; "Pope's Customs and Excise Laws," 30s. The Engraving suggested will shortly appear.

"A Tipperary Subscriber."—In Spanish, the S is pronounced at the end of the word "Blas."

"An Old Subscriber" (Charles I. farthings) should write to Mr. Webster, 17, Great Russell-street, Covent-garden.

"Quereus."—The plural is preferable, "Government" being a noun of multitude.

"A. Z.," Banff.—We cannot assist our Correspondent.

"J. C."—"Knight's Pictorial Shakspere," 8 vols., seven guineas, if commentary and illustration be the objects.

"Opie Staite."—The project of Lighting the Thames below bridge was first named in our Journal, three weeks since.

"A Subscriber."—Sir John Key served the office of Lord Mayor two successive years—1830 and 1831.

"Timon."—B. must pay the organist's salary for the whole period of the performance of the duties.

"E. A.," Kennington.—We cannot answer as to the intentions of the West London Railway Company.

"J. F.," Torrington.—We do not understand the question: to what class of shares does it refer?

"A Constant Reader," Birmingham, will find an admirable portrait of Mr. Macready in No. 60 of our Journal.

"An Old Subscriber," Hungerford.—There are considerably more than thirty newspapers published in London.

"Major," New Newcastle."—"Gilbert's Sketches of the Experimental Squadron" are published at 15s. (Ackermann and Co.) "Inglis's Channel Islands" are published by Whittaker at 5s.

"A Constant Reader," Torquay.—Rubini sung last at Her Majesty's Theatre in 1842.

"M. Wilson."—The works of Auber and Onslow are published in Paris, but any Music Publisher would procure them on application. The English adaptations of the former Composer's operas are not to be trusted.

"D. W."—As we are not in communication with the Carlist Committee of London and Paris, we cannot give their address.

"W. T. H."—The Stock receipt is worthless, as far as receiving the money is concerned. If the Stock stands in your name, you must apply to a Broker, who will sell the Stock, and identify you as the party authorised to transfer it. You can, however, receive the dividend by stating the amount of Stock upon which it is receivable.

"A Subscriber."—A good Manifold Writer may be bought at Dixon's, 194, Strand, for 20s.

"Pryse," Oxford, will find the main dimensions of the Great Wellington Statue in No. 231 of our Journal.

"Henricus."—The third syllable in "Coadjutor" is long.

"Ignoramus."—Still Life is a term in Painting, applied to Fruit, Flowers, Dead Game, and Fish.

"An Old Subscriber," Plymouth.—A small and cheap Work on Gilding is published by Taylor, 1, Wellington-street, Strand.

"A. B. C."—The latest Edition of our Journal is published on Sunday Morning. The letter should be addressed to the Convict Establishment, Hobart Town.

"A Writer" should have prepaid his letter of inquiry as to the practice of other Journals, with which we have nothing to do.

"Marathon" may obtain a List of the University College Fees of the Secretary.

"J. B.," Lynn, is thanked for the suggested Fire Escape, though we have not room for the details.

"W. J.," Birmingham.—The leading characteristic of the "Pictorial History of England" is, that it is a History of the People as well as of the Nation: it is, certainly, written in a much more candid spirit than Hume's History. Lord Brougham's "Eminent Statesmen" is republished, verbatim, in Knight's Weekly Volumes.

"An Occasional Reader."—A handsome remuneration is made for the contributions.

"S. J.," Windsor.—Farmers.

"W. S. P.," Brighton.—We have not room for the Lines.

"H. F. R.," Coleman-street, is thanked for his obliging offer.

"A Constant Reader."—The "Abridgment of Bloxam's Glossary of Architecture."

"S. A. Z. E.," Cheltenham, is recommended to forward specimens to the Magazines. Our Correspondent informs us that the word Charpie (Fr. Lint), in cookery, means any kind of meat "done to rags." The phrase is Viande en charpie.

"Julz," Dundee.—We have not room for the translation.

"B. D. J.," Allahabad, is thanked for the Sketches, though we cannot engrave them.

"J. W. C.," Matlock, has made a wrong estimate of our resources, but he will please to accept our thanks for his good intentions.

"J. A.," Kensington.—The Lines are ineligible.

"E. J. T.," Umballah, is thanked for the Sporting article; but such a scene can only be faithfully represented by an artist being present.

"W. M. G."—The tile found at Peckham is, probably, Roman.

"R. B. B."—The pamphlet has been received.

"Miles."—The New House of Lords will be opened with the next Session of Parliament.

"Alice."—The proportions are correct.

"Gertrude" will find the requisite information respecting the flour of Maize, in a work just published, entitled "The Indian Meal Book."

"Beccles."—The Entomologist has not been Knighted.

"R. S.," Edinburgh, is thanked for the hint.

"P. P." (Land-Surveyor), should advertise. The Profession is much in request.

"W. J. B.," co. Donegal.—We do not undertake to decide wagers.

"Povertas" should send a specimen of his composition to one of the periodicals.

"A Dublin Reader."—The splendid Church lately erected at the expense of the Earl of Shrewsbury, is at Cheadle, Stafford. We shall, shortly, illustrate this superb structure, from drawings by our own artist.

"Peter X. Y. F.," Sunderland, may purchase a Portable Press of any Printers' Broker. Address Messrs. Harrild, City.

"A Subscriber," Dublin.—Print and MS. received.

"William H.," Manchester.—"Mon père" is right.

"S. G. L.," Jersey's hint is correct.

"Antingham" may inscribe his name as he pleases, in the title-page.

"A Subscriber," who has been so highly gratified by our "very well-executed and descriptive Sketches" of the Great Wellington Statue, will, probably, see the "further Illustration" next week.

"K. C." will find Nasmyth's Patent Steam Hammer engraved and described in No. 123 of the Illustrated London News.

"X. Y. Z.," City.—The rider sent, appears to be some fanatical ebullition.

"J. D.," Chichester.—Cuvier died at Paris, in 183[illegible] an excellent Life of him has been published by Mrs. Lee, price 12s.

"K."—The leader.

"J. H. W. J." is thanked: but we have not room.

"A Subscriber," Leeds, will find accounts of the Great Britain steamer in Nos. 63, 65, 144, and 146 of the Illustrated London News.

"H. B. S.," Liverpool.—The subject is interesting, but lacks novelty.

"Inquisitor."—It is not lawful for a man to marry his deceased wife's sister.

"J. W.," Cork.—The Great Britain steam-ship first sailed for New York in July, 1845. (See No. 164 of our Journal, for details.)

"O. S."—The price of "Bourne's Principles and Practice of Engineering" is 15s.

"J. T.," Newcastle, we think, may find a better "emigration field" than Valparaiso.

"H. A. H.," Carlisle.—Consult "Sir Howard Douglas on Naval Gunnery."

*"Pώμαη," Romsey.—There is a translation of the Koran published, price 12s.*

"F.," Liverpool, is recommended to apply to a Patent Agent, as Messrs. Robertson, Fleet-street. The Quadrature of the Circle is the finding some other right lined figure equal to the area of a circle, or a right line equal to its circumference. (See the article in the "Penny Cyclopædia.")

"E. G. R. D.," Manchester.—We will see: but the inquiry will involve some research.

"Hymen."—The duty of a Special Marriage Licence is Five Guineas.

"J. A.," Birmingham.—The cause of the catastrophe will, doubtless, be fully investigated.

"F. L.," Valparaiso, is thanked.

"Glastoniensis" is thanked for his ingenious suggestion, though we cannot entertain it.

"E. F. L." may, probably, hear of an Italian Greyhound at Herring's Menagerie, New-road.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 17, 1846.

The event that has disturbed the repose of diplomatists and editors for the last two months is accomplished; the marriages of the Queen of Spain and her sister "ower young to marry yet" have been celebrated. Forebodings of evil do not cease to be made; the entry of the French Prince into Madrid is described as having passed in silence and apathy; enthusiasm there was none, and any disposition to express a hostile feeling was repressed by the precautions of the police. It is said that the alliance is more unpopular in the provinces than in Madrid, and it is not improbable; the remote districts of Spain are the very citadels of prejudices, and the hatred of the people to the French has not died out since the last war. As to any danger to England from the alliance it is altogether a groundless fear; France and Spain have been even more closely connected when their Monarchs were all powerful, and when England was far weaker than she is now, and yet we baffled the attacks of both. Spain was once the mistress of a mighty Empire, the champion of legitimacy and the propagandist of Catholicism throughout the world; France was Catholic and absolute, and both were jealous of the rising power of England, of her sturdy and successful resistance to Royal despotism, and religious oppression, and were ready to unite to crush the insolent islanders who had beheaded one King and exiled another. Then a war to prevent the junction of the two greatest European crowns in one family was a necessary struggle for existence. Our efforts were not wasted, for we had a vital interest in the issue.

If, against two such foes, England maintained her place as a power, increased her commerce, added to her empire, and grew in revenue and credit, we shall find the chances of damage are exceedingly remote now, even if the Royal Families of France and Spain do form a matrimonial alliance. That event will not reconquer for Spain her colonies, and give her wisdom to govern them: it will not re-establish her European supremacy, or recal the days of Alva: it will not rebuild her mighty fleets, give her another Armada, or repeople her vast naval arsenals, where all now is desolation and decay: it will not give her people industry and perseverance, or endow those who rule her with common sense enough to take what commerce she has out of the hands of smugglers: it will not give her that revenue or credit which alone, in modern times, make nations powerful in war. and, above all, it will not revive those old religious and political hatreds in the people which, in two centuries, have perished and been "quietly inurned."

All these things have been changed, so utterly that the old Phillips and Charleses would not know the land they ruled; the Sovereign power is but the shadow of what it was; the wealth of the Church has been confiscated, and only the other day one of the highest dignitaries of that once all-powerful Hierarchy was heard pleading before the Cortes for support from the State, almost in forma pauperis. The greatness of Spain belongs to the past, and it is not by Royal Marriages that it can be revived.

To "refuse to owe" is a great improvement in case of financial difficulty, on the older plan of "refusing to pay;" the former is the more approved practice across the Atlantic; Mexico seems inclined to adopt it; the holders of its bonds are placed at present in a great difficulty; Mexico itself is almost in a state of anarchy; perpetual changes of Government take place, but none can rule; the country, richer by nature than any in the world, is, from mismanagement and corruption, bankrupt; and, to add to the confusion, there is an enemy on its frontiers, pouring down with the energy of the northern race, and overspreading province after province, without awaking the spirit of resistance. Indeed, it is hardly to be expected; five-sixths of the population of Mexico are of Indian blood; the policy of their rulers has kept them poor, and made them ignorant; they add nothing to the strength of the nation in such a juncture. There is also a mixed race; but, between them and the Colonists of pure Spanish descent there is a jealousy and hatred that prevent them from uniting in any common effort. The exact tenor of the despatches last received, said to come from the Provisional Government that existed between the retirement of Paredes and the return of Santa Anna, has not yet been made known, but it is reported to be akin to "repudiation." In the restoration of Santa Anna there may yet be a gleam of hope; we really believe the Mexican Government is rather unable than unwilling to keep faith with its creditors. But the loss to those concerned is, in either case, the same, and there is, unhappily, no remedy. Experience of the value of foreign loans has been purchased by the English public very dearly.

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

The Bankruptcy of Messrs. C. and A. Knight.—In the Court of Bankruptcy, on Tuesday, a decision was given in the case of the Messrs. Knight. The bankrupts, Charles and Alfred Knight, carried on the business of wholesale stationers in Budge-row. The debts and liabilities amount to about £19,000. The dividend will be considerable. The following are the most remarkable items in the balance sheet. Capital, £482; debts, £8846; liabilities, £11,187; doubtful debts, £3254; profits, £9534; interest, £1843. The fiat was dated May, 1846. Mr Duncan, on behalf of the bankrupts, applied for their certificates, stating that the assignees offered no opposition. His Honour granted them their certificates.

The Bankruptcy of D. Maclean, Esq., M.P.—Mr. Commissioner Evans, on Wednesday, on the application of Mr. Lawrance, granted Donald M'Lean, M.P., further time to surrender to the Court, under his bankruptcy, on account of ill-health. Mr. M'Lean is at Lucca, whence his removal, it is considered, would be dangerous in his present situation.

The Revenue.—In our latest impression last week, we stated that the Revenue accounts for the quarter ending Oct. 10, so far as the results could be ascertained, were very satisfactory. This anticipation was borne out by the result. There appears to have been an increase on the quarter, compared with the corresponding quarter of 1845, of £539,064, and upon the year, one of £88[illegible]. The items of increase stand thus:—Customs, £462,472; Excise, £226,820; Taxes, £8661; Property-Tax, £148,245; Post-office, £8000; Crown Lands, £1[illegible]; Imprest and other monies, £9224; Total, £878,422. There are but two departments of the national resources which exhibit a decrease—Stamps show a diminution of £5811 upon the quarter's calculation; but there is an increase from them upon the year of £21,759 over the receipts of 1845. Again, there is a diminution of the quarter's receipts from "Miscellaneous" sources, which amounts to £59,548, but there is an increase in the Revenue derived through this channel during the year, which amounts to £428,558.

The "Great Britain" Steamer. From the latest accounts received, it appears that all chance of getting the Great Britain off is nearly at an end. It is supposed she must at least wait for the high tides of the spring. A protecting breastwork is to be constructed round her. It is stated that she has been insured in London for about £20,000. An insurance has also, it seems, been effected at Glasgow, but to what extent we do not know. It is, however, believed that the whole insurances fall far short of her cost—that is, above £120,000; and beyond this, we hear that the underwriters refuse to pay, on the ground that the vessel was lost through negligence. Her condition is described as bad, no less than 14 feet of water in the hold.

POSTSCRIPT.

The Cabinet.—Lord John Russell has issued cards of invitation to all the members of the Administration to attend a Cabinet dinner at his residence in Chesham-place, on Tuesday, the 27th instant. The noble Lord arrived in town yesterday morning, from Wimbleton, and transacted business in Downing-street.

The New Governor of the Cape.—Sir Henry Pottinger, C.B., the newly-appointed Governor-General of the Cape of Good Hope, as successor to Sir Peregrine Maitland, takes his departure immediately for that destination, in her Majesty's steam-ship Sidon, Captain Henderson, now lying off Woolwich Dockyard.

Mr. Hudson, M.P.—The freedom of the city of York was presented to G. Hudson, Esq., M.P., on Monday last. This compliment was paid at the usual Michaelmas Court of the ancient Company of Merchant Adventurers of York, held at their Hall, in Fossgate. The silver box, containing a copy of the oath of admission, was very massive, and richly chased. It was of a very large size, and on the lid was the inscription "This box was presented by the Ancient Merchant Adventurers of the City of York, together with the freedom of their Company, to Geo. Hudson, Esq., M.P., as a mark of approval of his public conduct, and of great respect for his private character." After a complimentary address from the Chairman, Mr. Hudson expressed his grateful thanks for the honour conferred upon him.

The "Great Britain" Steamer.—According to a letter received yesterday respecting this unfortunate vessel, a strong south wind has shifted her bows from north-east to direct west, in which posture she now lies, hard and fast, in about ten feet sand, with a basement of hard rock. If she should move further to the north-west, she will shift on a ridge of rocks. All the coals have been sold, but the ship's stores remain on board. The Customs have sealed up all the excisable articles, not leaving even a glass of wine for the use of the Captain, his crew, or visitors.

Murder in Cornwall.—A brutal murder has been committed on a man named Samuel Hockin, a cooper, at St. Mabyn, in Cornwall. He was found on Saturday morning last lying in the road near St. Mabyn, and on being lifted up breathed once and immediately expired. Upon being examined, it was discovered that he had been struck on the back part of the head by a heavy instrument, which had broken the skull so that the brain protruded. Suspicion fell upon a woman named Ann Treverton, with whom the deceased had lived, and she has been taken into custody. A large stone had been discovered near where the deceased was found. An inquest was held on the body, which was adjourned.

Opening the Ports.—The citizens of Sunderland have followed the example of Manchester, and addressed a memorial to the Lords of her Majesty's Privy Council, in which they dwell upon the misery and destitution of Ireland, and the rapid advance which is taking place in the price of wheat as well as in every other article of food. They suggest, as the only remedy suitable in such a crisis, that an Order in Council may issue, permitting the importation of grain duty free. Similar meetings to those at Manchester and Sunderland are to be held without delay in different parts of the United Kingdom.

Another Detection of Robbery by the Electric Telegraph. On Thursday evening, another instance occurred of the extraordinary working of the above important invention. A lady, name unknown, left Derby, taking with her £400, and in care of a gentleman. The telegraph was set to work, and the intelligence having been sent to Birmingham, Mr. Stephens, inspector of police, received information of her arrival, and she is now quite safe with her lover and the money in custody.

LATEST FOREIGN NEWS

Spain.—We have accounts from Madrid of the 9th instant. The person suspected of a design to take the life of the Duke de Montpensier has been declared a maniac. The Gazette publishes a Royal decree, levying 25,000 recruits. Mr. Cobden has arrived at Madrid. M. Dumas, the wholesale novelist, has also arrived in that city. The British Minister has returned from Aranjuez. According to the accounts which are current in Paris, the cause of Count de Montemolin is hopeless in Spain. Cabrera had failed to penetrate into the country; and though his attempts were to be renewed, he was not confident of success unless aided by pecuniary means from some of the European powers. He is said to have received, during his stay in England, £500 from the Legitimists in France. There were rumours in Corunna, on the 4th, of a threatened movement from Portugal. All the forces disposable had moved from Gallicia towards the frontier.

Switzerland.—We have received the Journal de Geneve of the 12th. The only fact of interest in it is the announcement that the most perfect tranquillity prevails in the town of Geneva, and in the Canton. Though tranquillity prevailed, and business had been resumed, many families had left the city, apprehending fresh disturbances. The Provisional Government was completely organised, and the members of which it is composed had divided among themselves the different offices of the Administration.

Russia. Letters from St. Petersburg to the 5th instant state that the potato disease, prevailing generally through Europe, has extended itself to Russia, though in a small degree only. It has manifested itself partially in Esthonia, but nowhere else, that could be discovered.

THE COURT AND HAUT TON.

THE COURT AT WINDSOR.

Her Majesty and his Royal Highness Prince Albert, the Ladies and Gentlemen of the Court, and the domestic household, attended divine service on Sunday morning in the private chapel of the Castle. The Hon. and Rev. C. Leslie Courtenay officiated.

During the week her Majesty and Prince Albert have taken their early morning walks, and also carriage drives, when the weather permitted.

Windsor, Thursday Evening.—(From our own Correspondent.)—Her Majesty and the Princess Caroline of Hesse attended Divine service this morning between nine and ten o'clock, in St. George's Chapel. Her Majesty and the Prince Consort, accompanied by the Princess of Hesse, afterwards took an airing in an open carriage and four this afternoon, proceeding through Old Windsor, and returning to the Castle by the Great Park and the Long Walk. Her Majesty the Queen Dowager, her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, her Royal Highness the Princess of Hesse, their Royal Highnesses the Hereditary Grand Duke and Grand Duchess of Mecklenberg Strelitz, and his Serene Highness Prince Edward of Saxe Weimar, were included in the dinner-party this evening.

PROPOSED VISITS OF HER MAJESTY AND PRINCE ALBERT.

The arrangements are now completed for the proposed visits of the Queen and his Royal Highness Prince Albert to her Majesty Queen Adelaide, at Cashiobury Park, near Watford; and also to Hatfield House, the magnificent seat of the Marquis of Salisbury.

Her Majesty and the Prince Consort, attended by a limited retinue, including the Lord and Lady in Waiting, and Equerries in Waiting, will leave Windsor Castle on Monday, shortly after luncheon, for Cashiobury Park.

The Queen Dowager has invited a select circle to meet her Majesty; but, from the confined accommodation at the mansion at Cashiobury, the Royal circle will not exceed thirty visitors.

The Queen and Prince Albert are to remain the guests of the Queen Dowager until Thursday, the 22nd inst., when her Majesty and the Royal Prince depart for Hatfield House, Herts.

The Marquis of Salisbury arrived on Tuesday at Hatfield House, from his estate at the Isle of Rum, Inverness-shire, for the express purpose of superintending all the preparations for the Queen's reception at that splendid seat of his ancestors.

The Duke of Wellington, the Marquis and Marchioness of Exeter, Viscount and Viscountess Mahon, and a distinguished party, have been invited to meet her Majesty and the Prince Consort, by the noble Marquis.

A grand Ball is to be given by his Lordship, to which the leading nobility and gentry of the county will be invited, to have the honour to meet the Queen.

It is rumoured that the Queen Dowager will also come from Cashiobury with her Majesty and Prince Albert.

The Queen and Prince intend to stay at Hatfield House till Saturday, the 24th instant, and, on leaving, will return to Windsor Castle.

The contemplated visit of her Majesty and Prince Albert to the Duke and Duchess of Norfolk, at Arundel Castle, will take place the week after next.

It is expected that the Queen will the same week arrive at the Pavilion at Brighton, to make a brief sojourn there, but nothing is positively settled to justify us in asserting it to be the case.

The Queen Dowager.—Her Majesty the Queen Dowager, accompanied by her Royal Highness the Princess of Hesse, and attended by her Lady in Waiting, arrived at Windsor Castle on Monday afternoon, on a visit to the Queen, from Cashiobury Park, Herts.

Visitors to Sir Robert Peel at Tamworth.—Among the guests on a visit to Sir Robert and Lady Peel, at Drayton Manor, are the following:—Sir James and Lady Graham, the Earl Talbot, Samuel Rogers, Esq., H. W. Pickersgill, Esq., R.A., C. L. Eastlake, Esq., R.A., Professor Owen, Baron Stockmaer, and Colonel Bowles.

Fashionables at Howick Hall.—The Earl and Countess Grey are entertaining a succession of visitors at Howick Hall, Northumberland. The Earl and Countess of Ellesmere, and Lady Alice Egerton, arrived at Howick Hall on Monday last, from Worsley Hall, Lancashire.

Approaching Marriage in High Life.—The marriage of Lady Charlotte Herbert, second daughter of the Earl and Countess of Powis, and Mr. H. Montgomery, of Grey Abbey, county Antrim, is to be solemnized on Tuesday next.

Will of the Late Sir George Murray, K.C.B., G.C.B., K.C.H., P.C.—The will of the late Right Hon. Sir George Murray was proved in London on the 9th instant, by his executors, Sir William George Hylton Jolliffe, Bart., of Merstham, Surrey; George William Hope, Esq., Curzon-street, Mayfair; and William Smythe, advocate, Edinburgh. The will was executed on the 5th of January last, together with a deed of settlement of the same date, in favour of his daughter and only child, wife of Lieutenant Henry George Boyce, of her Majesty's 2nd Life Guards, by which the deceased has settled upon her various sums, in the whole exceeding £26,000, besides the house in Belgrave-square; and further, by his will, he leaves her the furniture, pictures, prints, &c., as also the residue of his estate; to enjoy a life interest over the whole of the said property, money, and effects, and, at her decease, to descend to her children; but if no children or child should attain a vested interest therein, then in trust for the children that may be living of the late Hon. Sir Patrick Murray, Bart. There are pecuniary bequests to his sister and aunt, and to his son-in-law, Lieut. H. G. Boyce, and legacies to his servants. He directs that all his papers, manuscripts, letters, and correspondence, official, confidential, and private, as it may be found necessary to preserve, may be selected by his executors, and thenceforth kept by the person entitled to the income arising from his estate so settled by him.

ACCIDENTS AND OFFENCES.

Death from Rat Poison.—An inquest was held on Monday by Mr. Mills, at the Rutland Arms, Rutland-street, Hampstead-road, respecting the death of Mr Charles Tatham, aged 41 years, recently resident at No. 52, Stanhope-street. The deceased was an army accoutrement maker, and for some time past had been in a low and desponding state. He was also subject to delusions. On Thursday he purchased at the shop of Mr. Starkie, chemist, of No. 4, Strand, a grey powder called "Butler's Vermin and Insect Killer." On his return home he was taken ill, and admitted that he had taken poison; he died in two hours. A post mortem examination fully proved that the deceased died from the effects of arsenic, and, from an analysis of the powders, the surgeon discovered that one of them contained sufficient poison to kill six men.—Verdict "Temporary Insanity." The Jury then added "they strongly condemned the sale of poisons in open shops, without the best precautions being adopted to prevent the frequent evil consequences of such sale. They regard the present instance as one which calls for severe reprobation; and trust that a public exposure of the fact will tend to prevent in some degree the mischief which they believe is frequently occurring from the sale of poisons in druggists' houses."

Another Detection of Robbery by the Electric Telegraph.—Another instance of the utility of the electric telegraph in detecting crime was afforded on Saturday last at Rugby. The following telegraphic despatch was received at the Rugby station from Derby at eight o'clock on Saturday morning: "Thomas Trotter, from Derby, states that he has been robbed by a man that slept in the same room with him at Derby last night of a silver watch (described), and £3 19s. in gold and silver." (Here follows a description of the party suspected, but as he, as well as the property missing, is in the hands of the police, it is unnecessary to give it.) The despatch goes on to state that "the person who committed the theft is supposed to have gone towards London." In consequence of this communication, Inspector Faulkner, in the employ of the London and North Western Railway Company examined the persons of the passengers who arrived by the next train (eleven A.M.) from Derby, when, from the description forwarded, he took the prisoner into custody on suspicion of having committed the robbery, and upon searching him, he found a watch, answering the description, and also a sum of money, exactly tallying with the amount stolen, minus the railway fare from Derby. Upon asking the prisoner his name, he said it was William Gilbert, but upon being taken before Mr. J. W. B. Leigh, Mr. H. S. Gibb, Mr C. M. Caldecott, and Captain Leake, he gave the name of William Eltinton, and said that he came from Newcastle-on-Tyne. He had for some time been employed on the Midland Railway as a stoker. Mr. Trotter appeared about five o'clock in the afternoon, and identified the watch, &c., upon which the prisoner was transferred to the custody of one of the inspectors of the Midland Railway police, the robbery having been committed at Derby. On Monday evening, he was taken before the magistrates at Derby, when the prosecutor again identified the property; whereupon the prisoner was committed to take his trial for the robbery. The Quarter Sessions being held the same day, before Mr. J Balguy, the Recorder, a bill was preferred before the Grand Jury, who returned a "true bill." The prisoner was then put upon his trial and convicted, when he was sentenced to six months' hard labour. The learned Recorder, in passing sentence, made some excellent remarks upon the efficiency of the electric telegraphs in detecting offenders, and trusted that they would be universally adopted on railways

Sudden Death.—On Monday afternoon Mr. John Vinall, many years master bricklayer of Chatham Dockyard, but who for some years past had resided with his son at Sutton, near Maidstone, had been to Chatham to see some of his family, and on his return rode as far as Maidstone, intending to walk from thence to Sutton, and while on the road fell down and instantly expired. The deceased was in the 85th year of his age, and apparently in good health.

Incendiary Explosion at the Castle Mills, Sheffield.—Another of those diabolical attempts at the destruction of property by explosive substances, for which the town of Sheffield has obtained a somewhat unenviable notoriety, was made on Saturday evening last. The facts are these:—The Castle Mills, situate on the bank of the Don, were erected, about seven or eight years ago, by Messrs Marshall, Brothers, for a grinding wheel, at an expense of from £15,000 to £20,000; and had become a principal resort for parties who choose to carry on their business unconnected with the "Unions," into which the vast majority of the workmen of Sheffield have enrolled themselves. On Saturday evening last, the works were stopped about twenty minutes before seven o'clock, soon after which time the premises were entirely cleared, and a watchman took charge of the building for the night. No circumstances of a suspicious nature were observed; but, about half-past seven o'clock, a most terrific explosion shook the building to its very centre. Mr. Marshall, jun., being near the spot, went to the premises, and, on examination, discovered that the cylinder belonging to one of the steam engines had been blown to atoms by gunpowder, and the shattered fragments were strewed in all directions, in addition to which the massive beam was broken into three pieces. The top of the steam chest was blown off, the piston considerably bent, and nearly every portion of the engine more or less injured. Upon further examination, it was found that the watchman, William Ibbotson, who ought to have been in the most central part of the building, was in a remote quarter, where no danger from an explosion of the engine could harm him. His conduct in other respects exciting suspicion, he was given into custody. On Monday morning, he was taken before the manager, and, after a short examination, was remanded. The injury done to the engine and premises is estimated at not less than from £1000 and £1200.

Lamentable Gun Accident.—Mr. Joseph Barnard, a highly-respectable farmer, at Great Burstead, Essex, met his death on Thursday evening (last week), under the following melancholy circumstances:—Mr. S. Baker, veterinary surgeon, of Chelmsford, had been shooting with Mr. Barnard, and was at that gentleman's door in his chaise about to leave, when Mr. Barnard attempted to shift Mr. Baker's gun, which had been incautiously left charged with the cap on, and put through the straps upon the dashing board. The hammer was consequently raised by the effort, and the charge exploding with the muzzle towards Mr. Barnard, it was lodged in his side, and he survived the occurrence little more than an hour. He was about forty years of age, and has left a widow and two children. An inquest has since been held, when the Jury returned a verdict of "Accidental death"

Dreadful Explosion and Loss of Life near Newcastle-upon-Tyne.—A dreadful explosion occurred on Monday night at the extensive iron works of Messrs. Lock, Wilson, and Bell, situate on the river Tyne, at Walker, about three miles below Newcastle. Three persons were killed, one by the force of the explosion, and the other two by inhaling the impure air before the explosion took place, and several others have been seriously injured. The Walker iron-works are the most extensive in the district, and give employment to upwards of a thousand men. The accident appears to have arisen from an accumulation of foul air in the reservoir, and the pipes designed to regulate the blast. On examination, one branch pipe that had been plugged was found with the plug out, and the blast escaping from the orifice. In the course of the efforts of the workmen to remedy the evil, an explosion took place, by which some damage was done to property, in addition to the afflicting loss of life and personal injuries above stated. An inquest on the unfortunate sufferers was opened on Tuesday afternoon, but the evidence did not supply any fact of importance in addition to the above statement, and the inquiry was adjourned.

Sudden Death While at Dinner.—On Wednesday morning an inquest was taken before Mr. Baker, at the White Hart, Old Ford, on the body of Archibald Richardson, aged 79, a British wine dealer, residing at Woodland Cottage, Old Ford. The deceased frequently complained of pains internally, but was able to perform his duties. On Monday last he appeared in excellent spirits, and sat down to dinner with his family. After partaking of some boiled beef, he suddenly exclaimed, "I am gone," and fell back and expired. Mr. Baker, a surgeon, attended him, and was of opinion that he died from a diseased heart. A verdict was returned accordingly.

Fatal Filial Affection.—On Monday evening Mr. Mills held an inquest at the Six Bells, Queen-street, Hammersmith, on the body of Eliza Rogers, aged 47. It appeared that the deceased, a person of very feeble health, had lost her father some time since, and was in the habit of visiting his grave, in Hammersmith Church, at all hours and seasons. On Friday morning (last week) she was found lying near her father's grave, and almost lifeless. Though she received prompt medical assistance, she expired in the course of the day. It was proved that on the previous night, which was a very tempestuous one, she stole from her bed, and, scarcely clad, visited the churchyard. Mr. Roy, a surgeon, was of opinion that she died from exhaustion, the result of exposure to the night air. Verdict accordingly.

Fatal Collision on the River.—On Tuesday afternoon, a coal barge called the Gertrude was proceeding down the river, a little below London-bridge, when she ran foul of a sailing barge, very heavily loaded with sand, and known as the Opponent. The jerk pitched the steersman of the former into the water; and, although every possible exertion was made both by his mates and the captain of the Princess steamer, he floated away with the tide and disappeared.

Fire and Loss of Life.—At nine o'clock Friday night (last week) a fire of a most distressing character broke out upon the premises in the occupation of Mr. John Sharpe, printer and bookseller, No. 81, Kent-street, St. George's, Southwark. It appears that Mr. Sharpe has lately been manufacturing fireworks, and it is supposed that the explosion of some of the combustible matter caused the terrible disaster. Mr. Sharpe, who had been out, on his return forced his way through the smoke, and in the back parlour he found two of his children almost suffocated After considerable trouble, he succeeded in getting them out, but not before one was much injured. One of the firemen discovered behind the counter what he at first thought was a "dummy," but upon taking a light in, it was ascertained to be a human body. It was removed to the back parlour, and a medical gentleman sent for, but life was extinct. The countenance of the poor creature was dreadfully contorted, and it was evident that she had died from the effects of an explosion. She was the eldest daughter of the proprietor; her name was Ellen Sharpe, aged nineteen. It appears that when her father went out, she was sitting behind the counter, attending to the shop. The whole of the stock in trade was consumed; by which means, besides losing his child, Mr. Sharpe has been bereft of all his property, as he was not insured.

Death of Mr. Gillon, of Wallhouse. We are sorry to state that Mr. Gillon, late representative of the Stirling Burghs, died at his residence in Stirlingshire, on Wednesday (last week). The disease which has cut him off in rather an early career was typhus fever

Death of Viscount Allen We have to announce the [illegible] of the above Nobleman, who expired on the 21st ult., at Gibraltar, in the sixty-fourth year of his age. The deceased was the sixth Viscount, and, having died without issue, we believe the title is extinct. His Lordship's only surviving sister is married to the Hon. and Rev. W. Herbert, Dean of Manchester, and Rector of Spofforth, in Yorkshire

EPITOME OF NEWS.—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

A telegraphic dispatch from Marseilles announces the appointment of Reschid Pacha as Grand Vizier at Constantinople, and Ali Effendi as his successor as Minister of Foreign Affairs.

The Memorial of Pau, of the 4th, states that the higher mountains of the Pyrenees, in that district, were already covered with snow.

A new set of fanatics, under the title of "Second Advent Christians," commenced preaching last Sunday at the late City Theatre, in Milton-street, and a small chapel in the neighbourhood of Finsbury, their principles being "the end of the world, the second coming of Christ, the first Resurrection, and the Judgment, in or about 1847."

The opening of the Havre and Rouen Railway for the transport of merchandise is announced for the beginning of November.

On Friday (last week), a soldier named Alexander Duncan, died in Aberdeen, at the great age of 111 years. He was a native of the parish of Cairney. He enlisted in the army in 1777, and was discharged in 1803, returning to his original craft of a shoe-maker, and drawing his pension for 43 years. Although his appearance bespoke the frailties of extreme age, yet he was able to step about until within a few months of his death.

Yesterday week the foundation stone of the new railway station in connection with the Huddersfield and Manchester line, was laid with great festivity, the Earl Fitzwilliam officiating as the chief guest at the ceremony.

Mr. Mackenzie, of Seaforth, has purchased the estate of Ruddery, N.B., for £39,000.

The Dutch papers state that on the 6th inst. the railway from the Hague to Delft was opened by a train which went to that place and back for the first time by way of trial, which was perfectly satisfactory.

Letters from Adrianople state that on the 12th of September a dreadful fire broke out in that city, which consumed upwards of 600 shops, 50 houses, besides caravansaries, baths, mosques, &c. This is the second conflagration that has taken place in that city in the space of a month.

Accounts from Athens to the 30th ult. allude to the usual run of murders, assassinations, robberies, and everything of that kind, which, under M. Coletti's administration, we are accustomed to hear of. The state of Western Greece is truly awful—brigands by land and pirates by sea. M. Coletti had been seriously ill, but he is said to be recovering.

It is rumoured that Lord Dalhousie will succeed Sir G. Arthur as Governor of Bombay. Mr. Charles Villiers is also mentioned for the appointment.

The Court of Common Pleas will exhibit some marked changes next term—a new Lord Chief Justice, a new puisne Judge, with a court open to the whole bar; the exclusive privileges of sergeants-at-law having been put an end to, after an existence of 600 years, by an act of the last session of Parliament.

The supply of grapes of home-growth has not, for many years past, been so great as in the present season, and so productive have they been that it was remarked by Dr. Lindley, at the meeting of the Horticultural Society last week, that, were every season as propitious, this might become a grape-growing country.

James Campbell, Esq., the Chief-Clerk to the Secretary of the General Post-office, has been promoted to the office of Assistant-Secretary, on the vacancy occasioned by the death of the late Thomas Lawrance, Esq.

Letters dated from the Rhine, Oct. 2, state that the divorce of the Crown Prince of Denmark and his Consort is already accomplished. The Princess of Mecklenburg Strelitz has resumed the title of Crown Princess, and every apanage. A new marriage will be immediately contracted, for it is still hoped, in this manner, to put an end to the dispute respecting the succession to the throne of Denmark, except at the last extremity.

The spinning factory of M. Damiens, at Rouen, has just been burned to the ground, with the exception of the building in which the Director lived. The fire broke out at nine at night, and lasted until three in the morning. Not less than 150 workmen are thus thrown out of employment. The property was insured.

The planet Saturn is now visible on clear nights, in the south-eastern quarter of the heavens, between ten and eleven o'clock.

The Sardinian Government has, it is said, entered into a negociation with Spain for the restitution of the ashes of Christopher Columbus. The mortal remains of this great man, after having been first deposited at Seville, were removed to St. Domingo, where they remained until 1795, when they were taken to the cathedral church of the Havannah, where they are now. As the King of Sardinia has no Ambassador at Madrid, it was through the Representative of the Two Sicilies that the application was made to the Spanish Government.

A man of the name of Hequet, aged 30, son of a labourer, residing near Abbeville, who had for some time past exhibited marks of mental alienation, but had been left at liberty by his friends, although the medical man had strongly recommended them to have him locked up, on the night of the 4th got up, and proceeding to his father's bed stabbed him to the heart with a knife. The parricide is in custody.

We stated last week that the celebrated Greek General Kalergi, who so admirably conducted the movement at Athens, on the 15th of September, 1843, was on his way to London. The General has since arrived.

A letter from Rome states that there will be six lines of railroad in the Papal territory, viz.: Rome to the frontier of Naples, Rome to Civita Vecchia, Civita Vecchia to the frontier of Tuscany, Bologna to the frontier of Tuscany, Bologna to Ferrara, and Forli to Ravenna.

We learn from Brussels that, on Saturday, the Ministers held a Council to discuss measures for providing employment for the poor during the winter, the high price of provisions rendering it imperative on the Government to come to the aid of the labouring population.

The last New York papers say that a romantic couple were married on the 2nd of September, by torch-light, on the summit of the Natural bridge of Virginia. There were nine groomsmen, all bearing torches, and nine bridesmaids clad in white. The scene is described as highly picturesque.

A Berlin letter, of the 6th, informs us that Princess Louisa of Prussia, who has been for some time ill at Genoa, is now in great danger. Her complaint is aneurism of the heart.

A letter from Alexandria, of the 29th ult., says, "The Viceroy is in perfect health, and will leave for Cairo in a few days. Ibrahim Pacha is still at a village in Upper Egypt, where he is gone to set up the machinery he has had brought from Paris.

Lieutenant Porter, of the American Navy, brought from Chili, in 1824, a small green bulbous root, about the size of a marble, which he planted, and in two years it produced a fine blue nosed potato, and this bulb is indigenous to Chili. Lieutenant Porter says that he has no doubt that the potato has actually run out, and unless this Chili plant is propagated the potato will disappear. He recommends the cultivation of the yam, cassada, and tara, as substitutes, all of which can be easily and profitably cultivated.

The Scotch papers mention the serious illness of J. C. Colquhoun, Esq., M.P., and state that, though now pronounced out of immediate danger, he is still in a very precarious state. The attack appears to have been one of gastric fever, and of unusual severity. From the last accounts from Killermont, it is to be feared that his recovery must be a work of time.

John Ball, Esq., of Stephen's-green, Dublin, has been appointed an assistant Poor-law Commissioner to act in Ireland.

A letter from Cadiz, of the 27th ult., states that the English fleet is still cruising between Cape St. Vincent and Trafalgar. This letter adds, that a very active correspondence is kept up between Mr. Bulwer and Admiral Parker, by means of a steamer, which bears to and from the squadron the messengers sent from Madrid. It is confidently affirmed in the same letter that the squadron is at the orders of Mr. Bulwer

A letter from the Antilles states that the squadron stationed there, commanded by Admiral Laplace, is to proceed to the Havannah, where a rendezvous has been given to some of the vessels detached at Hayti. These forces, composed of the Andromache frigate, the Blonde, Pylade, and Mercure, corvettes, and the Tonnerre, steamer, are destined, it is said, for the Gulf of Mexico. The Mercure arrived at Cuba on Sept. 9

Letters from Trieste announce that the harvest on the banks of the Danube and on the shores of the Black Sea has been excellent "We have not," says the writer of one of these letters, "to join the rest of the world in deploring the scarcity of corn; for a letter of the 19th ult from Galatz, states that 700 [illegible] have left the Bosphorus with a favourable wind from the south, bound for the ports of the Black Sea and the Danube. The quantity of corn in store is so great that a sufficient number of transports cannot be found, although they have everywhere been sought for."

It is in contemplation, we hear, that Government Schools of Design shall be established in Dublin and Belfast.

No less than three hundred informations were laid last week against the owners of tenements in Liverpool for cellars which were either defective as respects ventilation, or were of insufficient size for human dwellings.

GOSSIP OF THE WEEK.

Shelley told the Skylark, which he wrote an Ode to, that

> Chorus hymeneal,
> Or triumphal chaunt,
> Matched with thine, would be all
> But an empty vaunt;

and, without calling in any Skylark to aid us, we may safely say that never was more hollowness of heart, and idle boasting exhibited, than in the Royal Nuptials that have just been celebrated at Madrid, and in the political manœuvres that have produced and accompanied them. Queen Christina has succeeded in marrying off her two little girls, as the crafty King of the French prompted her; and England is supposed to have received

> A heavy blow and deep discouragement, because a child of fourteen will, in future, figure at Versailles as the Duchess de Montpensier, instead of being shut up in the Spanish nursery as the Infanta Luisa. France and Spain are already looked on as virtually blended, by this match, into one snug rest for the Gallic Cock; their fleets are to unite, and crush perfidious Albion, in some future war; and great is the chuckling of the Parisians over us baffled Britons, and over Lord Palmerston in particular. We suspect, however, that,

> In spite of all their laughter,
> We still shall rule the seas;
> And France will find hereafter
> There still are Pyrenees.

The poor little child, who is thus sacrificed to imaginary political expediency, is most to be pitied: though, perhaps, anything that removes a person from such a focus of turbulence and trouble as Madrid, ought to be regarded as a benefit. We can fancy her, when told to lock up her toys and get ready to marry the nice new young French Prince that has come for her, addressing her Royal mother somewhat in the style of Tennyson's Queen of the May.

THE INFANTA TO QUEEN CHRISTINA.

If you're waking, call me early, rather early, mother dear
And you're mostly wide awake, mother, if all is true we hear.
To-morrow will be a merrier day than all the days beside;
I'm to be the French Duke's bride, mother, I'm to be the French Duke's bride.

I've had full many dolls, mother, and toys both new and old;
But they say that this is a real Prince, all dressed in lace and gold
All dressed in lace and gold, mother, on a long-tailed horse he'll ride—
And I'm to be his bride, mother, I'm to be the French Duke's bride.

Sister Bell will be married too, mother; and won't the church be full?—
And now you'll let me go, mother, to see them bait the bull.
I'll sit and see the bull-fight, mother, with my husband by my side—
I'm to be the French Duke's bride, mother, I'm to be the French Duke's bride.

I'm to take a trip to Paris, mother, and see King Louis Philippe,
Who's as sly as any fox, mother, though he seems as soft as a sheep.
They'll give me bon-bons nice, mother; show me sights on every side—
I'm to be the French Duke's bride, mother, I'm to be the French Duke's bride.

I need not fear the mountains, mother; we shall travel at our ease,
For they say that, when we're married, there'll be no more Pyrenees.
I shall come back here as Queen, mother, when sister shall have died—
I'm to be the French Duke's bride, mother, I'm to be the French Duke's bride.

Leaving the contemplation of these "United States" of Royal and noble personages in Europe, we turn our attention to the United States of America, and find their political morality little better than that of the Old World. The war which the Yankees began with the Mexicans in a spirit of most shameful rapacity, they are now desirous to compound in a spirit of the most dirty huckstering.

Such, however, has generally been the characteristic of Yankee heroism. The burden of one of the most popular of their national songs in the last war, ran thus:—

> Jump along Jonathan,
> Jig away, Jemima;
> War is come to Boston town,
> We'll get as rich as Lima:

and the sentiment of this exquisite lyric still guides their councils and arms. They are not troubling themselves with attacking St. Juan d'Ulloa, or any of the really strong parts of Mexico, but they are pouring a force, half-emigrant, half-military, into California, in order to secure the "annexation" of that valuable but ill-protected district. Indeed, they openly propose peace, on condition of their having California given up to them, and offer a few million dollars to boot, as a temptation to the leading Mexicans to make peace, and put something into their own pockets.

In furtherance of this policy, the American blockading squadron has most politely helped Santa Anna to return to Mexico, and resume the guidance of affairs there: an arrangement no doubt having been first made as to the terms on which he is to do President Polk's dirty work. He is issuing blustering proclamations, in which he talks of "gathering laurels on the Sabine river," which means, at least, reconquering Texas. All this rhodomontade is most likely a mere temporary pretext, and we shall soon hear, in the terms of a treaty of peace, how he serves his employers against his country. Some, however, think that he really means to show fight, and, out of roguery to the Yankees, to be honest to Mexico. We have little faith in him; nor is he worth having his name hitched into rhyme; but, as Horace gave an epistle to the renegade Menas, we will give a few

STANZAS TO SANTA ANNA.

Santa Anna, Santa Anna,
Lord of prairie and savannah,
Chief from exile long returning,
(As thou say'st) for glory burning,
Tell us for what secret juggling
Cam'st thou in by Yankee smuggling,
Like a contraband Havannah,
Worthy General Santa Anna?

Santa Anna, Santa Anna,
Dose of Ipecacuanha
Is not half so nauseating
As thy gasconade and prating.
"Gather laurels on the Sabine"—
Go and hide thee in some cabin—
Who, at St. Jacinto, ran a Shameful race, like Santa Anna?

Santa Anna, Santa Anna,
Hang thee in thine own bandanna
Rather than be curse-pursued, as Mexico's malignant Judas,
For the dollars and the "Thank-ye's"
Of these sharking, grasping Yankees.
Let not bribes seem sweet as manna
To thy fingers, Santa Anna.

The strangest news, after all, that we have heard about anything on the other side of the Atlantic, is the rumour that some of the South American Republics are to be attacked by an invading European force; and that the European power which is to make this mad attempt at conquest is, above all others, poor distracted, bankrupt Spain. Nelson used to say that you ought to be prepared for any enterprise from a mad Government; and, therefore, as the Spanish Government decidedly is mad, we should not be surprised if the rumour proved true, and her General Flores actually set sail on his Quixotic enterprise against Ecuador. Certain it is that war-steamers are being prepared in the Thames for some such purpose, to the orders of Spanish agents; and, under the pretext of emigration, recruits have been raised in Ireland for the purpose of being led against Ecuador. Wretchedly off as the Irish unhappily are, this adventure must be too insane even for them; and the judicious interference of the Mayor of Limerick and other authorities will probably stop it in time:

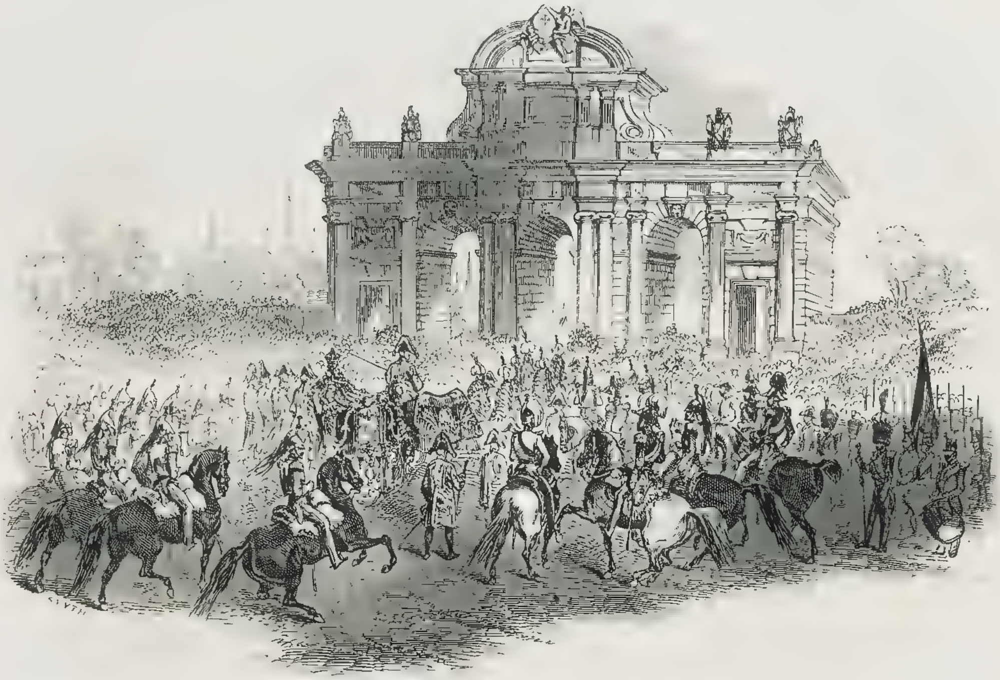
> Oh, Paddy, my jewel, though your lot is unaisy,
> And a mighty fine place this same Ecuador is,
> Don't go for to show yourself perfectly crazy,
> Or fight for such ninnies as General Flores

Improved Newspaper Envelopes.—Messrs. Delarue and Co. have just registered a very simple and effective method of securing the safe transit of newspapers by post. It consists of a paper wrapper, made adhesive at one end, and provided with a tape, secured inside. The mode of using it is to place the newspaper, folded as usual, in the wrapper, join the adhesive end, and tie the tapes. Some of the envelopes are, by a patented process, saturated with India-rubber, for the more secure transmission of newspapers to foreign countries. The envelopes are sold at a very cheap rate.

Loss of the Brig "Clifton," with Six of her Crew.—Mr. Robert Moorhead, master of the Clifton, of Newcastle, of 263 tons, arrived at Penarth Roads on Thursday (last week) in the barque Secret, and brought the mournful intelligence of the total loss of that vessel, as well as of six of her crew. It appears that the Clifton took on board at Buctush a cargo of timber for London; and on the 9th of September proceeded on her intended voyage. On the 19th of the same month she encountered violent gales, ranging from S. to W.S.W., at which period the vessel became water-logged, and turned bottom upwards; her masts then gave way, and she righted. Six men were drowned. After the survivors had [illegible] and three nights in the main-top, they were seen by Captain Gorwin, of the barque Secret, who took them on board. In this vessel they arrived at Penarth Roads.

Colliery Explosion near Wakefield On Tuesday morning (last week), between eleven and twelve o'clock, an explosion of fire-damp took place in Haigh Moor Pit, at Stanley-lane-end, near Wakefield, belonging to Messrs. Hudson and Co., of Leeds, by which three men lost their lives. The names of the sufferers were Norris Beaumont, James Sidebottom, and George Clayton, who were all shockingly burnt.

THE SPANISH MARRIAGES.—MADRID.



ARRIVAL AT THE ALCALA.

A TELEGRAPHIC dispatch has been received in Paris announcing that the marriages of the Queen to Don Francisco de Assis, and of the Infanta to the Duke de Montpensier, were solemnised on the evening of Saturday last. There was a grand mass performed on the morning of Sunday.

As we stated in our latest impression last week, the French Princes arrived in Madrid on the preceding Tuesday (the 6th). Before they entered the capital, they breakfasted at the residence of the Duke de Ossuna and del Infantado, at Charmartin. An immense concourse of people filled the streets. At two o'clock, a courier galloped in with the news of the arrival of the Princes. At half-past two, a magnificent carriage made its appearance: it conveyed MM. de Arana, del Povar, and de Santa Cruz, who had been to receive the Princes at the frontier. At three, their Highnesses made their entrée on horseback, a detachment of horse Municipal Guards preceding them By their sides rode the Minister of War, the Captain-General of Madrid, and the French Ambassador (M. Bresson), who had been to meet them at Alcobendas. They were followed by a most numerous staff, four Court carriages, a municipal deputation, &c. The said carriages had been sent by the Queen in the event of the weather proving unfavourable. The Duke de Montpensier repeatedly saluted the crowd. Numbers of general officers, including Narvaez and Concha, accompanied the Minister of War, with their respective aides-de-camp and orderlies, and formed, as may be supposed, a very imposing and brilliant group. The reception of Narvaez by the French Princes was most cordial; they seemed to strive in every possible way to show the surrounding spectators how high the ex-Dictator stood in their estimation.

The entire cortege entered Madrid on horseback, by the Bilboa gate, and, passing through the Calle de Fuencarrel, descended the Calle de Montera, towards the Puerta del Sol, which was filled with Cuirassiers. The windows of each house were alive with people of every degree, age, and sex; whilst the streets lined with troops, resounding with martial music, crowded with thousands anxious to get a glimpse of the affianced husband of the heiress apparent to the Crown of Spain, formed a truly animated and picturesque scene, lit up as it was by the dazzling glories of an unclouded sun. Numbers of Frenchmen loudly cheered the Princes as they proceeded, shouting "Vive le Duc d'Aumale! Vive le Duc de Montpensier!" with right gallant enthusiasm, despite the lowering brows and scowling glances of the countless Spaniards around them. This fearless ebullition of feeling did credit to them, for the moment was somewhat critical, and made the demonstration perilous. The Spaniards present on this memorable occasion contented themselves with protesting against the Montpensier match by their silence and the frigid reception they gave Louis Philippe's sons. The French Princes evidently felt the coldness with which they were received, and vainly tried to appear unconcerned and cheerful. But they looked pale, and more than once a sad austere expression came over their features, which, however, disappeared in a moment, and was replaced by bright looks of gratitude and satisfaction, as they acknowledged the cordial greetings of their countrymen. It almost seemed as if they recognised old friends amongst the dark stern faces around them. The entire way from the Bilboa gate to the Royal Palace was lined with troops—a most unusual proceeding, and quite opposed to Spanish etiquette, the Sovereign being in the capital at the time. This can only be explained by supposing that the authorties, under the guise of doing the French Princes as much honour as possible, occupied every street with troops for the purpose of aweing the disaffected and preserving public tranquillity. The open space before the Palace was filled with troops, and several military bands struck up the Royal march as their Royal Highnesses dismounted and entered the Royal residence. They were received in the grand audience chamber by the Queen, her mother, and the Infanta, attended by the Court, and proceeded into her Majesty's private apartment.

The two Queens, the Infanta, the whole of the Royal Family, and the French Princes, came on the balcony to witness the "defile" of the troops.

The Madrid Correspondent of the Times says, "I watched their progress a considerable way, from the Calle Fuencarrel to the Puerta del Sol, and I did not hear one single cry, either in their favour or against them. Not a hat did I see raised to salute them, notwithstanding that the Princes were continually lifting theirs. Not a handkerchief was waved from the balconies, which were crowded with well-dressed people! The Princes wore over their uniforms the Grand Cross of the Legion of Honour. They were attended by the Ministers and Captains-General, and followed by a numerous staff. The Minister of War rode at one side, and the Governor of Madrid at the other. The artillery was stationed outside the gate on the French road. The escort of the Princes was composed of the Hussars of Maria Christina. There were very few people outside the gates; the troops were there much more numerous. There was no demonstration of any kind".

The following additional details respecting the reception of the French Princes are from a Madrid letter, dated Oct. 8:—

"The French Princes, who are perfectly acquainted with the generosity of the Castilian character, display the utmost confidence in the people, and the latter acknowledge it. Yesterday forenoon they went about the capital in a berline, without any other escort than the French Ambassador, Baron Athalin, and some other persons of their suite. In the evening the French Ambassador's drawing-rooms boasted the presence of the noblest and highest company of Madrid. They were crowded with Generals and Grandees of Spain. In all circles the gracious amabilité of the French Princes is justly praised. It is impossible to find two young Princes better educated. The beauty of the Infanta of Castille appears to have made the deepest impression on the young Duke de Montpensier. It is said that when, on his arrival at the Palace, he stood before the Infanta, he turned to the Duke d'Aumale, and said, 'Oh! she is better-looking than her portrait!' This afternoon, at half-past three, the Dukes de Montpensier and d'Aumale have received the authorities of Madrid and the officers of the garrison. The Captain-General addressed them thus:—'Most Serene Lords, the garrison of Madrid have come to congratulate your Royal Highnesses. Yesterday they had the honour of receiving in their ranks the brave sons of a great King, our Queen's ally. Soldiers and Generals all have been proud to behold the warlike type on your noble brows. Their sympathies for your august persons have since increased, and I have come to assure you of them, in the name of the army of the New Castille. May God grant that your stay on our territory may be as agreeable to your Royal Highnesses as it is to all Spanish soldiers!' The Duke de Montpensier condescended to reply for himself and his brother, and his feeling and energetic answer drew tears from the eyes of many who were present. 'I thank you, Monsieur le Capitaine-General,' said he, 'for the sentiments you have just expressed in behalf o the Madrid garrison. They have deeply affected me. I am happy to avail myself of this opportunity to congratulate the brave officers who command the army of New Castille. I am more and more pleased with the ties that are about to connect me with this heroic Spanish nation, which, I doubt not, is destined to maintain the exalted rank it has ever held in the pages of history.'"

Some of the journals dwell in a contradictory way on an arrest that took place the day the French Princes entered Madrid. It appears that the person arrested is charged with meditating the assassination of the Duke of Montpensier. He is a retired military officer, named Olavarrieta. He was formerly editor of a Republican paper, called El Huracan—"the hurricane." When taken before the Minister of the Interior, he declared that he intended one pistol for the Duke of Montpensier, and the other for himself, as soon as the act was consummated. The pistols were loaded with balls and slugs. It was near the portico of the Royal Palace he was arrested, where he was waiting the arrival of the Princes. The report is that he is insane. He had been arrested some hours previously, in a gambling house, but was soon set at liberty. His anxious inquiries in the Palace-square, and his great curiosity as to the identity of the Princes, attracted the notice of the police.

Mr. Bulwer has presented another protest to the Spanish Government on the subject of the Infanta's marriage. It is short, but strong and decided in character. This protest is to the effect that the British Government will refuse to recognize the claims of the children of the marriage to the crown of Spain.

The Journal des Débats publishes the following letter from Madrid of the 6th inst.:—"The description of Cabrera has been sent to all the authorities; he travels under the name of José Lopez, merchant, of Madrid. If he falls into the hands of justice, he is to be shot instantly. If he escapes the watchfulness of the authorities, he need not flatter himself that he will make many proselytes the Carlist party is dead."

THE JOURNEY.

The first of our Engravings, upon the front page, represents the Duke de Montpensier, en route for Madrid; with a specimen of the mountain-ridges and sublime scenery of the Pyrenees.

THE ALCALA.

This scene shows the Royal cortege arriving at the Puerta de Alcalá, built in 1778, for Charles III., by Sabatini. This is the finest gate in Madrid, being merely ornamental; "for, the walls, a mean girdle to the only court, are of mud, and might be jumped over by a tolerably active Remus; but they were never intended for defence against any invaders, except smuggled cigars; yet, although they might be battered down with garbanzos, this architectural ornament was mutilated by the invader, whose sportive cannon-balls were especially directed at it;—Te saxa loquuntur."—Ford's Handbook of Spain.

THE PRADO.

This is the locale of the Prado, the costumes and characteristics of which were engraved and described in No. 177 of our Journal. "Here," says Mr. Ford, in his lively "Handbook of Spain," "on the winter mornings and summer afternoons, all the rank, beauty, and fashion appear. It is a place to study costumes and manners, and to see those antediluvian carriages with ridiculous coachmen and grotesque footmen to match, caricatures, which amongst us would be put into the British Museum."

The Prado, "the meadow," in the time of Philip IV., was a wooded dip, renowned for murder and intrigue, political and amatory. It was levelled and planted by the Conde de Aranda, under Charles III., and laid out by José Hermonsilla in garden walks; the entire length is 9650 feet; and the most frequented portion, "El Salon," is 1450 feet long, by 200 feet wide. This fine promenade terminates with the fountain of Neptune; and there are seven other fountains in the Prado

Mr Ford discourses very pleasantly of this truly Spanish thing and scene, which is unique; "and, as there is nothing like it in Europe, and, oh, wonder! no English on it, it fascinates all who pass the Pyrenees."

"The Prado is a noisy, dusty scene, as no grass, no continental apology for English lawn, grows on this so-called meadow, a modest misnomer after the fashion of Les Champs Elysées of Parisian paradise. No flowers enamel this Prado, save those offered by impertinent daughters of Flora. Fire and water, Candela Fuego! y quien quiere agua? resound on every side; since these, long the essential elements for holy purposes, for the furnace of the Inquisition, and the agua bendita of the church, are equally necessary to light cigars and put out thirst: accordingly, Murillo-like urchins run about with lighted rope-ends for smokers, i. e. for ninety-nine out of one hundred males, while Aguadores follow the fire, like engines, with fresh water, for your Spaniard is as a-dust as his soil, and thirsty as Vesuvius.

"Strange as the Prado still appears, it is sadly fallen off from the good old times before the fatal invasion and the nuevo progreso; every afternoon the march of transpyrenean intellect is crushing some national costume and custom. Oh! the tyranny of English tailors and coachmakers, and of French barbers and modistes! Out upon the upper Benjamins and beards a la Brutus, which travestie this land of the cloak and Don Whiskerandos. Sad, in truth, is it to see the gens togata, once the models and masters of Europe, casting off their skins and capas, to put on the paletot, the livery pea-jacket of the foreigner: but Bonaparte never inflicted more injuries to Spanish man than your little French milliner has done to the daughter of the saya y mantilla; nor are even their precious organs of speech safe, their fans or tongues, for they fetter their glorious vernacular by exchanging it for what they fancy is the idiom of Paris, just as a similar want of judgment was displayed by their foolish ancestors.

"The Prado, as it approaches the Pa. de Atocha, becomes more umbrageous and quiet. This is the favourite site of bores, lovers, and button-holders. Those who remember Spain when truly Spain will miss the monks and real Mantillas, for the present Mantilla is unworthy of the name. Consult on some of these Prado particularities, Water-drinking, p. 71; Cigars, p. 293; Costume, p. 196. Walking, pp. 203 3.2: but the paso Castellano cannot be compared to the aire y meneo of a Gaditana's gait, nor the gracia y piafar of an Andaluza's amble.

"Advancing to the l. is the simple pyramidal monument of the Dos de Mayo, raised to the names of the victims of Murat. It was begun in 1814 by the Cortes, but was stopped by Ferd. VII., in whose eyes the senators and heroes of the war of independence found no favour, because of their reforming tendencies. Here a modest Castilian Leon puts its paw only on the whole globe. The anniversary of the 2d of May is celebrated like our 5th of November."

LA PUERTA DEL SOL.

Madrid may be considered at this moment as the centre of political intrigue, and La Puerta del Sol may be fairly pronounced as the centre of Madrid; that is, the fruitful focus wherein concentrate and whence emanate the rays of party spirit which are supposed to enlighten Spain. The Gate of the Sun no longer exists, if it ever existed at all, but, in its stead, a handsome "Plaza" shines forth, into which several streets, and especially the Calle d'Alcala, debouch, thus naturally rendering it the common rendezvous of the capital. It is, moreover, contiguous to the Prado and the Royal Palace. It contains the Post-Office—a handsome modern building, and the adjoining streets teem with political cafés

Most preconceptions of national character are more or less false; that about the taciturn solemnity of the Spaniards is pre-eminently so, and one visit to the Puerta del Sol would more than suffice to prove the assertion. Not only the cafes are crowded with men in animated conversation, but also the shops of trades-people, such as mercers, hatters, &c., are similarly circumstanced, except, indeed, where these latter have affiché'd on their windows "A qui no hacier las tertulias," "No conversations allowed here;" a notice as common in the Calle d'Alcala as "Ici l'on parle Français" in Regent-street.

THE PALACE.

At this Palace, one of the most magnificent in the world, we have glanced in No. 179 of our Journal. The Illustration shows the Inner Court, a square of 470 feet by 100 feet high. The rustic base is of granite; the window work of white stone of Colmenar, which in the bright sun glitters as a fair palace of marble. The principal entrance, on the south, leads into a huge patio, of some 240 feet square with a glazed upper gallery. Between the arches are statues of the Spanish Roman Emperors—Trajan, Adrian, Honorius, and Theodosius. The interior is splendid: it is said, when Bonaparte ascended the staircase, he told his brother Joseph, "Vous serez mieux logé que moi." He laid his hand on one of the white marble lions, exclaiming, "Je la tiens enfin, cette Espagne, si désirée!"

THE SPANISH MARRIAGES.

Joy to the Royal Volunteers
Of Hymen's camp!
Not Isabella's (first of) April tears,
That joy can damp.
The deed is done,
The day is won,
Despite the threats of Progressistal tramp,
Or Carlist bore.
Joy to the Tricolor!
Poor Don Enrique and Montemolino
Vainly will bluster about the lost Queen, oh!
Cabrera, that Nero,
And Don Espartero,
"Arcades ambo," have tumbled to zero—
With all the rest; mere leather and prunello—
Let them tear their moustaches in rage and despair,
Montpensier marries Luisa the fair.
Io! Hymenæ!
Io! Pyrenæ!
Francisco espouses the Queen Isabella!

Joy to the Tuileries!
Its orange trees
Will bloom anew to welcome home the Bride;
Bravely its flag will flaunt the joyous breeze;
The Seine will burst her stays in triumph's pride!
The Champs Elysées
Will have a gay day
Mâts de Cocagne—plays—sausages—wine
Gamins and Grisettes,
In Terpsichore's "sets,"
Will be dancing and glancing from Caen to the Rhine.
Shout Pyrenees aloud!
Let every cloud
Around your summits wreathe in [illegible] smiles.

Shout every river,
From Bidassoa to the Guadalquiver,
And raise your waters lofty as the Nile's.
Your tribute pay
To Montpensier.
Who cares a fico for the British Isles?
Or testify respect
For the treaty of Utrecht—
"The Etente Cordiale" at the Château [illegible]
Joy to Bresson's skill,
And the tact of Louis Phil-
lip. Loyalty is certainly that Monarch's due!

Joy to "the Dynasty"—a triple joy.
Yet still the Pyrenees shall long exist,
Throned in the mist
Of Freedom's vallies, spite that Royal Boy,
Louis Quatorze,
Who look'd on wars
And human slaughter as a monarch's toy.
"'Tis only the first step that costs"—Alas!
Succeeding steps may cost a trifle more;
And therefore may Montpensier repass
Safely the hills where brave Pelayo bore
The flag that flamed confusion on the Moor.
The saw-like hills "Sierras"—which can sever
The yoke of bondage—for Iberia's shore,
Th[illegible] air and fertile, shall be free for ever
Joy to Montpensier! Happy, happy man!
Brilliant was the plan
A[illegible]ndant the idea
[illegible]ned the niece, with the Order of the Fleece,
And Spain is now at peace—Spain, Europe's Medea!

Marriage of Lady R[illegible].—Lady Rose Somerset, fourth d[illegible] the Duke of Beaufort, [illegible] Lovell, whose elopement from Badminton we noticed in last week's paper, were married on Sunday last. The persons present at the ceremony, and the place at which it was performed, suggest the agreeable inference that a reconciliation has taken place amongst all parties. The marriage took place at Wroughton, the seat of John Lovell, Esq., and was solemnised by the Rev. E. Everard, Chaplain to the Duke of Beaufort.

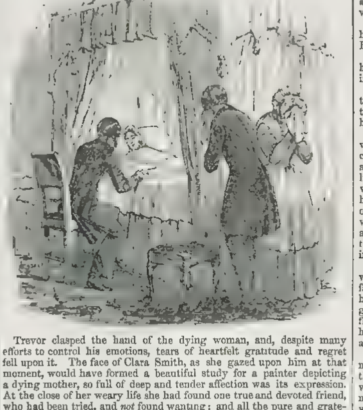
CHAPTER XIII.

Trevor Sefton stood in the chamber of death! Far away in that southern isle, whither, on the wings of hope, so many fading forms have been borne, to find, alas!—a grave. But, as the careless visitor to Madeira, startled for awhile to thoughtfulness, pauses beside the simple inscription which records the fate of youth and beauty, or the costlier tomb which tells of fortune's gifts, it is but a natural fancy to dream that the disembodied spirits have floated back with earnest love and longing affections, to the northern homes they so vainly fled, and that even the insensible clay rests not quite peacefully in that soft, but stranger-land!



Trevor clasped the hand of the dying woman, and, despite many efforts to control his emotions, tears of heartfelt gratitude and regret fell upon it. The face of Clara Smith, as she gazed upon him at that moment, would have formed a beautiful study for a painter depicting a dying mother, so full of deep and tender affection was its expression. At the close of her weary life she had found one true and devoted friend, who had been tried, and not found wanting; and all the pure and grateful affections of a warm and loving nature—long garnered, it would seem, rather than repressed—flowed forth with a sweet and consoling power. It seemed as if something in her destiny were completed—some want, at last supplied, for which her spirit had long pined. If Providence had willed her recovery, it would have been the sweetest task to have smoothed with her fortune his rugged path; to have loved for his sake the wife he had chosen, and the children he might have. But she knew that the vital powers of her mortal frame were failing, and that her days of life were narrowing to a close. Her soul was at peace with her Creator; and now must her satisfied spirit concentrate its human yearnings into one comprehensive revelation! A revelation; for not until so late a day had she left the actual fulfilment of an intention conceived without Trevor Sefton entertaining a suspicion of the fact.

The chamber of Death was rife with the evidences of wealth—seeming like vain and fluttering banners swiftly to be overthrown and bowed earthwards by the King of Terrors! The couch on which rested that sinking frame was of the richest damask; the pillows were covered with the finest lawn; and delicate but costly lace shaded the hollow cheeks, and fell in ruffles half over the emaciated hands. For many days articulation had been difficult and dangerous, and a tablet of ivory and gold remained by her side, on which to inscribe her wishes. Her faithful dog, with glistening eyes and patient face, nestled watchfully at her feet—not loved less warmly than of old, though a human friend was now prized yet more dearly.

The inscription which the changing face of the tablet at this moment bore, told Trevor Sefton that, with the exception of a few legacies, and three hundred a year to her worthless husband, he was, by a recent Will, the sole heir of her fortune!

It was quite evident from her words that, if she did not know in detail how truly and firmly he had been faithful to her, she felt the Truth by a spirit-knowledge, and she blessed him, as a mother might bless her son, for opening her heart to its holiest emotions. He had restored to her that which had wandered from her breast, like a lost dove from its home—her Faith in Humanity. Now, without doubt or trembling, she could indulge in fond hopes of the good on earth which her earthly possessions would effect in the future; the high purposes to which she had long willed them, though chained to inaction herself by sickness and circumstance.

It would be in vain to attempt a description of the thronging emotions which swelled at the heart of Trevor Sefton. A heart and imagination alike warm alone can picture them, understanding also, that the intelligence he had just received had come upon him as a most startling surprise. He had been cognisant of the Will made on board a ship, and had never suspected that a more recent one had been executed. Even had he guessed such a thing—as, from certain mysterious interviews with some of her Madeira acquaintances which he now recollected—a more inquisitive person might perhaps have done, he would never have thought of himself as her legatee, after her memorable words that it should be "his interest to keep her alive." Poor thing! unkindness had taught her tongue its bitterness; ingratitude had planted suspicion in a nature the most trusting and generous.

Mrs. Smith still lingered for a few days; during which time she not only communicated to her husband the disposition she had made of her property, but caused several precautionary measures to be taken which might facilitate the means to be adopted by Trevor in taking possession of it. Calmly as a wearied child falls asleep, she sank at last. She had seemed better in the morning, though well did Trevor know such really was but an expiring flicker. She had spoken a little; she had renewed her forgiveness to her husband kindly and earnestly; had given a little trinket which she constantly wore, as the last of many gifts to her weeping maid, and—feat most easily accomplished—had led the conversation to Margaret Clifford, if that could be called conversation which was rather a narration her written questions had drawn forth. A sweet smile rested on her wan features; for her parting spirit was refreshed by the knowledge that she had conferred happiness. Such were her last earthly thoughts.

The last sorrowful rites were over; and the house made sacred by the presence of Death, was once more so much of common space, in which men could talk of common things, and in a voice no longer hushed.

The husband and the heir were together! The eyes of the former were cast down, and it would have been hard to judge from features well disciplined to mask the soul's emotions, what passions were at play within. Remorse or hatred, penitence or revenge? Trevor Sefton did not pause to consider which of them swayed the hour; he could not have done it, for his own heart had been so melted and moulded within the last few days, that reason seemed to be in a state of chaos—but a chaos out of which was to evolve new and beautiful combinations—a chaos over which floated the spirits of pity, and hope, and pardon.

He rested his hand kindly on the shoulder of the other, as brother might lean upon brother. "Why will you not let me be your friend?" he said; and the voice was—the voice of the "Spirits."

"My friend!" exclaimed Geoffrey Smith, in a tone of bitterness. Yet his lip quivered.

"Yes, friend; unless you can think of a better term and adopt it."

The dark eyes were raised; eyes in which a lurking sarcasm seemed driving back the evidences of some more healthful emotion. It conquered, too, for the moment, for he said, bitterly, "What think you of Judas?"

"I am no Judge," returned Trevor mournfully; "there is One on High—One who will weigh Circumstance and Temptation in a balance more even than our frail fellow-mortals can hold."

The Evil doer for years, hardened in guilt, burst into tears!

That was a long and memorable interview, in which the wretched man poured out the Confession of his Life. It will be enough to take up the thread of the discourse towards its close. Hope spoke more loudly than her sister "Spirits" now, in the voice of Trevor Sefton.

"The first thing, then, to restore your peace of mind is to refund the thousand pounds, and recall that unhappy draft—"

"Which I forged," interrupted the other; "Oh! to be able to breathe that word of fire, that has burnt and branded itself into my heart for a dozen years!"

"This shall be done as quickly as my instructions—or myself—can reach London. Secondly, before entering some foreign service, you wish one parting interview with Hester Clifford. Is this wise?"

"It is selfish, perhaps," murmured the other, "but if you knew—if you could comprehend—how that one memory has dwelt in my soul, like a jewel amid corruption. Even now, imbecile, faded, as she is, if she would wed me—if I might, in part, atone—"

"Think not of it," said Trevor hastily, "I have told you Death is at her heart. And every letter I receive from England confirms my words. Believe me, she is fading like an autumn leaf."

But few preparations were necessary for leaving the island. Trevor had secured a berth in a vessel which was to sail for England almost immediately, but not the same in which Mr. Smith was to return.

It seemed to be tacitly understood that it would be pleasanter for them to part company, and be perfectly independent of each other, than to adopt the opposite plan. Trevor, anxious for all reasons, to return home, was to have been the first to quit Madeira.

It was the evening before the vessel was to sail—the evening of a warm spring day. All his effects were on board, except a valise, which contained some valuables and papers of importance. He had one last and tearful visit to pay—it was to the grave of his benefactress. He lingered and lingered, as if loath to quit the spot, till the sinking sun warned him that the sudden night of the South would be quickly upon him. What crowding memories of past trials, what tender recollections of the dead, what high resolves, what radiant hopes, swelled in his heart, words cannot tell. At last, as with a quick determination, he moved away, yet paused awhile to gather a few wild flowers which grew near the spot: these, as he perceived an acquaintance approaching, he thrust into his bosom.

The stranger was an Englishman, a white-haired man, but bowed with sorrow more than years. Ten years before, an adored wife had faded and faded before his eyes, till Death snatched her from his loving hold; a daughter, taken by the same Vampire-like disease, lay in a grave near that of Clara Smith; and now was he watching, with almost frantic love, his only remaining child, a youth of seventeen, whom he had brought hither, with the lost sister, for the winter, but was now about taking back to England.

"I suspected I should find you here, Mr. Sefton," he exclaimed, removing his hat, perhaps out of deference to the sacred spot, "when they told me you were from home. I come to ask a boon of you; a boon which Aged ignorance asks of Youthful knowledge; a boon which a month ago I would have bargained for with the yellow Gold—that which can purchase so much, and yet so little! But the world says you are richer than I now—and so—and so—I beg your Charity!"

Trevor Sefton was not of a nature to remain unmoved at such an address; and yet a terrible guess close upon the truth rushed to his mind. He had prescribed for the Youth in question on more than one occasion; and the dread Consumption, less deeply rooted than it had been in the sister's case, had yielded perceptibly to his remedies.

"What is it I can do," he replied, "for the few hours I remain on the island! The vessel in which I have engaged my passage sails to-morrow."

"No, no; it must not be," exclaimed the other. "One little fortnight—only two weeks—only fourteen nights and days—and then we all return together. I have striven for berths in the ship in which you were to have gone; but not one, not one to be found. Oh stay, and save my child. It is useless to bribe you with Gold: what, what can I say?" And then the old man clasped his hands, and burst forth in a torrent of passionate entreaties.

Trevor Sefton was grieved—grieved beyond expression, with a heart-sick disappointment. In his present mood, the delay of a fortnight seemed the delay of half a life; and yet, putting aside the exaggerated expressions and belief of the Father, he could not conceal from himself the fact that the Son was in precisely the condition when a single error in the treatment of his disease might prove fatal. One month ago! Yes: were he as poor in fortunes as he believed himself to be then, full well he knew that, for some comparatively trifling money payment, he would have bartered his freedom, deferred his hopes, and bent every endeavour towards the fulfilment of new duties. And was he to withhold that for Charity which he would have yielded for Gold?

Was Trevor Sefton to fall before the rich man's first Temptation?

No. "I will stay!" he exclaimed; and the grateful Father did not note the sigh which followed.

It was more fruitful in consequences than strange in itself, that Geoffrey Smith—almost equally eager to leave Madeira—should occupy the berth engaged for Trevor Sefton, and sail on the morrow!

COUNTRY NEWS.

Opening the Ports.—On Tuesday a meeting of the working men of Manchester took place, for the purpose of memorializing the Government to open the ports. The Chairman, Mr. Abel Heywood, alluded to the pressure for food which must arise, and gave his opinion that it was of urgent importance to adopt the course suggested. Several statements were made as to the prevalence of distress and the scarcity of food, and a memorial to Lord John Russell was agreed to.

Opening of the Great North of England, Clarence, and Hartlepool Junction.—The ceremony connected with the opening of this important connecting link took place on Monday. The line is only about eight miles in length, but it forms the connecting link between the York and Newcastle and Clarence Railways, and affords the best and shortest medium for the transit of the coal and iron of the western parts of the county to the important port of Hartlepool. Mr. George Hudson, on behalf of the Newcastle and Darlington Railway Company, having agreed for the purchase of this railway, together with the line, docks, and other works belonging to the Hartlepool Dock and Railway Company, Monday was the day appointed for that gentleman entering upon possession.

Railway Meeting. Ambergate, Nottingham, and Boston.—On Thursday, 8th October, the shareholders held a meeting, to receive the Report of the Directors, and other business. The Secretary read the Report, which states that, so far from the Midland guaranteeing the Ambergate stock, the Midland Counties had "stagged" 10,000 shares and forfeited the deposit of £5000. We have since learned that the Midland Counties have surveyed a line from Newark to Spalding. This line, if successful, must materially damage the Ambergate Company.

A Cotton Mill Destroyed by Fire, at Stalybridge.—Last Sunday morning, the extensive cotton mill of Messrs. W. Bayley and Brothers, at Stalybridge, near Ashton-under-Lyne, whose firm employs upwards of 1000 persons caught fire. The fire broke out in the second story of the large warehouse adjoining the factory, in which were from 9000 to 10,000 pieces of calico, besides a large quantity of twist, waste, &c. Such was the rapidity of the fire, that the building, which is three stories high, and seven windows in length, was, in the course of about two hours from the time of the fire being found out, completely gutted, the whole of the interior being destroyed. It is generally supposed that the fire must have originated from spontaneous combustion. The whole of the 10,000 pieces, together with every other article, was destroyed, save the burning remnants of the cloth which was carried out by the men who daringly ventured their lives for the purpose. The estimated damage of the stock is £2500, which, with the destruction of the building, will be between £3000 and £4000. Both the building and stock is insured in the Phœnix fire-office, but the insurance will scarcely cover this amount.

Cruelty to an Insane Pauper. An adjourned Coroner's Inquest was held on Monday, at Havenhill, Suffolk, before Mr. Wayman, on the body of John Webb, an old imbecile inmate of the Risborough Union Workhouse, who had died in the infirmary; and it was alleged that his death had been accelerated by [illegible]es practised on him by Abraham Slater, who attended him in the infirmary. The inquiry excited a great sensation; but the result proved that, though the deceased had been treated with great cruelty, he had died from natural causes. It appeared that Slater is an old pauper, aged seventy-six, and that he was employed in the infirmary as nurse, without receiving any remuneration or gratuity for attending the patients, when living, but that he had a shilling for "doing" every dead man. The Coroner summed up at great length. The Jury expressed a wish to retire; and, having been absent about half an hour, they returned into court, when the foreman declared the following to be their unanimous verdict:—"The verdict of the Jury is 'Natural death,' but they cannot consider they have discharged their duty without wishing to record their horror and detestation of the cruel and inhuman treatment which it has been proved the deceased received from the nurse Slater; that gross negligence has been exhibited by the late master, in allowing such treatment to pass unnoticed and unreported to the Board."

THE THEATRES.

LYCEUM.

We had only space last week to record the success of "Which Mr. Smith?"—the two-act farce produced at this house on the preceding Thursday. It has since been played every evening with increasing favour, and a few judicious alterations have much improved the progress of its action; so that, without a doubt, the inquiry will be made in the bills for some time to come as to the identification of the Mr. Smith in question. Any one who has a Directory or a Court Guide at hand, by turning to the proper letter will find how many of the large family of the Smiths are resident in London; and upon this circumstance, as may be almost anticipated, the equivoques of the present piece turn—the story being of that description which, whilst it gives rise to a continuity of situations, almost precludes the possibility of detailing its plot under a few columns of a newspaper. But we have the brightest recollection of Mr. Frank Matthews as a respectable married gentleman—the Smith of the piece - much more addicted to looking after young ladies in Cranbourne-street, than he ought to be; and Mrs. Woolledge as his injured, but not forgiving wife; and we have, also, Mr. Emery, as a "Yorkshireman just come to town"—a gentleman in search of a wife; giving us one of those capital bits of character which this clever actor occasionally presents to us. There is, besides, in the piece, plenty of bustling situation; some smartly-pointed dialogue; and just so much comical improbability as is necessary to call forth the loudest laughter of the audience; so that, it may be imagined, it goes capitally. "Which Mr. Smith?" is the maiden dramatic effort of Mr. Angus B. Reach; and it is creditable to the management of the Lyceum to state that he is the fourth or fifth untried dramatic author who has made a successful debût on the boards of that theatre.

HAYMARKET.

On Saturday evening the new comedy, in three acts, by Mr. Planché, called "Queen Mary's Bower," was successfully produced at this house.

Most of our theatrical readers, without doubt, recollect the opera of Halévy, "Les Mousquetaires de la Reine," which was performed by the Brussels company during their late campaign at Drury Lane. Well; Mr. Planché has taken the libretto of the opera and adapted it to our stage—not merely translating it, but turning its incidents to English interest and characters, as "Les Premières Armes de Richelieu" was altered to "The Court of Queen Anne." And Mr. Planché has also honourably stated the source from which he has derived his plot. The dialogue is spirited and appropriate; the allusions are either entirely new or cleverly altered to parallel occasions; and the action of the piece is made to be perfectly in accordance with English History. At the same time, we are bound to confess that the omission of the music tends to render somewhat flat the situations; the intrigue, although ingenious, being scarcely in itself strong enough for a three act comedy. In point of writing, however, the original drama is not to be compared to it. The action, which has all the neat ingenuity of the French pieces, and much of their prolixity that is to say to English audiences passes at Hampton Court Palace in the year 1685, and "Les Mousquetaires de la Reine" are altered to officers of the Queen's troop of Life Guards, whilst the scene of the appointment with the Lady in Waiting is made to be Queen Mary's Bower—an arbour in the private garden, named after Maria Beatrice, the Queen of James the Second. Lady Arabella Mordaunt (Mrs. Seymour) is the heroine of the piece, who meets Captain Hector O'Donoghue (Mr. Hudson) at the trysting place, believing him in the dark to be Lieutenant Ormond (Mr. Howe). This mistake, which, by the lady's self-devotion in confessing that she had made an appointment, is the means of saving Ormond from a charge of treason and manslaughter, brings about the various dilemmas in which the dramatis personæ are placed, the most amusing being the intended duel between O'Donoghue and The Laird of Killicrankie (Mr. Webster), a Major of Scotch Dragoons; in fact the libretto of the opera is closely followed, with the variations we have above alluded to.

Mr. Hudson is entitled to most praise for his spirited acting as Captain O'Donoghue, and for a pleasing song he introduced to the air of "The Groves of Blarney." The rampant hilarity generally made the attribute of stage Irishmen was subdued, and a very agreeable performance was the result. Mr. Webster's old Scotch Major, so fond of the duello, was admirably conceived, but we think we have seen this clever artist more at home than when playing in the fetters of Scotch accent. Mr. Howe always plays carefully and with effect. We have hitherto left Miss Fortescue unnoticed. Her impersonation of the Maid of Honour, Miss Lucy Desborough, was graceful and unaffected. There is a simple truth and gentleness in the acting of this young lady, which always makes her welcome. We were less pleased with Mrs. Seymour. With many natural advantages, there is a want of expression and light and shade in her delivery which somewhat wearies.

The piece is nicely put upon the stage, and Mr. Planché's well-known taste is perceptible in all the accessories. The scenery reflects great credit upon Mr. Morris; the "Clock Court" at Hampton Court Palace, is especially effective.

All praise to the farce of "Spring Gardens," produced here on Thursday evening—one of the most spirited, unflagging, and, withal, elegant pieces it has been for some time our lot to witness. It is an admirable adaptation of the French vaudeville, "Le Cabaret de Lustucru;" but is so cleverly worked out, that there are few translations we have seen, even of those pieces which have made the greatest noise in Paris, at all to be compared to it. The time is the reign of Charles the Second. Scoreup (Mr. Buckstone), the keeper of an ordinary in Spring Gardens, has a very pretty wife—very pretty indeed (Miss Julia Bennett), who has attracted the notice of Lord Courtington (Mr. H. Holl). Scoreup, anxious to get his wife out of the way of the courtly Libertine, sends her to Brentford as he imagines. But Courtington, by means of his valet Lightfoot (Mr. Clark), intercepts her, and carries her to his Lordship's house, whence she escapes in a suit of patrician clothes. Meanwhile, the Lady Clarissa (Mrs. Buckingham), who is affianced to Courtington, mistrusting his truth, comes in disguise to Scoreup's inn, and takes the disguise of a waiting-maid, to watch him. Mrs. Scoreup returns, but masked, to find her husband with a strange young lady in the house, who says she is his cousin. Scoreup almost suspects that it is his wife, from a few words she drops. Courtington meeting a friend, Sir Arthur Lovel (Mr. Howe), asks him to dine at the table he has ordered, with both the ladies; and out of this confusion arises a series of the most amusing situations that can possibly be imagined, which kept the audience in a roar of laughter throughout the piece - and a good, honest, hearty roar it was, from the time when Scoreup first put his head up through the quaint little trap in the stage, and when he said "Farewell! remember me! as the ghost said to the omelette," to his final appearance before the curtain.

The acting was first rate; one has only to imagine Buckstone jealous of his wife, and that wife Julia Bennett, to conceive his comical distress. And Miss Bennett played charmingly; her very smiles and appearance brought down a hearty round of cheering, when Mr. Buckstone presented her to the audience. We have seldom witnessed so satisfactory a first representation. The farce was announced for repetition amidst the loudest cheering; and we can heartily recommend our readers to go and see it—a course we only adopt when we are convinced they will thank us afterwards for having done so. It was said in the house to be another emanation from the sparkling pen of Mr. Planché.

ADELPHI.

One of those ultra-absurd comicalities which set every kind of criticism at defiance has been produced at this theatre, under the title of "The Jockey Club," taken, as we hinted, from a French piece, "Le Sport du Turf." To detail its extravagances would be next to impossible; but, presuming that the end of the adapter was to keep the audience in fits of laughter by a succession of broadly-conceived incidents, which never gave them time to reflect upon the probability of what they were witnessing, we must own that he has succeeded in his intention, albeit some slight disapprobation was expressed on Monday evening, when its first representation took place, at the fall of the curtain. The rôles allowed full scope for the various leading members of the Adelphi company to display their vis comica. Miss Woolgar played a fashionable sporting gentleman, the first new part since her return to these boards, after her recent illness. Mr. Wright is Acis Macassar, Esq., a jockey hair-dresser; and Mr. Paul Bedford enacts Philander Heavyswell, whose appearance, towards the end of the piece, as a jockey, in the proper costume of that class of mortals, may readily be conceived as something enormously droll—far more provocative of laughter than the offensive assumption of female dresses by male actors, unfortunately imagined, by the management of this theatre, to be funny. Few actors make us laugh more than Messrs. Wright and Bedford, in their proper sphere—none excite deeper disgust than they do when dressed up as women. Mr. Selby, as a foreign gentleman, is everything that can be desired; and the efforts of these artistes are well seconded by Mrs. Frank Matthews, whose natural acting is always welcome; Miss Ellen Chaplin, and Miss Harding. To Mr. Bedford may be given the chief praise for carrying the piece through; for at one time it "hung," somewhat on a dangerous balance. It is, however, played every night.

Mdlle Flora Fabbri appeared at Drury Lane on Wednesday evening in Carlotta Grisi's part in "The Devil To Pay," and succeeded admirably.

At Sadler's Wells, the revival of "Virginia" has been most satisfactory; and it has served to bring a very deserving actress, Miss Cooper, once more before the audience, as the heroine. We noticed the performance of the play in this Journal, when it was first produced at Sadler's Wells, some months ago; and can only repeat our commendations. Miss Laura Addison's star is still in the ascendant. We were present at the representation of "The Patrician's Daughter," on Wednesday evening, and rejoiced to find, from the little available room in the auditory, that her attraction continued.

The [illegible] is still crowded to the ceiling on the evenings of Mr. Macready's appearance; indeed, so great has been his attraction, that we believe the engagement has been extended. We witnessed his performance of "Richelieu," on Monday evening, and were much gratified at observing the wrapt attention of the house, and the judicious applause awarded to the acting.

The Lyceum announces the close of its present season on the 11th of November. Previously, however, to shutting up, one or two novelties will be produced; the first being the appearance of that hitherto fictional lady, "Mrs. Harris," in flesh and blood reality, by the agency of Mr. Keeley. The piece is, we understand, a clever adaptation, rather than a translation, of a French vaudeville, "La Garde Malade." At Christmas, the management will depart from its usual practice, and bring out a comic pantomime, instead of a burlesque.

At the Haymarket, a new five-act comedy, and a new drama, are in active preparation. The comedy is, we hear, from the pen of Mr. Lovell, the author of "The Provost of Bruges;" and the drama by Mr. Morris Barnett.

It is rumoured, in the theatrical and musical circles, that M. Jullien is about to become the proprietor of the Pantheon, in Oxford-street, and open it on the Valentino plan, for concerts and balls. This species of entertainment is singularly on the increase in London. We were present one evening this week at Laurent's Casino, formerly the Adelaide Gallery, which was crowded.

The Olympic opens for the winter season this evening; and Mr. Bolton, profiting by past experience, seems likely to carry on a very successful campaign against the pockets of the play-loving public.

OUR MAGAZINE COLUMN FOR OCTOBER.

EATABLE BIRDS' NESTS.

Of these nests several descriptions have been given, though no one has yet satisfactorily explained the nature of the substances of which they are composed, or how it is that they are reckoned so great a delicacy in China. That they are highly prized, however, may be inferred from this, that clean nests of the first class sell customarily for more than their weight in silver, that is, for about five guineas and a half per pound; and in some instances where the article is of a very superior quality, that is, peculiarly white and transparent, it is known to fetch its weight in gold. The epicures of the West have not yet entered into competition with the Chinese for this costly luxury, though when the various parts of the Archipelago become better known, and the supplies of nests considerably more abundant, we should not be at all surprised to find nest-soup replacing that of turtle on the table of the opulent. It is said to be exceedingly nourishing, and when properly seasoned to possess a delicious flavour. Many circumstances are told both respecting the manner in which the sea-swallow collects the materials of this nest, and of the way in which it is constructed. Those among the natives who are most observant say, that the juice of agar agar, a submarine plant, enters into its composition; that the basis of the fabric consists of a fine transparent exudation from certain rocks on the sea-shore, which, when heated intensely by the sun, emit a moisture which coagulates at the mouths of the crevices, and is collected by the swallow. It is added that the bird, constantly in building time, inserts its sharp bill into the pulp of certain delicate fruits, and thence extracts that exquisite material which imparts so fine a flavour and perfume to its nest.—Fraser's Magazine.

KING JOHN SIGNING MAGNA CHARTA.

The eventful morning arrived, when John cantered quietly down from Windsor Castle, attended by eight Bishops and a party of about twenty gentlemen. These, however, were not his friends, but had been lent by the other side, "for the look of the thing," lest the King should seem to be wholly without attendants. The Barons, who had been stopping at Staines, were of course punctual, and had got the pen and ink all laid out upon a table, with a Windsor chair brought expressly from the town of Windsor for John to sit down upon. It had been expected that he would have raised some futile objections to sign; but the crafty sovereign, knowing it was a sine quâ non, made but one plunge into the inkstand, and affixed his autograph. It is said that he dropped a dip of ink accidentally on the parchment, and that he mentally ejaculated "Ha! this affair will be a blot upon my name for ever." The facility with which the King attached his signature to Magna Charta the great Charter of England's liberties—naturally excited suspicion; for it is a remark, founded on a long acquaintance with human nature, that the man who never means to take up a bill is always foremost in accepting one. Had John contemplated adhering to the provisions of the document he would have probably discussed the various clauses, but a swindler seldom disputes the items of an account, when he has not the remotest intention of paying it. Though Magna Charta has been practically superseded by subsequent statutes, it must always be venerated as one of the great foundations of our liberties. It established the "beautiful principle" that taxation shall only take place by the consent of those taxed a principle the beauty of which has been its chief advantage, for it has proved less an article for use than for ornament. The agreeable figure that every one who pays a tax does so with his own full concurrence, and simply because he likes it, is a pleasing delusion which all have not the happiness to labour under. It was also provided that "the King should sell, delay, or deny justice to none," a condition that can scarcely be considered fulfilled when we look at some of the bills of costs that generally follow a long suit in that game of chance which has obtained the singularly appropriate title of Chancery. It may be perhaps argued, that the article delayed and sold is law, whereas Magna Charta alludes only to justice. This, we must admit, establishes a distinction—not without a difference.—The Comic History of England.

REFINING BLISS.

Certainly, there is a subtle power of refinement in happiness; a something elevating and purifying in that expansion of the heart. Sudden bliss invests with sudden grace; and gives to homeliness itself a look of sweetness. The soul, for a brief time, flashes forth with brighter light; asserting itself—as human pride is sometimes apt to think in the vulgarest, oddest sort of people.—Douglas Jerrold, in the Shilling Magazine.

SIR HENRY POTTINGER.

Sir Henry has, we understand, a fine head and powerful frame. He is a first-rate horseman, and has been always fond of field sports, to which circumstance he was, indeed, a good deal indebted for his life when he escaped from the Mahratta cavalry in 18.6. He was married, in 1822, to Miss Cooke, the daughter of an officer in the army, and has three children, still very young. He is greatly beloved in private life, and though long engaged with heavy cares, has been at all times marked by the charm of a lively manner. "How can a person with your serious occupations," said a pompous Major to him once—"how can you share in the folly of these young men?" "My grave friend," was the reply, "I have my folly for every day's use, and my wisdom for state occasions."—Dublin University Magazine.

MORNING IN LONDON.

The early rising goddess, whom those comical, but observant fellows, the poets, endow with rosy fingers from the chilly state of the tips in the sharp, early air had brought the chariot of the sun to the break of gauge between night and noon; and, having turned on the light, prepared to make a day of it. In fact, to descend from high class writing, it was near ten o'clock, A.M.; and Mr. Gudge was about to tear himself from the bosom of his affectionate family, and his love and cottage near Brompton. It was morning in London; and, just at this period, at Brompton as well; but the divisions of the day do not always run together in town and its suburbs. For, as we see in those ingenious diagrams which form the frontispieces to school geographies, and turn round on a knot, that when it is midnight at Botany Bay, the sun may be literally going like one o'clock at Greenwich; so it may be still morning in Grosvenor-square, when it is even after tea in Thistle Grove; or the hardy natives of Brompton-row may be gaily leaping from their French beds at the very time when the delicate children of Belgravia are falling into their first dream-laden slumbers within perfect houses of rustling brocade and French-polished mahogany. Morning in London. Bed-room windows are open; door-steps are drying in patches; and fresh polished brass plates and bell-pulls make your eyes blink in their brightness. People walk with a business-like air, neither looking to the right nor left: and all appear hurried. Cabmen seem to think that lacquer is produced by friction, and rub the brass-work of their vehicles until the very metal disappears; and waiters in coffee-rooms have the air of country medical assistants, called up in the middle of the night. Cattle pervade the thoroughfares; and long barrows of flowers, still wet with country dew, are pushed along the road. Shopmen in shirt-sleeves are arranging their windows; boys in caps are playing fantasias on bits of slate to housemaids at the doors; and governesses, with rolls of music and Berlin work reticules, are tripping about the pavements near the squares. The Bank-bound omnibuses are crowded, and all with men; people hail them from the pavement, but to no effect; and expectant travellers look with despair at the five abreast outside, seen in the distance of the street, high over the cabs and waggons, as they emerge from the morning haze of a great city.—Christopher Tadpole, by Albert Smith.

SIR C. HAWKINS.

The late worthy Baronet, of Trewithen, who possessed immense estates, and great borough influence, was well known for his parsimonious habits; and the following quaint lines, written by some facetious person on the wall of his demesne, are still remembered in Cornwall:

A large park with no deer,
A large cellar with no beer,
A large house with no cheer,
N.B.—Sir Christopher Hawkins lives here.

CHARACTERISTICS OF SPAIN.

Of all the glorious forms of nature, nothing can rival in richness of colouring, and splendour of effect, the crimson glories of the sun of Southern Spain in his decline; it is as superior to the soft argent light that precedes the gaudy glare of noon-day splendour, as the golden orange tints and ruby fruitage, in yellow autumn, decking with saffron and purple hues of orient beauty the fragrant groves and perfumed paths, that skirt the waters of the Guadalquiver in Seville, surpass in richness and effect the vernal flowers, smiling parterres, and budding roses of the bocages of France.

* * * * * * *

There is no other country, in my opinion, whose varied scenery blends, in so striking a manner, like the language of the soil—originally formed on the majestic structure of the Latin, and partaking, on the decline of the Roman Empire, and the invasion of the Goths, under Alaric, the fire, the copiousness, and the strength of that rude speech; and, subsequently, on the invasion, in the seventh century, of the Moslem hordes of Mauritania, who imparted to it oriental dignity and figurative splendour of expression, as well as florid imagery, and the exquisite melody of the Arab dialects; blends, I say, in so great a degree, the sunny gorgeousness and variegated luxuriance of tropical splendour, with Alpine ruggedness and sublimity; and, at the same time, whose romantic annals replete with so many a tale of love, heroism, and knightly encounter—are so eminently calculated to affect the heart and the imagination, and to beget enthusiasm in the mind of the visitant.—Dolman's Magazine.

COLTON'S "LACON."

Lacon was written on covers of letters and scraps of paper of every species nearest at hand; the greater part at the house next door to Westwood, the watchmaker, in Prince's-street, Soho, who was subsequently murdered. Lacon was composed in all sorts of places and companies; much of it in his town lodging, as I have before said, a penurious second-floor, upon a common deal table, with a stump of a pen.—Fraser's Magazine.

THE BEST TODDY.

A Correspondent of the New Sporting Review notes: "I have generally observed that the Highlanders, from habit, no doubt, induced by the keenness of their mountain air, invariably mix their toddy twice as strong as the lowlanders are accustomed to do. This seems to be the opinion in all parts of the north; and as I was once sitting on the box of the Aberdeen and Banff coach, by the side of "Charley," the well-known and respected dragsman, one very cold morning, on my way to pay a visit to a sporting friend, now no more, we stopped at a small inn to change horses, where Charley informed me we could get a real drap of good whiskey, and asked me if I would prefer having it highland or lowland fashion: for, said the facetious Charley, in his broad lingo—"The hillman says a glass of wuskey and a glass of warter make very good toddy, but a glass of wuskey and a glass of wuskey make far superior toddy."

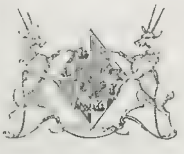
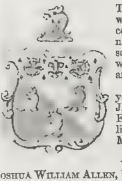
OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED.

LADY ANNE HAMILTON.



This lady, whose death has just occurred in humble but respectable obscurity, was at one memorable time much before the public, in consequence of her being a principal personage attached to the household of Queen Caroline. The Lady Anne Hamilton was the eldest child of Archibald, ninth Duke of Hamilton, by his wife, Harriet, fifth daughter of Alexander, Earl of Galloway. Lady Anne was born on the 16th of March, 1766. Her life has been one of many changes and vicissitudes, but it has also been one of uniform integrity and benevolence. Of her generous nature, a strong instance is related. When she received the Duke of Queensberry's legacy of £10,000 though she was herself at the time far from being in a state of easy affluence, she made over the whole sum to her brother, Lord Archibald. It was rather against the consent of her family that her Ladyship became a Lady of Honour to the Princess of Wales, and an inmate of her Royal Highness' household. When the Princess went abroad in 1814, Lady Anne did not accompany her; but, on her becoming Queen Caroline, and returning to this country, Lady Anne joined her Majesty on her way back to Flanders, and entered London in the same carriage with her. The Queen, indeed, took up her abode for a few days in Lady Anne's house, in Portman-street, Portman-square: the rest of that eventful period, with which her Ladyship is connected, is matter of public history. After Queen Caroline's death, Lady Anne Hamilton retired once more into private life. A portion of her remaining days was embittered by the fact of a person having insinuated herself into her confidence, obtained many of her letters and papers, and having then daringly published without her sanction, a work entitled "A Secret History of the Court of England from the Accession of George III., to the Death of George IV., by the Right Hon. Lady Anne Hamilton." The legal difficulties that ensued in consequence of this cruel artifice, caused her Ladyship much serious vexation, and obliged her to reside for a time in France. She afterwards returned to the metropolis, and latterly retired to a small house in White Lion-street, Pentonville. Here she expired on the 10th inst., after a short illness, aged 80. It will be satisfactory to the friends of her Ladyship to know that this eminent and amiable daughter of the ducal house of Hamilton and Brandon, continued as good, as happy, and as cheerful in adversity as in prosperity; and death found her fully prepared for that brighter existence which her virtues have deserved.

SIR HENRY RYCROFT.



This gentleman, who died on the 3rd inst., was Knight-Harbinger to the Queen, and received the honour of Knighthood on being nominated to that office in 1816. He was second son of the Rev. Dr. Richard Nelson, who assumed the surname of Rycroft in 1778, and was created a Baronet in 1783.

Sir Henry had just completed his 70th year, having been born in 1776. He married Jane, daughter of Ferdinando Tracy Travell, Esq., of Upper Slaughter, and relict of William Naper, Esq., of Loughcrew, county Meath.

VISCOUNT ALLEN.

Joshua William Allen, Viscount and Baron Allen in the Peerage of Ireland, was the only son of Joshua, fifth Viscount, by his wife, Frances, eldest daughter of the late Gayner Barry, Esq. John Viscount Allen succeeded to the honours, as sixth Viscount, on the demise of his father the 1st Feb. 1816; he never married, and consequently by his demise, which occurred at Gibraltar, on the 21st inst., in his sixty-fourth year, the title becomes extinct. The now only surviving members of the family are his Lordship's younger sister, and her children. This lady is married to an uncle of the present Earl of Carnarvon, the Hon. and Rev. W. Herbert, Dean of Manchester, and Rector of Spofforth, in Yorkshire, and has issue.

F. VALENTINE LEE, ESQ.

This gentleman, a distinguished member of the Oxford Circuit, was called to the bar by the Honourable Society of Lincoln's Inn, the 6th February, 1829. Mr. Lee displayed great industry and activity in his profession; he was a ready and fluent speaker, and had a very fair knowledge of law. He was just rising into extensive practice on his Circuit and in Westminster Hall, and expected soon to attain the honour of a coif or a silk gown. Mr. Lee's death occurred from a sudden attack in the region of the heart. While out shooting in the neighbourhood of Tenbury, in Worcestershire, he fell to the ground, and, being found in that state, was conveyed to his residence, and there shortly after expired, on Tuesday morning, the 13th inst. Mr. Lee possessed estates in Worcestershire and Salop.

NEW DIOPTRIC LIGHTHOUSE, ON THE SOUTH FORELAND.

The headland known as the South Foreland, bearing fourteen miles nearly due south from the North Foreland, is, in many respects, one of our most important Channel Lighthouse stations; for, opposite to the coast which extends from this point to the Isle of Thanet, lies the Goodwin Sand, the channel between which and the Kentish coast is the well-known roadstead of the Downs. The Goodwin Sand, though not possessing "the voracious and ingurgitating property" of wholly swallowing up ships of the largest size, has been the scene of many a fatal wreck; and the sand is stated to be considerably on the increase. This peril, and the vast amount of human life and property constantly exposed in this part of the Channel, have rendered the improvement of the South Foreland lights an object of immense importance; and, accordingly, a Lighthouse, upon a principle new to this country, has lately been constructed upon the cliff, at the point shown distinctly in the second Engraving. It is named "the Upper Lighthouse," from its being situated at a short distance above the old Light. The lantern and tower of the New Light are shown, in elevation, in the accompanying Illustration; the height of the Tower is about 50 feet.

The main novelty, however, lies in the light itself, which is the kind used in French Lighthouses, and termed Dioptric. It consists of a powerful oil lamp, placed in the centre of a series of lenses of a peculiar construction; thus magnifying and refracting, or dispersing the light, instead of collecting it; and employing one lamp instead of a greater number, as in the old method in English Lighthouses. The rays of light pass upward and downward from the lamp, and being caught by the prisms, are split into thousands of beams, and then converged on eight immense lenses, whence they flash with the intensity of the most vivid sunlight.

The advantages of the new method may be thus further illustrated. The lens employed is plano-convex, and formed of separate rings or zones, whose common surfaces preserve nearly the same curvature, as if they constituted portions of one complete lens. To form a lens of such magnitude of one piece of glass would be hardly possible; and, if it were possible, the necessary thickness of the glass would greatly obstruct the light: the merit of the invention consists in building it of separate rings. The light thus obtained is found by experiment to be equal to that afforded by nine common reflectors; and it is calculated that, by a consumption of oil equal to that of seventeen common argand lamps, with reflectors, an effect is produced equal to that of thirty lamps and reflectors. There is this further advantage in the French over the English apparatus, that, in the English Lighthouse of equal illuminating power with the French, there would be the daily employment in trimming thirty lamps, and cleaning an equal number of reflectors, which, having a very delicate silver surface, require much care and attention; while, in the French Lighthouse, there is only one lamp to trim, and the lenses, being of glass, require little or no labour to keep them bright. On the other hand, these Dioptric lights have not the wide dispersive range which is so necessary in fixed lights.

The New South Foreland light is inclosed in a vast lantern of plate-glass. The Tower, as the exterior view shows, is divided into three floors: in the lower one is stored the supply of oil; in the second is a stove, which, being kept burning, preserves the atmosphere of the Lighthouse dry, so as to prevent the lantern and glasses being obscured by damp; and in the third, the shaft of the stove being continued, and the floor pierced with draught-holes, the temperature in the tower is maintained at an even point in all seasons. The improvement of the heating and ventilating of lighthouses has, of late years, occupied some of our most distinguished savans; and this application we believe to be one of the best results of their scientific labours.

The Lamp, which, with the Dioptric apparatus, we have engraved in section, has an automatic contrivance, which gives an alarm in case of the oil running low, or the machinery being out of order.

Adjoining the Tower are premises for the accommodation of the keepers; and, altogether, the new building is not of that isolated, solitary description, which gave rise to keeping a lighthouse for a fortnight being prescribed as a remedy for misanthropy.

We are persuaded that these Illustrations of this new provision for the preservation of life and property on one of our coasts will be acceptable at the present season, when the public journals record so many fatal wrecks: the gales and hurricanes of the last fortnight have been truly terrific.

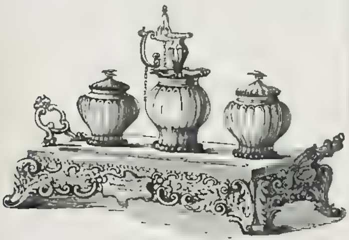
SILVER INKSTAND PRESENTED TO THE REV. B. C. SANGAR.

On Monday evening, the Vestry-room of St. Luke's Church, Old-street, was the scene of a very interesting ceremony—the presentation of an elegant memorial of the high esteem of the congregation of the above church, for their late Curate, the Rev. B. C. Sangar. The origin of the Testimonial is briefly as follows The reverend gentleman had been in the curacy about two years and a half; and, about a year since, on the death of the late Rector of St. Luke's, the congregation got up a memorial to the Bishop (Landaff), signed by 600 influential parishioners, requesting that the vacant living should be given to Mr. Sangar. The Bishop was gratified with such testimony to the zeal of the respected Curate, but replied that he had no control over the presentation, adding that he would not forget the circumstance. The Bishop has, accordingly, just presented Mr. Sangar to the vacant living of St. Paul's, Shadwell; and, on Monday evening, the Churchwardens of St. Luke's, and a committee of gentlemen representing the congregation, met in the Vestry-room, and there presented the Rev. Mr. Sangar with the above Memorial. It is a superb Silver Inkstand, richly chased weighing 64 ounces, and bearing the following inscription:—



SILVER INKSTAND PRESENTED TO THE REV. MR. SANGAR.

"Rejoicing in his bettered fortunes, while regretting his departure from among them, the Congregation of St. Luke's Church present this INKSTAND to the Rev B. C. SANGAR, their late Curate:—not so much in token of their esteem, which such a Gift but inadequately represents, as in hope that it may serve to keep them in his remembrance as his Christian virtues will surely preserve him in theirs"

The Reverend Gentleman was highly popular in the parish as a plain but faithful preacher: his affability had endeared him to all classes of his Parishioners; and, in unison with the present respected Rector, the Rev. J. Saunders, M.A., his kindness and attention to the poor, both in sickness and in health, will long be remembered throughout this large and populous parish.

THE LATE WILLIAM BOND, ESQ.

This gentleman was the eldest son of the Rev. William Bond, rector of Steeple, with Tyneham, and Prebendary of Bristol Cathedral, by his wife, Jane, only daughter of Henry Biggs, Esq., of Stockton House, Wilts. Mr. William Bond, the son, having adopted the legal profession, was called to the Bar by the Hon. Society of the Inner Temple, the 26th November, 1824: he subsequently practised, with fair success, on the Western Circuit, and there became Recorder of Poole and Wareham. In October, 1842, he was nominated the successor of Mr. Gregory, as a Metropolitan Magistrate, at the Westminster Police Court. The duties of this office he fulfilled with invariable assiduity and ability, and his humane and charitable disposition caused him to be generally esteemed. Mr. Bond had been in a delicate state of health for some time, though he was not supposed to be in any immediate danger. His death occurred on the 11th instant, at his chambers in Fig-tree-court, Temple. Mr. Bond was unmarried. His youngest brother, Mr. Thomas Bond, who resided with him, is also a member of the Bar, and practises as a conveyancer.

The family of which Mr. Bond was a scion, is one of great antiquity and respectability; its present head is his first cousin, John Bond, Esq., of Grange, in Dorsetshire, formerly M.P. for Corfe Castle, and High Sheriff of Dorset in 1830. One of the deceased gentleman's uncles was the Right Hon. Nathaniel Bond, Q.C., Judge Advocate General, a Lord of the Treasury, and a Bencher of the Inner Temple, who died in 1823. The family itself springs from the Bonds of Cornwall, who possessed there the estate of Earth, at a very early period. A descendant of the house, Sir George Bond, was Lord Mayor of London in 1587, and was ancestor of Sir Thomas Bond, created a Baronet by Charles II. Among other distinguished members of the family, may be mentioned John Bond, Captain of the Isle of Portland, at the time of the Armada; Denis Bond, a stanch and able Parliamentarian during the Civil War and the Protectorate; and Nathaniel Bond, King's Sergeant, and M.P. for Corfe Castle, and afterwards for Dorchester, in 1707.

MUSIC.

DRURY-LANE THEATRE.

As Madame Anna Bishop's engagement is only to sing three times per week, and the lessee has extended the number of her representations to five, it may be presumed that the "Maid of Artois" has drawn good houses, and that, in the character of Isoline, the new prima donna has fixed the attention of the town. How far her triumph, for such it undoubtedly is, will be permanent, remains to be solved by her appearance in other parts. But it is quite evident that, for the future, it would not be safe for Mdme. Bishop to appear in characters in which speaking is required. She must sing in recitative, unless the operas are to have the air of a burlesque. It is almost impossible at times to resist a smile in the "Maid of Artois," such a remarkable difference is there between her singing and speaking powers. We cannot but think that Rosina, in the "Barber of Seville," or Adina, in Donizetti's "Elisir d'Amore," are parts better adapted for Mdme. Bishop than those exacting great dramatic energy. She has exquisite sensibility; but it is palpable that she is not the child of genius, but the child of tuition. She has acquired, since her opening performance, more vigour; but the voice is certainly very weak, and at times muffled. It is necessary to be frank in matters of art, for there is danger of this really clever artiste being misled by inordinate puffing.

There is but one opinion as to the superiority of her style over that of any other English vocalist; but then her compass is so limited, and her physical strength so deficient, that she must ring the changes eternally in about six upper notes to produce any effect. In short it is in a smaller arena that the vocal gymnastics of Madame Bishop would tell to greater advantage. We have heard her sing the finale three times, but it has always been with painful sensations. Not that any fears need be entertained of a break down; she is too good a musician ever to be thus seriously compromised; but the feeling that her vocalisation is the result of sheer labour, and that in the vocal outbreaks she is feeble, is unpleasant. The audiences have received her very cordially on each representation; there is not a furore, certainly, but the applause is genuine at her best attributes. She sings and performs so admirably in the scene of the Desert, with Harrison, (of which our artist has supplied an Illustration,) that it is almost a pity that a chorus does not conclude the opera, instead of the bravura "The rapture dwelling," that nobody has been able to render effectively since Malibran, except Pauline Viardot Garcia, her sister, and our own once celebrated singer Mrs. Wood. Madame Bishop delivers the recitative and air in which Isoline watches over the inanimate body of her lover Jules, superbly; and her description of the horrors of thirst coming over her, until she sinks exhausted to the ground, is very touchingly given. When she sings, she acts well; but from the moment that she speaks, all scenic illusion is destroyed

It is not yet known what will be Madame Bishop's second part. The Prima Donna's character in Lavenu's new opera, which is now in preparation, is stated to be full of speaking points. If this be the case, there is only Miss Romer capable of playing it. The "Sonnambula," "Lucia," &c., have been dreadfully hacked, it is true; but as there are recitative versions of these operas, Madame Bishop might try them, the more especially as she was successful in them at the San Carlo in Naples. Why not revive, by the way, Dr. Arne's "Artaxerxes," with Madame Bishop as Mandane, the music for which is for a high soprano, and has been the cheval de bataille for Madame Mara, Mrs. Billington, Miss Stephens, Miss Wilson, and a host of other eminent vocalists.

On Wednesday night there were symptoms of an emeute. Owing to Mr. Harrison's hoarseness Mr. Barker was announced for the part of Thaddeus, in "The Bohemian Girl," but, it appears that owing to his absence from town, the customary "call" of the manager was not obeyee. At the eleventh hour Mr. Rafter, the new tenor, a pupil of Crevelli, undertook the character, and, for so short a notice, acquitted himself very creditably, although the audience by no means relished the change in the cast.

Sussex Hall.—A Concert was given by the Literary and Scientific Institution on Tuesday night, which was attended principally by Hebrew amateurs. The programme comprised glees by Attwood and Webb, sung by Messrs. Lowick, Dudley, and Salwood; and ballads, executed by Miss Dolby, Miss Poole, Messrs. Harrison, Leffler, and Edney. The selection was from the works of Donizetti, Pacini, Bellini, Benedict, Balfe, Linley, Beethoven, Lindpainter, John Parry, Paer, Hatton, alias Czapek, Rossini, F. Romer, Dibdin, &c. The Hall was crowded to excess, and there were five encores out of twenty pieces. Mr. Maurice Davies was the Conductor, and performed a pianoforte and violin concertante duo with Mr. Case, who ably executed soli on the concertina as well as violin.

MUSICAL CHIT-CHAT.

Musical Entertainments.—Mr. Morley, the bass singer, begins his "Tour in America," with songs, next week, at the Strand Theatre. Mr. Edney comes forward at the Sussex Hall, as a singer of Dibdin's songs and as an imitator of John Parry. Mr. Lover is now in the United States; Mr. Wilson is in Scotland; and Mr. Phillips in the south of England.

Parisian Musical News.—A great discussion is going on, touching the performance of Italian operas at the Académie Royale de Musique. The critic of the Journal des Débats having attacked M. Leon Pillet, the Director, for not producing original works, he has addressed a long letter in reply, contending for the legality and propriety of the course that he has pursued in bringing out "Lucia" and "Otello," and in proposing to produce a French version of Rossini's "La Donna del Lago," under the title of "Robert Bruce." It appears from this correspondence that Rossini has really not composed anything new for the pasticcio, but that to the original music of "La Donna del Lago" is added pieces by the Swan of Pesaro—rarely heard, or that have remained among his MSS. M. Pillet promises a new opera by Auber before the end of the season, and one by Meyor beer, expressly composed for the present company, in the course of next year. An opera from Burgmuller, the libretto by M. Leon Gozlan, had been accepted for the Opéra Comique. Halévy's "Mousquetaires de la Reine" had been most successfully produced in Vienna and Frankfort. Madame Pauline Viardot Garcia, the sister of Malibran, was engaged for Berlin and Frankfort, to sing, both in Italian and in German, the "Sonnambula," "Desdemona," "Fidelio," and in Meyerbeer's "Camp of Silesia." It is not at all improbable that this gifted artiste will appear this season at Drury Lane Theatre, to sing in English. Donizetti's "Gemma di Vergy," had been performed at the Italian Opera-house in Paris, Grisi and Ronconi creating a great sensation in the leading parts. Mdlle. Ernesta Grisi sang in Arsace, in "Semiramide," for one night, owing to Brambilla's indisposition.

Italy.—On the 4th instant, the San Carlo at Naples was opened for the season. A new opera by Mercadante, one by Pacini, and one by the young and promising Battista, will be produced, and two new ballets. The leading vocalists are Mdme. Frezzolini, Teresa Brambilla (who was last season in Paris, and is a sister of the contralto Brambilla), and Luisa Buccini, as prime donne; Fraschini and Malvezzi as tenors: and Balzar and Avati as bassi. The San Carlo has been redecorated. For the Scala, in Milan, four new operas and two new ballets are promised. Perrot is the ballet-master, with Rosati, Vendt, Monti, and Vouthier, as chief danseuses. Catarina Hayes (an Irish lady), Elena Angri, the contralto, Steffanone, are the prime donne, and Luigi Mei, Martini, and Masset, the male singers. Rovere is now the great buffo of Italy, and is the star of the Felice at Genoa. La Barbieri Nini, and Poggi, the tenor, will open the Fenice, in Venice, in Verdi's "Attila." An interesting letter from Mdme. Pelissier-Rossini, as to her late marriage at Bologna, has just appeared in an Italian journal. It runs thus: "Je vous écris au sortir de l'eglise, avec tant d'emotion au cœur, qu'à peine je puis tenir ma plume. Je suis presque effrayée de ce que Dieu a fait pour moi, en permettant que je devinsse la femme de Rossini. Puisse ma vive réconnaissance lui rendre tout le bonheur qu'il mèrite! Je croirais être ingrate envers vous si vous appreniez mon mariage, vous, le meilleur ami de mon mari, par tout autre que par moi!"

Opera at the Princess' Theatre.—Mr Maddox has announced his intention of resuming his operatic performances with the new work of "Giselle," by Edward Loder. The vocalists engaged by the lessee are Mdlle. Nau, from the Académie Royale de Paris, who created such a sensation in the "Syren"; Mdme. Albertazzi, Miss G. Smithson, and Miss Sara Flower; Mr. Allen, Mr. Delavanti, a new tenor, from America; Mr. Bodda, a new baritone, from the Royal Academy of Music; and Mr. Leffler. The manager is quite right in producing original operas.

IRELAND.

EXCITED STATE OF THE COUNTRY.

The general condition of Ireland, according to the most authentic accounts, is anything but consolatory. More troops have been ordered to some parts of the counties of Mayo and Galway, where opposition has been made to the transit of provisions. It appears that oats and Indian corn had been sent into Galway from Tuam and other places, to be ground into meal; but owing to the determined resistance of the populace, the meal could not be sent back when ground, and great scarcity was caused in the places from which it had been forwarded.

The Galway Vindicator contains an account of an outbreak in Galway, arising out of this system of resistance, in which a poor woman lost her life, having been trampled to death by one of the horses employed in conveying provisions. The occurrence took place at Boherbeg, one of the thoroughfares leading out of the town, yesterday week. It appears that the men of this street having proceeded to the cross-road at Bohermore, to arrest the carts which the Rev. Mr. Roche and the other parties forming the escort induced them to permit to pass in safety, the women determined upon stopping any which, in the meantime, might come that way; and accordingly, when four or five other carts, laden with flour and meal, were proceeding through Boherbeg, the women, frantic with hunger and the cries of their famishing children, rushed upon the provisions, and endeavoured to plunder some of them. In doing so, we regret that one of the starving creatures, whom we have been credibly given to understand had nothing but one meal a day and a-half previous, met a violent and untimely death. She laid hold of the head of one of the horses, exclaiming she would have some of the meal, or lose her life. The driver, at the same moment, struck the horse with his whip, the result of which was that the unfortunate woman fell, when the wheel of the cart passed over her throat, killing her on the spot. Next morning some more carts laden with flour, while passing through the same thoroughfare, were also attacked, and three or four of them plundered. The magistrates, in consequence, have determined to escort them in future on Mondays and Thursdays, with a large military force, and thus prevent trade from being obstructed.

MURDER, AND ATTEMPT TO MURDER, IN TIPPERARY.

Another terrible murder (possibly two murders) has been committed in the county of Tipperary. The victim was for a considerable time regarded as a marked man, whose life was constantly in danger. He was often advised to leave the county, but if he had done so he would have perished of want. He seemed to think himself that he had assuaged the vengeance of his enemies, as about a year ago he was fired at, wounded in the hand, and suffered the loss of one of his fingers. The wretched man was mistaken, and, on Friday night (last week), he was shot dead, near his cabin, within a few miles of Nenagh.

The next act of bloodshed may by this time be designated a murder: and, like the foregoing, it is attributed to the fell spirit of revenge which has so often brought disgrace on the whole nation. The wretched sufferer in this case was alive on Saturday night, and told his sad story to the authorities, but little hopes were then entertained of his recovery from his wounds. It appears from his statement, that, as he was passing along the road, he heard the click of a gun-lock, and, on turning round, he saw a man within ten yards of him, with a blunderbuss pointed at him. He had barely time to bend his body, when he received the charge in his right breast. He fell to the ground, and became senseless from the shock and the effusion of blood. The assassin fled, but his victim described him with such particularity that hopes are entertained he will be made amenable to justice, if the poor man live. Shortly after this outrage, a medical gentleman was in attendance from Nenagh. He found that ten slugs had entered the unfortunate man's right shoulder, the muscles of which were fearfully torn, and two slugs were lodged in the lung at the same side.

A letter from Borrisokane states that the two men fired at are named Gaynor and Cleary.

Hostilities Between Mr. John O'Connell, M.P., and Mr. J. S. Lawlor.—A hostile correspondence has taken place between Mr. John O'Connell, and Mr. John Shea Lawlor, the originating cause of which may be thus briefly stated:

In consequence of the recent resolutions adopted by the Repeal Association in reference to the seceding members from that body, Mr. Lawlor, as one of the parties put under ban, and whose letter of resignation was declared by the committee to be "couched in terms of most unbecoming discourtesy," that gentleman wrote to Mr. John O'Connell, as the proposer of the obnoxious resolution, requiring a satisfactory explanation. Mr. John O'Connell considered some of the letters sent by Mr. Lawlor as personally insulting to himself, and calculated to excite him to a breach of the peace. He, therefore, procured a warrant against Mr. Lawlor, and the case was heard at the College-street Police-office, Dublin, on Monday. The result was that Mr. Lawlor was bound over to keep the peace towards Mr. O'Connell.

Alleged Attempt to Destroy Lord Rosse's Telescope.—An account has appeared of an alleged attempt to destroy Lord Rosse's telescope, but we are happy to hear that the account is founded on some mistake, and that no such attempt has been made.

Death of the Rev. Dr. Penfold.—The Rectory of Trinity District Church, Marylebone, and the Rectory of Kingswinford, Staffordshire, have become vacant by the death of the Rev. George Saxby Penfold, D.D. The Rectory of Trinity, Marylebone, is in the gift of the Crown, the annual value being £943. The annual value of the Rectory of Kingswinford is £900: the patronage is in Lord Ward.

Death of Lieut.-Colonel Gordon.—Lieut.-Colonel John Gordon expired a few days since, at his seat, Princestown, county of Fermanagh, at the advanced age of 79, out of which he was forty-one years in connection with the British army.

More Accidents on the Eastern Counties Railway.—During the present week, two accidents of a rather serious nature have taken place on the Eastern Counties Railway. The first occurred on Tuesday afternoon, under the following circumstances: It appears that on the arrival of the quarter-after-two train from Hertford, within a few yards of the Broxbourne Junction, the engine, which was moving at a rate of eighteen miles an hour, suddenly got off the line, and carried with it down the embankment the luggage truck placed immediately between the engine and the passenger carriages. The jerk caused the coupling-iron connecting the luggage van with the passenger carriages fortunately to break, or most fatal results might have ensued. The engine ran down the embankment, and then turned over into a pool of water. The stoker, seeing the danger, had previously jumped off the engine; but Lomax, the engine-driver, kept his position on the tender and was immersed in the water. The guard was also thrown into the water, but the injury received by them was very slight. The engine was a new one of great power. It still lies embedded in the mud and water. On Wednesday, another accident occurred on the Hertford branch, which had the effect of detaining the same train. Several trucks, drawn by a ballast engine, got off the line near Ware and upset, and the greatest confusion prevailed in consequence. The first accident is attributed to the sharpness of the curve at the Broxbourne Junction; and the second to some of the material for constructing the double line getting on the rail.

Atrocious Cruelty.—On Wednesday, at Tonbridge, Kent, Henry Jenkins, a carman in the employ of Barnett, a carrier at Tonbridge Wells, was charged by Mr. Thomas, the Secretary of the Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, with having, on the 30th of September last, at Southborough, Kent, brutally beaten a horse with an iron "ridger" over the fore and hind legs, and, failing to get the poor animal on by such means, then lighting a fire under the belly of the horse and burning it. The case was satisfactorily proved; but, owing to the mistaken leniency of the magistrate, the ruffian was discharged on paying a fine of 14s. and 26s. costs.

A Policeman Dangerously Stabbed.—On Wednesday, Benjamin Wood, City police-constable 526, was sitting at dinner with his wife, at their lodgings, Talbot-court, Gracechurch-street, when some words arose between them, which ended in the wife throwing with great violence a sharply-pointed table knife, which struck him on the neck, beneath the right ear. He was taken to St. Thomas's Hospital, where he now remains in an almost hopeless state from the loss of blood. Immediately after the occurrence the wife gave herself up at the station-house, Garlick-hill. Benjamin Wood is a mild inoffensive man, and is deemed a very excellent officer.

THE MARKETS.

Corn Exchange (Friday).—Although our statement of arrivals at foot shows the receipt of a full average supply of English wheat, the number of samples of that grain on show to-day was small. For most descriptions the demand was firm, at fully Monday's quotations. There was more inquiry for free foreign wheat, and, in some instances, selected parcels produced rather more money, the value of other kinds being readily supported. We were but moderately supplied with barley, the sale for which was very firm, at extreme currencies. There was a steady business doing in malt, at very full prices. The supply of oats was miserably small, while the oat trade was firm, at late rates. Beans, peas, and flour as last advised.

Arrivals.—English: wheat, 6070; barley, 3190; malt, 3580; oats, 3820; flour, 37[illegible]. Irish: Wheat, —; barley, —; malt, —; oats, 910; Flour, —. Foreign: wheat, 870; barley, 440; malt, —; oats, 6260; flour, [illegible]

English.—Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 53s [illegible], 58s to 70s; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 53s to 58s; ditto white, 58s to 65s; rye, 37s to 39s; grinding barley, 28s to 30s, distilling, 31s to 33s, malting [illegible] 35s to 40s, Lincoln and Norfolk malt, 60s to 65s, brown ditto, 55s to 56s, Kingston and Ware, 66s to [illegible]; Chevalier, 67s to 68s; Yorkshire and [illegible] Youghal and Cork, black, 25s to [illegible], 27s to 30s; tick beans, new [illegible]; ditto old, —s to —s; grey peas, 41s to 46s, maple, 41s to 46s; white, 55s to 57s; boilers, 58s to 60s, per quarter. Town-made flour, 56s [illegible] Stockton and Yorkshire, 42s to 50s, per 280 lbs. Foreign.—Free [illegible], 60s to 66s per quarter. In Bond.—[illegible] —s to —s; and peas, —s to —s per [illegible]

[illegible] 39s 9d to 41s; Mediterranean and Odessa, [illegible] Hempseed, 36s to 38s per quarter. Coriander, 12s to 14s per cwt. Brown Mustard-seed, 11s to 15s; white ditto, 10s to 13s. Tares, 5s 6d to 7s per bushel. English Rapeseed, new £21 to £22 per last of ten quarters. Linseed cakes, English, £[illegible] 10s to £12; ditto, foreign, £8 10s to £10 per 1000; Rapeseed cakes, £5 to £5 2s per ton. Canary, 46s to 52s per quarter. English Clover-seed, red, 45s to 50s, extra, 25s to 55s, white, 60s to 62s, extra, up to 68s. Foreign, red, 40s to 48s; extra, 50s, white, 60s to 62s, extra, 75s per cwt.

Bread.—The prices of wheaten bread in the metropolis are from 9½d to 10d; of household ditto, 8d to 9d per 4lb loaf.

Imperial Weekly Average.—Wheat, 56s 10d; barley, 37s 2d; oats, 24s 7d; rye, 35s 9d; beans, 43s 7d; peas, 46s 7d.

The Six Weeks' Average.—Wheat, 53s 4d; barley, 35s 3d; oats, 23s 9d; rye, 34s 1d; beans, 42s 1d; peas, 42s 2d.

Duties on Foreign Corn.—Wheat, 5s 0d; barley, 2s 0d; oats, 1s 6d; rye, 2s 0d; beans, 2s 0d; peas, 2s 0d.

Tea.—Very little business has been doing in any description, yet prices rule about stationary. Sound common Congou, 9¼d to 9½d per lb.

[illegible] Most kinds of raw sugar are in sluggish request, and prices are with difficulty [illegible]. Refined goods dull, at 62s 6d to 63s for brown, and 63s 6d per cwt for standard [illegible]

[illegible]—This market has a steady appearance; but no improvement can be noticed in the quotations.

[illegible] All kinds are flat, and we have no buyers, except at lower rates.

Provisions.—The market for Irish butter is not quite so active as last week; yet prices are mostly supported. The finest brands are producing 100s to 102s per cwt, landed. Dutch butter is heavy, at a decline in value of from 4s to 6s per cwt. The best Friesland may be quoted at 100s to 106s per cwt. English butter—the supply of which is good—moves off slowly, at from 100s to 106s per cwt, for the best Dorset, and 10s 6d to 13s per dozen for fresh. There is very little doing in bacon. Prime Waterford sizeable, on board, this month, 60s and heavy, 52s to 56s per cwt. Bale and tierce middles are quite as dear. All other kinds of provisions rule about stationary.

Tallow.—This market is active, and prices are on the advance. P.Y.C., on the spot, fetches 47s to 47s 3d for small, and 47s for larger parcels. For delivery 46s 6d to 47s has been paid. Town tallow brisk, at 45s per cwt.

Oils.—There is a good business doing in oils, at higher rates.

Hay and Straw.—Meadow hay, £2 10s to £4 0s; clover, £3 10s to £4 15s; and straw, £1 6s to £1 10s per load.

Wool.—Privately, only a moderate business is doing, yet we can report no alteration in prices.

Potatoes.—The best parcels are scarce, and command £5 to £6 10s per ton. In other kinds, very little is doing.

Coals (Friday).—Adair's, 15s 6d; Carr's Hartley, 19s 3d; Holywell Main, 17s; Ord's Redheugh, 15s 6d; Wylam, 16s 6d; Gosforth, 18s; Tees, 20s, and Stewart's, 20s per ton.

Hops (Friday).—Farnham Fair—at which 8729 pockets of hops were pitched, and only a small number disposed of, at £5 to £6 10s per cwt on the average—having proved heavy, the demand here is in a very inactive state, and prices have a downward tendency. The duty is called from £215,000 to £220,000. Sussex pockets, £3 16s to £4 4s; Weald of Kent ditto, £4 4s to £4 12s; Mid and East Kent ditto, £4 15s to £6 0s per cwt.

Smithfield (Friday).—The supply of beasts on offer here, this morning, was tolerably good as to number, but of very middling quality. The primest Scots, &c., moved off steadily, at full prices; but all other kinds met a slow inquiry, at late rates. There were in the market 260 beasts, 200 sheep, and 19 calves from abroad. With sheep, we were scantily supplied while the sale for them was firm, at fully Monday's improved currencies, and a good clearance was effected. [illegible] the supply of which was good, moved off slowly, at a decline [illegible] the quotations of [illegible] per 8lb. In pigs, only a moderate business was transacted, yet prices were supported. Milch cows sold heavily, at from £16 to £18 each, including their small calf.

Per 8lb. to sink the offals:—Coarse and inferior beasts, 3s 0d to 3s 2d; second quality ditto, 3s 4d to 3s 6d; prime large oxen, 3s 8d to 3s 10d; prime Scots, &c., 4s 0d to 4s 2d; coarse and inferior sheep, 4s 2d to 4s 4d; second quality ditto, 4s 6d to 4s 8d; prime coarse-woolled ditto, 4s 10d to 5s 0d; prime South Down ditto, 5s 2d to 5s 4d; large coarse calves, 3s 8d to 4s 4d; prime small ditto, 4s 6d to 4s 8d; large hogs, 3s 8d to 4s 6d; neat small porkers, 4s 8d to 4s 10d. Suckling calves, 18s to 30s, and quarter old store pigs, 16s to 19s each. Beasts, 804; cows, 115; sheep, 4360; calves, 275; pigs, 480.

[illegible] and Leadenhall (Friday).—The general demand was in a sluggish state at our [illegible]

[illegible] the carcase:—Inferior beef, 2s 8d to 2s 10d; middling ditto, 3s 0d to 3s 2d; prime large ditto, 3s 4d to 3s 6d; prime small ditto, 3s 6d to 3s 8d; large pork, 3s 6d to 4s 6d; inferior mutton, 3s 10d to 4s 0d; middling ditto, 4s 2d to 4s 4d; prime ditto, 4s 6d to 4s 10d; veal, 3s 8d to 4s 6d; small pork, 4s 8d to 4s 10d.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

At the commencement of the week there was rather an increase of business, arising from the opening of Bank Stock and Reduced. The settlement, however, has afforded the principal occupation for all parties, and terminated rather unfavourably for the Bull party. The failure of a party not in "the house," threw a large amount of Consols on the Market, just as the settlement was progressing to a close on Wednesday. This, coupled with some large sales by an eminent firm, depressed Consols to 94⅞ to 95 for money. A slight disposition to rally was, however, apparent on Thursday, but the price has since receded to 94⅞ to 95 for Money, and 95¼ for Account. Bank Stock is firm at 205½ to 206½. Exchequer Bills are a shade flatter, quoting 14 to 17 premium. There is, however, a probability that, as the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt have given notice that £650,000 of the surplus revenue will be appropriated to the purchase of Supply or Deficiency this quarter, some improvement in the price of these securities may result. Reduced is 93¾ to 94. Three and a Quarter per Cents 95⅞ ⅛, and Long Annuities 9 15-16.

Mexican affairs have afforded the only topic of interest in the Foreign Market during the week. A Senor Gomez Farias, brother to the Finance Minister of Mexico (up to last post), has arrived in London with a dispatch repudiating the last conversion of Mexican Bonds. Messrs. Scheiders, the agents for the Government that existed at the period when the conversion commenced, have stated that no official disclaimer has been received by them, and are, consequently, continuing the operation. It was remarked, however, at the period that the present terms were agreed to by the meeting of bondholders, how short the interval was between the rejection of the first offer and production of the second. Mr. Murphy, the financial agent for the Mexican Government here, it was thought, had proved very accommodating in so readily and speedily altering his propositions. If the present despatch brought by Senor Gomez Farias is to be credited, Mr. Murphy had no power to alter the original offer, and this fact is made the ground of the present repudiation, in addition to which it removes him from office. Time will, however, show the real state of the case, as both parties are very confident. But the bonds, of course, are now nearly unsaleable, having fluctuated between 24½ and 22¾ to 23. The news that the American offer of peace had been rejected produced a slight fall, but the business done was so very limited that the closing prices remained 22⅞ to 23 for Money, and 22⅞ for next Account. Spanish has been very little dealt in; the last transactions were in the Three per Cents, at 37½ to ⅝; Portuguese are about 41 to ½. Dutch Four per Cents, 91⅝ to ¾. Venezuelan, 41½, and Brazilian, 84¾.

There has been a better feeling in the Share Market during the past week, orders from the country to purchase in the established lines having, in many instances, been received. The state of the other markets has, however, checked any advance in prices, except in a few instances, as the accompanying list will show:—Aberdeen, 14⅛; Birmingham and Gloucester, 128; Birmingham and Oxford Junction, 5¾; Buckinghamshire, ¾ dis; Caledonian, 21¾; Cambridge and Oxford, 1⅝; Chester and Holyhead, 23⅞; Churnet and Blythe, 1¼; Direct Northern, 1¼; Dublin and Belfast Junction, 1½; Eastern Counties, 21¼; Ditto, New, 6⅝ pm; Ditto, York Extension, 1⅝; East Lancashire, 18⅛; Ditto, New, 8½; East Lincolnshire, 1; Edinburgh and Glasgow, 68; Ely and Huntingdon, 5¼; Great Southern and Western (Ireland), 29½; Great North of England, [illegible]; New, 21; Great Western, 137; Ditto Quarter Shares, 19; Ditto Fifths, 30½; Ditto New, 7; Hull and Selby, 107½; Leeds and Bradford, 74½; London and Blackwall Extension, 5½; London and Brighton, 59⅝; London and North Western, 192; Ditto Quarters, 22; Ditto ditto, New Shares, 16; Ditto Fifths, 19; London and South Western, 68; Ditto New, 29¾; London and York, 1⅝; Lynn and Dereham, 12½; Ditto Quarters, —; Ditto Fifths, 8½; Ditto Extension, ⅞ pm; Manchester and Birmingham, 72½; Manchester and Birmingham Quarters (C), 8; Midland, 134¾; Ditto New, 35; Newcastle and Berwick, 25¾; Norfolk, 131; Do, Extension, 7½; North British, 36½; Do, Half Shares, 14½; Do, Quarters, 3; North Staffordshire, 1⅜ pm; Portsmouth Direct, 4½; Preston and Wyre, 30½; Do, Half Shares, —; Reading, Guildford, and Reigate, 1⅝ dis; Shrewsbury and Birmingham, 3½; Shropshire Union, ⅜ dis; South Eastern and Dover, 38¾; Do, No. 1, 22½; Do, No. 2, 14½; Do, No. 4, 2⅜; West Riding Union, 1½ pm.; York and Newcastle, 42½; Do, New, 12½; York and North Midland Extension, 38½; Do, East and West Riding Extension, 13; Boulogne and Amiens, 14⅝; Northern of France Constituted, 12¾; Orleans and Bordeaux, 7¾; Rouen and Havre, 27½.

Saturday Morning.—The Consol Market was more active yesterday, and the closing price was 95⅛ for money and 95¼ ⅜ for account. Mexican Stock was flat, at 23½ to ¾. Senor Gomez Farias has published an extract from a dispatch brought by him to Mr Murphy, by which the recent conversion is annulled, and he is directed to immediatly restore the old bonds to the holders, in exchange for those recently issued. He is also held liable for all loss sustained by the Republic. A letter from Mr. Murphy, in reply, was handed about late yesterday, stating that a communication was preparing for the bondholders, "that would place matters in their true light, and give full satisfaction." The Share Market was decidedly better.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

THEATRE ROYAL, COVENT GARDEN.
M. JULLIEN'S ANNUAL SERIES OF CONCERTS.
FOR ONE MONTH ONLY.

M. JULLIEN has the honour to state that his Annual Series of Concerts will [illegible] FRIDAY, OCTOBER 30TH, 1846, and be continued for ONE MONTH ONLY.

M. JULLIEN has great regret in announcing that he is imperatively called upon to terminate this Series of Concerts at a period so unusually early, but the new proprietors of the Theatre having stipulated for possession [illegible] demolition and rebuilding of the interior for their grand Italian Opera, M. JULLIEN has no alternative. The last Concert will, therefore, most positively take place on SATURDAY, NOV. [illegible]

Notwithstanding, however, the shortness of the Season, M. JULLIEN has determined to present [illegible] possible attraction, and has made such arrangements as will afford [illegible] unparalleled Musical Entertainment. During the recess he has composed a [illegible] Descriptive Military Quadrille, to be entitled and intended as a companion to "The British Navy," which was, last winter, honoured with [illegible]

"THE BRITISH ARMY QUADRILLE,"

In order to render complete the Grand and Novel Effects introduced in this Piece of Music, M. JULLIEN has (by the kind condescension of the Military Authorities) succeeded in engaging (entirely in addition to his own complete and numerous Orchestra),

FOUR DISTINCT MILITARY BANDS,
viz.,

The Band of HER MAJESTY'S 2nd LIFE GUARDS, under the direction of Mr. WAETZIG (by the kind permission of COLONEL WILLIAMS);

The Band of HER MAJESTY'S ROYAL HORSE GUARDS, BLUE, under the direction of Mr. TUTTON (by the kind permission of COLONEL SMITH);

The Band of HER MAJESTY'S GRENADIER GUARDS, under the direction of Mr. SCHOTT (by the kind permission of COLONEL HOME); and

The BAND of HER MAJESTY'S COLDSTREAM GUARDS, under the direction of Mr. GODFREY (by the kind permission of COLONEL SHAW).

These Four Grand Military Bands will, during the progress of the Quadrille, be combined with the Concert Orchestra, and form a Musical Ensemble at once novel and extraordinary.

The whole conducted by M. JULLIEN.

The immensely increased expense incurred by the above arrangement is evident. The prices [illegible] however remain as formerly; M. JULLIEN having considerably enlarged the space allotted to the Promenade, intending to trust for his remuneration to an increased number of Visitors, rather than to an augmentation in the prices of admission.

POEMS: BY CAMILLA TOULMIN. "She has learned the secret of writing to the age, by writing about the age."—Critic. "Miss Toulmin [illegible]erally sings because she has first thought, and puts the Muse forward only because the Muse has something to say. * * * For the most part her lightest essays are [illegible]ive."—Athenæum. "They are penned in the right vein of poetic fervour, beneath [illegible] a strong current of philanthropy, ever aiming to exalt the condition of humanity."—[illegible] London News. "Occasionally there is a pensiveness in the strong and earnest sympathy of Miss Toulmin, which is singularly touching."—Sun. "True is the ring of both (sincerity and sympathy) in these fugitive poems."—Examiner. "Her 'Astrology and Alchemy' is striking. * * * No mere mocking-bird melody."—Dublin University Magazine. "In 'The Death of the Pauper Peasant,' 'The Cry of the Felon,' the lines to 'Night,' and 'To the Brave Hearts,' as well as in many other of the poems, here given, she embodies and enunciates those truths which are but now beginning to be understood and acted on."—Kentish Independent.

Now Ready, the NINTH VOLUME of

LIVES OF THE QUEENS OF ENGLAND.

BY AGNES STRICKLAND.

Comprising the Life of

MARY OF MODENA, CONSORT OF JAMES II.

OPINIONS OF THE P[illegible].

"One of the best Biographies we owe to Miss Strickland's pen."—Literary Gazette.

"This volume is one of the most interesting of Miss Strickland's very interesting series."—Weekly Chronicle.

"A delightful piece of biography. No words can sufficiently express the sense which every intelligent reader must feel of the research and labour which Miss Strickland has bestowed on her attractive and interesting work."—Observer.

"The most satisfactory volume of the series. Miss Strickland, through the intervention of M. Guizot, has had access to a variety of unpublished documents, deposited in the secret Archives of France; and some exceedingly curious details, obviously never intended for the world, have thus been brought to light."—Court Journal.

"A most charming biographical memoir. We conclude by expressing our unqualified opinion, that we know of no more valuable contribution to Modern History than this Ninth Volume of Miss Strickland's 'Lives of the Queens of England.'"—Morning Herald.

HENRY COLBURN, Publisher, 13, Great Marlborough-street.

THE PHARMACEUTICAL TIMES is published every Saturday, price 5d.; Stamped, 6d.

A CONSPECTUS OF THE PHARMACOPŒIAS OF LONDON, EDINBURGH, DUBLIN, PARIS, AND THE UNITED STATES,

Was commenced with No. 4, September 26, and will be continued weekly. It is proposed to conclude the whole series—unabridged—in fifty-two numbers of the Journal, so that subscribers will receive for One Guinea, in addition to two volumes of the PHARMACEUTICAL TIMES, a collection of authorised formularies, difficult at all times to be procured, never to be procured before in the eligible shape of a single volume, and which, if purchased in the ordinary way, would cost little less than three guineas.

To make this Conspectus as ready of access and useful as possible, this portion of the Journal is published with separate pages, and with an index and title-page of its own, so that it can be severed from the Journal, and bound up into a handsome volume by [illegible].

To produce this Conspectus as accurately as possible, and to make it, in fact, a standard authority, its Editorship has been placed in the hands of a gentleman eminent for his practical acquaintance with the subject, and who is daily engaged in the most complete pharmaceutical laboratory of the Metropolis.

It need only be added that, while this Conspectus, value 3 Guineas, will cost no extra charge to subscribers, the usual contents of "The Pharmaceutical Times" will be upheld in the highest position which the appliances of the most approved scientific literature of the present day will admit of.

To give gentlemen an opportunity of judging of the probable value of the two volumes, which, in addition to the Conspectus, is covered by the Year's Subscription of One Guinea, the following is the

H. J. and D. NICOLL, Registered PALETOT Manufacturers and TAILORS to their Royal Highnesses Prince Albert, Prince George of Cambridge, his Grace the Duke of Wellington, &c., respectfully beg to announce that the same moderate prices are still maintained, and that the Fashionable OVER-COAT is made of Llama Cloth, of a substance as suitable for winter wear so as much as that which has obtained general approval during the past summer.—To be had only, in London, at 114, Regent-street, and 22, Cornhill; and of the recognised agents in the country.

THE SIKH WRAPPER, a new and extremely beautiful long Cashmere Shawl, constructed to fold in perfect harmony with any coloured bonnet or dress. Secured by recent Act of Parliament. Invented and sold only by GEORGE SMITH, of Ludgate-hill, at whose Warehouse all the novelties in Continental and British-manufactured Shawls, Cloaks and Furs; Silks, Satins, Velvets; useful Dresses, Damask Table Linen, &c., are sold upon entirely new principles of business, the advantages of which are now well known to some thousands of the Ready Money portion of the community. [illegible] marked in plain figures, from which no deviation can be made.—GEORGE SMITH (of the late house of Everington), removed to 32, Ludgate-hill, the premises formerly occupied by Rundell and Bridge.

BERDOE'S NEW WATERPROOF PALLIUM, and other WINTER OVER-COATS, of every kind.—The long-established reputation of W. B.'s well-known OUTSIDE GARMENTS renders recommendation now almost needless. It was by him the VENTILATING WATERPROOF, also the LIGHT OVER-COATS (now so universally worn) were originally introduced; and Ten Years' trial has placed their complete success beyond contradiction; as, notwithstanding the numerous competitors the extensive sale of W. B.'s celebrated WATERPROOF OVER-COAT has produced, it unquestionably [illegible] the most permanently popular Garment ever invented. A LARGE STOCK for the W[illegible] and of Outside Garments adapted to every purpose, and guaranteed to exclu[illegible] rain whatever; also of SHOOTING JACKETS, now ready, or made to order at a day's notice. W. BERDOE, Tailor and Over-Coat Maker, 69, Cornhill (north side), and 96, New Bond-street, near Oxford-street.

The Piazza, for exercise in wet and stormy weather, with many other important additions to the Establishment, and provision for the comfort and amusement of the Visitors, are now completed.

A Coach for Ben Rhydding leaves Leeds every Monday, Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday, at Four P.M.; and Bradford every Thursday, at Five P.M. Post Horses and Carriages to meet Visitors, and Prospectuses, with any other information required, may be had on Application to the House Steward.

PARIS.—Madame MARTIN-LIGHTFOOT, having resided at Paris above twenty years, where she has taught the most distinguished families, offers to Ladies who may honour her with their confidence, a good table and well furnished [illegible], in the finest quarter of the metropolis (formerly the residence of Voltaire), in full [illegible] Tuileries Gardens, a considerable extent of the Seine, Champs-Elysées—in short, the most admirable Panorama of Paris. Those who seek for comfort, will find a handsome Drawing-room, select society, literary soirées, and everything to render it a desirable abode. Madame Martin will take charge of young Ladies who have not entirely completed their studies in the different accomplishments, and will employ for them the most eminent Professors of the capital. The highest references given both in England and on the Continent. [illegible] guineas per annum (including all extras). For further particulars, apply to Madame Martin, 39, Upper Charlotte-street, Fitzroy-square, every day between ten and one o'clock, until the ?th instant, after which, address No. 1, Rue de Beaune, Faubourg St. Germain, Paris.

FEATHER BEDS PURIFIED by STEAM.—HEAL and SON have just completed the erection of machinery for the PURIFYING of FEATHERS on a new principle, by which the offensive properties of the quill are evaporated and carried off in steam, thereby not only are the impurities of the feather itself entirely removed, but they are rendered quite free from the unpleasant smell of the stove, which all new feathers are subject to that are dressed in the ordinary way.

OLD BEDS redressed by this process are perfectly freed from all impurities; and, by expanding the feathers, the bulk is greatly increased, and consequently the bed rendered much softer. The following are the present prices of new feathers:

Mixed	1s. 0d. per lb.	Best Foreign Grey Goose .. 2s. 0d. per lb.
Grey Goose	1s. 4d.	Best Irish White ditto .. 2s. 6d.
Foreign ditto ..	1s. 8d.	Best Dantzic ditto .. .. 3s. 0d.

HEAL and SON's List of Bedding, containing full particulars of weights, sizes, and prices, sent free by post on application to their establishment, [illegible], (opposite the Chapel,) Tottenham-[illegible].

THE NEW CENTRAL DRAPERY ESTABLISHMENT,

LINWOOD HOUSE, LEICESTER SQUARE.

INTRODUCTORY ADDRESS.

MORRISH and MORRISH, in taking the Premises in Leicester-square which will henceforth be styled "Linwood House," are induced briefly to state the principles upon which they intend to conduct their business; and in strict adherence to which, they confidently rely on receiving the unlimited support and extensive patronage of their friends, "the Ladies," both resident and visitors; to the latter of which, from its central position and contiguity to the City and West End, will be found most particularly convenient.

From the peculiar advantages in the purchase of Goods, and the experience M. and M. possess, they will be enabled at all times to submit for inspection a large and well-assorted Stock of every description of Manufacture connected with their trade, inclusive of the costly and elegant, as well as the economic and useful, and their prices shall be uniformly so low as to defy the keenest com[illegible].

M. and M.'s distinguishing principles are thes[illegible]

1st. To sell for the lowest possible profit.

2nd. In the purchase of cheap goods, to gi[illegible]

3rd. To pay the utmost attention and civility to [illegible]

To enable them to carry out the above with a remunerative profit, they must secure a large and increasing business upon the system of cash terms only.

In conclusion, M. and M. would request the favour of an early visit to their New Establishment, as they have purchased from the manufacturers, at reduced prices, in consequence of the lateness of the year, an extensive, varied, and tasteful Stock of all the Novelties of the Season, to which they beg to call the especial attention of Ladies procuring their Winter Costumes—consisting of Silks, Shawls, Furs, Plaid, Orleans, and other Dresses. Ribbons, Lace, Hosiery, Gloves; in order to make room for which, every article comprising the late Stock of Garrard and Rotherham, bought in one lot by M. and M. at less than half its cost, will be kept entirely distinct from the New Goods, and marked in plain figures, at such nominal prices as must effect an immediate clearance.

The Sale will COMMENCE at Linwood House on MONDAY, the 26th October, at Ten o'Clock.

BLACK! BLACK!! BLACK!!!—SAMUEL OSMOND and CO., Dyers, No. 8, Ivy-lane, Newgate-street, London, have made arrangements for Dyeing every article of Ladies Dress Black, for Mourning, on Wednesday in each week, and finishing the same in a few days afterwards.—Established above a Century.

THE PANKLIBANON IRON WORKS AND GREAT WESTERN [illegible]

IRONMONGERS' STOCK SELLING OFF, 77, REGENT'S QUADRANT.—As these premises must be cleared by the 24th December, an Enormous Sacrifice is submitted to. It comprises all kitchen and household requisites, stoves, ranges, fenders, &c. Papier maché goods in every variety. The glass cases, forges, bellows, and tools, are all for sale. No reasonable offer refused. Arnott's Stoves, at 20s. each. 77, REGENT'S QUADRANT.

BELT BAND DRAWERS.—The important benefit, combined with peculiar ease and comfort, derivable from wearing the BELT DRAWERS of SANDLAND and CRANE'S invention, recommends them to the notice of all gentlemen. They have now been in extensive use for a number of years, and the gratification they are always found to continue to give to every one who adopts them is satisfactory proof of their excellence. Patterns of materials, with instructions to measure, can be sent by post.—SANDLAND and CRANE, 55, Regent's quadrant.

LADIES

DEFER YOUR PURCHASES FOR WINTER COSTUME.

MORRISH'S LINWOOD HOUSE, Leicester-square,

Will open MONDAY 26th OCTOBER.

IMMENSE BARGAINS.

The Entire Stock of Garrard and Rotherham, at ONE THIRD ITS COST.

An Extensive New Stock. FASHIONABLE VARIETY. CHEAP.

REQUIRED, BY A LADY, an Engagement as USEFUL COMPANION to an Elderly or Invalid Lady, or to undertake the domestic arrangements of a Family, and assist in the plain education of young children. Would not object to travel with, and administer to the comforts of, an Invalid, who may require the attentions of a useful friend. The Advertiser has had much domestic experience, and would be useful in any capacity where trust and confidence are required. Salary a minor consideration compared with kind treatment. Unexceptionable references given. Address to A. Y., Mrs. Fisher's (linen-draper), opposite the Church, Greenwich.

BEAUTIFUL WOMEN. The Thorn that veils the Primrose from our view is not more invidious in Nature, than superfluous Hair on the Face, Neck, or Arms of Beauty. For its removal HUBERT'S ROSEATE POWDER stands pre-eminent. Beware of Counterfeits. The Genuine has been signed G. H. HOGARD for the last forty years. Sold for the Proprietor by HOOPER, Chemist, 24, Russell-street, Covent Garden, and by most Perfumers. Price 4s.; or two in one parcel, 7s.

GOWLAND'S LOTION.—This elegant preparation, an original formula of the late Dr. Gowland, for all impurities of the Skin, continues to maintain a repute commensurate with its specific properties of speedily eradicating every description of Eruptive Malady, Discoloration, &c., and in improving and enhancing the beauty of the complexion by a congenial action upon the skin, as perfectly innocent as it is agreeable and efficacious. "ROBERT SHAW, LONDON," is in White Letters on the Government Stamp, without which none is Genuine.—Prices, 2s. 9d., 5s. 6d., Quarts, 8s. 6d. Sold by all Perfumers and Chemists.

ROWLAND'S ODONTO, or Pearl Dentifrice; a white Powder for the Teeth, compounded of the choicest and most recherché ingredients of the Oriental herbal. It extirpates all tartarous adhesions to the teeth, and ensures a pearl-like whiteness to the enamelled surface. The breath, also, from the salubrious and disinfecting qualities of the Odonto, attains a sweetness and fragrance truly grateful to its possessor. Its invaluable properties have obtained its selection by the Court and Royal Family of Great Britain, and the Sovereigns and Nobility throughout Europe, while the general demand for it at once announces the favour in which it is universally held. Price 2s. 9d. per box.

CAUTION.—To protect the public from fraud, the Government Stamp, with "A. ROWLAND and SON, 20, Hatton Garden," engraved thereon, is affixed on each box. All others are fraudulent counterfeits.

METCALFE and CO'S. NEW PATTERN TOOTH-BRUSH and SMYRNA SPONGES.—Useful Inquiry.—For proof of the extreme durability, power of cleaning, and true economy, ask all who have used Metcalfe's Brushes. The Tooth-brush performs the highly-important office of searching thoroughly into the divisions, and cleaning in the most extraordinary manner; hairs never come loose, 1s. Peculiarly penetrating Hair-brushes, with the durable unbleached Russia bristles, which will not soften like common hair. Improved Clothes-brush, that cleans harmlessly in one-third the time. The new Velvet Brush, and immense Stock of genuine unbleached Smyrna Sponge, at METCALFE and Co.'s only Establishment, 130 B, Oxford-street, one do[illegible].

Patronized by her Majesty and his Royal Highness Prince Albert.

MR. THOMAS'S SUCCEDANEUM for Stopping Decayed Teeth, however large the cavity. It is placed in the tooth in a soft state, without any pressure or pain, and soon becomes as hard as the enamel, and will remain firm in the tooth for many years, rendering extraction unnecessary, arresting the further progress of decay. All persons can use Mr. Thomas's Succedaneum themselves with ease, as full directions are enclosed. Price 2s. 6d. Sold by Savory, 220, Regent-street, Sanger, 150, Oxford-street; Butler, 4, Cheapside, Johnston, 68, Cornhill; and all Medicine Vendors in the Kingdom.

Mr. Thomas continues to supply the Loss of Teeth on his new system of self-adhesion, without springs or wires. This method does not require the extraction of any teeth or roots, or any painful operation whatever, and is much less expensive than others. Mr. THOMAS, Surgeon-Dentist, 64, Berners-street, Oxford-street.

MOURNING to any extent at Five Minutes' Notice.

[illegible]—Any article purchased, Ready Made or Made to Measure, if not approved of [illegible] immediately exchanged, or, if preferred, the money returned. E. MOSES and SON'S, Tailors, Woollen-drapers, Clothiers, Hatters, Hosiers, Furriers, and General Outfitters for Ladies and Gentlemen, 154, 155, 156, and 157, Minories, and 83, 84, 85, and 86, Aldgate, City, London.

CAUTION.—E. MOSES and SON regret being obliged to guard the public against imposition, but, have learned that the untradesman-like falsehood of "being connected with them," or it's the same concern, has been resorted to in many instances, and, for obvious reasons, they have no connection with any other house in or out of London, and those who desire genuine and cheap clothing, &c., should call at or send to the Minories and Aldgate, City, London.

NOTICE.—No business transacted at this Establishment from Sunset Friday till Sunset Saturday, when business is resumed till Twelve o'Clock.

 The Entrance to the Fur Department, which will open on Tuesday, the [illegible]th inst., at 83, Aldgate, corner of the Minories and Aldgate, opposite the Church.

A New Book, entitled "Costume Castle," may be had, on application or forwarded "POST [illegible]."

OPENING OF E. MOSES AND SON'S FUR DEPOT, 157, MINORIES; Entrance, 83, Aldgate, corner of the Minories, opposite Aldgate-church.

On TUESDAY, OCTOBER 20, 1846, will be opened to the Public a "New Branch" in the Business of E. MOSES and SON, on entirely "New Principles." The Proprietors have [illegible] had in contemplation what may be termed "An Universal Attire Depot," and the new feature about to be added is a decided advance towards the accomplishment of this most comprehensive [illegible]. The extensive Fur Warehouse of E. Moses and Son will be stocked with an im[illegible] of Ladies and Gentlemen's Furs, possessing every possible recommendation. [illegible] consist of "Sable," "Musk," "Ermine," "Chinchillas," "Koleuskoy," and [illegible] of Fur Materials adopted in Modern Winter Attire.

Prior to manufacturing the Fur, E. Moses and Son subjected them to the closest scrutiny, and special care was observed that no materials were made up but what were thoroughly well seasoned. Equal attention has been bestowed by E. Moses and Son on the making-up of the Furs and an examination and trial of the Boas, Flat and Round Capes, Cardinals, Muffs, Visites, Victorines, Cuffs, Operas, &c., &c., &c. It will be seen that none but "first class" goods are offered to the Public by the Proprietors. Economy in this new feature of E. Moses and Son's trade will be strictly adhered to. The "Fur Trade" (let it be distinctly understood, like that of Tailoring,) has long taxed the public with most extortionate and unwarrantable prices. But a new principle shall distinguish this new branch of business at E. Moses and Son. Large profits shall be succeeded by small, and high prices by low. Every article, according to its relative value, will have marked upon it in plain figures, the lowest price, at which it can be sold, from which no abatement can possibly be made.

THE 3RD REGIMENT (BUFFS) MARCHING THROUGH THE CITY OF LONDON.

PASSAGE OF THE THIRD REGIMENT (BUFFS) THROUGH THE CITY.

On Monday and Tuesday, the 3rd Regiment (Buffs) left Portsmouth for Ireland. On this occasion, the gallant Colonel, Sir James Dennis, K.C.B., availed himself of what is considered the exclusive privilege of this celebrated regiment, namely, to march through the City of London with drums beating and colours flying; and we believe the Lord Mayor to have been apprised of this intended exercise of the Regiment's right.

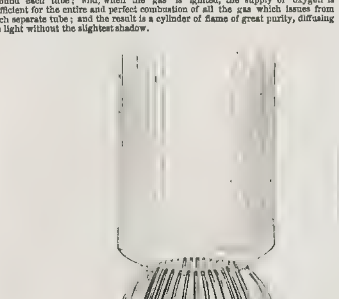
Accordingly, a division of the Regiment marched into the City by Blackfriars-bridge; and our artist has engraved this peculiar exercise of privilege. At the time, a drove of bullocks from Smithfield-market was passing towards the bridge; and in Chatham-place, one of the beasts, irritated by the noise of the drums and the glare of the red coats, dashed among the soldiers; considerable confusion ensued, and a young girl was struck to the pavement by the infuriated animal, her skull dreadfully fractured, and she expired.

On Tuesday, an inquest was held on the body, before W. Payne, Esq. From the testimony of City police-constable 398, and other witnesses, it appeared that about half-past three o'clock on Monday afternoon the 3rd Regiment of Foot (Buffs), having come from Portsmouth per rail, marched from the terminus at Vauxhall, in the direction of the Euston station, en route for Ireland, and, having arrived on the City side of Blackfriars-bridge, the colours were flying, and the band had struck up a lively air, when an ox, which was being driven along Bridge-street in a contrary direction to the military, became alarmed by the music, and dashed suddenly towards the footpath by Chatham-place, where the soldiers were marching. Several of the men met the ox with their bayonets; one stuck into the animal's skull, and became bent; the other pierced one of his nostrils, from which the blood flowed profusely; and the beast became so enraged that he again charged the military, broke their ranks, knocked down some of the men, and threw the arms of others to the ground. Passing the pavement, he threw down the deceased with great violence, her head coming in contact with the curb. The poor girl, Sarah Kelly, aged nine years, lived in Duke-street, Stamford-street, and was on her way to see her mother, a nurse in St. Bartholomew's Hospital She was promptly taken by the police-constable to Mr. Hutchinson's, surgeon, of Farringdon-street, where she shortly expired. Her face was covered with blood, which flowed from a fracture of the skull, and injuries to the chest, which caused death. The Jury returned a verdict of "Accidental death," accompanied by their urgent and unanimous recommendation to the proper authorities, that the dangerous practice of driving horned cattle through the public thoroughfares, to and from Smithfield, may be discontinued.

LESLIE'S NEW PATENT ETHEREAL GAS BURNER.

This elegant apparatus produces from the ordinary coal gas, when supplied at a pressure of seven or eight-tenths of an inch (to overcome the friction of the small tubes, through which the gas is made to pass), a light of great brilliancy.

The gas, being contained in each separate tube, causes a current of air to play around each tube; and, when the gas is ignited, the supply of oxygen is sufficient for the entire and perfect combustion of all the gas which issues from each separate tube; and the result is a cylinder of flame of great purity, diffusing its light without the slightest shadow.



LESLIE'S NEW GAS BURNER.

It prevents the nuisances of smoke and dirt depositing on the ceilings and furniture. There is no radiation of heat from the metal burner, which is easily attached to any ordinary gas fittings. This improvement has already been introduced into the following large establishments: The banking-houses of Messrs. Glyn, Mills, Halifax, and Co.; and Messrs Smith, Payne, and Smiths; the London Coffee House; Brookes' Club-house, &c. The Office of the Agency is at 59, Conduit-street.

TO CORRESPONDENTS

"Philibeg." *Messrs. Horwitz and Harrwitz have already began their contest, and this, it is eagerly expected by the Chess world, will be followed by another of still greater import and excitement, Mr. Staunton having put forth a challenge, offering to play Mr. G. Walker twenty-one games, upon the same terms as those of the match just terminated between Mr. S. and Mr. Harrwitz—*i. e., for seven of the games, Mr. S. offers to give the odds of Pawn and two moves; in seven, to give the odds of Pawn and one move; and, in seven more, to play without giving any odds Should this challenge be accepted by Mr. Walker, it is proposed that one half of the games shall be played at the St. George's Club, and the other moiety in the rooms of the Old London Club. You will get the whole of the games in the late match, in the October and next month's Number of the "Chess Player's Chronicle."

4. K R to Q B's sq (ch)	Q to B 7th (best)	(b)

(a) It must be quite evident that if the King retires, he will be mated immediately.

(b) This is the Solution by Professor Forbes. If we mistake not, however, the coup de grace may be given, though less elegantly, in five instead of seven moves, as follows.—

WHITE.	BLACK
1 Kt to Q's 8th (ch)	B takes Kt (best)
2. R to Q Kt 4th (ch)	K to R sq. (The interposition of the Q and then the B will not prolong the mate.)
3. Q to her B's 5th, and Black cannot possibly, we think, prevent mate in two moves.

MATCH AT CHESS BETWEEN MM. HORWITZ AND HARRWITZ.

Through the spirited intervention of the London Chess Club, the preliminaries of a Match, the best of fifteen games, between these two distinguished players, were arranged last week, and the opening game "came off," before a numerous assemblage of Chess amateurs, in the rooms of the Club, on Monday, the 12th. The following are the moves Game the First.

Black (Harrwitz).	White (Horwitz).	Black (Harrwitz).	White (Horwitz).
1. K P two	K P two	20. Q to her 5th	Q takes Q
2. K Kt to B 3rd	Q Kt to B 3rd	21. P takes Q	K to Q 2d
3. Q B P one (a)	Q P two (b)	22. B takes B	K takes B
4. K B to Q Kt 5th	Q B to K Kt 5th (c)	23. K R to Kt 5th	K R to K 4th
5. Q to her R 4th	B takes Kt	24. P to K B 4th	R takes Q P
6. B takes Kt (ch)	P takes B	25. Kt to Q 2d	R to K B 4th
7. Q takes P (ch)	K to his 2nd (d)	26. R takes R	P takes R
8. P takes B	K Kt to B 3rd	27. Kt to K B 3rd	K to his 3rd
9. Q Kt P one (e)	Q to her Kt sq (f)	28. Kt takes Q P (ch)	K takes P
10. Q B to R 3rd (ch)	K to Q sq	29. K to Q B 2nd	R to K Kt sq
11. K R to K Kt sq	Kt to K sq	30. R to K sq	R to K Kt 7th
12. Q takes P (ch)	B to Q 3rd	31. R to K 6th (ch)	K to B 2nd
13. Q P two	P takes P	32. R to K 2nd	K to B 3rd
14. K P one	K Kt to B 3rd	33. P to K B 3rd	R to K Kt 2nd
15. P takes Kt	R to K sq (ch)	34. K to B 3rd	K R P two
16. K to Q sq	K Kt P one	35. Q R P two	K R P one
17. Q B P one	R to K 4th	36. R to K 6th (ch)	K to B 2nd
18. Q takes K B P	Q to her Kt 2d	37. R to K R 6th
19. Q to K Kt 8th (ch)	R to K sq

And White resigned.

(a) The opening adopted by Mr. Staunton in his last even game with Mr Harrwitz, and which the latter found so difficult to defend that he resolved to try the effect of the attack against his present opponent.

(b) We like this better than K B P two.

(c) This is a very bad move.

(d) From this early stage even, White's game is quite irretrievable

(e) Black follows up his advantage with unerring pertinacity.

(f) Vilely played, locking up both Queen and Rook.

 Since the above was prepared for the press, we have been favoured with the moves of another, and a much better contested game between the same players, which was won on Wednesday last by Mr. Horwitz.

Our next game, perhaps the briefest which ever occurred in actual play, came off a short time back at the Café de la Regence, between MM. X and Y.

White. (M. X.)	Black. (M. Y.)
1. K P two	1. K P two
2. Q to K R 5th	2. K B P one (This being what is called an "impossible move," because it exposes his King to the check of the adverse Q, he is obliged to play his K)
3. Q takes K P mate !!	2. K to his 2d

No. 234.—Vol. IX.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, OCTOBER 24, 1846. [Sixpence.

THE KAFFIR WAR.

THE Border Lands of all States have always been the Theatre of tumult and war; the "Lords of the Marches" of Wales held no sinecure when they were compelled to repress the incursions of the then unfriendly inhabitants of the Principality; the frontier between England and Scotland was for centuries a battle-ground for the two people, led by the Baronial freebooters on both sides the Tweed; and this predatory spirit continued to exist down to comparatively a recent period. If such were the case between people of the same island, with no great differences of language, religion, and manners, we must not be surprised to find the ill-defined territory between the domains of the civilised man and the savage almost always in a state of war. The life and death struggle in which the English colonists in South Africa are at present engaged with the Kaffirs, is the same that all the settlers of new countries have had to sustain, when they became the neighbours of the aboriginal inhabitants. The last accounts represent the state of things as most critical: all the ordinary business of life seems to be suspended, and every energy tasked to the first great necessity of self-defence; the population is converted into a levy en masse, and the sudden conversion of civilians into soldiers must give society there an outward aspect, of which we can have but a slight notion. The perusal of the Cape of Good Hope papers takes us back to scenes and events which we have been accustomed to associate only with remote times and ages; but the truth is, the barbarous tribes of the human family are now what still greater sections of it were at an earlier period; they are our contemporaries, but divided from us by a "great gulf;" they are antiquity made present to us, and in contact with them we are compelled to act the past over again; many a peace-loving man will, doubtless, be shocked at all the bloodshed recorded in the sheets that visit our quiet breakfast-tables; but those same pacific individuals "located" on the Kaffir border, with their houses burned over their heads—their cattle driven off with a celerity and skill that Rob Roy might have admired—would do precisely as our countrymen are doing there at this moment—take down the rifle, and turn out in military array to do battle for existence itself, recognising the validity of the old law of the "strong hand," by which alone in such regions property and life can be secured. The most sincere conviction of the superiority of peace as a general condition of existence is neutralized by such stern cases of exception; and, under certain circumstances, we believe a whole congregated Peace Society would feel a kind of relief and satisfaction at the sight of a regiment or two of bayonets.

It is this that makes war, and the means of waging it, so continual a necessity. A colonising Empire never is at peace; the pressure of life drives men from the crowded centre to the distant points where there is yet room for effort and chance of reward; where toil is not yet, by numbers and competition, rendered "cheaper than the trodden weed." Then comes the contact with barbarism, and all its consequences: there is scarcely an exception to the rule that the earlier history of Colonies is one of war and violence. The "Pilgrim Fathers," who founded what is now a great Empire, were good, devout, and pious men; but they understood well the necessity of making strong the "arm of flesh;" they fought no less earnestly than they prayed. In our own times an experiment has been made of the possibility of living in peace with the uncivilised man, on his own lands, surrendered to purchase, not taken by force—and it has failed. All kinds of causes have been assigned; mismanagement, incapacity of Governors: but still the undeniable fact remains, that, with the best intentions in the world, fighting was the issue.

"A great country cannot wage a little war," is a sentence often quoted; it comes from a high authority, and yet we must question its truth; England always has some little war on her hands; at one time with Canadian rebels, at another with a knot of Ameers in Scinde; India alone is a constant seat of wars, of all degrees of interest and success, from the reverses of Affghanistan to the victory of Sobraon—from the storming of Seringapatam to the reduction of some petty hill fort on merely showing the muzzles of our cannon; and we now and then get involved in some minor hostilities with the head of a South American Republic; all these are "little wars," in defiance of the above quoted dictum. But if a "great country" gets plunged into a quarrel with its equals, then a "little war" is certainly impossible, for the shock will be proportionate to the meeting forces. A European war would be an awful calamity, but the course of events tends to diminish the chances of it. Civilised nations become like the members of a polished society; differences are discussed and "arranged" by Governments retained and paid to understand such matters, as a gentleman turns over a troublesome piece of business to his attorney. Blows and violence are becoming vulgar and out of place in the drawing-room of the world; and, besides, the glass and furniture are costly and would be likely to get damaged in a row: so the élite of nations are tolerably polite in their intercourse, and a kind of public opinion among them restrains each at present from knocking down his neighbour. But this pacific forbearance does not extend to the servants' hall and the out-offices; there the conventional proprieties are not recognised; there is quarrelling always, and open violence and murder whenever they are possible to be committed with a chance of success or profit. The measures of self-defence that the rulers of the world may individually be compelled to adopt against these distant disturbers of their repose, are not considered wars, in the general sense of the word; they criticise each other's conduct, sometimes sharply enough, but never interfere actively. Thus, we look on while France chases Abd-el-Kader and his Arabs; and France contemplates with equanimity our difficulties with the Sikhs and Kaffirs But, to the colonists of Algiers, and the settlers of South Africa, these wars are evils of terrible magnitude. To them, peace is impossible, and will remain an impossibility till the contest is decided.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

PARISIANA.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Paris, Wednesday.

Political are just like ordinary sinners in this respect—that they commit their grossest peccadilloes with full confidence they will have time and courage to make amends; and weak repentance always follows immediately after the delinquency. Louis Philippe offers an excellent example in point: now that the blow in Spain is struck home to his purpose, and to your Queen and nation, all he dreams of night and day is to curry favour once more with his fair and august visitor at Eu. The most anxious question he puts to M Guizot, as each new despatch arrives from England, is to ask, "Has Jarnac been invited to Windsor?" One of the devices which have floated across his mind, is to change his present worthy Ambassador at the Court of St. James the ultimate reversion, when the present brouille is forgotten, being promised to Count de Bresson. He thinks a new representative would, at first, be less open to reproach.

It is very singular to observe what is the peculiarity attending the personages who, in the opinion of the diplomatic body, will sooner or later occupy this high diplomatic office at the English Court. The present able Chargé d'Affaires, himself a nephew of that excellent nobleman the Duke of Leinster, is married to an English lady, his cousin, sister to Lord Foley; he will infallibly, when old enough, be Ambassador in England. The first of the immediate aspirants, as I told you once before, is the present representative of France at Vienna, the Count de Flahaut, whose wife—whom the witty Princess Metternich, in one of her boutades has christened Madame Fléau is also an English lady, being Baroness Keith, in her own right, and being the mother of that lovely lady, the Countess of Shelburne. The last aspirant, who is most eager, and who has some chance, is the Duke de Montebello, present Ambassador to Naples; he, likewise, is married to an Irish lady! Although these parties, and other of their colleagues, are said to be moving heaven and earth to accomplish the object of their wishes, there is little doubt that to that clever and mercurial veteran of diplomacy, Count de St. Aulaire, and to his Countess, a model of every feminine perfection, the post will remain for another year; and that they will return as soon as the British Lion will have smoothed his mane and his ire—which the political wiseacres here consider will require only three months: the dearth of food at present reigning all over Europe having a most calming effect, in all quarters, over national susceptibility and irritation, however well founded. What be tokens that M de St. Aulaire is not as yet hors de combat, is that he and his Countess dined at the recent official dinner for the inauguration of Lord Normanby's assumption of his diplomatic post; and the noble Marquis expressed, at this dinner, the great regard borne to the noble pair in England.

We expect, here, great things from your Ambassador; for the Marquis of Normanby is an agreeable and accomplished cosmopolite, who thinks, in spite of the prevalent selfish political economy, that large emoluments are received by Ambassadors to deal out nobly the hospitality of their country. He is, moreover, I know, of the opinion of the famous diplomatist, Count de Stackelberg, "that, of all arguments, none are so persuasive as those which are insinuated at table, and seize upon the stronghold of the head through the covered way of the stomach" He has, consequently, summoned from his country manor the celebrated Louis, who, like Cincinnatus, was modestly ruling his acres, after his European triumphs, when a call not to be resisted summoned him once more to deeds of glory. The veteran Louis is the greatest pupil of the immortal Careme; he was head cook, in England, to Prince Talleyrand; and, thanks to his irresistible dishes, at that time I myself saw the greatest, the noblest and most virtuous personages bow once more to the shrine of the perjured Bishop; for Louis is indeed a Cordon Bleu—the very incarnation of the spirit your Ben Jonson dreamt of, not "armed in ale" alone, but—

> A Master Cook!—He's the Man of Men
> He designs he draws,
> He paints he carves, he builds, he fortif
> Makes citadels of curious fowls and fish,
> Some he dry dishes, some motes round with broths;
> Rears bulwark pies, and for his outer works
> He raiseth ramparts of immortal crust!

Need I say that the present British Ambassador will command the sweet voices of all Paris, and that if M. Guizot and his ever inseparable Egeria, the old Princess Lieven, should essay new tricks, they will lose themselves, submerged in a "Mediterranean Sea of Soup," without even that "Crust of Bread," for consolation, which moved so deeply Massinger's Justice Greedy But truly, if we rely, as we must—for the evidence is unanimous—on the private accounts we receive from Madrid, M. Guizot is not likely to take another leaf out of Machiavelli's book. Our great Poet says.—

> Le silence du peuple est la leçon des Rois.

FRANCE.

The Paris papers discuss in an excited tone the news recently received from Germany, according to which there was a probability that some of the Northern Powers were by no means pleased at the marriage of the Duke de Montpensier. This view of the matter is corroborated by the following paragraph from the Nuremberg Correspondent of the 15th inst., being an extract of a letter dated "Frontiers of Poland, 7th inst.

"Letters from St. Petersburg state that the Russian Government has received the protest of the British Cabinet against the marriage of the Duke de Montpensier with the Infanta of Spain, and has regarded it favourably. It appears that the Russian Cabinet is determined to march in the same line with England in this affair, and to rely upon the treaty of Utrecht. We know that on a recent occasion, respecting the affair of Sleswig-Holstein, the official journal of the French Ministry pretended that the Treaties of Vienna were alone obligatory, whilst all other treaties had fallen into disuse"

The German Universal Gazette of the 16th instant publishes the following letter, dated from the Oder, the 13th instant:—"We regret to find that the Great Powers of Germany have determined to observe neutrality with respect to the Spanish marriages. But we believe, however, that Austria and Prussia will protest, although the union of the two crowns of France and Spain on the head of 'an Orleans' is not probable. Not only Germany, but all Europe, would be forced in this case to arm, as in 1813 against Napoleon."

Among the Spanish officers transferred to the citadel of Blaye, in consequence of the flight of Count de Montemolino, is the Marquis de Valdespina. The Guyenne states that the Marchioness, who was residing at her seat at Marquina, on hearing of the incarceration of her husband, was struck with apoplexy, and died instantaneously. "On learning this dreadful intelligence," pursues the Guyenne, "the Marquis de Valdespina remained without sensation for several hours. A physician was obliged to visit him twice during the day, and at present he is confined to his bed. The Marquis is upwards of 70, and wants the right arm; his health, previously delicate, is much impaired by the humidity and unwholesomeness of the citadel of Blaye"

The returns of the revenue in France for the first nine months of the present year have been published. The total amount is 601 millions of francs. This, compared with the corresponding months of 1844, gives an increase of 27 millions. Compared with 1845, the increase is 13 millions. Thus there would appear a regular annual increase amounting to a little above two per cent. of the gross annual revenue. Of the 13 millions increase of the present year upon the last 3½ millions are upon the customs, and 3½ millions on the duty raised on the manufacture of beet-root sugar in France, and another 3½ millions on the manufacture of tobacco, which is a Government monopoly. Of these augmentations, that upon home-manufactured sugar has been produced, not by increased consumption, but by an augmented rate of duty imposed on it. The increase of 3½ millions on the customs is owing to the insufficient harvests rendering necessary the importation of food. This is manifested by the fact that the amount of the import duties on grain in the first three months of the present year amounted to ten millions, whereas, in the corresponding quarter of last year its amount was only two millions. On the whole, notwithstanding the augmentation of the gross revenue, the financial and commercial situation of the country is not considered satisfactory. The heaviness of the market for the public securities and shares indicates this.

Baron Davillier, honorary governor of the Bank of France, died at Paris on Sunday, in the 88th year of his age.

A letter from Tunis, of September 28, states that the Bey intended to embark on the 15th, on his voyage to France. In announcing this decision to the French Consul-General, the Bey declared that he was so much gratified by the benevolent solicitude of the King of the French, and so sensible of the value of the present made to him of the steamer Dante, that he wished to express to his Majesty in person his deep acknowledgment, and to assure him of his devoted attachment. The Bey added, that he was most desirous of returning the visit of the French Princes, who, when they came to Tunis, expressed so much interest in the prosperity of his country. The Bey communicated this intention to Sir Thomas Reade, the English Consul, and informed him that he would go to London, and pay his respects to her Britannic Majesty.

SWITZERLAND.

We are glad to see by the latest accounts from Geneva that tranquillity has been restored.

The Journal de l'Ain of the 16th says:—"We learn this morning that French troops have been ordered to advance upon the Swiss frontiers. A division of artillery from Lyons was to go a part to Nantua and a part to Ferney, to remain until further orders. Two batallions of the 68th Regiment, in garrison at Lyons, are ordered one to Nantua and the other to Gex. Two companies, detached from these batallions, were to reinforce the garrison of the Fort of Ecluse. It is said that Austria and Sardinia were also about to march troops upon the Swiss frontiers. The frequent and agitated movements of the most ardent patriots raise an apprehension that some new attempt is about to be made, either against Basle or Fribourg."

The Federal Directory of Zurich, on receiving intelligence of the recent events at Geneva, sent the Federal Secretary of State, Gonzenbach, with despatches for the Governments of the Cantons of Vaud and Geneva.

The Government of Berne sent Colonel Ochsenbein to Geneva to offer the Provisional Government all the succour it may require, in conformity with the Federal compact.

In the same manner as at Lausanne and other parts of the Canton of Vaud, the fall of the late Government of Geneva has been celebrated throughout the Canton of Berne with salvos of artillery.

HOLLAND.

The King of Holland opened the ordinary Session of the Dutch Legislature at the Hague, on Monday last, in a speech, which he commenced by expressing gratification at the continuance of amicable relations with other countries. His Majesty gave a favourable account of the prospects held out by the state of education, the sciences, and the fine arts. The speech then intimated that the crops of articles of food were less abundant than usual, and, therefore, it was necessary to continue in force the laws encouraging the importation of provisions. In conclusion, his Majesty announced that various projects of law would be proposed for social imprvoements.

PORTUGAL.

Our letters from Lisbon, dated the 12th instant, announce the important fact of a counter Ministerial movement, which, however, had been effected without bloodshed, and indeed without difficulty. The Queen appears to have taken a very prompt and unusual course.

At ten o'clock at night, on Tuesday, the 6th, couriers were sent round to all the Ministers, summoning them to a Council of State, to be held immediately at the Palace; and, on the Duke of Palmella and his colleagues presenting themselves before the Queen, in obedience to her summons, she at once asked them, in rather an abrupt manner, whether they were prepared with any measures to arrest the progress of the evils which were threatening to overwhelm the country, and involve it in anarchy and ruin—from the rapid encroachments of democracy on the one hand, and the pecuniary embarrassments of the Government on the other? To this question the Duke replied in the negative; upon which her Majesty rejoined, "If you are not, I am You must resign a task to which you confess yourselves unequal. I have called upon the Marquis of Saldanha to form a new Cabinet, and you will sign the decree appointing him." The Duke said that he must send for a clerk to draw up the decree; but it was, in fact, ready cut and dry, as were also those appointing the other Ministers, and the orders reinstating all the civil and military authorities displaced at the downfall of the Cabral Ministry. The signing of the decree, like the touch of Harlequin's wand, effected an instantaneous transformation. Then came pouring forth from their lurking-place, within the precincts of the Palace, all the Colonels and other Field Officers, and all the high civil functionaries, who were to be restored to their posts, and who had been secretly assembled for that purpose. The military officers, accompanied by the Duke of Terceira, and, it is said, by the King Consort incognito, proceeded at once to resume the command of their respective regiments, which was done without any difficulty, except in the Queen's regiment of Grenadiers, where a scuffle took place, in which a young officer of the name of Lucena was shot dead by a sergeant attached to the now fallen Ultras, and who was immediately arrested. All this time the citizens of Lisbon were snoring in blissful unconsciousness of what was going forward, so quietly was everything done. Before dawn, all the troops had assembled in the Black Horse Square, where they remained under arms till late in the day, rending the air with "vivas" to the charter, in which very few of the people joined. An embargo was laid upon all the passage-boats going up the Tagus; but before this could be done, or, more probably, before it was thought of, the ex-Commandant of the Municipal Guard, Cesar Vasconcellos, succeeded in making off, together with many of the dismissed officers, to join, as it is supposed, the 4th Regiment of Dragoons, which had been ordered down from Santarem, and the men of which being recruited from the district of Torres Novas, where Colonel Vasconcellos's estates are situated, are greatly under his influence. It is apprehended, with much reason, that he will induce them to follow him into the provinces to spread the flame of insurrection, and afford a nucleus around which the disaffected may gather

The new Ministry is thus composed:

President of the Council and Minister of War	Marquis Saldanha.
Minister of the Kingdom, and, ad interim, of Finance	Viscount d'Oliveira.
Justice	J. J Valente Farinho.
Marine and Colonies	D. Manoel de Portugal e Castro.
Foreign Affairs	Viscount da Carreira.

No member of the Cabral Administration entered into this combination, but the policy of the new Administration would be nearly identical with that of the Cabrals. Most of the Palmella policy had been revoked by this dexterous change.

Count Tojal was talked of as Minister of Finance

The liberty of the press had been suspended, and the principal partisans of the Cabral Administration had been restored to office. Lisbon was quiet, but resistance was expected through the provinces

It was reported that the Duke of Terceira, who had been sent to Oporto, had been made prisoner, and that Viscount das Antas had declared himself Regent - but it was not known whether on the part of the Queen or on behalf of the Prince Royal as Don Pedro V.

THE WEST INDIES.

The Severn has brought the usual West India mails. The dates of the papers and letters are Demerara, the 18th; Trinidad, the 20th; Barbadoes, the 24th; Grenada, the 26th; St. Jago de Cuba, the 19th; Jamaica, the 23rd; Jacmel, the [illegible]; Porto Rico, the 27th; and St. Thomas's, the 29th of September; and Fayal, the 11th inst.

The West India papers are chiefly occupied by articles and discussions on the new Sugar Duties Bill. Public meetings were about to be held throughout the colonies, and it was intended to memorialise the home Government on their present critical position, and pray the adoption of the most stringent measures for the total suppression of slavery all over the world.

At Trinidad a severe shock of an earthquake had been felt on the 6th of September, during the hours of divine service; it was preceded and accompanied by a rumbling noise; the motion was at first tremulous, but ended with a violent vibration sufficiently strong to set the bells of the churches ringing. It lasted more than a minute. On the 13th a still more severe shock was experienced, and some part of the congregation in Trinity Church had a narrow escape of being killed by the falling of a portion of the building. Happily no serious accident occurred at Trinidad, but it was rumoured that Dominica and some other islands had sustained serious damage from the earthquake and a hurricane.

Our papers from Barbadoes are to September 14. They make no allusion to the earthquake of the 6th. The weather and the crops are favourably reported. The markets were abundantly supplied with every description of native esculents. The heat was intense, but the general health of the island is stated to be good. A Correspondent has favoured us with an account of a violent storm at Bridge-Town, which did much damage to the shipping, but happily no life was lost.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.—FURTHER ENGAGEMENTS WITH THE KAFFIRS

We have papers from the Cape so late as the 19th of August last.

The events detailed are not very important, yet are not without a certain interest. On the 8th August the Governor was at Pierie, ready to move either upon the Amatola or upon Buffalo.

A day or two more were expected to bring all the divisions upon the Buffalo Poort, where it was confidently believed that the main body of the Kaffirs would be assailed and brought to action.

There had been a good deal of skirmishing with the Kaffirs, but no general engagement. The results do not appear to have been very important. The accounts mention 70 of the enemy as killed by Colonel Hare's division, and 57 by Sir A. Stockenstrom's, while the loss on our side is said not to amount to more than ten or twelve killed, and a few wounded. Both Colonel Somerset and Capt. Wright, Aide-de-Camp to the Lieutenant Governor, had been struck with spent balls, but not injured. A rather sharp affair took place on Sunday, Aug. 9th, between some Stellenbosch Burghers and the Kaffirs, in the notorious Kloof called Hell Poort. The handful of brave men were hemmed in by the Kaffirs in a narrow footpath. from both sides of which the savages poured upon them a deadly fire, and five fell mortally wounded. We learn by this arrival that Sir Cornwallis Rickets, of her Majesty's ship Helena, had recovered from his severe indisposition; but several of his crew were seriously ill in the hospital. We are also apprised of the death of Lieut. Lewes, 27th Regiment, at Fort Cox

The annexed is from the South African Commercial Advertiser of Aug. 19

"The latest intelligence from head-quarters is dated 7th August. The forces, estimated at 3000 infantry and 2000 horse, were moving in three columns on that district of rugged country at the sources of the Buffalo, where the main strength of the Gaika Kaffirs is supposed to be concentrated. A few days more will settle this point. In the meantime, it is reported that a body of Kaffirs are attempting to interpose themselves between the troops and the colony, with the view of intercepting convoys, and acting by small parties on various parts of the frontier. In this last they have been, unhappily, successful; for, though their parties generally suffer great loss in killed and wounded, they have carried off great numbers of cattle and sheep, and the loss of life on the side of the colonists has been unusually severe—five brave young men of the Stellenbosch levy having fallen in one skirmish. At the above date, the General was encamped on the Buffalo Mountains On the 5th, Colonel Somerset left head-quarters to co-operate with Colonel Hare, in a movement on the Kaffirs in the Amatola. Very little seems to have been done by the troops. Colonel Somerset was expected at Fort Peddie. All the troop horses were to be sent there, being quite unfit for service. The General, it is stated, was going into winter quarters in Kreili's country."

THE RIVER PLATE.

Important despatches have been received from the River Plate, by the Ipswich, which left Monte Video on the 27th of August. The despatches are said to be from Mr. Hood.

The Ipswich bring dates from Monte Video to the 27th, and from Buenos Ayres to the 20th of August. Mr. Hood had arranged everything satisfactorily both with the Buenos Ayres Government and General Oribe; but it is stated that the late Ministers, Messrs. Ouseley and Deffaudis, appeared to be throwing every obstacle in the way of a final settlement, and consequently there were some doubts as to an immediate peace.

The following is an extract of a private letter dated Monte Video, August 26:—"Mr. Hood is said to have fulfilled his object here, and it now rests with the Ministers to carry out his work, which they do reluctantly. The Stephen Wright, laden with guano, had been wrecked on Flores, previously to the 23d of August; [illegible] ship George IV had arrived at Monte Video in distress, from Patagonia, [illegible]ed, would be condemned. The Mars would bring her cargo to England."

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

THE CITY AUTHORITIES AND THE PRICE OF FOOD.

At a Court of Aldermen held on Tuesday, Sir C. Marshall presented a petition from the baker who is serving the contract to supply the City prisons with bread. It stated, "that in consequence of the failure of the potato crop, which caused so unlooked-for an advance in the price of flour (nearly £1 per sack, and a further advance expected), the price to the petitioner now serving amounted to little more than half the price now charged for bread at many bakers' shops in London, in consequence of which he daily lost to a considerable amount, and he prayed that the Court would take the matter into consideration, and allow him an advanced price, so that he might be able to supply bread of the quality he would wish to keep up, and at the same time to lessen the great loss he was sustaining." Sir C. Marshall thought the application was a very reasonable one under the well-known existing circumstances of the high price of the commodity, and the fact that the petitioner, as well as his father, had performed every contract they had taken perfectly to the satisfaction of the City authorities.

Alderman Farebrother said he was anxious to do all in his power to remove the impression which had been very generally made, that a failure to a very fearful extent had taken place in the potato crop and in the corn crop. He knew from the best authority that the grossest exaggerations had been made in the condition of these two articles of food, no doubt by parties interested in raising the prices for the purpose of deriving an unreasonable profit from the panic which the apprehension of famine would naturally excite. (Hear, hear) It was cruel to excite alarm of the kind. The corn would prove to be, according to information procured from those well qualified to judge, an undoubted average crop, and the growth of potatoes, which was spoken of with such despair, would turn out to be very different from the public expectation. The fact was, that immense quantities of potatoes were kept back from the market last year until they were completely spoiled, in consequence of the calculations of the monopolists His object in rising to speak was not to diminish any claim which the petitioner might have upon the consideration of the Court, but to prevent it going forth to the world that scarcity was expected without accompanying the statement with his denial. (Hear, hear.)

Alderman Lucas said he thought it was reasonable in people, when they found that the price of grain and other necessaries of life had risen all over Europe, to feel some alarm for themselves. (Hear, hear) For his part, he hoped there would be enough for all; but certainly his opinion was, that the cultivation of the soil did not bear a fair proportion to the increase of the population. (Hear, hear.)

Sir P. Laurie said, that Alderman Farebrother and he had been lately visiting the Corporation estates in Yorkshire, and they had ascertained that one farm had not one bad potato upon it. (Hear, hear.) The crops were very large. It would be found, upon the authority of the Edinburgh Review, that double the ordinary quantity of corn had resulted from the agricultural cultivation.

Alderman Challis said, it appeared to him that the present question was not famine to the community, but famine to the contractor and his family. (A laugh.)

Sir Chapman Marshall said he did not apprehend a famine, but he thought that the unexpected dearness of food gave a claim to the petitioner. (Hear, hear.)

The petition was then referred to the Gaol Committee.

New Hall at the Mansion-house.—A number of workmen were recently engaged at the Mansion-house, for the purpose of constructing a new entrance-hall, the present one having been found, by the hospitable Lord Mayor, much too confined for properly receiving his numerous guests. The preparations having been completed, Wednesday was appointed for laying the foundation-stone, the ceremony having been performed by his Lordship, assisted by Alderman Moon. The new entrance will be a very capacious one, situate about five or six yards from the present hall.

New Stock and Share Exchange.—A meeting of the members of this society took place on Tuesday at the Royal Exchange, for the election of a board of management, and the adoption of certain rules and regulations for the guidance of the members of the society

Improvements in the City.—The re-paving of Cheapside with granite, which has rendered that great thoroughfare—the most crowded in the metropolis—almost impassable for several weeks, is now nearly concluded. The houses in the neighbourhood of the Royal Exchange, which are about to be taken down for the purpose of allowing that handsome structure to be seen to greater advantage, are expected to be wholly removed in less than a fortnight, when that part of the City will present a very different appearance from what it has hitherto done. Great progress has been made in the work of pulling down the houses westward of the Hall of Commerce. Another great improvement talked of, is the erection of a handsome viaduct extending from Snow-hill to the top of Holborn-hill.

Subterranean Electric Telegraph in London.—Some interest has been excited in the scientific world and the several railway companies whose lines run into the metropolis, by the announcement that the Electric Telegraph Company intend forthwith to establish a central telegraph station in the Strand, by means of which communication will be obtained from one point to all parts of the country. The extension of the telegraph on the South-Western Railway will be first commenced Mr. Hatcher, the company's engineer, attended a meeting of the Lambeth vestry, a few evenings ago, for the purpose of explaining the route it will take through the streets of the district. After leaving the terminus at Nine Elms, it will pass through Kennington lane and road, Oakley-street, Waterloo road, over the bridge, and thence to the station in the Strand. The plan proposed to carry out this extraordinary project is as follows: In the first place the wires will undergo a process of cooling, so as to preserve them; they then will be fixed in metal tubing, which will be laid underground about 18 inches from the surface. Every quarter of a mile proving posts, which in size and appearance will be similar to the present street posts, will be erected, thereby ensuring the proper connection of the wires. On the sites being fixed the telegraph will forthwith be laid down. In the course of three months it is anticipated that it will be completed. A much longer period, however, will transpire ere the wires on the other lines are extended. Latterly the Government have directed the company's officers to report the practicability of extending the "main" telegraph to the principal Government depots. The result has not as yet been ascertained.

Another Rise in the Price of Bread. On Tuesday, the bakers in the metropolis again advanced the price of the 4lb loaf one halfpenny. The price of what is termed the best bread is now by most of the full-priced bakers charged at 11d per loaf of 4lb, though some charge but 10d., the lowest price is 9d. These prices are upwards of one-fourth higher than twelve months since Temperance in the Metropolis.—On Monday evening, the ninth anniversary of the Walworth and Camberwell Total Abstinence Society was celebrated by a public meeting in the School Room, Newington. The meeting was most numerously and respectably attended. The Rev. W. W. Robinson, M.A., presided. The report stated that 400 persons had joined the Society, and that amongst these were several of the most inveterate drunkards in the district; that 500,000 persons in Great Britain were notorious drunkards; that no less than £60,000,000 were spent annually in intoxicating drinks; and that 50,000,000 of bushels of grain were used to manufacture them, and that at a period, too, when one of the great articles of human sustenance had been destroyed, and thousands were on the verge of famine. Resolutions to support the Society, and promote the cause of total abstinence, were agreed to.

Mortality in the Metropolis.—The total number of deaths within the bills of mortality in the week ending on Saturday last was 821 a number which exhibits a favourable contrast to the average either of the last five autumns or of the last five years The autumn average is not less than 1000 deaths weekly, and the average of five years, including, of course, the more healthy seasons, is 968. A decrease is to be observed in the number of deaths under most of the heads under which the rate of mortality is registered. In epidemic diseases the actual mortality is 166, the autumn average 206; in sporadic diseases, the decrease is from 104 to 91; in diseases of the brain, from 151 to 130; of the lungs, from 313 to 230. In those complaints which affect the stomach and other organs of digestion, however, there is an increase of deaths from 70 to 82.

COUNTRY NEWS.

Postponement of the Opening of the Bedford Railway.—This line, which branches off from the North Western at the Bletchley Station, was to have been opened in due form by a party of Directors and their friends on Monday. On a careful inspection of the whole line since its completion, it was however discovered that one of the embankments had suffered a slight depression, in consequence of heavy floods, or some other proximate cause, and being fully alive to the high importance of securing the safety as well as the pleasure of their guests and future customers, the Directors very judiciously postponed the celebration, until the faults referred to had been cured.

Meeting at Norwich for the Repeal of the Malt-Tax.—On Saturday last, a meeting of the tenant-farmers of Norfolk was held in Norwich to hear a deputation from the "Total Repeal Malt-Tax Association," explain the principles and objects of that Society, and express their opinions upon the subject. The meeting was numerously and respectably attended. Mr. Lemon was called to the chair. The result was, that the meeting unanimously resolved to co-operate cordially with the Central Committee, in carrying out the objects of the Association. This was the first of a series of meetings of the same kind about to be held in the agricultural districts.

Snow in the Country.—Skiddaw, Helvellyn, and Scawfell, have all been capped with snow within the past week.—Cumberland Pacquet

Cruelty to a Pauper at Haverhill, Suffolk.—In our paper last week, we gave an account of the death of a poor man named Webb, an imbecile inmate of the Risbridge Union. Various acts of cruelty were alleged against a man named Slater. Sir John Walsham, an Assistant Poor Law Commissioner, was consequently sent down to collect evidence upon the subject. The result was, that at the close of the proceedings on Wednesday, Sir John Walsham gave his opinion that Slater had acted very improperly to the paupers under his charge. He (the Assistant Commisioner) should therefore submit the case to the Board of Guardians of the Union, and if they would not proceed against Slater, he should feel it his duty to do so himself.

The Gun-Cotton.—An English surgeon, Mr. Thomas Taylor, has discovered that the gun cotton can be made with equal parts of nitric acid and sulphuric acid. The cotton, when immersed in this mixture, quickly becomes whiter, more opaque, and loses its elasticity. After having assumed this appearance, which it does in the course of a few minutes, it is to be taken out and well washed in water, to remove the slightest trace of acid. It may then be squeezed in a linen cloth, dried, and carded. Thus prepared, the cotton differs very little in appearance from ordinary cotton, except that it is more harsh to the feel. On the application of an ignited body, it explodes, without leaving the slightest residue, as well as readily when struck by a hammer, and could be fired over gunpowder without igniting the latter.

THE GUN-COTTON.

HOWEVER much we may have thought of gunpowder and its explosive powers, we find that they are all about to be cast into the shade by a newly discovered agent. We allude to the Gun-Cotton of Professor Schönbein

It is terrible to contemplate the effects of what we had hitherto considered such a very harmless article. Being "laid by in cotton" is now equivalent to sitting on a barrel of gunpowder by the fireside. Real percussion caps to be worn at night, will go off with a bang at certain hours, and blow the person adopting them out of bed. Aurists will find it an admirable cure for deafness to put gun-cotton in their patients' ears, and then box them. And every young lady's workbox will become a mine, to be sprung upon the slightest hurry in shutting down the lid, blowing reels, scissors, and thimbles, high in the air. Soldiers will be furnished with so many rounds of skeins, instead of cartridges, before going into engagements; and, if pressed for ammunition, may use their very shirts and stockings: and gentlemen about to settle affairs of honour will take out balls of cotton instead of bullets. In fine, sportsmen may now have powder and wadding all in one; and "the thread of death" will be spoken of as about to be cut off, instead of its long used antithesis.

Nursery education will be entirely changed, and children will be severely blown up if they play with reels or winders surrounded by the dangerous substance. The consumption of wool, in fireworks alone, will be something enormous. Thread papers will be turned into crackers, cotton-wicks will convert the simplest moulds into Roman candles: Jacks in the work box will be found on every table; reels will make the Catharine wheels: and every knot will form a little Maroon: whilst cheap handkerchiefs will be used, not merely to blow the nose on, but, perhaps, to blow it off.

We propose that all trimming shops and milliners' houses should be insured as doubly hazardous—that no needle-work be allowed by candle-light: and that long cloth magazines be built expressly to guard against danger, as those for powder are at present.

As cotton enters so largely into the formation of numerous domestic articles, there is no telling what a pitch of explosiveness me may ultimately arrive at. This very sheet may detonate with a bang, whilst the "constant reader" is enjoying it at the fireside; mail-bags will spontaneously burst: and, even bank-notes may go off much quicker than they have been long known to do. In fact, just at this present time, one violent, sudden, and utter annihilation appears to stare the world in the face. We again caution all to be on their guard, as to how they handle

AN OPERATIC ECLOGUE,

IN ENGLISH RHYMING HEXAMETERS.

Lumleius, of the Market. Bealæus, of the Garden.

My Massa's name was Beale.—Lucy Neal.

BEALÆUS.

Lumleius! thou, 'neath thy own colonnade, Just detain'd by the weather:
Ho! man, arise! Hast thou heard of the troupe I've collected together?

LUMLEIUS.

Papers have hinted of powerful forces about to oppose me;
Yea, but from fear I don't tremble you'll hear so from each one that knows me.
Oh! my Bealæus! I shudder to think of the mull you will make on't.

BEALÆUS.

How! dost suppose I would e'er risk a mull, with so heavy a stake on't?
Doth it not strike thee that people will flock, at a crown, to my wickets?
Dost thou not dread they will all cease to buy eight-and-sixpenny tickets?

LUMLEIUS.

No, not at all; I can picture each stall most deserted and lonely;
None will subscribe to go night after night for an opera only.
What! dost thou think they will come to thy house if thou hast not a ballet?
Hop'st thou to find all the Lords about town in the Omnibus rally?
Lov'd are the flaunts of the gauze petticoats of the fairy Cerito;
Matchless her bold rondes des jambes, and the points of her airy and free toe.
Thronged are the doors when they look for the legs of the lovely Carlotta, Bought are the casts that they sell of her form, either plaster or cotta.
Loud are the shouts at the antelope Grahn, or the fair Taglioni;
Courted each style, whether Real and plump, or Ideal and bony.

BEALÆUS.

All very true, but it's widely confess'd, that the ballet's expensive.

LUMLEIUS.

Yes! that I know. but the furor it makes is immensely extensive.
Families staid, or of high or low grade, than whom none could be prop'rer,
Music adore, but—the ballet no more—would'nt come to the Op'ra.

BEALÆUS.

Well! you will see, they will all flock to me: you'll be call'd an imposter—
Have I not Grisi and all, save Lablache, with the powerful Costa.
What do I care, though the Court isn't there? Folks may deem it a pity;
But all the gold from the West don't weigh more than the gold from the City.

LUMLEIUS.

Mighty is Bunn, and his corps is the one, if there's money, to bring it.
Wallace and Co. will write music, you know: Anna Bishop will sing it.
Fabbri, his pride: and Fuoco beside, who is graceful and pretty,
Turning the brains of Parisian swains in the ballet of "Betty."
You'll to the wall—

BEALÆUS.

Oh, pooh! pooh! not at all. But to quarrel I'm loth now
Dost thou not think in our different lines there is room for us both now?
May the best man do the best: with Italians, or Germans, or Flemings.

LUMLEIUS.

True, my Bealæus; come let us imbibe Sherry-cobler at Hemming's.

[They cross to the Cáfe de l'Europe.

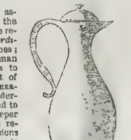
UNIVERSITY INTELLIGENCE.

Now that Term has commenced, and the 'Undergrads' at the different college, are beginning to coach for what the dons call their responsions and examinations we, who are not of the Universities, beg to present our Oxford and Cambridge readers with our own notions of the "Little Go" and "Great Go" most popular at the seats of learning.

A LITTE GO.



A GREAT GO.

Mr. Straggles, of Oxford, assures us that he has passed the Great Go—which, as we have represented, is filled with Cardinal and Bishop several times; that is to say, to the gentleman on his left. He also begs to add, in a miserable spirit of punning, that the gin which the artful examiner sets to entrap the weak-minded undergrad in his little go, is not to be compared to the gin which the intelligent innkeeper measures out in the same vehicle. The remainder of his letter is filled with six allusions to "wining in my rooms," and thirteen to "having a weed with a man;" from which we infer that such is the conventional hilarity of the University 'gents,' if such classes there, be in those time-honoured academies.

The Fine Arts in Bavaria.—On the 12th instant the King of Bavaria laid the first stone of the new Pinacotheca, or Gallery of Modern Paintings, which he is about to erect at his own expense, and into which no picture is to be admitted that was painted before the commencement of the present century. On placing the stone, his Majesty delivered a short but impressive address, in which he said that the art of painting in its highest acceptation had become dead, but had been revived in the nineteenth century by the Germans; and that not painting alone, but all the plastic arts, had raised their noble heads. He added that the arts ought not to be treated as mere luxurious indulgences, but should be used to perpetuate all that occurs in the history of a nation worthy of being transmitted to posterity. The labours of statesmen would, he said, quickly pass away and be forgotten, did not those of great artists perpetuate them. With the stone were deposited the plan of the building engraved on stone, the charter of the establishment on porcelain, the portrait of the King, and 36 Bavarian coins and medals

Important Change in Omnibus Travelling—On Wednesday a number of omnibuses commenced running between the Bank and Paddington and intermediate stations for the conveyance of passengers at the low rate of one penny per mile. Several were also started from the Strand to Paddington, the charge being twopence the entire distance.

Immense Trains. Two luggage trains passed by the Rugby station on Saturday last, on the London and North Western Railway, one of which consisted of 96 carriages, containing nearly 400 tons of goods, impelled by one of Stephenson's six-wheel engines, and two others; the other train consisted of 84 carriages, and contained 384 tons of merchandise, &c., drawn likewise by three engines. The length of the first train was upwards of a quarter of a mile.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED.

SIR BROOK TAYLOR.

The Right Hon. Sir Brook Taylor, G.C.H., died at his residence in Eaton-place, on the 15th inst, after a short illness. He was next brother of the late Sir Herbert Taylor, being third son of the Rev. Edward Taylor, of Bifrons, in Kent, by Margaret, his wife, sister of Thomas Watkinson Payler, Esq.; and derived his descent from a most respectable family, settled at an early period in Shropshire. The first ancestor resident in Kent was John Taylor, Esq., son of Nathaniel Taylor, Esq, M.P. for Bedfordshire, and Recorder of Colchester during the usurpation of Cromwell. He married Olivia, daughter of Sir Nicholas Tempest, Bart., and had two sons, Brook Taylor, D.C.L., F.R.S., a distinguished mathematician, and the Rev. Herbert Taylor, of Bifrons, grandfather of the gentleman whose death we record.

Sir Brook Taylor was born in 1776, and at an early age began his career as Private Secretary to Lord Grenville, then Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs. He commenced his diplomatic services as Minister at Hesse Cassel, and shortly after represented his Sovereign at the Court of Wurtemberg. Subsequently, he was appointed Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary at Munich; and finally acted in the same important capacity at the Court of Berlin. In 1822, while Envoy to Bavaria, he received from George IV. the Grand Cross of the Guelphic Order; and in 1828, being then in Prussia, he was nominated a member of the Privy Council. Ill-health, at length, compelled him in 1831 to resign his important office; and from that period he did not again enter on public service. Until his death, the right hon. gentleman enjoyed a pension. He never married.

This gentleman, the possessor of a large landed estate, and patron of seven livings, died on the 10th inst. He was born 12th September, 1789, the second son of Sir Gregory Turner, Bart., who assumed the additional surname of Page in succeeding to the fortune of his grand-uncle, Sir Gregory Page, Bart., of Wricklemarsh, in Kent. Both families, Turner and Page, owed their position to success in commercial pursuits, and the ancestors of both were influential members of the East India Direction. John Turner, Esq., the second son of Sir Edward Turner, Bart., of Ambrosden, married Elizabeth Dryden, great great grand-daughter of John Dryden, the poet, and, adopting his wife's surname, was grandfather of Sir Henry Edward Leigh Dryden, the present Baronet of Canons Ashby. Sir Edward Page Turner, to whom this notice refers, was nephew of Mr. Turner, who took the name of Dryden. He succeeded to the Baronetcy at the decease of his brother, Sir Gregory, in 1843, and the title now descends to Edward Henry, his eldest son and heir.

BENJAMIN DEALTRY, ESQ., OF LOFTHOUSE HALL, CO. YORK.

Mr. Dealtry, a Magistrate for the West Riding of Yorkshire, and for the shire of Lincoln, possessed property to a considerable amount in those northern counties, partly inherited from his father, the late James Dealtry, Esq., of Gainsborough, and partly acquired by his marriage with Catherine, daughter and heiress of Ralph Hanson, Esq, of Ford House, Devon. This lady's mother, Martha Procter, was elder sister of Catherine, Countess of Effingham, and represented the ancient Yorkshire families of Procter and Gascoigne of Thorp.

Mr. Dealtry's death occurred on the 12th instant, at his residence, Great Gransden House, Cambridgeshire. He has left two daughters, Catherine and Dinah; and one brother, the present Rev. George Nicholas Dealtry, M.A., Rector of Stoke, and Vicar of Hinckley, Leicestershire.

LADY LIVERPOOL.

Mary, Countess Dowager of Liverpool, was the daughter of Charles Chester, Esq.; the niece of William, first Lord Bagot; and the second wife of the Prime Minister, Robert Jenkinson, second Earl of Liverpool, who died the 4th December, 1828, without having had issue by either of his marriages. Lady Liverpool was born on the 24th June, 1777; and was wedded to the Earl the 24th September, 1822. Her Ladyship died suddenly, of disease of the heart, on the 18th instant, at Norbiton Hall, Kingston, Surrey, aged 69.

Death of the Hon. Harriot Grimston.—We have to announce the decease of the Hon. Harriot Grimston, who expired at an early hour on Sunday morning, at her residence in Upper Grosvenor-street, in her 70th year. The deceased was the only surviving sister of the late Earl of Verulam.

M Ouvrard, the celebrated French financier, died somewhat suddenly, on Thursday afternoon. A fine Portrait of "this Napoleon of Finance," as M. Ouvrard has been styled, accompanied by an interesting memoir of his eventful life, will be found in No. 202 of the Illustrated London News.

The Wellington Statue.—The whole of the scaffold is removed, so that the statue can now be viewed distinctly.

The Evangelical Alliance—The committee appointed by the recent great conference in London, "to ascertain and convene the members of the Alliance, in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, in order to form the British organisation, at a time and place to be determined by them, have fixed upon Manchester as the place, and Wednesday, the 4th of November, as the time for that purpose.

THE ROYAL MARRIAGES IN SPAIN.

Last week we stated that the Royal marriages were solemnised at half-past ten o'clock at night on the 10th instant, at the Royal Palace in Madrid. We have since received copious and interesting details of the ceremony.

Before the entrance of the Queen and Royal Family, the following arrangements were made by the masters of the ceremonies. On the right of the Throne were placed five chairs, destined for the Infanta Luisa Fernanda, the Duke de Montpensier's intended; the Infante Francisco de Paula, the Infante Francisco de Paula Antonio, the Infante Francisco de Assis, the Queen's bridegroom, and the Dukes d'Aumale and Montpensier.

On the left of the Throne, and a little distance from it, stood a sumptuous altar surmounted by a cross; upon it lay the insignia of the Patriarch of the Indies. On its right were ranged the six honorary chaplains of the Queen, to assist that prelate.

Behind, and a little to the right of the Throne, the Chiefs of the Palace, the Intendent General of the Royal Household, and the General Commandant of the Albaderos, or Body Guard, stationed themselves in their State uniforms.

In a line with the chairs destined for the Infantes, and on their right, were the seats of the Grandees of Spain, their eldest sons, the Cabinet Ministers, the Presidents of the Senate and Congress, with a deputation of twelve individuals from each, and behind them were located the Gentiles Hombres de Casa y Boca

On the left of the Throne were stationed the Ladies of Honour and the French Ambassadress, and, beyond, the Archbishop of Toledo and Barcelona, and the Bishops of Salamanca and Pampeluna, with their respective chaplains, with a Commission of the Royal Council.

Facing the Throne were the foreign diplomatic corps and the Introducer of Ambassadors, with a crowd of palace functionaries, Generals, and the Political Chief and Alcalde of Madrid, and Ladies in Waiting, &c. Beyond stood the senior officers of the Royal Body Guard, the First Alcalde of the Palace taking his station on the right of the grand entrance, and the suites of the French Princes on the left.

The Queen and her sister were richly dressed in white.

Don Francisco de Assis wore the rich uniform of a Field Marshal, which was understood to have been a present to him from the Queen-Mother. He was decorated with the insignia of the Golden Fleece and the Grand Cross of the Legion of Honour.

The Dukes of Montpensier and d'Aumale were dressed in the uniform of French Generals, and they also wore the Collar of the Golden Fleece and the Grand Cross of the Legion of Honour.

The Queen and her sister were given in marriage by their mother, and the same office was rendered by Don Francisco to his son. The Duke d'Aumale acted as father to the Duke of Montpensier The witnesses on the part of Spain were, Cartanos Duke of Bailen, and the Dukes of Castroterreno and Rianzares; on the part of France, the Duke d'Aumale, M. Bresson, and Baron Athalin, Peer of France

The officiating Prelate commenced his functions by saying :—"Señora Doña Isabella II. of Bourbon, Catholic Queen of Spain, I demand of your Majesty, and of your Highness, Serene Sir, Don Francisco de Assis Maria de Bourbon, Infante of Spain, in case you know of any impediments to this present marriage, and why it could not and ought not to be contracted that is to say, if there exist between your Majesty and Highness impediments of consanguinity, affinity, or spiritual relationship, independently of those impediments that have been dispensed with by his Holiness—if you have made vows which prevent it—and, finally, if there exist impediments of any other kind—that you forthwith declare them. The same I demand of all here present. For the second and third time I make the same demand, that you freely discover any impediment you are aware of."

THE SPANISH MARRIAGES.—MADRID.

THE VELACION.

After some moments of silence, no one replying, the Prelate addressed the Queen thus:—"Senora Donna Isabella II. of Bourbon, Catholic Queen of Spain, do you wish for your spouse and husband, as the Holy Catholic, Apostolic, and Roman Church directs, Don Francisco de Assis Maria de Bourbon, Infante of Spain?"

The Queen kissed her mother's hand, and, being again asked the same question by the Bishop, replied, "Yes, I wish."

He then said, "Does your Majesty give yourself as spouse and wife to his Serene Highness Don Francisco de Assis Maria de Bourbon?"

The Queen answered, "I do."

"Does your Majesty receive and accept the said Infante Don Francisco de Assis Maria de Bourbon, for your spouse and husband?"

"Yes, I receive and accept."

The Bishop then addressed the Infante.

"Most Serene Sir, Don Francisco de Assis Maria de Bourbon, Infante of Spain, does your Highness wish for spouse and lawful wife Her Majesty Isabella II, of Bourbon, Catholic Queen of Spain, as the Holy Roman Catholic and Apostolic Church directs?"

The Prince answered, "Yes, I wish."

"Does your Highness give yourself," &c.—"Yes, I do."

"Does your Highness receive and accept, as your spouse and lawful wife, Donna Isabella II. of Bourbon, Catholic Queen of Spain?"

"Yes, I do receive and accept."

Then joining the hands of the Queen and Infante, and taking his crozier, the Bishop repeated, in a slow and solemn voice, "And I, on the part of Almighty God and of the happy Apostles, St. Peter and St. Paul, and of our Holy Mother Church, join in matrimony your Majesty Senora Donna Isabella II., of Bourbon, Catholic Queen of Spain, and your Royal Highness Don Francisco de Assis Maria of Bourbon; and this sacrament of matrimony I confirm in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. Amen."

He then sprinkled holy water on the heads of the Queen and Prince, and performed the same ceremony—its words only varying according to the different ranks of the parties for the Infanta and the Duke de Montpensier.

This concluded the ceremony, and immediately after, Queen Christina, who was observed to raise her handkerchief to her eyes more than once during its continuance, embraced her daughters, and kissed the Duke de Montpensier and the Infante Francisco de Assis upon the forehead; at the same time the brides and bridegooms received the congratulations of the Royal Family, and the Queen and her sister retired with their husbands.

The religious ceremony customary on the marriage of the Kings of Spain, called the velacion, took place on Sunday, the 11th instant, agreeably to the programme. At twelve o'clock the Royal Family left the Palace for the church of Atocha. The Patriarch of the Indies, attended by the Royal chaplains, awaited her Majesty at the entrance, in cope, mitre, and crosier in hand. As soon as the Royal personages arrived, he laid aside the crosier, and pronounced a blessing of welcome. The term Velacion, which gives its name to the ceremony, comes either from velo, the scarf or veil which is placed on the heads of the newly-married during the recital of the prayers; or from vela, the wax taper held in the right hands of the bride and bridegroom, and the witnesses.

"All the houses on the passage of the cortège," says a French letter, "were adorned with flags and presented a gay appearance, except one—the hotel of the Minister of England. In the morning Mr. Bulwer was seen in a job-coach, wrapped up in his cloak, which covered him up to his eyes."

The Madrid Gazette of the 12th contains a decree of the Queen, conferring the honorary title of King upon her husband, Don Francisco de Assis. The decree states that the King is to take no part in the affairs of the Government. The Gazette also publishes a Royal decree, conferring upon the son of Count Bresson (a child ten months old) the rank of Grandee of Spain of the first class, with the title of Duke de Santa Isabel, for him and his successors.

The Queen went on the 12th in state to the Theatre of La Cruz. On her right hand sat the Queen-Mother; and on her left the husband, Don Francisco de Assis. The Infanta and the Duke of Montpensier were also present, as well as the family of Don Francisco de Paula. The house was crowded in every part. The public edifices were again illuminated, as well as the private residences of some of the Government officers. The illuminations, otherwise, were very few. Groups of dancers in fanciful costumes paraded the streets the whole of the day, many wearing the picturesque dress of the provinces. They performed national dances on platforms raised in various parts of the city.

The Court papers state that not less than two thousand persons attended the "Besa-Manos" at the Palace, on the 12th, and that, among them, there had been several leading men of the Progresista party, such as Generals Ferraza and San Miguel, and MM. Sancho, Quintana, Onis, &c. Mr. Bulwer was also present. According to a letter of Orleanist origin, on passing, in his turn, before the Queen and the Duchess de Montpensier, he respectfully exchanged some words with them. The following is the Espanol's version: "The presence of the British Minister at the Queen's "Besa-Manos," among the other members of the corps diplomatique who were in her Majesty's apartment, excited the attention of the company, and gave rise to a thousand comments, which were very natural, since the representative of England had carefully abstained from figuring in any of the ceremonies where his presence might have been construed into an approbation of the Infanta's marriage. Thus, although invited by the introducer of Ambassadors to attend the two marriages, he had abstained from doing so; but, in the invitation addressed to him by the same functionary, on the eve of the "Besa-Manos," it was stated that her Majesty had ordered the ceremony on the occasion of her happy marriage. It is to this circumstance that the presence of the English Minister is ascribed; and it was said that he had thereby wished to give fresh proof of his Government's approbation of the Queen's marriage This was confirmed by Mr. Bulwer's conduct, which several persons in the Royal apartment observed. He again congratulated her Majesty on her marriage, but paid not the same compliment to the Infanta; and when her Highness inquired after the health of his Sovereign, he merely replied that her Majesty Queen Victoria was very well, and added nothing more.

The Madrid journals of the 14th inst. state that on the previous day the Royal Family were all assembled at the bull fights. The French Princes appeared to take great pleasure in this entertainment. In the evening the Royal party went to the Theatre del Principe. On the 14th, the Queen, Don Francisco, the Duke and Duchess of Montpensier, and the Duke d'Aumale, left Madrid for the Escurial and La Ganja. The Ministers were engaged in discussing the terms of the proposed amnesty, and were said to be by no means unanimous in their opinions. On this subject, El Clamor Publico states, "a journal announces that the Infanta Luisa will not remain long in Paris, for the Queen has declared she cannot be long separated from her sister."

The Espectador states that, from advices received from the frontiers of Portugal, the counter-revolution had caused great dissatisfaction at Elvas and at Campomayor. A letter of the 10th, from Badajoz, states that on the morning of that day a heavy firing had been heard, and it was reported that the people on the frontier had risen, and demanded the revocation of the decrees of the Queen, and the restoration of the Constitution of 1820. It was added that two officers of the garrison at Elvas, and one of that of Campomayor, had been shot in the tumult which had taken place, and which was still going on.

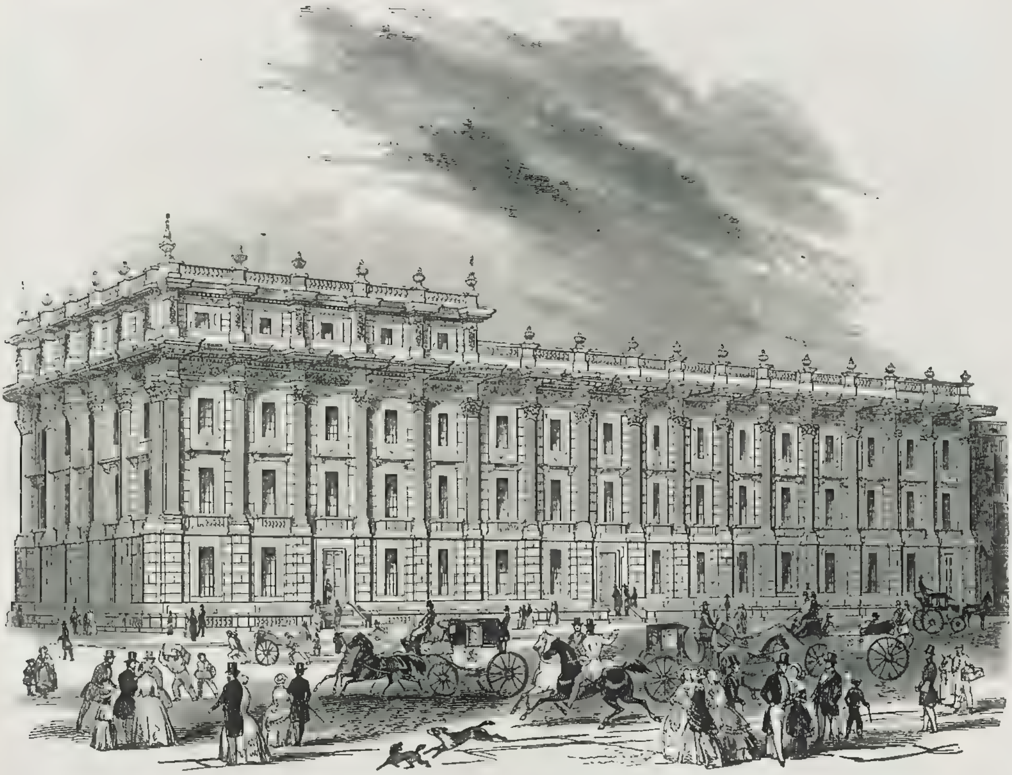
RECEPTION OF THE ROYAL PROCESSION.



THE NEW FAÇADE OF THE PRIVY COUNCIL OFFICE, WHITEHALL—DESIGNED BY BARRY

THE PRIVY COUNCIL OFFICE, WHITEHALL.

Now that Mr. Barry has completed his new façade of the Privy Council Office, as regards the Southern Wing, we cannot do better than present this portion to our readers, without waiting for the completion of the entire design.

Our active contemporary, The Builder, has the following admirable remarks and criticism upon the execution and taste of this highly embellished public work.—

"Little did Sir John think, when he finished his Privy Council Office in 1825 or 1826 (with the exception of the north wing), that the artistical part of it would so soon give place to the work of another; indeed, a much less partial witness, if appealed to, could scarcely have expected that such would be the case. So quietly and quickly, too, has it been done, that the public have been asked how they like the alteration, before they had inquired whether it was necessary or desirable. The want of greatly increased accommodation, and the required alteration of the line of front, appear conjointly to have led to it; and, unquestionably the metropolis is a considerable gainer in consequence.

"The front is exceedingly ornate above the ground-floor, and displays the carefulness in the details apparent in all Mr Barry's works. Attached Corinthian columns (a long series), on rusticated piers brought out from the front wall to receive them, carry a highly-enriched entablature, which is crowned in the centre portion of the composition by a balustrade. The wings have an attic story, terminated with a similar balustrade. An enriched frieze is introduced under the cornice of the attic, and on the face of the attic pilasters are carved 'drops' of fruit and flowers. The pedestals in the balustrade carry urn-shaped vases; those at the angles of the wings are more lofty than the others. The entablature breaks over every column, as does the attic cornice over the pilasters; and with the piers on which the columns stand, the pilasters, pedestals, and vases, give that predominance to the vertical line which obtains in the greater number of Italian structures raised during or soon after the Revival, and which resulted almost necessarily, from the employment of adventitious columnar decoration.

"These numerous breaks in the entablature produce a certain degree of flutter, not altogether free from objection. A stronger ground of objection, however, for those who are anxious to cavil, is a want of unity. We do not mean to say it can be urged justly that the parts are in any degree discordant—quite the reverse; all are homogeneous, and in good agreement, but that it fails to point itself out as one public building. It may appear to the stranger to be a range of Government offices, or a series of private residences; and this we hold to be a failing; but then it is a failing which belongs rather to circumstances than to the architect."

The taking down of the old Treasury Offices has been commenced for the northern wing. The whole length of the front, when completed, will be 295 feet; the height of the centre part, 56 feet 6 inches; and of the wings, 67 feet 6 inches. The latter is made out thus:—

Height from pavement to base of column	18ft.	0 in.
" of columns	25	6
" entablature	7	6
" attic	11	0

RE-PAVING OF CHEAPSIDE.

The Wood-pavement, ever unpopular in the City, has just been removed from the roadway of Cheapside; and its place supplied by granite, grouted with concrete, nearly as was done in the streets of Pompeii, upwards of 2000 years since.

The taking up of the Wood gave rise to many a ludicrous scene. It was notified that the blocks might be taken away by such persons as chose to fetch it; and, accordingly, there was many a "robustious struggle" and scramble for the eleemosynary fuel. Our Artist has grouped one of these incidents; and, thus, with the distance of his picture, he has recorded a great change, we hope an improvement, in one of the main arteries of the metropolis, through which daily pours the life-stream of its vast trade. In re-paving this roadway, only one half of the thoroughfare has been stopped at a time: this is an improvement upon the old plan; but, surely, some still better mode might be devised, by which the public convenience might not be so materially interfered with.

The citizens, by the way, have devoted unceasing solicitude to the paving, cleansing, and lighting of their streets, from the date of their earliest records There is a very ancient precept to keep the carriage-ways, such as they were, from being absolutely destroyed; for which purpose it was ordered that "no carts shod with sprig-nails" should come upon them; and that "no carts or cars using daily carriage in the City should have wheels shod with iron, but bare, under pain of six shillings." Of course, this expenditure must be provided for; thence the prescriptive tolls, which are still taken at the several gates, bars, or entrances, into the City and liberties; though the objects for which they appear to have been always levied have long been otherwise provided for.

The paving in our times is a very costly item of the City Expenditure. In the year ending September, 1844, the expense of paving and repairing the City Pavement was £20,706 5s.; and the wages to workmen for breaking and dressing stone, £901 5s. 9d.

"A Subscriber and Constant Reader," Dublin. The Railway intelligence to which our Correspondent alludes would intrench too much upon our general space, and would be more appropriate for a Railway Paper. It would be impracticable to give the prices of all Railway Shares, many of which are merely nominal. Those quoted are the last dealt in, and are selected as representing most truly the existing state of the Market. The line complained of as omitted is quoted in our last Number.

Agricultural Pictures—Thatching.—We have received several letters alleging that our Picture of "Thatching" is incorrect, in the Thatcher beginning at the top of the roof instead of the bottom. We have received from our Artist the following explanation: The Scene was sketched at Fleet Farm, near Farnborough, Hants. The cart is laden with heath; the man on the barn is putting on a layer of heath preparatory to the layer of straw. Heath is constantly used for this purpose, as it is more economical than straw; and, in such case, only a top layer of straw is wanted. The heath is commenced at top.

⁂ A few Replies are deferred for want of space.

Her Majesty's Visit to Hatfield.—Next week we shall Illustrate, in a series of Superb Engravings, the Queen's Visit to Hatfield House, Views of the principal Apartments, with the Restorations for the Royal Visit, &c.—The best account of this noble Palace will be found in Mr. Robinson's excellent "Vitruvius Britannicus;" with splendid plates, by Shaw.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON ALMANACK.
With the November Magazines will be published, price 1s., gilt edges,

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON ALMANACK,
AND PICTURESQUE CALENDAR FOR 1847

This ALMANACK is submitted to the Public by the Proprietors, with confidence of its superiority over its predecessors. The Work was commenced in 1845, with a view of furnishing a Repository of Useful Knowledge of permanent value, for constant reference, in Astronomy, Astronomical Occurrences, and the Natural History of the Year.

The ASTRONOMICAL DEPARTMENT has been placed entirely under the superintendence of JAMES GLAISHER, Esq., F.R.A.S., and of the Royal Observatory at Greenwich.

On the third page of each month is a series of tableaux of Memorable Events, carrying out in a true spirit what is usually and properly introduced into our Almanack; not for occasional reference only, but to cherish respect for these landmarks of British History.

The fourth page of each month is devoted to Natural History. The whole of this portion is from the very able pen of Mrs. LOUDON; and the interesting series of Illustrations to this department has been drawn and engraved by Miss LOUDON, under the immediate superintendence of Mrs. LOUDON.

The Calendar Illustrations are from the masterly pencil of WILLIAM HARVEY, and engraved in the first style of Art, by LINTON; illustrative of the National Sports.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 24, 1846.

Nothing is more hazardous than beginning to repair an old fabric; one change necessitates ten others that were but little anticipated. It is something the same with old systems; any change in them places other parts, yet untouched, in a new relation with the altered state of matters, and more extensive alterations can alone establish the necessary "fitness of things." Thus the partial revision of our Customs Tariff, by which the whole of the duties were abolished on a long list of articles, makes it more difficult to levy the duties on those articles on which they are enormously high. Between no duty at all, and one of 1200 per cent. on the value of the article, there is a difference so great that a door has been opened for fraud on an immense scale; those "Correctors of the Chancellor of the Exchequer," as Sir Robert Peel called them—the smugglers—have hit on an ingenious plan of playing one set of articles against another; and actually make the Custom House the most efficient agent in cheating itself. They disguise tobacco in the garb of "duty-free" goods, and it passes in through the very doors of the great fiscal barrier, unchallenged and untaxed. It is impossible to prevent smuggling in an article on which the duty is so immense as tobacco. The most vigilant Coast Guard is of little use against the inducements of large profits; but that the contraband trade should find it practicable to "do" the Custom House, without the collusion or connivance of the officers, is a marvel indeed. The practice has been exposed by a correspondent of a morning paper, and the statement is, as yet, therefore, only worth so much credit as it may derive from its probability; but a little consideration shows something of the sort to be at least possible, this being the explanation:—"Coincident with the liberation from duty of so many articles above alluded to, a reduction of the effective force at the Custom House took place, a proceeding perfectly natural and justifiable. The consequence has been, that little or no inspection takes place on the importation of duty-free articles, the revenue officers feel the impossibility of an effectual survey, and it is, therefore, imperfectly done or omitted altogether."

Of course the power of examining remains; but, practically, with respect to a great number and variety of articles, it has ceased to be exercised, or is exercised to an extent merely nominal. This is, no doubt, well known to those who watch such matters keenly, and the following is stated by the same authority to be the modus operandi:—

> The permanent revenue of the Customs, after all deductions have been made, mainly depends upon sugar, tea, tobacco, spirits, and wine. Three of these articles, viz., sugar, tea, and wine, are out of the reach of the smuggler; spirit is an article of difficult introduction; but tobacco may be, and it is, every day so ingeniously made to resemble most of the articles imported free of duty, or packed in the interior of those bulky articles to which it bears no resemblance, that the smuggler has found a more direct, a more secure, and a more economical channel than formerly for his trade, by passing his goods directly through the Custom-house; he has been relieved from all dread of seizure, of penalties, of imprisonments, and all the beautiful inventions of fiscal exaction, and has been enabled not only greatly to reduce the price of his article in the market, but so to methodise his imports as to insure a constant and never-failing supply.

An increase of vigilance may for a time check this practice; but, without an increase in the staff of the Custom House, it cannot be maintained, as there is quite enough to be done in examining those articles from which a revenue is derived; and relaxation in the degree of inspection will inevitably be followed by a revival of the fraud. It seems, then, impossible to unite two principles in our fiscal system—that of having no duties at all on some articles, and excessively high ones on others. The rule and the exception cannot be worked well together: the heavily-taxed product is disguised in the form of the tax-free commodity, and comes in under its name. It is another illustration of the certainty with which excessively high duties tend to defeat their object. The contraband trade in tobacco is great and increasing, and will soon force itself on the serious consideration of the Treasury, by whom the facts above stated should not be overlooked.

Victoria Park.—Since the accession of Lord Morpeth to office as Chief Commissioner of Woods and Forests, some important changes have been made in the plans for the completion of the Park. Amongst others, two portions, of about twelve acres at either end, are to be appropriated as cricket grounds, with which it is proposed to connect a gymnasium. A plan for the erection of a museum is also under the consideration of the Commissioners. The utmost vigour is now shown in the preparations for planting, which will, it is expected, be completed in the ensuing spring.

COURT AND HAUT TON.

MOVEMENTS OF THE COURT.

Upon the return of her Majesty and his Royal Highness Prince Albert to Windsor Castle, after honouring the Duke and Duchess of Norfolk with a visit, which is expected to terminate on Thursday, the 29th instant, the Court will remain at Windsor until after the 9th of next month, which will be the fifth anniversary of the birth of his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, on which occasion a grand entertainment will be given by her Majesty at the Castle, in celebration of the event. According to present arrangements, her Majesty and the Prince Consort will leave Windsor for the Isle of Wight within a few days after the 9th of November. The Court is expected to remain at Osborne House for about a fortnight or three weeks, should the weather at that late period of the autumn continue favourable. This will be her Majesty's last visit to Osborne House during the present year. The Court, on its return to Windsor, will remain at the Castle for the winter season.

Windsor, Thursday Evening.—(From our own Correspondent.)—The Duchess of Kent, attended by Lady Anna Maria Dawson, left Frogmore this morning, in a close travelling carriage and four, for Clarence House, St. James's. Her Royal Highness returned to Frogmore House this evening to dinner. The Royal Family were taken out for their usual airings this afternoon, attended by the Dowager Lady Lyttleton.

The Duchess of Gloucester.—Last Saturday, the Duchess of Gloucester paid a visit to Seaham. This port was constructed some years ago by the Marquis of Londonderry, at an enormous cost, for the purpose of shipping the produce of his numerous and extensive collieries in the neighbourhood. Her Royal Highness, who was a guest at Wynyard, was accompanied by the Marquis and Marchioness of Londonderry, the Marquis and Marchioness of Blandford, Viscount and Viscountess Seaham, Lord Adolphus Vane, Baron Brunnow, the Russian Minister, and several other distinguished individuals. Great preparations had been made for the reception of the illustrious Duchess. Her Royal Highness has since returned to her residence at Richmond.

Viscount and Viscountess Palmerston.—Viscount and Viscountess Palmerston arrived in town on Tuesday evening, from visiting Viscount Melbourne at Brocket Hall, near Hatfield. We hear that the noble Viscount and Viscountess do not return to Broadlands, Hants, until early in December. His Lordship has, we understand, taken Mr. A. Hope's mansion in Carlton gardens for a term.

Lord Brougham.—Lord Brougham has arrived at his seat, Cannes, in the south of France, where he intends to reside during the winter.

Aristocratic Marriage.—The marriage of Lady Charlotte Elizabeth Herbert, second daughter of the Earl and Countess of Powis, and Mr Hugh Montgomery, of Grey Abbey, county Antrim, son of the late Mr. William and Lady Amelia Montgomery, was solemnised on Tuesday, at St. George's, Hanover-square. The Earl and Countess of Powis gave a sumptuous déjeuner to the wedding party.

CHURCH, UNIVERSITIES, &c.

CAMBRIDGE. Oct. 21.

At a Congregation held this day, the following degrees were conferred:—

M.A.—George Smith Drew, St. John's College; Robert Whytehead, St. John's College; Robert Evelyn Roy, Corpus Christi College.

B.A.—Charles Edward Douglass, Trinity College; Frederick James Abbott, Corpus Christi College; Samuel Prince, Jesus College.

The following appointment has taken place:

The Rev. William Selwyn, M.A., of St. John's College, to the Vicarage of Melbourn, Cambridgeshire; Patron, Dean and Chapter of Ely; value, £250.

The Bishop of London's Charge.—The Lord Bishop of London delivered, on Monday, his triennial charge to the clergy of his diocese in St. Paul's Cathedral. There was a large number of the clergy present, and nearly all in the Archdeaconry of London. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Dr. M'Caul, from 3rd chap., 2nd Timothy. The usual formalities having been disposed of, the Right Rev. Prelate proceeded to deliver his charge, which was of great length. He commenced by expressing his regret that the recommendations contained in his last charge had not been more generally carried out. He confessed that to the propriety of those recommendations he still adhered. He had been convinced, and he was still convinced, that a much more strict adherence to the Rubric than had hitherto been observed was extremely desirable; but yet as ill-informed persons had taken offence at what they regarded as the introductoin of new forms, he would not recommend the clergy in such cases to oppose themselves to the wishes of their parishioners. In no case, however, could he condemn the clergy for adhering strictly to those laws which, by their ordination oath, they were bound to obey. His Lordship proceeded to express his reasons for condemning the newly-formed Evangelical alliance. He recommended the general principle of kindly concession, but deprecated the means adopted to secure that end by the alliance. After enlarging upon the necessity that existed for increased church accommodation, and referring specially to what had already been done in Bethnal-green by the munificence of the laity and others, his Lordship proceeded to remark upon the Government scheme of education. He condemned, in the strongest terms, the idea of the State providing a secular education for the people, and leaving their religious instruction to the voluntary exertions of the clergy, or the ministers of other sects. He contended for the necessity of all education being based upon religion. With regard to the recent conversions to Popery, his Lordship remarked that, though they could not but be regretted, he had much rather that men entertaining the inherent notion of an infallible church should at once go out from amongst them, and appear in the ranks of their opponents as open enemies, than that they should remain with them under the mask of friends. Though there was much to regret in the events which had transpired since he last addressed them, yet there was undoubtedly much cause also for rejoicing to be found in the increased and increasing munificence of the laity as a body, in the extraordinarily devoted and continuing energy of the clergy, and in the great measure of success which, as a consequence, had attended the ministration of their labours. His Lordship concluded an affectionate address by calling upon his reverend brethren to root out all animosities from their minds, and to unite in furthering the good cause of the Gospel.

Consecration of a New Church.—The chapel of St. John the Evangelist, at Stoke-row, in the parish of Ipsden, near Wallingford, was consecrated on Tuesday last by the Bishop of Oxford. His Lordship preached a most eloquent sermon from John vi., v. 2. The collection, which was in aid of a fund for a parsonage-house, amounted to £93.

Testimonial to a Clergyman.—The congregation of the chapel of the Philanthropic Society, St. George's-fields, Southwark, have presented to the Rev. Dr. Rice, the Society's morning preacher, a very handsome service of plate, consisting of a very large and magnificent salver, a beautiful inkstand, and various other articles of silver of elegant workmanship, to an amount of upwards of £200.

IRELAND.

RIOTOUS PROCEEDINGS AT MALLOW.

The following letter from a Correspondent at Mallow, dated October 19, will give an idea of the temper of the peasantry in that part of the country:—"Early this morning a number of the peasantry, to the amount of 200 or 300 persons, entered the town for the purpose of seeking employment on the railroad now in progress between this and the city of Cork. On applying to the contractor they were informed that the work was impeded by a proprietor on the line, who refused to allow the road to pass through his lands until certain terms of his own were complied with, and that they could not be employed that day; whereupon they pillaged some bakers' shops, and proceeded, in military order, armed with spades, shovels, pickaxes, &c., to Mr. Flinn's residence, within a mile and a half of the town, and soon returned with him a prisoner, marched him through the main street, and compelled him to enter into such arrangements as to enable the work to proceed to-morrow. Mr. Flinn is an old man between 70 and 80; he was mounted on a horse in the midst of the mob, who were all on foot, and marched in quick time through the streets. They appeared to be of the lowest and most miserable class. They stopped at a baker's shop which escaped the plunder this morning, and compelled Flinn to buy them two or three pounds' worth of bread. Loaves were thrown in showers from the upper windows of the house to them, when the scene became awful though ridiculous. They then took him before the contractor."

The Repeal Association.—The proceedings at the Repeal Association on Monday were not very interesting. Another letter was read from Mr. O'Connell, containing suggestions upon the subject of the present distress, and inclosing the munificent subscription of four pounds from the O'Connell family; being one pound from Mr. O'Connell, and one pound each from three members of his family. The Hon. Cecil Lawless returned to the Association, and was very enthusiastically received. He was unanimously elected a member of all the Committees. It is reported that Mr. O'Connell has resolved to suspend the Repeal Association for six months.

Death from Starvation at Skibbereen.—From a report of an inquest on the body of a poor man who died of starvation at Skibbereen, we learn that he actually died from want, occasioned by the shockingly imperfect machinery of the Board of Works. Eight days was he in the employment of that most unpopular body, but not a penny of wages could he obtain during that long period. The Jury, after a few minutes' deliberation, handed in the following verdict:—"We find that the deceased, Jeremiah Hegarty, has met his death in consequence of a want of sufficient sustenance for many days previous to his decease, and that this want of sustenance was occasioned by his not having been paid his wages on the public work, where he was employed for eight days previous to the time of his death."

The Late Murder in Tipperary.—Gaynor, the poor man who was wounded in the shocking manner described in our paper last week, died in the most excruciating agony. A Coroner's Jury has found a verdict of "Death from gun-shot wounds, inflicted by some person or persons at present unknown." The father of Gaynor is about ninety years of age, and rents a farm of one hundred acres, at ten shillings an acre.

The Newmarket and Chesterford Railway and the Jockey Club.—On Wednesday, a meeting of the members of the Jockey Club took place, when resolutions were passed in favour of this company's proposed extensions from Newmarket to Thetford, and from Newcastle to Bury, with a branch to Ely, coupled with assurances of the support of the Club in the ensuing session of Parliament.

Potatoes and Coals.—Potatoes on Wednesday rose in price ¼d. to ½d. per lb. at Spitalfields market and the eastern parts of the metropolis. Coals also were increased in price 1d. to 2d. per cwt., and candles rose ½d. per lb., on account of the advance in home and foreign meat.

POSTSCRIPT.

THE "GREAT BRITAIN" STEAMER.

The following reached us last night.

CAPT. HOSKEN'S REPORT TO THE DIRECTORS OF THE GREAT WESTERN STEAM SHIP COMPANY

Great Britain steam-ship, Oct. 13, 184

Gentlemen,—Captain Claxton's letter will have put you in possession of the leading [illegible] relating to the stranding of this ship, but I feel called on to give you an account of the disaster more in detail, both for your satisfaction and that of the proprietors, as well as in my own justification. It is possible you may have expected this before, but from the 22d ult. to the middle of last week, my whole time and energies were devoted, in the first instance, to the attempt to get the ship off, and then in trying to stop a heavy leak near the stern, both, I grieve to say, ineffectual. During that time, my occupation was as much in the water as out of it, the few spare hours I had I found absolutely necessary for rest, and Captain Claxton can tell you how much I required it when he was here; I was, therefore, totally unfitted to give you this statement until now.

Our pilot left a little inside the Bell Buoy [illegible] ten minutes past one we were fa[illegible] under way abreast it; all plain sail was set, with a fine breeze from the S.E., at times S.S.E. I determined to go by the North Channel, in consequence, as the wind was certain to be south-westerly in the South Channel, after passing Holyhead; and I have frequently taken the North Channel before, and think it the best under those circumstances; indeed, I would take it [illegible] preference, were all things equal. My reasons are, in thick weather (and I have gone out of the North Channel in a fog) you meet one vessel in that channel to twenty in the south; indeed, with the first of a south-wester, one to fifty. You cheat the tides, and have less against and more for you. You get clear of the land in much less time. You shorten the distance to New York a little; and you get a great advantage by being north, as the set of the Atlantic generally is to the southward, indeed almost invariably; and a slant of wind sometimes, as the wind hangs more to the northward than it does farther south. On the whole, it is [illegible] opinion that a day is saved in the passage by going through the North Channel, when the season for the meeting field ice is over, and the icebergs drift to the southward.

The log was hove regularly, and gave a speed of 10½ to 11 knots per hour, and I ascertained from the first officer, Mr Hedger, by direct inquiry, that the line and glass were correct; 11 knots, with the ship deep, is as much as could be fairly expected. At about half-past five I caught a glimpse of the Isle of Man, but what part of the island exactly, or how far off I could not decidedly say, as it was then getting dark, and the weather becoming thick. Immediately after, or about six o'clock, it came on to rain and blow harder and the weather very thick, and it threatened to be, as it proved, as vile a night as could be experienced. I have no doubt this would be corroborated by any one at sea on that night. (The Sea Nymph would not start from Warren Point, a most unusual thing.) About seven o'clock I remarked to the first and second officers (both of whom were with me on the forecastle, looking out, where I had been, and continued there and at the compass, with the exception of from five to ten minutes, from half-past five to the time the ship struck), that we must be well up with the Calf, and that I might safely allow her 10½ knots per hour since leaving the Bell Buoy; soon after this, I told the first officer to shorten sail at eight o'clock, take in top gallant sails, two reefs in foretop sail, one in the main, and haul the foresail up, as as I should alter the course to N. by E. (which is higher than the North Channel course), and go easy all night, feeling sure the ship was past the island. The course was altered at eight, and sail shortened accordingly, at about a quarter past eight I was standing by the wheel, watching the steerage while reefing, when the officer looking out on the forecastle reported a light on the port, or larboard bow, I said immediately, it must be a vessel's light, the light was lost sight of in the thick weather for a short time, and again [illegible]lf as a revolving light. I immediately kept the ship off her former course, N.W [illegible] exclaiming, "How is it possible she has not run her distance; what can have held her back?" taking the light for one of the Calf of Man lights, and supposing the other hidden by the thick weather, which is often the case, as many seamen well know. I have been cruising on that station in a man-of-war, some years since, and frequently have seen but one light. I then continued by the compass watching the bearing of the light, and trying with a glass to make out the second light, but a glass on that night was useless, from the continued rain; I could not help thinking we must be past the Island, at the same time there was a revolving [illegible] before my eyes to tell me we were not past it, and I did as I believe [illegible] situation would have done (not knowing there was any other revolving light in the direction we had been running from the Bell Buoy, as my chart, new, and dated 1846, does not show any light on St. John's Point), stood on until I got the right bearing for rounding the Hen and Chicken rocks, lying off the Calf of Man. I then hauled the ship up to north gradually, and to N. ½ E. ultimately, when I was surprised to find, [illegible] inquiring the time, that it was a quarter past nine, I ran down for a moment to look at my chart, and back again to the helm, when I heard a loud hail from the forecastle, and at the same moment I saw what appeared and proved shoal water alongside. I instantly sung out hard a port—stop her; this was done. I ordered a back turn, braced the yards by, and shifted the helm, all without effect. The sea began to break over us, and the engineer told me [illegible] could not move the engines; this made our case for the time hopeless, as it was near high water on a spring tide. I then ordered an anchor to be got clear; the sky-lights, hatchways, companions, &c., to be secured, the boats to be looked to, to be ready in case of need. I went below to assure the passengers that I believed there was no danger of loss of life, provided they did as I wished them, namely, remain quiet until daylight should show us where we were, and what was best to be done. I also consulted my chart, but could not make out to my own satisfaction clearly where we were, but believed we were not far from Ardglass, near Gun Island, and that the light in sight was that of the South Rock; and at daybreak, when the Coast Guard people and others came off, I would not believe we were in Dundrum Bay, and that there was a light on St. John's Point, for some time. The ship was now forging a-head with the sea, and I was afraid to let an anchor go, lest it might go through her bottom, and do more harm than good; besides the farther the ship went the greater chance there was of saving everybody. Towards daybreak it moderated, and I immediately lowered one of our life-boats, and commenced landing the passengers, the ladies first. The tide soon ebbed out to the ship, and the passengers got on shore in a variety of ways—by ropes, by carts, on men's shoulders, &c., and then their luggage, only one or two packages of which have, I believe, been lost. There was a great rush among the poorer people for jobs, for which they took good care to be well paid, but no ill-treatment to any of the passengers has come to my knowledge. The Coast Guard, with Capt. Fisher at their head, gave every possible assistance. Lieut. Morris, the officer in charge of the station, was early on board and did all he could do to help us. Also Hugh Purdy, chief boatman, who was among the first persons on board, and answered the signals we made in the course of the night very promptly. I cannot say sufficient for the great kindness we all experienced from Lady Matilda Montgomery, who gave shelter under her own roof to several of the passengers, and obtained shelter for many more in the cottages of the peasantry around. Capt. Despard, a magistrate, was also here early, and of great assistance [illegible] securing the passengers' luggage in the Coast Guard Watchhouse, and settling disputes as to amount for carriage, &c. &c. The constabulary force, under Mr Jannes, were here as soon as possible, and afforded valuable assistance, which they have continued until very recently. There are many others in the neighbourhood who have offered assistance; and I may say, generally, that all has been done for us that could be done anywhere, under our trying circumstances. Our thanks are particularly due to Sir James Dombraine, the Inspector-General of Coast Guard, who, on hearing of the disaster, sent two boats' crews (eight men), with the mate of the Royal George, revenue cruiser, to our assistance. Mr. Brown, the chief mate, proved a valuable and efficient officer, and we are indebted to him for good service, as well as his party of men, whose assistance we found most valuable in the boats. I [illegible] much gratified in being able to say that Mr. Hedger, the chief, and the whole of the [illegible] and crew, behaved themselves in the most exemplary manner during all their very hard work, and conducted themselves with the same spirit and obedience to orders that could be shown by any men in the most ordinary routine of duty.

I need not go into the failure of all our attempts to get the ship afloat: this you know from Captain Claxton, and my letters. I must remark that it is clear there must have been a westerly set, which placed the ship more than a mile and a half an hour ahead of what the log gave, this is clear from the distance run, from Liverpool (Coburg Lock Gate), to where we are; about 120 miles in 9⅔ hours, gives 12½ knots per hour; the log gave rather less than [illegible] knots, and this set also prevented our seeing the Calf of Man Lights, as we passed more to the S W than we ought to have done by the course steered, which I find to be the same (N.W. by N) as steered by the regular trading steamers between Liverpool and the ports near this. I must also observe that I cannot attach any blame to the compasses or steerage. I tried the compasses a day or two after we got here, and found them correct to a quarter of a point: in fact, I take the whole blame, if there be any, to myself, for it is I alone who had anything to do with the navigation of this ship, or any other I have ever commanded.

Overwhelmed by the occurrence, mortified at the issue of our great effort, it is still not without confidence that I leave my case in your hands, first claiming permission to look back on the occurrences of the past fifteen years, and more particularly to the time I have been connected with your company.

In the year 1831, I first commanded a ship, one of the Falmouth Post-office packets, and in 1832 I commanded another Falmouth packet, in both those I kept my own reckoning, although I had officers there for that express purpose. From 1832 to 1837, I commanded merchant sailing vessels in a foreign trade, and a steamer in the coasting trade, those vessels I navigated myself, of course. In 1837, I took command of your ship the Great Western, and that good ship I navigated, entirely myself, sixty-four times to and from New York, for which I obtained your high opinion, and the offer of the command of the Great Britain, as well as a complimentary letter, and a valuable present from the Underwriters at Lloyd's, "for nautical skill and seamanship." During that time, the numerous presents and testimonials from passengers, I am sure, were given for the care with which I navigated your ship principally, and the whole credit formerly, or discredit now, is all my own, but I feel a firm conviction that you, gentlemen, will acquit me of blame in this important matter, and, if so, I trust, will publicly declare your, I hope, unanimous opinion to that effect. That will materially lessen the severe blow I have received—more severe, in every way, to me than to any other person.

I remain, gentlemen, your obedient servant, JAMES HOSKEN

Narrow Escape of the Duke of Wellington.—The Duke of Wellington had a very narrow escape of what might have proved a serious accident, as the Royal carriages drove up to the door of Hatfield House on Thursday. It will often have been observed that his Grace is careless as a rider, and that he merely passes on in whatever direction he desires, regardless of what may be either before or behind him. But for his occasional military salute to passers-by, it might also seem that he is in a state of total abstraction to all that is passing round. It was this habit which gave rise to the danger to which he was exposed on Thursday afternoon. He had ridden on before the Royal carriages, but, on their approaching the mansion, he pulled up to let her Majesty's carriage stop at the entrance; but there was another carriage, the second of the whole cortège, immediately behind, and coming up at a very rapid pace. Unfortunately the Duke did not hear the noise of this carriage behind him, and the consequence was that he was very nearly driven over by the postboys. A very little more, and he would have been overthrown entirely, and trampled by the horses. Happily their speed was arrested at the critical moment, or the consequences might have been more fearful than we like to anticipate. His Grace was warmly congratulated on his escape.

LATEST FOREIGN NEWS.

Belgium. A Brussels paper says:—"We are sorry to announce that, far from declining, the prices of provisions of every kind in the capital continue to rise, notwithstanding the large supplies which arrive from all quarters.

Poland.—The railway from Warsaw to the town of Petrikau was opened on the 9th inst. The distance is about 90 miles English, which was accomplished in less than four hours and a half, including stoppages at several stations. The Prince-Governor and the principal local authorities were present at the opening.

Switzerland.—Some bread riots took place at Berne, on Saturday last. The rioters broke into the bakers' shops, but the armed force prevented much mischief. The riots were quelled without bloodshed, but it was thought that they would recommence on the following day.

Cape of Good Hope.—Further accounts arrived yesterday from Graham's Town, of as late a date as the 25th of August. The Graham's Town Journal contains an official despatch from Sir Andreas Stockenstrom, detailing a combined attack made upon the Kaffir positions in the Amatola mountains, by the forces under his command and those of Colonel Hare. The Kaffirs did not succeed in concentrating their force, as was evidently their intention in the first instance, but they made a bold stand in detached positions, but were finally dislodged from them all in the most gallant manner, with comparatively little loss on the part of the colonists. Driven from all the gorges of the Amatola range of mountains, they were in full retreat towards the Kei River, and the cavalry horses were so completely exhausted by the fatigues they had undergone, that they were not in a condition to follow up the advantages gained until they obtained rest. In the meanwhile Sir Andreas Stockenstrom had resolved upon remaining with the force under his command in one of the valleys of the Amatola range until he received supplies from the rear to enable him to advance to the Kei, in order to convince the Kaffirs that it was not a mere temporary inroad into their territory, but a fixed determination to punish them effectually for their unjust aggression on the colony. The loss on the part of the force under the command of Sir Andreas was four killed and four severely wounded, but the number that fell on the side of the Kaffirs could not be ascertained. Thirty-nine dead bodies were, however, seen at one point, and many more fell in the different skirmishes in the ravines.

ACCIDENTS AND OFFENCES

SUDDEN DEATH OF THE DOWAGER COUNTESS OF LIVERPOOL.

An inquest was held on Tuesday evening, at the Three Tuns, Kingston, by Mr Carter, on the remains of Mary, the Dowager Countess of Liverpool, relict of the late Earl of Liverpool, who died suddenly at Norbiton Hall, the residence of her nephew, R. H. Jenkinson, Esq., on Sunday last.

Mary Hawkes, her Ladyship's waiting-woman, deposed that on Sunday morning, about eight o'clock, she went into the deceased's room, and, on looking at the bed, she observed that the deceased looked very pallid, and that she had not moved from the position in which she had left her on the previous night. She was so struck with her Ladyship's appearance that she ran down stairs and gave an alarm, and another domestic returned with her to the bedroom, when they found that their mistress was dead.

Mr. W. S. Roots, surgeon, of Kingston, deposed that he had known the deceased lady for twenty-four years, and during the last twenty years he had been her medical attendant. He considered her of very sound mind, but her health was at times delicate, in consequence of her suffering from a disease of the heart and lungs, and which he was satisfied would sooner or later end fatally. He had expressed an opinion to this effect to her Ladyship, and had pointed out to her the necessity of having some one always in attendance upon her, particularly at night, but she always objected to it, and appeared extremely averse to having any one constantly with her. When he was called in, on the alarm being given, he found her Ladyship quite dead, in a perfectly composed position, and she had died comparatively without a struggle. He was perfectly satisfied that her death was occasioned by natural causes.

The Jury returned a verdict that the deceased died a natural death from disease of the heart.

Fire in Cheapside Caused by a Rat.—Last Saturday morning, smoke was seen issuing from the premises of Mr. Joseph Baker, tobacconist, situate opposite Bow Church. Upon breaking open the front door, it was proved that about 5000 fusees had become ignited, and there is little doubt if the discovery had not been so opportunely made, that the whole of the premises would have been consumed. As it was, the fire was speedily extinguished, the damage not being very considerable. After the fire was got out, an examination was made to find out the cause, when it was found that a rat had worked its way from the bottom of the flooring, and had got amongst the fusees, when, in nibbling them, the friction had caused them to explode, and hence the disaster.

Accident to the "Ripon" Steamer.—The following is an extract of a letter from a passenger on board the steam-ship Ripon, dated Torbay Harbour, October 21, 9 P.M.—"On the evening of the 20th, a few hours after we left Southampton, a gale sprung up, and soon after the engines were found not to work properly; we passed the night and the morning very uncomfortably, the water coming into many passengers' cabins. This morning the gale increased, and the rudder as well as the engines, were found deficient. After some consultation, and at the desire of the Superintendent of the Post-office, we put about ship, and determined to run for the nearest harbour. Soon after the rudder broke, and we were left at the mercy of the waves, the sea making a complete breach over her, and the water pouring in at every direction, nearly every cabin being saturated. Providentially, we managed to run in here with the loss of rudder, one boat, paddle-box, and sundry other damages. It has been a most providential escape."—In consequence of this accident, the despatch of the Overland Mail, viâ Marseilles, is postponed to Tuesday.

The late Robbery of Bank Notes at Rogers and Co.'s.—A few days since a £1 note, the number of which does not appear in the list circulated, but which was stolen at the time, was forwarded to the banking-house of Messrs. Rogers and Co., the party sending it requesting its receipt to be acknowledged to H. F., in the Times newspaper, and stated that the whole of the notes would be restored upon the payment of £10,000. The receipt of the note was acknowledged, but the offer of compromise was not entertained. From circumstances which have transpired, it is expected that the whole of the stolen property will be recovered, and at the same time such evidence adduced as to lead to the conviction of the offender.

An Awkward Position.—Mr. B. Arthur, of Bath, on his way from Taunton to the former city, a few nights ago, found himself in a very awkward situation. Being with another gentleman, on leaving Highbridge Station, he heard something running down on the seat and bottom of the carriage. Supposing the gentleman unwell, he inquired, but received no answer. Immediately after, the gentleman made a most strange noise, something between a cry and a groan, and fell across the bottom of the carriage. It was quite dark, and no person was on either of the seats next to them. On arriving at Banwell, it was discovered that he had attempted suicide by cutting his throat with a pen knife, which was lying on the seat. A man was placed with him, and he was brought on to the Bristol Station, where he was recognised and taken off to one of the hospitals.

Fire at Messrs. Erard's Pianoforte Factory.—On Tuesday evening a fire broke out upon the premises belonging to Messrs. Erard and Company, harp and pianoforte manufacturers, 15 and 16, Marlborough-mews, and extending through the mews to the front house, numbered 18, Great Marlborough-street. The flames were first discovered, by one of the workmen, issuing through the windows of the veneering-shop. No time was lost in forwarding information to the engine-station, and very speedily the brigade and other engines attended, and, there being plenty of water, instantly the flames were arrested. Both compartments contained a large number of instruments partially finished; but we are happy to hear that the injury done was confined to one small workshop, the contents of which were of trifling value.

Destitution and Death.—On Tuesday police-constable G 118 was called to the house No 3, Pear-street-court, High-street, Spitalfields, and on proceeding to a room on the ground-floor, the door of which had been broken open, he discovered, in one of the corners, the dead body of a woman, covered with filth and rags. There was no furniture in the room. A portion of dirty scraps of old rags, mixed with a little straw, was all that could be discovered, and upon which the body was then lying. The deceased, whose name was Ann Lovell, 45 years of age, having frequently been heard to exclaim, that she would starve herself rather than go into a workhouse, and having been missed for a day or two, her door was broken open, and her body was found as above described.

Extensive Burglary at Brighton.—A burglary was committed a few nights ago on the premises of Mr. Morganti, jeweller, 50, Grand Parade, Brighton, and property to a large amount carried off. It appeared that Mr. Morganti retired to rest soon after eleven o'clock, leaving everything safe. He sleeps himself at the top of the house; the floor immediately above the shop is used as an office by Mr. King, solicitor; and the floor above that is let to lodgers, who state that they heard no noise during the night. Next morning, however, on the servant coming down at half-past six o'clock, she found the shop in a state of great confusion—the glass-cases open, the glass-sash in the front window drawn aside, the shutters of the room behind the shop undone, and two panes of glass broken. Here, it was apparent, the thieves had effected an entrance. The thieves must have taken their time, for they literally stripped the shop of its most valuable contents, taking them from their cases, which they left behind, and sweeping them from the rods on which they hung. Seven gold watches were carried off, the only remaining one escaping by being covered over by some other articles, also several silver watches, four gold chains, a gold box and several silver ones, three silver guard chains, eighteen gold pencil cases, five diamond and ruby rings, and about 100 ladies and gentlemen's gold rings with stones, about thirty-six gentlemen's pins, eight gold lockets, five gold brooches, six gold cord guard chains, a diamond earring, silver spoons and forks, and a variety of other articles of value, which the owner estimates altogether at upwards of £500. Many articles of value, as cameos, gold brooches, &c., were left behind; the object of the thieves evidently being to get as much booty within as small a compass as possible. They left by the same way they entered, leaving the back door unfastened.

Serious Accidents.—On Wednesday forenoon, a very serious occurrence took place in Old-street-road, near Shoreditch Church. It appears that the Rev. Richard Cruttwell, rector of Spexhall, near Wickham Market, was driving a spirited horse. At the corner of Hoxton Old Town, the horse took fright at a railway carriage placed on a truck, and, dashing on the road, the animal came in contact with a brick cart belonging to Mr. Webb, of Stoke Newington, by which concussion the gig was upset and broke, and the persons in the cart were thrown out and injured. The horse, with the gig shafts at its heels, ran furiously towards Shoreditch, knocking down several persons by the way, and then into Shoreditch Churchyard, leaping over the boundary wall, from which the iron railing has been lately removed. Mr Cruttwell, who had been conveyed to the house of Mr. Brackell, a surgeon, was found to be terribly injured, his collar-bone and two ribs being fractured, and he was afterwards removed to his residence in Thavies Inn, Holborn. An old lady named Powell, and a man named Goodwin, who had been knocked down, were also taken to Mr. Brackell's, but fortunately were not so seriously hurt.

Fire and Loss of Life at Newington.—On Wednesday, William Carter, Esq., held an inquest at the Duke of Suffolk Tavern, Brandon-street, Newington, respecting the death of Thomas Herbert Thorn, aged eight months, who lost his life at a fire which occurred on the premises of Mr. Thorn, a grocer, residing at No. 1, Church-row, High-street, Newington.—Susan Taylor, the housemaid, stated that the deceased and his parents, who resided near Colchester, had been on a visit at Mr. Thorn's house since Wednesday, the 14th inst. On Sunday evening last, about half-past seven o'clock, witness had just placed her master's two children in bed, in the back room on the second floor; and, as she was leaving the apartment, her attention was drawn to the screams of children, which appeared to come from the front room, occupied during the last week by her master's brother. Witness ran and opened the door, and found that the place was on fire; the flames and smoke being so powerful, she was unable to force an entrance. Witness instantly raised an alarm by crying "Fire! fire!" which brought her master and others up stairs, and by great difficulty the elder child was dragged out from under the bedstead, where it had rolled. The deceased could not be found until a young man gained an entrance from the upper part of the adjoining house, when he found the body of the deceased lying on the burning remains of the bedclothes. The child was frightfully disfigured, being dreadfully burnt and charred. The deceased was carried to the nearest surgeon's, and was subsequently taken to the house of Mr. Thorn, where he lingered until Tuesday morning. The Jury returned a verdict of "Accidental Death."

Burglary in Walbrook.—Between eleven o'clock on Tuesday night and seven o'clock on Wednesday morning, a daring burglary was committed in Bird-court, Walbrook. The robbery was effected by opening the door of the room on the second floor, in the occupation of Mr. Needle, the landlord of the house, which is let out in offices, and the thieves succeeded in carrying off a brass bound mahogany writing desk, upon which was a brass plate, engraved with Mr. Needle's initials, "W. N.," and which contained notes and gold to the amount of £300, as also valuable memoranda. It is supposed that the robbery has been effected by some persons well acquainted with the premises. Unfortunately, the numbers of the notes have not been at present ascertained.

HER MAJESTY'S VISIT TO CASSIOBURY.

About six weeks since, we recorded and illustrated in our Journal, the arrival of her Majesty the Queen Dowager at Cassiobury, in formal phrase, to "take possession" of that delightful domain, which her Majesty is understood to have engaged of the noble owner, the Earl of Essex, for a term. Soon after this period (probably, during one of the Queen Dowager's recent sojourns at Windsor Castle), the picturesque attractions of the Cassiobury domain suggested themselves to her Majesty the Queen and Prince Albert as a relief to the stately splendour of Windsor; and the Royal visit to Cassiobury was, accordingly, arranged. We believe her Majesty to have been not altogether unacquainted with the rural beauty of Cassiobury; for, if we mistake not, the Queen, some years before her accession to the throne, accompanied her august mother, the Duchess of Kent, on a visit to the late Earl of Essex.

Monday was the day fixed for the visit of her Majesty and Prince Albert to Queen Adelaide, at Cassiobury. The Royal cortège consisted of three carriages and four: the Queen and the Prince occupied the first carriage, and were escorted by a Captain's guard of the 1st Life Guards. Another chariot and four followed, with the Equerries in Waiting; and a third carriage and four, with the Lady in Waiting (the Countess of Morton) and the Maid of Honour (the Hon. Miss Dawson; the Lord in Waiting, and Mr. G. E. Anson, Private Secretary to the Prince Consort. The weather was fine; and, as the Royal cavalcade, at a few minutes before ten o'clock, moved slowly down the Castle Hill, into the town, the Queen and the Prince were received with respectful greetings by the spectators. The cortège, having crossed Windsor Bridge, passed on through Eton at increased speed, amidst the loud cheers of some hundreds of the Eton boys, assembled outside the College.

The route laid down for the Royal cortège was by Slough, and across Iver-heath, to Uxbridge. At the latter place, some festive preparations were made for the anticipated progress of her Majesty through the town. On the tower of the Market House was hoisted an union jack, and, from the George Inn to the opposite side of the road, were suspended three similar banners. Mr. Lake, printer, also displayed a banner, on which was inscribed "Long Life to the Queen and Prince Albert"; and Mr. Burgiss exhibited a streamer, on which was an Imperial crown, having on either side the initial letters "V. A.," with the word "Welcome," in large letters.

Before two o'clock, the road from Iver Heath to Uxbridge was lined by respectable persons; while that portion of the High street which commanded a view of the White Horse Inn, where her Majesty's horses were stationed, was lined by carriages filled with ladies.

At five minutes to four o'clock, the Royal cortège entered the High-street, accompanied by an escort of the 12th Lancers, under the command of Lieutenant Mansell, and preceded by two outriders in scarlet liveries. The cheering was very loud, and was reiterated by the throng who surrounded the Royal carriage during the changing of the horses; and, on the cavalcade again starting, a simultaneous burst of loyalty was raised by the spectators, which both the Queen and Prince Albert acknowledged by repeated bowing.

From Uxbridge, the Royal cortège proceeded direct to Harefield, where the junction of the counties of Middlesex, Hertford, and Buckingham takes place: here the Royal party were met by an escort of the Herts Yeomanry, under the command of Captain Halsey, M.P. for the county of Herts, which accompanied her Majesty thence to Cassiobury.

Passing Pinner, Ruislip, and Batchford Heath, the Royal party entered Moor-park, the seat of the Marquis of Westminster, which was thrown open expressly for her Majesty's accommodation. The cortège left the Park by the Watford Lodge, and avoided that town by passing down Hayden-lane, from which the Cassiobury demesne is entered.

This route was taken from the express desire of the Queen that the visit should be as private as possible. This arrangement becoming generally known, crowds of persons made at once for Cassiobury; the park-gates, by the considerate permission of the Queen Dowager, were thrown open to the public, and long before the arrival of the Royal party, there was a large assemblage of ladies and gentlemen, waiting to greet her Majesty.

The carriages entered the park by the Cassio Gate at a few minutes past five o'clock. Sir Andrew Barnard, Clerk-Marshal to the Queen Dowager, was in attendance on horseback at the boundary of the Royal domain; and accompanied her Majesty and the Prince Consort thence to the mansion, where the Royal party arrived at about twenty minutes past five o'clock.

On alighting from her carriage, her Majesty was received in the entrance-hall of the mansion by the Queen Dowager, the Princess of Hesse, and the Lords and Ladies in Waiting.

Before entering the mansion, her Majesty recognised the services of the yeomanry escort by her gracious acknowledgments.

His Serene Highness Prince Edward of Saxe Weimar arrived at Cassiobury from London, at half-past six o'clock, and joined the Royal circle.

At eight o'clock, dinner was in the banqueting-room; the circle comprising her Majesty and Prince Albert, the Princess of Hesse, Prince Edward of Saxe Weimar, the Countess of Gainsborough, the Earl Howe, the Earl of Denbigh, Lady Clinton, Baron Meysenbach, Baroness Scheel, the Earl of Morton, Sir Horace Seymour, the Hon. Miss Dawson, Sir Andrew Barnard, Colonel Buckley, Colonel Seymour, Mr. G. E. Anson, and Miss Mitchell. His Royal Highness Prince Albert sat on the Queen Dowager's right hand, having on his right the Princess of Hesse. The Queen sat opposite to Queen Adelaide, with Prince Edward of Saxe Weimar and the Earl of Denbigh on either side.

TUESDAY.

Her Majesty and the Prince Consort rose at an early hour this morning, and walked in the pleasure-grounds adjoining the mansion.

Shortly before ten o'clock, the Queen, accompanied by Prince Albert, and attended by the Countess of Gainsborough, the Earl Howe, and the youthful Ladies Adelaide and Emily Curzon, proceeded to inspect the extensive gardens, and subsequently visited the orangery. The Royal party then went to the dairy at the Home Farm.

At two o'clock, luncheon was served; and, at half-past two, the august party left the mansion in three pony-carriages and four, with outriders, the Queen Dowager being accompanied, in the first carriage, by the Queen and Prince Albert, and the Princess of Hesse.

The Royal party proceeded direct to the Grove, to honour the Earl and Countess of Clarendon with a visit, and remained there nearly an hour. The Earl of Clarendon received his illustrious visitors, and personally conducted the party over the house.

The carriages were then ordered to the Priory at Stanmore, the seat of the Marquis of Abercorn; and, after viewing all the attractions of that beautiful retreat, her Majesty, with the Queen Dowager and party, returned to Cassiobury Park, at half-past five o'clock.

The Royal dinner circle this evening was the same as the previous day, with the addition of the Earl and Countess Spencer, who were on a visit at the Grove. The Earl and Countess of Clarendon were, also, honoured with an invitation to meet her Majesty; but were absent, owing to the demise of her Ladyship's aunt, the Hon. Harriet Grimstone.

WEDNESDAY

In consequence of the unfavourable weather, the Queen and Prince Albert did not take their accustomed early walk.

At eleven o'clock, the Prince, accompanied by Prince Edward of Saxe Weimar, and attended by Sir Horace Seymour, Colonel Seymour, and Mr. G. E. Anson, went on a shooting excursion to the Cashioland preserve, over which they shot for more than an hour, at the expiration of which period the return of killed by the Prince Consort's gun was as follows—pheasants, 31; hares, 4; rabbits, 2.

After luncheon, at a quarter past three o'clock, the Royal party left the mansion in three carriages, and proceeded across the park to the Cassio Gate; thence, by picturesque lanes, to Moor Park, the seat of the Marchioness (Dowager) of Westminster. Here the Royal party alighted, and in the absence of the noble hostess (who, we regret to learn, is confined in town by indisposition) they were conducted over the mansion by her Ladyship's agent, Mr. Elliot. The Queen and Prince Consort, after inspecting the house, walked for some time in the gardens, and at length re-entering their carriage returned to Cassiobury.

The dinner circle in the evening, in addition to the two Queens, with their respective suites, included the Marquis of Salisbury, and Lord and Lady Beauvale.

The banquet was served at eight o'clock in the principal dining-room: the table presented an elegant display of plate, a superb candelabrum, the base being Saint George, in combat with the dragon.

During the evening a select number of instrumental performers were in attendance to enliven the Royal circle by a choice selection of music.

The mansion of Cassiobury belongs to the modern-antique class of edifices; but, the site possesses considerable antiquarian interest. About nine years since, Mr. Britton published a splendid folio volume, illustrating and describing the entire property, then possessed by the late Earl of Essex. To this accredited source we are indebted for a few of the accompanying details. The Engravings are from Sketches by our own Artists.

Cassiobury lies within the hundred and manor of Cassio, and county of Hertford, sixteen miles north of London, and one mile from the town of Watford, with which it is ecclesiastically connected. Although its name has not been found in any document older than the sixteenth century, yet the affix bury is alone sufficient to denote its antiquity. It was the only bury within the manor of Cassio, during the Saxon era; and Mr. Britton considers that it might have been either the seat of justice for the hundred, (for the name bury will admit of this construction,) or an occasional retreat of some of the British Princes, of whom Cassibelaunus was one. The latter view of the subject is more probable than to state, (as Chauncy and Clutterbuck have not scrupled to do,) that Cassiobury was the actual seat or home of Cassibelaunus. "That Cassiobury," Mr. Britton adds, in a note, "was the seat of justice for the hundred is rendered more probable by the fact that the hundred courts are now held at Watford, to which place they would naturally have been transferred, when it assumed the rank of a town."

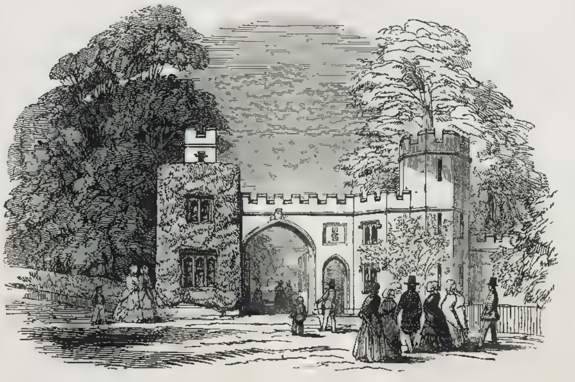
We next find the manor of Cassio among the numerous possessions with which Offa endowed the celebrated monastery of St. Alban's, adjoining the ancient town of Verulamium; and the manor remained a part of the possessions of this Abbey until the Dissolution of the religious houses by Henry VIII. On August 29, 1546, only five months before Henry's death, he granted the manor of Cassio to Sir Richard Morrison, Knight, in exchange for certain property in Yorkshire and Worcestershire, and a sum of money. Sir Richardsoon commenced building "a fair and large house, situated upon a dry hill, not far from a pleasant river in a fair park;" his works were in progress in 1553, but the house was not completed untill 1599, by his son, Sir Charles Morrison. On the marriage of Elizabeth Morrison, (the only surviving child of Sir Richard's grandson), the family property passed to her husband, Arthur, Lord Capel; from whom the present possessor of Cassiobury, (the Earl of Essex,) is lineally descended. The first Earl of Essex rebuilt the mansion, except the north-west wing; and employed Moses Cook to lay out the garden in the formal style of those at Versailles. Some writers state Le Notre to have been employed at Cassiobury, and Clutterbuck says that Rose laid out the grounds and gardens: the latter was head gardener to the Earl, at Essex House, in the Strand.

John Evelyn gossips pleasantly enough of his visit to the quaint old place, on April 18, 1680. He describes the house as "a plaine fabric," built by his friend, Mr. Hugh May. He tells us, too, of carving by Gibbons, "especially the chimney-place of ye library;" the porch painted by Verrio; a room parquetted with yew; the chimney-mantels of Irish marble, "not much inferior to Italian;" "the tympanum, or gabal at the front, a basso-relievo of Diana hunting, cut in Portland stone, handsomely enough;" the oval hall with a cupola; altogether, "a very noble palace." Evelyn is, however, more at home when he discourses of the grounds and plantations—"walks, ponds, and other rural elegancies;" the stream, he tells us, is fitly called Coldbrook, "it being indeede excessive cold, yet producing faire troutes." He condemns the situation of the house, "built just where the old one was;" "the land about is exceedingly addicted to wood, but the coldnesse of the place hinders the growth." Black cherry-trees flourish, "some being eighty foote long;" and we hear of "treble rows of Spanish chesnut-trees." "The gardens were rare, and there was an excellent collection of the choicest fruit." There is a bird's-eye view of Cassiobury, at this period, in Kip's series, well known to print-collectors. In 1715, it was eulogised as "one of the first places in England where the polite Spirit of gardening shone the brightest."



THE CASSIO GATE.

The house remained nearly as it was left by the first Earl of Essex until the beginning of the present century, when it was mostly rebuilt by the late Earl of Essex, from the designs of James Wyatt, Esq.

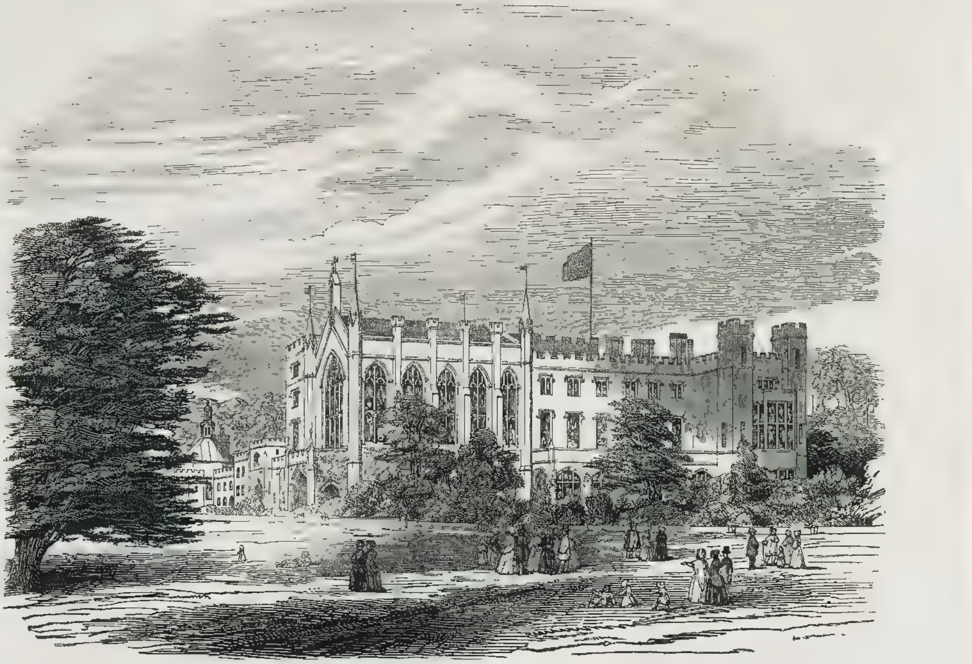
THE PARK AND GROUNDS

Comprise 693 acres, divided by the river Gade into the Home Park and the Upper Park; and wood walks, lawns, and gardens immediately around the mansion. Parallel with the river, and in one place forming part of it, is the Grand Junction Canal; and at a very short distance is the line of the London and Birmingham Railway. The parks are well wooded with beech, oak, elm, and fir; and north-east of the home is a plantation which resembles an old Norway forest, with its large and lofty stems and picturesque branches. The artificial clumps, avenues, and other geometrical formations of Cook's time, remain; and some of the forest rees are truly gigantic: the branches of a single beech have a diameter of 130 feet.

THE MANSION,

As our Illustration shows, retains some of its monastic features, in its lofty gable, clustered chimney-shafts, and bay windows: and any one of antiquarian taste will identify the lofty kitchen roof with the celebrated kitchen lantern of Glastonbury Abbey. The greater portion of the pile is, however, the work of Mr. Wyatt; and, though intended to assimilate with the castellated edifice, this modern re-edification is, by no means, a happy specimen of the Old English style.

The ineffective architectural character of the exterior is, however, somewhat made up by the excellent arrangement of the interior. "As a suite of rooms," says Mr. Britton, "adapted for a noble family, and for various companies, their disposition and sizes are calculated to afford every domestic comfort, combined with luxury; but there are neither finishings nor fittings-up to correspond with the exterior character of the building." In plan, the apartments surround an open court-yard, the entrance being to the west, the chief rooms to the south, the private or family rooms to the east, and the kitchen, servants' offices, &c., to the north. A small porch screens the entrance doorway, which opens into a narrow cloister, on the right of which is a small vestibule and inclosed staircase. Eastward of these is the great cloister, its windows partly filled with stained glass, and its walls hung with paintings, among which is a head of King Henry IV., pronounced by Walpole to be an "undoubted original;"



CASSIOBURY HOUSE, FROM THE SOUTH WEST.

and this is supported by the inscription upon the frame. Branching from the Cloister is the Saloon, between the Dining and Drawing Rooms. Its ceiling is painted by Verrio, and formerly adorned the hall of the old mansion, mentioned by Evelyn; the composition is chiefly allegorical figures of Painting, Sculpture, Music, and War. The walls are hung with portraits of distinguished personages.

The Dining Room commands a fine view, through the large western window, of the distant Park, and its long and lofty vista. This room is wainscoted, and hung with family portraits; among which is Algernon Percy, tenth Earl of Northumberland, an original, by Vandyck

The principal Drawing Room is a handsome apartment richly furnished; and hung with six fine and interesting pictures, by Turner, Callcott, Collins, &c.

The Great Library is classed into four compartments, or rooms:—1. Classic History, Travels, and Philosophy; 2. Topography and Archæology; 3. Poetry and Novels; 4. Dramatic and Miscellaneous. Around the apartment are ranged the book-cases, upon which are placed busts; and above are portraits of personages of the Essex family. Over the fire-place is a picture of the late Earl, when ten years old, and his sister, afterwards Lady Monson, a fine specimen of Reynolds's composition and colouring; the frame is charged with some of Gibbons's superb carvings, noticed by Evelyn. The Small, or Inner Library (topography and antiquities), is hung with portraits, and carvings by Gibbons.

The Dramatic Library is adorned with miniatures, bronzes, ivory, and other carvings. Among the bijoux, is a miniature of Lord Coningsby, who applied his handkerchief to the wounded shoulder of King William the Third, at the Battle of the Boyne, in 690; the identical handkerchief is preserved here.

The other apartments, north of the former, contain a fine collection of pictures, by modern artists. Among them, is Leslie's "Don Quixote, the Duchess, and Sancho;" a small Landscape by Gainsborough; Wilkie's "Highland Warrior Returned from Battle;" Landseer's "Cat's Paw;" Sir Joshua Reynolds (the spectacles portrait), painted by himself; a "Musical Party" (portraits), by Hogarth; Zoffani's "Garrick, as Lord Townley;" besides several pictures by Morland, Cooper, Jones, Good, and other eminent British artists; collected by the late Earl of Essex, who not only encouraged men of genius, by the purchase of their works, but made his delightful seat the resting-place and temporary home of artists, and men of science and letters.

GARDENS.

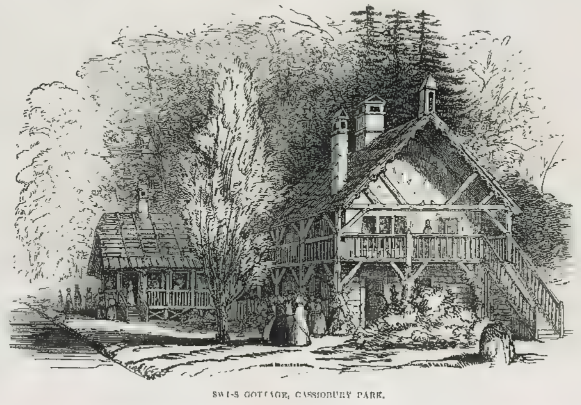
To the east and south of the house, the ground is laid out in lawns, with choice shrubs and trees, beyond which are openings to the park and distant country; whilst a conservatory screens the library and drawing-rooms. The Pleasure-Garden, to the north-east, occupies nearly eight acres, in lawns, winding paths, and shady dells. Then, we have a dell filled with rock-plants, surrounded by evergreens; a Chinese garden; and greenhouses and hothouses interspersed among the plantations. The collection of plants rivals that at Chatsworth.

COTTAGES.

The most interesting feature of Cassiobury, to the lover of English rural life, is the series of cottages scattered throughout the domain; distinguished by their external picturesqueness, and bespeaking our liveliest sympathies in the domestic comfort they afford to their humble occupants. They are rent and tax free, and are tenanted by men and women who are employed by the noble landlord in various offices about the park, the gardens, and the house: thus, the park-keeper, a game-keeper, a shepherd, a lodge-keeper, a gardener, a carpenter, a miller, a lock-keeper, &c., are accommodated. Most of these cottages are simple in form, and economical in construction, being of brick nogging and timber, with thatched roofs. They were built by workmen regularly employed on the estate, whence the timber was also obtained.

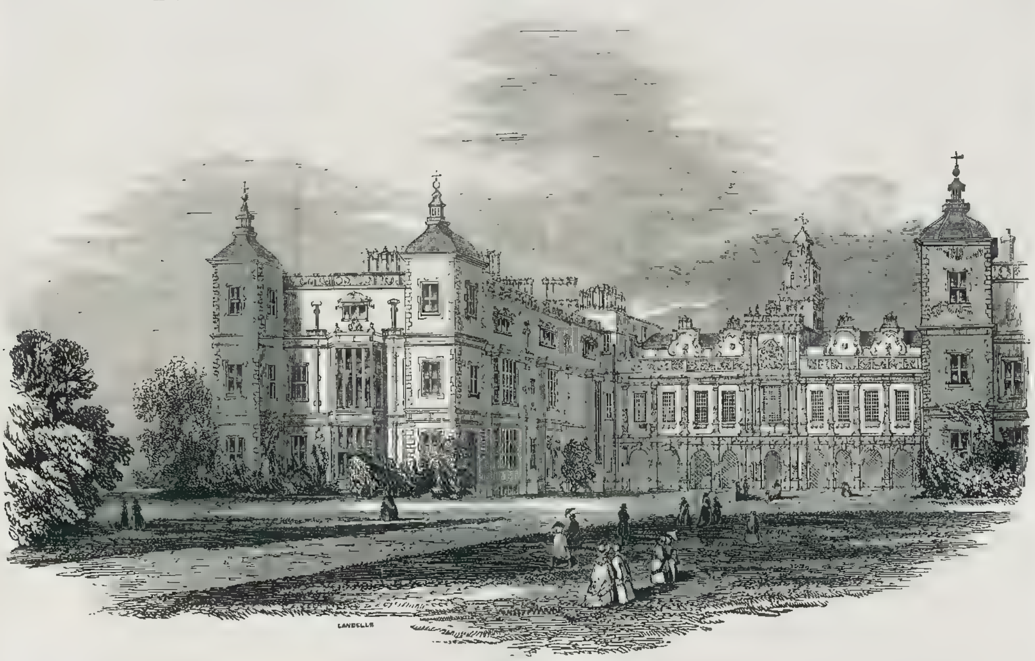
There are, perhaps, few Parks in which more subjects could be found suitable for the pencil of the artist than Cassiobury. There are so many little leafy nooks, and "shadows brown that sylvan loves," and the little river Gade adding its rippling to the scenes, constitute a series of spots that Hobbima or Ruysdael might have envied.

A green drive from the house leads to the Swiss Cottage (See the Engraving), a beautiful little timber house, on the banks of the Gade, a shallow but sparkling streamlet. The house is in the midst of a small plantation, fenced in from the Park; and a covered gateway of timber, surmounted by a bell, permits of ingress to the plantation. A notice is affixed to the gate that visitors are not permitted to take refreshments into the cottage, without first obtaining permission of the housekeeper at Cassiobury, and to leave their names there. Entering the time-greened gate of the plantation, the eye and the ear are both captivated. The tall trees mingling their branches together; the half-hidden, picturesque form of the Swiss Cottage, with the flowers gracefully curling about the rustic pillars, which support the galleries round the house; the gravelled paths, and the flowers gemming the borders; and the rippling of the Gade, as it passes swiftly on, form a picture of great beauty. The Entrance Lodge, which we have also engraved, is partly from Mr. Wyatt's designs, and forms a pleasing feature in a finely wooded road.



SWISS COTTAGE, CASSIOBURY PARK.

HER MAJESTY'S VISIT TO HATFIELD HOUSE.



HATFIELD HOUSE.—SOUTH FRONT.

HATFIELD HOUSE.

Nearly half a century has elapsed since the truly palatial mansion at Hatfield was honoured with the presence of the Sovereign. In 1800, it was visited by King George the Third and the Royal Family; and, at the moment we write, her Most Gracious Majesty Queen Victoria, and her august consort, his Royal Highness Prince Albert, are the guests of the noble owner of Hatfield, the Marquis of Salisbury.

Hatfield has been a palace, episcopal, regal, and noble, for upwards of seven centuries. The mansion occupies the airy summit of a hill, on the steep slope of which lies the old town of Hatfield. The house stands in a fine park, watered by the river Lea; and the demesne is distant twenty miles north of the metropolis, six from St. Alban's, and seven from Hertford. Probably, however, neither of our fine old country mansions is better known than Hatfield: its elevated situation and bold architecture, rendering one of the most striking on the Great North road, from which it is situated but a short distance.

The present mansion was built by John Thorp, in the reign of James I.; but, a portion of the Bishops' Palace of the Twelfth Century, remains to this day. It became Royal property late in the reign of Henry VIII.

In 1550, Edward VI. granted this palace to his sister, the Princess Elizabeth; and here, upon the breaking out of Sir Thomas Wyatt's rebellion, in the reign of Queen Mary, Elizabeth was committed to the care of Sir Thomas Pope, having been removed thither from Woodstock. From various records, it appears that the Princess lived in splendour and affluence at Hatfield; that she was often admitted to the diversions of the Court; and that her situation was by no means a state of oppression and imprisonment, as it has been represented by some historians. Here Elizabeth received the news of her sister's decease, and of her own accession to the throne.

It does not appear that Queen Elizabeth often resided in, or visited, Hatfield during her long reign. The north end of the building, which formed the western front of the old palace, and still remains here, is traditionally said to be that in which the Princess resided; and, it is possible that the apartments now standing might at one time have been occupied by the Princess, who, before her final settlement at Hatfield Palace, under Sir Thomas Pope's care, was occasionally removed to various seats, of which Hatfield was one.

That part of the ancient palace which was latterly occupied by Elizabeth, most probably, fronted the south, and upon building the present mansion was entirely taken down. The privy garden, which adjoined her apartments, still remrins, on the western side of the present house.

Hatfield House occupies a grand parallelogram, 280 feet in length, which is the extent of the northern front of the edifice; and is 70 feet in width. On the southern front, two wings project at right angles, each 100 feet, with a breadth of 80 feet, forming, together with the centre division, three sides of a court, 140 feet in extent; the extreme length of the southern, or principal front being 300 feet.

We shall, on this occasion, only describe the Southern Front, the two wings of which are connected by a magnificent centre, raised in the Palladian style, with two orders of architecture, but with an entrance-porch highly enriched. The basement story comprises an arcade, or corridor, extending the whole length between the wings, and resembling the ancient conventual cloister, but constructed upon the Italian plan. The shafts of the Doric pilasters rest on pedestals, and are partly fluted, and partly covered with arabesque ornament, common in the Elizabethan age. The windows of the principal story, which give light to the long gallery, are square-headed and mullioned, and are admirably proportioned to the spaces between the Ionic pilasters, here introduced to relieve the plainness of the surface. The entablature is surmounted by an elegantly-pierced parapet at the height of 50 feet from the ground; and above this are seen the gables of the roof; these, however, are ornamented with Flemish taste, and constitute the only portion of the building not deserving of high commendation.

Each wing has an enriched entrance-porch; and the breadth of their fronts, between the massive turrets, is broken by projecting oriel windows, which properly belong to the Tudor style. The square corner turrets, 50 feet high to the parapets, are crowned by cupola-formed roofs rising 20 feet to the pinnacles, which are terminated by gilded vanes, representing small banners charged with the Cecil crest.

The centre tower, in which is the grand entrance-porch, rises to the height of 70 feet, and is divided into three stories, having a bold projection, which breaks the long and uniform line of the front; above this, in the middle of the roof, is the clock-tower, and cupola, 15 feet in height, completing the pyramidal effect of the whole. In the third story of the tower, which is of the Corinthian order, are the full armorial bearings of the noble founder of the mansion: above the parapet, which exhibits the date of the completion of the building, in the year 1611, is his Lordship's crest, with the coronet.

THE ROYAL VISIT.

We now proceed to the details of the Royal Visit on Thursday.

Her Majesty and the Prince Consort left Cassiobury immediately after luncheon, for Hatfield about three o'clock, escorted by a detachment of the Herts Yeomanry.

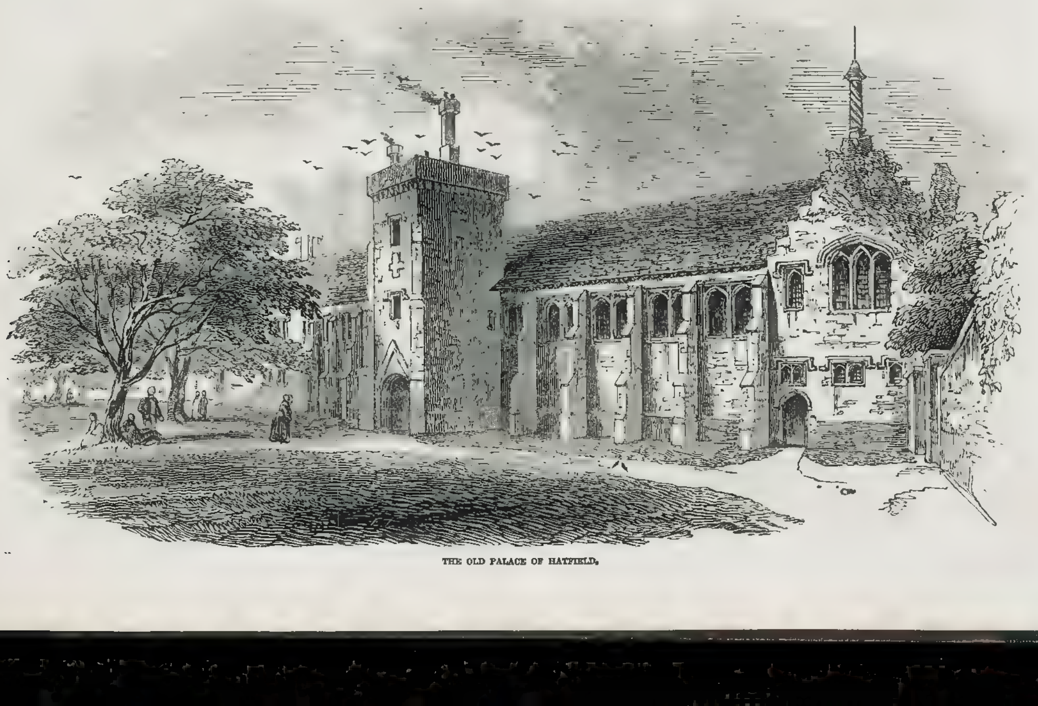
The route lay through St. Alban's; and the Royal cortège arrived at the town of Hatfield at a quarter past four o'clock; the Marquis of Salisbury, who had met his illustrious visitors, preceding her Majesty's carriage.

At Hatfield, the festal preparations were picturesque and in appropriate taste. The display commenced at Puttock's Oak, where was erected a triumphal arch of laurel, studded with fuchsias.

At the junction of the Great North Road with the St. Alban's Road, a numerous body of the tenantry of the Marquis of Salisbury, wearing blue rosettes, joined the procession.

Facing the house of Dr. Thomas was a pretty arch of evergreens and garlands of flowers, flanked with union-jacks, and surmounted with a smaller flag. On the arch was inscribed in dahlias, V. R.; and the same in illumination lamps, on Dr. Thomas's residence.

At the foot of the hill was another evergreen arch, surmounted with a Royal crown, various flags, &c., as shown in our Illustration on the front page.



THE OLD PALACE OF HATFIELD.

On the arrival of the Royal procession at this arch, the Welwyn band played "God Save the Queen." The scene up the hill was truly exhilarating: flags and evergreens were displayed from every house, and the street was filled with groups of delighted and loyal people.

At the summit of the hill was a fourth arch of evergreens and flowers, with crowns, flags, &c.

The Royal cortège, preceded by the Marquis of Salisbury, and escorted by the Herts Yeomanry, proceeded entirely through Hatfield, passing the entrance to the mansion near the church, and advanced along the London road to the southern lodges, through which the Royal Visitors passed by the long avenue to the principal front of the mansion.

The Duke of Wellington and Lord Charles Wellesley, having previously reached the mansion by the entrance near the church, were in readiness to receive her Majesty: the Duke rode a fine chesnut horse, which was struck by the second carriage, in entering the court-yard; the horse became restive, and nearly threw the noble rider.

The Queen and the Prince Consort were received at the mansion by the daughters of the Marquis of Salisbury—the Ladies Mildred Hope, and Blanche Balfour.

At the moment of her Majesty's arrival, the Royal standard was hoisted on the mansion; and the standard waved, also, on the tower of Hatfield Church throughout the day.

Her Majesty was received everywhere with the warmest demonstrations of applause and delight: it was, in every sense and sound, too, a fine Old English welcome.

In the evening a banquet was served in the Great or Marble Hall of the mansion; where covers were laid for forty.

Among the nobility invited to meet her Majesty were the following:—The Duke of Wellington, the Duke of Rutland, the Duke of Cleveland, the Marquis and Marchioness of Exeter, the Marquis and Marchioness of Douro, the Earl and Countess Spencer, the Earl and Countess of Verulam, the Earl and Countess of Clarendon, the Earl and Countess Delawarr and Lady Mary Sackville West, the Earl and Countess Cowper, the Earl and Countess of Brownlow, the Earl of Strathmore, Lord and Lady Cowley, Lord and Lady John Russell, Lord and Lady Dacre, Lord and Lady Beauvale, Lord and Lady Charles Wellesley, Viscount Ingestre, Lord and Lady Braybrooke, Lord Marcus Hill, Lord Sandys, Mr. and Lady Blanche Balfour, Mr. and Lady Mildred Hope, Captain Halsey, M.P., &c.

After the arrival of the Queen, the Herts Yeomanry repaired to the Riding School, where they were entertained at dinner.

At Hatfield, on the cricket-ground, a fine Hereford ox, weighing 100 stone, (furnished by Mr. J. Simpkin,) was roasted whole, and distributed to the joyous people.

Next week we shall illustrate and describe the Royal Visit; and endeavour to furnish our readers with some idea of the magnificence of Hatfield House, which possesses, perhaps, the most superbly embellished interior in the kingdom. Extensive restorations have been made for the Visit of the Sovereign, which are alike honourable to the loyalty, taste, and munificence, of the head of the noble House of Cecil.

THE THEATRES.

LYCEUM.

The apocryphal Mrs. Harris made her first appearance at this theatre on Thursday evening; and, to judge from the welcome she experienced, bids fair to continue therein domiciled beyond the usual monthly engagement. The piece, which, as we stated, is a pretty close translation of the French vaudeville, "La Garde Malade," has little plot in it; indeed, the interest hangs on such a very slender thread, that it is constantly in danger of breaking down altogether whenever the principal performers are not on the stage. A young gentleman (Mr. Wigan), and an old gentleman (Mr. F. Mathews), are both in love with a little milliner (Miss Arden). The intentions of the former are more honourable than those of the latter; but, as his uncle (Mr. Turner) is opposed to the match, he pretends to suffer from catalepsy, and Mrs. Harris is engaged to nurse him. It so happens that an old friend of the nurse, one Sairey Gamp, has a present of a goose and sausages from the country, and invites her "pardner" to partake of it. The little milliner offers to take her place and watch the sick man. The old gallant, overhearing this arrangement, contrives to change places with the invalid, but is sadly punished by being powerfully electrified instead. An explanation, somewhat confused, takes place; the uncle gives his consent to the nephew's marriage with the little milliner, and Mrs. Harris comes in just at the end, considerably the worse for Sairey Gamp's hospitality.

It will be seen there is literally nothing in all this; but the admirable acting of Mr. Keeley as the heroine kept the house in a roar of laughter the whole time he was on the stage. His impersonation was fully equal to that of his immortal Sairey Gamp, but altogether a different creation. He played it inimitably, never allowing the least tinge of coarseness in scenes which in other hands might have been most dangerous, to mar the exquisite humour of the performance. Mr. Wigan's cataleptic patient was also exquisitely pourtrayed. There was a quaint drollery in his attitudes and manner that elicited continued laughter and applause. Few actors now on the stage have so rapidly attained a high position as this gentleman. Mr. Meadows had a dry rôle as a chilly physician, which he made the most of; and Mr. F. Mathews's assumption of youthful gallantry was well sustained. Miss Arden was a trim little milliner. The applause at the fall of the curtain was most enthusiastic; and Mrs. Harris distributed her cards, and announced the farce for repetition every evening.

THE OLYMPIC.

On Saturday evening Mr. Bolton, as we announced, opened this theatre for the season. The play was the "Hunchback," and it was excellently performed—the cast being well arranged to bring forward the principal members of Mr. Bolton's company. Mrs. Walter Lacy was the Helen of the play—her original character; and the mere sight of her brought back many pleasant recollections of former charming impersonations, not unmingled with surprise that so welcome an actress should have been so long away from the public. Julia was performed by Mrs. A. Gordon—a lady comparatively new to the London boards, but in whom, at the Queen's Theatre, during Mr. Abington's management, we discovered a perception and judgment, coupled with a certain grace of delivery and action, that will be fully and generally recognised ere long. Mr. Lacy's Lord Tinsel is well known as an artistic, and withal very amusing, performance; and Mr. Leigh Murray's Sir Thomas Clifford afforded new proof that this gentleman has in him the germs of a leading actor. It will be his own fault if he does not at some time take the highest rank in his art. Mr. John Howard—a name, we think, new to the London boards—played Modus very respectably; and the old Adelphi favourite, Mr. Wilkinson, contrived to invest the character of Fathom with much quaint importance in the distribution of rôles. We were less pleased with Mr. Henry Betty's Master Walter. His delivery was ultra-energetic and ineffective; and nothing could be more devoid of artistic care than, technically speaking, his "make-up."

The "Hunchback" was very carefully put upon the stage. The scenery did great credit to Mr. Brunning and his assistants, and the dresses were all that could be desired. On Monday, the "Rivals" was played with equal success; and Mrs. C. Jones, as Mrs. Malaprop, received a right hearty welcome. A Mr. Hammersly, who made his débût as Sir Lucius O'Trigger, did not strike us as likely to attain any very leading position as a representative of the Irish character. But, in justice to Mr. Hammersly, we wish to see him in another character, before we give a decided opinion on his chances of success.

So far, everything was good—very good; but here our commendation must end. The burlesque—it certainly was one—of "The Civil War of Poetry," was, without exception, a succession of gross absurdities. We will not deny that it was exceedingly entertaining. The unceasing hissing, hooting, and comical jocularities of the audience; the ludicrous incomprehensibility of what they were looking at; and the unmitigated effrontery that could bring such a piece before the public;—all combined to beguile the time in a manner that we have never before experienced, and it has been our lot to be present at a few condemnations. The plot is of no consequence; inasmuch as nobody was able to understand it; but the curtain rose upon a view of the outside of Drury Lane Theatre, with the Statue of Shakspeare upon it, represented by a performer who made the imaged bard look, for all the world, like a pantaloon very ill. Then the old dramatists came in, with placards round their necks to tell the public who they were—a necessary proceeding; and they ground most miserable music upon hurdy-gurdies, and prevailed upon Shakspeare to come down a ladder, and be put in a box, and then nothing more was heard until the curtain fell; so, of all that followed, the synopsis must be gleaned from the pantomime we witnessed. The scarecrow dramatists came in and went out, and fought on basket horses, and a very surly looking gentleman who represented the Public—and well he might be surly at such an infliction—sang some dreary songs, and was hooted in proportion; and a character called Ephemera (Mr. S. Cowell) partially restored good humour by a few cleverly vocalised medleys, but which, at the same time, were dangerously long; and inscriptions were let up and down and whistled at; and choruses were given, in which the voices of the audience had the best of it; so that, altogether, the fun of the burlesque amply repaid all who had paid for admission to a place of amusement. The credit of restoring temporary good humour to the audience rests entirely with the ballet. Their dances were very cleverly arranged and executed; and the artistic groups throughout, and especially in the last scene, were really beautiful. But even this agreeable change in the features of the new grand burlesque was only fleeting; the scenes in front met; the poets reappeared again; and again the storm of disapprobation broke on their heads. The condemnation was complete.

On Monday the riot was continued as vigorously as ever, but in a facetious spirit, which rendered the auditory the most amusing part of the theatre. Nothing was heard but shouts of "Apology!" "Manager!" "Insult!" and the like, and the curtain again came down, amidst a roar of derision. On Tuesday, although nearly the whole of the dialogue had been cut out, the appearance of the luckless poets called up a fresh storm. And so "The Civil War of Poetry," which terminated in a very uncivil war of prose, fell into a very effective divertissement, which ought to have been the original entertainment. The dresses were very elegant—remarkably so; and the stage business generally reflected the highest credit upon the directive powers of Mr. Walter Lacy.

The theatres, generally, are doing well; and a few cold evenings, with the rapid shortening of the days, have had a good effect upon the numbers of the audiences. Commend us most especially, just at present, to the HAYMARKET, where the laughter provoked by "Spring Gardens" is absolutely painful. It is long since so admirable a piece of fun has been seen upon the stage. The various playbills have undergone but little change during the week, which proves that their programmes are still sufficiently attractive.

Miss Harriet Walcott—an actress formerly in the Lyceum company—has been giving a series of musical and dramatic entertainments, in the provinces, with much success. She is assisted by Miss Friedel, whom the papers speak of as an accomplished pianiste and vocalist.

Rodwell, the composer and dramatist, is engaged upon two new romances, to appear soon after the conclusion of "Woman's Love," which terminates on the 1st of November. "Old London Bridge" is the title of one of his new works.

MUSIC.

MR. MORLEY'S ENTERTAINMENT.

This vocalist was the leading bass at Covent Garden Theatre some years since. He has been making a long tour in the United States, and is now at the Strand Theatre, presenting an entertainment which is styled "novel," but the materials for which are pretty familiar to the public. Mr. Morley's "Down East Yankee" is, of course, very inferior to the sketches that have been given here by American artists. We think he has mistaken his powers, which neither dramatically nor vocally are sufficiently varied to fix the attention of audiences for two hours. He has a fine voice, but his style lacks refinement: still, as a bass singer at any lyrical theatre, his services would really be of value. His didactic matter, or lecture, was very indifferently concocted, and the illustrative songs had, in the majority of instances, nothing in common with his travels. Some clever songs, however, had been composed for his budget by Blewitt, Hatton, Emanuel, Edward Loder, and Stephen Glover, and some of Henry Russell's works were interpolated.

The finest composition of this collection was a descriptive scena of a poet's madness; but it requires a declaimer of a higher order of vocal excellence than Mr. Morley to give it due effect. The song of "Philip the Falconer," with Mr. Bellamy's quaint words, and some common-place music by E. Loder, seemed to amuse the auditory the most; and the speech of the Yankee orator in Congress, on the Oregon question, although delivered with a Cockney twang, was the best histrionic effort. Mr. Morley had an able accompanyist in Mr. Louis Emanuel, and had no reason to be dissatisfied with his reception on the opening night; although we suspect he has attempted higher game than his abilities will allow him to play successfully.

Eastern Harmonic Society.—This excellent Society, which meets every week for the practice of choral singing, had a strong muster on Monday, at the Literary Institution, Commercial Road, when Mozart's 12th Mass and Handel's oratorio of "Judas Maccabeus" were performed in a very creditable manner, by a band and chorus of upwards of 150 performers; Mr. Arthur being Leader, and Mr. Davis, Conductor. The solo parts were sung by Miss Sabilla Novello, Miss Felton, Mr. Lockey, and Mr. J. A. Novello.

Mr. Edney's Entertainment.—This vocalist gives an Entertainment, with songs by John Parry, Lover, and Dibdin, this evening (Saturday), at the Sussex Hall, Leadenhall-street.

M. Jullien.—Next Friday this Napoleon of musical enterprise opens his last and brief campaign of a month, at Covent Garden Theatre, as, on the 1st of December, the entire re-decoration of the interior, for the Royal Italian Opera, is to be commenced. M. Jullien announces that he has engaged four military bands besides his regular orchestra, to give due effect to a new Military Quadrille. The report that M. Jullien has taken the Pantheon is incorrect.

The Society of British Musicians.—The first Concert is announced for Monday, November 2.

The Sacred Harmonic Society.—On Wednesday, November 4, the Exeter Hall amateurs commence their season with Spohr's "Last Judgment," and a selection of sacred compositions, amongst which is an Anthem by Prince Albert.

MUSICAL CHIT CHAT.

Mr. Beale, of the firm of Cramer, Beale, and Co., music publishers, has concluded, as Acting Manager and Director of the Royal Italian Opera, at Covent Garden Theatre, for the seasons 1847, 1848, and 1849, the necessary arrangements for the plans and decorations of the interior. Our Paris letters announce that M. Habeneck, the celebrated conductor of the Conservatoire Concerts and of the band at the Académie Royale, has retired on his pension. It was this great musician and violinist who first introduced Beethoven's Symphonies in Paris. He was at the head of the great Instrumental Concerts for upwards of forty years. M. Girard, of the Opera-Comique, succeeds Habeneck at the Académie. The place at the Conservatoire will not be filled up until the meeting of the members. M. Tilmant, now conductor at the Théâtre Italien, replaces M. Girard at the Salle Favart, but M. Tilmant's successor is not yet named. The directorship of the Royal Concerts, held by Habeneck, is to be divided between Girard and Tilmant. M. Battu and M. Deldevez remain second and third chiefs in the Académie band, Valentino officiating as conductor, until the production of Rossini's "Robert Bruce," when M. Girard will enter on his duties. Habeneck, as a conductor, was unrivalled. No artist, with the single exception of Costa, ever exercised a more potent sway over an orchestra, the result of moral, as well as intellectual, influences. In a few seconds, the players became inspired, such was Habeneck's extraordinary fire and energy.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

Hark! heard ye not those hoofs of dreaded note?—Childe Harold.

Close at hand are the days in which the turf season of 1846 shall be brought to an end. But one meeting more, and we must bid it "good speed"—haply, with some such symbolic anticipation as that which served as the watchword of the most memorable occasion of modern annals—"Il reviendra aux printemps."[*] The Houghton week commences on Monday at Newmarket, and will, doubtless, be a busy, if not a particularly agreeable anniversary, of the last race meeting of the year. To use the technical way of speaking, the town is full of horses, as also of their representatives, all anxious that their studs should board and lodge themselves for the next six months. Consequently, of this will come abundance of industry, in the shape of small handicap, and other sweepstakes—matches upon the strict diamond-cut-diamond principle; populous entries for plates, and every contrivance by which a penny may be turned with some prospect of profit. That this will most probably not be the forlorn hope, which many now regard it, is the crowning attribute of the course. Its especial charm is, that the race is not always to the swift. Where is the excitement of a foregone conclusion? Last week we saw the Clearwell and the Prendergast—two influential two-year-old stakes run for at Newmarket—or we were much to blame if we didn't. For these stakes, the courses and the weights are the same; the T.Y.C., and 8st. 7lbs. The former was won by Glentilt, beating Clementina easily; the latter was won by Clementina beating Glentilt easily. This is the stuff of which your turf analogies are composed. Yet in the face of this, and such as this, since the date of the first Olympiad, we find racing speculation conducted as if its data were matter mathematical. So soon as a horse performs better than other horses that have not had an opportunity of performing at all, he is carried to market at an "upset price," as they say in Scotland, and customers in plenty bid for him. Thus there is Van Tromp at these presents quoted at Tattersall's at 8 to 1 for next year's Derby—a race for which there are one hundred and ninety-one nominations—and, probably, an effective force in training little short of a hundred and eighty. Now a hundred of them may be quite as good as Van Tromp—fifty of them better—and all so much the better for those who have got the Dutchman up, and would be right glad to see all his foes in as great force. Should the Herald's Office ever be required to furnish arms and a mitre for modern chivalry, what could be more appropriate than a race horse for the device—and for the posy, "What's the odds, so long as you're happy?"

Until late years, the racing season used to have but "a lame and impotent conclusion:" it was a drama of stirring incident, and considerable interest, wound up without a catastrophe. During its progress we were accustomed to many energetic passages, indeed; but it went out as unpoetically as a self-consumed rushlight. Now, matters are ordered more classically; and, as a set-off against the small personalities engaged in for the lucre of hay and straw—the huckstering half-hundred matches and five sovereigns sweepstakes—there is the Cambridgeshire—a great fact for traffic, and the exercise of the science of modern alchemy. On Monday last the professors of the philosopher's-stone school mustered in strength at Hyde Park Corner. There they laid three to one that Alarm did not win the ultimate handicap; and, as they laid all the odds that anybody would take against anything else in the race, well will it be for them should Alarm prove their tranquiliser.

Because such was the state of the odds, we do not suppose the reader to conclude that such was the state of the properties, or the proprieties of the market, but rather the reverse. Did we so imagine, we might ask how is Alarm likely to run, as he will be situated, faster for a mile and a little bit than Iago, weighted and distanced just to his content. If so beguiled, we might carry our catechism through a list, which will supply its own deductions to those whom it may concern.

For our parts, we must decline picking out the winner, even for those best of friends, our subscribers and constant readers, because, if we could lay our hands upon it, we should, most assuredly, keep it for home use. But, in lieu of this, a supererogatory service indeed, seeing that the sporting journals will each help him to two or three apiece, we propose for his acceptance a dotting from the Delphic, which will be found of very general utility. . . . .

LE VERRIER'S PLANET.

To the Editor.

Sir,—You did me the favour, on Le Verrier's Planet being discovered, to insert a notice of that event in your paper. The circumstances under which the discovery has been made are highly interesting and quite unprecedented. I beg you, therefore, to insert the following brief history of it, chiefly compiled from translations I have made of M. Le Verrier's own papers. I may remark here, that, since my first notice to you, the Planet has been frequently observed, both in England and on the Continent.

The planet Uranus was discovered on the 13th of March, 1781, by Sir William Herschel, who, at the time, was examining some small stars in the feet of Gemini, and he observed one to have a sensible magnitude, and to have less brightness than the others. This proved to be the planet. Afterwards it was found that it had been observed before, as a star; first, by Flamstead, on the 23rd of December, 1690; and, between that time and its discovery in 1781, by Flamstead, Bradley, Mayer, and Lemonier, it had been observed no less than sixteen times; and classed, by each astronomer, as a star of the sixth magnitude. In the year 1820 we possessed forty years' regular observations of this planet, and it was hoped that sufficient data existed to calculate tables of its motions which would agree with observations. This task was undertaken by M. Bouvard, a member of l'Académie des Sciences; but, in his progress, he met with unforeseen difficulties, he found that, if he combined ancient and modern observations together, the former might be tolerably well represented, whilst the latter were not represented at all; and, if he rejected the former, and used only the latter, in the construction of the tables, they would be as correct as need be, with respect to modern observations, but they would not agree at all with ancient observations. He ultimately decided that the ancient observations were erroneous, or that the planet had been acted upon by a strange and unknown force, and constructed tables from the observations taken between 1781 and 1820.

M. Le Verrier remarks:—"Twenty-five years have passed since this epoch, and we find that the actual tables, which do not represent the ancient observations agree no better with the observed positions in 1845." He then asks the following questions:—Ought we to attribute this disagreement to the theory not being sufficiently exact? Or, has this theory been sufficiently compared with the observations in the work, which has served for the base of the tables themselves? In short, can Uranus be subjected to other influences than those which result from the action of the Sun, Jupiter, and Saturn? And, in this case, might it not be possible, by attentive study of the troubled movements of the Planet, to discover the cause of these unforeseen irregularities? Might we not then determine that point in the heavens, where, by the searching of astronomical observers, we might discover the unknown body, the source of so many difficulties.

Such was the embarassing situation in which the theory was placed, when M. Le Verrier, in 1845, undertook to scrupulously investigate every part of this theory, and, at this time, not one of the above questions had received a satisfactory answer.

On the 10th of November, 1845, he made known the first result of his researches, and he proved, up to this epoch, the neglect of many essential terms, in calculating the disturbing effects produced by Jupiter and Saturn, the influence of which it was impossible to discover, and which were sufficient to prevent the obtaining immediate and accurate results from the tables themselves.

He was thus obliged to investigate everything anew with the utmost rigour, and he reduced for himself all the ancient observations, and, setting aside the elliptic elements of Uranus, already approximately known, he computed new elements from all the published observations to 1835; and from unpublished ones of M. Arago between 1835 and 1845. With these corrected data, he compared the calculated places with the observed places of the Planet, and he still found the difference between them to be great. Of these differences, a small part only could be accounted for, leaving the much larger amount charged to a strange, unknown influence.

M. Le Verrier then remarks:—"On the the suspicion of the movements of Uranus being modified by some unknown cause, then all possible hypotheses were hazarded as to the nature of this cause. Each person, it is true, simply followed the bent of his inclination, without supporting his assertions by any considerations. Some talked of a resisting medium; others spoke of some great satellite, by which he might be accompanied, or rather of a Planet still unknown, whose disturbing force should be taken into consideration; others even went so far as to suppose that from its enormous distance from the Sun, the law of gravitation might lose some of its force; and others thought that the rapid flight of a Comet may have disturbed the movements of Uranus."

Upon these several hypotheses M. Le Verrier remarks:—

"I cannot for a moment allow myself to think that the laws of gravitation could cease to be rigorous on account of the vast distance between Uranus and the Sun."

He then shows that the other hypotheses are inadmissible, except that relating to a new Planet; and remarks, with respect to the shock of a Comet:—

"Can it then be a Comet which, falling upon Uranus at a certain time, has changed the magnitude and direction of its motions? I have already said that the movements between 1781 and 1820 may be accounted for without having recourse to any extraordinary force. This remark, which seems to prove that the disturbing force has not exercised any sensible influence during that time, would conform to the hypothesis of a sudden alteration in the movements of the Planet; but then the series between 1781 and 1820 would either agree with the preceding or subsequent series of observations; and it is found to disagree with both. He then says:—"There remains no other hypothesis to try, than that of a body acting continually upon Uranus and very slowly changing his situation." This body from our knowledge of the solar system can be no other than a Planet of which we are ignorant.

He then shows that the Planet must be beyond Saturn; because, if a large body, it would disturb Saturn's orbit, of which there is no trace; and if a small body, it would not account for the disturbance at Uranus.

He then proves that it cannot be situated between Saturn and Uranus; but that it must be beyond Uranus, and at such a distance that it could act on Uranus and not on Saturn.

He then asks the following questions:—

"Is it possible that the inequalities of Uranus are owing to the influence of a Planet, situated in the Ecliptic, at a mean distance from the Sun the double of that of Uranus? And, if so, where is this Planet situated? What is its mass? What are the elements of its orbit?"

This problem thus proposed he proceeded to solve, and succeeded in so doing; and found that the body must be in 325 degrees of heliocentric longitude, within the limits of 10 degrees.

He then concludes his paper of June 1, 1846, in the following words:—

"In the year 1758, the illustrious geometrician Clairaut declared, with reference to the perturbations affecting Halley's Comet, that a body which traverses the most distant regions must be subjected to forces as much unknown as the actions of planets at distances too great to be perceived by us. Let us, then, hope that the stars of which Clairaut speaks may not be invisible to us; and that, if chance has discovered Uranus, we may succeed in finding the Planet whose position I have now ascertained."

In a third paper ("Comptes Rendûs," August 31, 1846) he determined the elements of the Planet's orbit as follows:—

Its period	217 years
Semi-axes Major	36.154
Eccentricity	0.10761
Longitude of Perihelion	284° 45′
Mass	$\frac{1}{9300}$ of the Sun's mass
Heliocentre Long., Jan. 1, 1847	326° 32′

Distance from the Sun 33.06—more than 3000 millions of miles. That it would appear as viewed from the Earth with a diameter of three seconds and three-tenths of a second of arc, and that it is about five degrees East of the star Delta Capricorni.

By reference to your paper of October 10, it will be seen that in less than a month after this time the Planet was found, occupying the predicted place, and having the predicted appearance.

Blackheath, Oct. 16.

James Glaisher

P. S. It is our intention to insert in next week's paper another chart, showing its motion, &c., since its discovery.

Another Comet.—Mr. Hind has discovered another Comet, of which he gives the following description in a letter dated Monday morning:—"About four o'clock this morning, I detected a telescopic comet in the constellation Coma Berenices on the Confines of Leo and Virgo. The positions resulting from instrumental comparisons with Beta Leonis are as follow:—

	Greenwich, M. T.			R. A.			Declination.
	h.	m.	s.	h.	m.	s.
October 18,	16	15	11	11	59	49.1	+	14°	59′	32″
	17	2	23	11	59	57.5	+	14	59	5

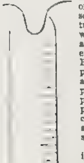
The diurnal motion in right ascension is about three minutes twelve seconds increasing, while the declination diminishes twelve minutes. The comet is a faint nebulosity, two or three minutes in diameter, with a bright spot in the centre. I cannot say positively that this is not the object found at Rome in Ursa Major on September 23; but, judging from the particulars published by Mr. De Vico, it is most likely to be a new comet."

DECOMPOSITION OF WATER.

One of the most striking papers read at the recent Meeting of the British Association, at Southampton, was the contribution by Professor Grove, "On the Decomposition of Water into its Constituent Gases by Heat;" for the following illustrated abstract of which we are indebted to the Pharmaceutical Times, No 4:-

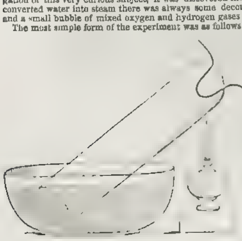
The composition of water, it is now well known, was synthetically proved by Cavendish, who, by exploding oxygen and hydrogen gases in closed globes, produced a quantity of water equal in weight to that of the mixed gases. The experiment was afterwards tried by the French philosophers on a large scale, and the weight of the water, produced by burning hydrogen in oxygen, proved to be exactly that of the gases employed.

Having given a sketch of the progress of eudiometry from the time of Priestly to the present, Mr. Grove went on to explain a form of Volta's eudiometer, which he constantly used in his researches, and which he considered offered many advantages over any other form. It is represented in the accompanying figure, being simply a graduated tube, into the closed end of which is fused a piece of platinum wire, which, when connected with two cells of a Grove's nitric acid battery, becomes immediately white hot, and consequently effects the combustion of gases in a most manageable manner. By an apparatus of this kind, ammonia, camphor, the compounds of oxygen and nitrogen, had been most accurately analysed. It was a curious fact that hydrogen gas when exposed to the influence of this ignited wire always exhibited the presence of some oxygen gas; and it was found impossible to pass pure hydrogen gas through water without its becoming combined with some oxygen. This may be proved by placing a small chip of phosphorus in it, when it will be found that sufficient oxygen is present to render it luminous in the dark.

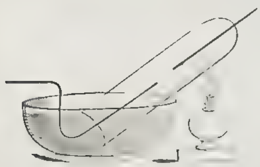


When hydrogen and carbonic acid were exposed to the ignited wire, there was a contraction of one volume of the gases, and carbonic oxide was formed in the tube with some water. If, on the contrary, hydrogen and carbonic oxide were exposed to the heated wire, the gases expanded in volume, and the carbonic oxide was converted into carbonic acid Here are two dissimilar results obtained under apparently exactly the same conditions. Pursuing still further the investigation of this very curious subject, it was discovered that when the ignited wire converted water into steam there was always some decomposition of that steam, and a small bubble of mixed oxygen and hydrogen gases was invariably formed

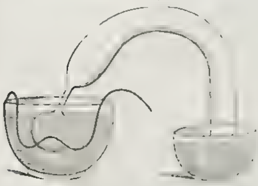
The most simple form of the experiment was as follows: The tube, being filled with water, is placed in an inclined position, and the flame of a spirit-lamp made to play upon its upper part, until a portion of it is converted into steam. The contact is then made between the battery and the wire; and, as the wire becomes instantly white hot, the decomposition is effected and a bubble of mixed gas formed This bubble appears to be formed by the first action, for, however long the operation may be continued with the same steam, no further decomposition results: remove the lamp, and allow the water again to fill the tube, and again convert some of it into steam, and another bubble may be formed The experiment was tried under a different form, and the same result produced by the electrical spark, to the heat of which alone Mr. Grove thinks the decomposition of the water is due.

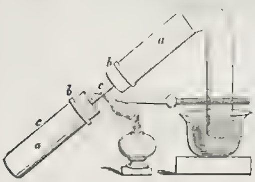


A wire is soldered into a tube, and another bent wire passed up through the water in the basin to within a short distance of the end of the fixed wire. Steam being formed in the tube by means of the spirit-lamp, a Leyden jar was discharged, and the passage of the spark between the wires effected the decomposition of a small portion of the steam.



As it became desirable to collect a sufficient quantity of the gas for analysis, another form of apparatus was employed. By this arrangement the wire is made to heat the water in the tube. Steam is thus formed, and then decomposed Connection being broken with the battery, the water again flows into the bulb, and the process being again and again repeated, a quantity of gas sufficient for analysis, is collected in the upper part of the bent tube. Having most satisfactorily confirmed these results, it became very desirable to ascertain if they might not be repeated by the influence of heat only. It might be thought by many, that, in the form of the experiments described, the electrical current in some way influenced the result. This, however, electricians would see could not be the case. However, to remove all doubt, the following form of apparatus was constructed, and the decomposition effected solely by the heat applied:—a, a, are two silver tubes, to which are fitted two platinum collars, b, and connecting one with the other is a platinum wire, c, bored through its length. The tubes being filled with water, heat is applied to convert a portion into steam, at which time a spirit flame, driven by a blowpipe, or, still better, the oxy hydrogen flame, is brought to bear upon the pierced wire, so that it is at once brought to a white heat, but little below that at which platina is fused. By this means the mixed gases are readily obtained, and collected in the upper part of the tube; by removing the heat, water again fills the tubes, and the operation can be repeated. Many other modes of performing the experiment were named; the most simple being that of fusing platina wire by the blowpipe, and allowing the fused globule to fall into water, and collecting the gas in a tube as it rises.





Thus it appears to Mr. Grove that he has proved the power of heat to decompose water. In the very beautiful experiments of M Boutigny, a peculiar condition of water is produced, to which the term spheroidal state has been applied. This condition has been attributed to the repulsive action of steam formed at the moment the water is projected on the heated metal. Mr. Grove, however, thinks that the oblate spheroid, which is formed when water is placed in a heated capsule, and which evaporates so very slowly, is due to the decomposition to which he has now shown water is subject under the action of a considerably elevated temperature.

In the remarks which followed this communication, it was suggested by Sir John Herschel, and also by Dr. Playfair, that the decomposition might probably be due to the effect of contact with the heated metal—the phenomena of catalysis, of which it is known platinum is a most active agent. Had vessels of quartz or agate been used, the question would have been more satisfactorily settled than it is at present. Dr Faraday was, however, disposed to regard the phenomena as due to the influence of heat, and pointing out to us some law intimately connected with the corpuscular constitution of matter. By the action of heat, water was converted into steam—the cohesion of the particles of water were loosened—and now, by increasing the heat, it appeared to him that not only was the attraction of aggregation destroyed, but the atoms carried beyond the influence of chemical affinity.

Peculiarities of the Season.—On Saturday last, a quantity of beautiful raspberries were gathered in the garden of Mr. H. Morgan, of Manor-terrace, Manor-street, Clapham. There was also, in the same garden, a number of apples of the size of a hen's egg, being the second crop this season. Laburnum trees are in full blossom in several gardens in the neighbourhood.

On 6,987,555 gallons the duty was paid, and 1,612,519 gallons were exported. On the 5th of January the wine in warehouse under bond numbered 10,239.946 gallons.

On Tuesday the ship Wyoming, Captain Miercken, arrived in the Mersey from Philadelphia, with loss of maintopmast and a number of her crew. She encountered a dreadful storm in the Atlantic, and during the time 20 of the hands were on the yards, a heavy sea struck the ship, and knocked five of them overboard. No efforts could be made to save them, and they were drowned. Three others were very seriously injured.

The opening of the Margate branch of the South Eastern Railway, owing to the long continuance of wet weather, has been postponed for a month.

We have received files of Australian papers to the 13th of June, from which we see that the Legislative Council was to assemble for the despatch of business on the 24th of that month. Another special survey had been made at the foot of Mount Remarkable, and it was said that the evidences of mineral wealth on the spot were unprecedented even in this colony of minerals.

The French papers state that in consequence of a violent storm, on the night of the 17th inst., the Loire became so swollen, that it carried away the suspension-bridges of Saint Just, d'Andrézieux, and Montrond. Several houses were thrown down, and some of the inhabitants are said to have been killed at Andrézieux. The road at Bolbigny, on the road between Paris and Marseilles, was rendered impassable, and a great part of the plain of Farez was for a time inundated.

A contemporary states that a farmer at Pipe-place, near Lichfield, has succeeded in getting a healthy crop of potatoes, while all the crops around him have been lost. The method used by this farmer was to give his potato field an abundant top-dressing of quick lime. His reason for this was, his suspicion that either excessive moisture, or some worm or insect, was the cause of the disease, and that, in either case, this dressing would be a cure. Whether his theory be correct or not, the experiment is said to have been attended with complete practical success.

The new Directors of the Edinburgh and Glasgow Railway, at a meeting held last week, agreed to discontinue the Sabbath passenger traffic on and after the 1st of November. The mail will continue to be conveyed by railway on Sabbath.

The splendid schooner yacht Wandering Spirit, the property of Viscount Kilworth, while beating into Kinsale on Saturday night last, went on shore on the rocks at the entrance of that harbour. The Countess of Mountcashel and two of her Ladyship's daughters were on board at the time of the accident but immediately after the vessel struck they were landed in one of the boats. The yacht has since become a total wreck.

We learn from Geneva that, at the moment when the citizens were fast recovering from their late excitement, their minds were disturbed again by the following tragical event. On the 11th inst., as M. Génecand, a retired mechanician, living at St. Gervais, was driving his wife and child to his country house, near Chévres, he fell dead by a pistol ball fired at him from the roadside by an unknown hand. Several persons have been arrested on suspicion, but all have cleared themselves by well proved alibis.

A letter from Dunbar announces the following distressing occurrence:—"The French brig of war Chevrette was run down off Dunbar on Monday evening, by her consort, the Trevoyant corvette, and sunk instantly, in deep water. The whole of the crew are saved, except four men who were in irons.

Letters from St. Petersburg state that the potato disease, prevailing generally through Europe, has extended itself to Russia, though in a small degree only. It has manifested itself partially in Esthonia, but nowhere else, that could be discovered

THE GRANDEE OF SPAIN.

INSCRIBED TO THE DUKE OF ST. ISABEL, THE INFANT SON OF COUNT DE BRESSON.

Grandeza! albeit the cradle and coral
Pap, soap, etceteras — nursery rhymes,
Are all you rejoice in at present—the laurel
Hath waved o'er your crib in these curious times.
Most bright is the lesson pronounced by de Bresson—
Oh! great is the triumph, and glorious the gain:
His child is made Duke—let the British rebuke—
The Duke of St. Isabel, Grandee of Spain.

How grateful the news to the Duke of Ossuna,
And eke to another great Duke of our own,
Once known at Madrid, Badajoz, Pampeluna,
When Joseph was "chevy'd" from Ferdinand's throne.
Our Duke won his rank when the Tricolor sank,
When he scatter'd and trampled on Tyranny's chain.
Who shares the reward of the conquering Lord?
The baby de Bresson—a Grandee of Spain!

A Grandee of Spain! 'Twas a title of honour,
Of which even Emperors once could be proud:
When Spain stood erect, with no stigma upon her,
And never to threats of the Tuileries bow'd.
But—libel on Chivalry! Godoy and Munoz,
And now baby Bresson, her titles obtain.
Oh! land we taste of th' Escurial's Junos,
And Duke of St. Isabel—Grandee of Spain!

But "Vogue la galère!" Though in exile and prison
Spain's children are pining, still there let them pine;
The cradled de Bresson to high rank has risen,
Then mute be the murmurs of mercy divine.
Intrigue has expended the shafts of its quiver,
But Probity's banner shall triumph again.
Gaul's part was a vile one; but joy let us give her,
In baby St. Isabel -Grandee of Spain

SCOTLAND.

Representation of the Stirling Burghs.—It is stated that the death of Mr. Gillon, of Wallhouse, will prevent further serious opposition to the election of Mr. J. B. Smith, the great supporter of the Anti-Corn Law League.

Edinburgh University.—Dr. John Thomson, late Professor of Pathology in Edinburgh University, died in the vicinity of that city last week. He was in his 82nd year, was a native of Paisley, and about ten years since, from ill health and increasing years, resigned his Professorship.

Sir Walter Scott's Tombstone. At the works of Messrs. M'Donald and Leslie, of Aberdeen, there has just been executed a massive tombstone, which is to be placed on the contiguous graves of the late Sir Walter Scott, and of Lady Scott, at Dryburgh Abbey. It consists of a large block of the beautiful red granite, cut from Messrs. M'Donald and Leslie's quarries at Stirling Hill, near Peterhead, on the property of the Earl of Aberdeen. The block is 7 feet long, and 6½ feet broad, and weighs nearly five tons. The upper surface is cut in the form of the top of a double sarcophagus. On the one compartment is the following inscription:—"Sir Walter Scott, Baronet, died September 21, A.D. 1832." On the other:—"Dame Charlotte Margaret Carpenter, wife of Sir Walter Scott, of Abbotsford, Baronet, died at Abbotsford, May 15, A.D. 1826." The letters are very deeply cut in the material of which the tombstone is composed.

Snow in Scotland.—The Edinburgh papers state that the Ochills were, on Wednesday (last week), clad around their summits with snow. In 1836, snow was seen on the Grampians on the 3rd of September.

NAVAL AND MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

The 1st Life Guards.—It is stated in military circles that the Hon. Colonel Cavendish, of the 1st Life Guards, is shortly about to retire from the Lieutenant-Coloneley of that Regiment, and that he will be succeeded by the Earl of Cardigan, Lieutenant-Colonel of the 11th (Prince Albert's Own) Hussars, by purchase.

New Screw Steamer.—The Niger, a new screw steamer, is to be launched on the 4th of November.

Activity at the Naval Ports.—The accounts from the naval ports speak of sudden and urgent orders for the preparation of men-of-war, small and large, for immediate service; and speculation is busy as to the object of this heavy armament.

Death of Rear-Admiral Walpole Browne.—Rear-Admiral Edward Walpole Browne died on the 15th inst., at his temporary residence, near Spittal, Berwick-on-Tweed, at an advanced age.

Army Changes.—Viscount Stopford, son of the Earl of Courtown, has retired from the Grenadier Guards. Second Lieutenant Hankey, of the 1st battalion of the Scots Fusilier Guards, has left the corps, and joined the 22nd Foot (Sir C Napier's regiment), now in the East Indies. Another promotion from the ranks has just been announced Sergeant Major W. Blackburne, of the 83rd Foot, having received a commission as Ensign, with the outfit gratuity of £100. First-Lieutenant and Adjutant Ayles has received the Captaincy in the corps of Royal Marines, vacant by the demise of the late lamented Major Balchild.

SKETCHES OF "THE GREAT BRITAIN" STEAM-SHIP.

(BY OUR OWN ARTIST.)

The condition of this magnificent but ill-fated steam-ship has excited so much interest and sympathy, especially amongst that intelligent class who duly appreciate the construction of this vessel as a triumph of mechanical skill, that we have despatched our artist to Dundrum Bay—the scene of the stranding—there to record with his pencil the lamentable disaster and wreck which the vast ship and the locality unhappily present. What a lamentable picture of frustrated ingenuity, defeated enterprise, and wasted energies, is there offered to the reflective mind! That the leviathan vessel should have so often withstood the fury of the storm, and the mighty power of wind and wave, to lie here almost an useless log, is a truly afflicting climax; in short, a state of things which would drive all but the strongest-minded men into the recklessness of despair! However, there is hope dawning in the horizon; and the vast treasure-ship—for such her luxurious fittings entitle her to be considered may yet be seen again stemming the wave in security; and making men's hearts joyful at her proud progress. Be this as it may, the scene at Dundrum is so fraught with incident and interest, worthy of graphic record, that our Artist, Mr. James Mahony, has found there ample verge for his facile pencil in the annexed Series of Sketches; and we accordingly proceed to our descriptive details.

Our Artist having reached Dundrum, writes: "As I anticipated, I found myself here late last night, and proceeded early this morning, (Thursday,) to the ship, lying some five miles from Dundrum, and found her "high and dry," with ten feet of water in her hold, fast locked in her sandy bed, looking most melancholy. The people here, however, wish her to remain so some time longer, as it is quite a harvest to the poor of the neighbourhood, from the vast number of strangers arriving daily; thus literally verifying the old proverb about 'an ill wind,' &c. It is said to be quite impossible for the ship to last out the winter from the bad weather generally in the Bay. Monday next is a high tide, and if she does not then get off, there will be no chance for her some time to come. Yet, she has veered round her head still more since the 7th, so that it is evident she is not in such a position as to be despaired off. And so thought her builder, Mr. Patterson, whom I met yesterday at Newry, coming from Liverpool, to report her position to the Company. He will not listen to the suggestion to break the vessel up, and will not admit a doubt of the possibility of taking her off. Of a like opinion is Captain Gabriel, of the Queen, now staying here on leave, who has been successful on a former occasion with another ship in the same position: he adds, the ten feet of water in her hold will keep her steady. He regrets that active measures were not taken to get her off on the Saturday, with the high tides. Should they fail in doing so on Monday, you will perceive from her position among the rocks, that, in rough weather, she will not lie 'on a bed of roses.'"

The first of our Sketches shows the Steamer as she appeared on the 7th instant, from the Coast Guard Station the sea breaking over her quarters: at the distance of about three miles is seen the Mourn Mountains

Next is the village of Dundrum, which, we are assured, is not so ill provided with accommodation for visitors as reported; but is, indeed, quite the reverse. Dundrum is a "special pet" of the Marquis of Downshire; and his Lordship allows his marine villa to be used as an hotel, during his absence. The village lies picturesquely on the clough of Dundrum Bay: on the left of the sketch is seen the villa or hotel; and in the distance are the Mourn Mountains

The next Scene is the removal of the Ships' Stores from the landing-place to the Coast Guard Station: this appears to have been rather slowly done, as the mode of conveyance engraved upon the adjoining page will prove: some ten or twenty men, with three or four horses and cars, were not sufficient to remove the vast and costly stores of such a ship; yet this was the extreme number employed for the purpose.

At the head of the next page we have the Great Britain, as she appeared at mid-water, or between the high and low tides. To the left is the Coast Guard Station, where the ship's goods have been temporarily stored. In the opposite direction is the St. John's Point Lighthouse, and between the shore and the ship is a portion of a heavy chain or ledge of rocks, "which will be certain destruction to the ship, should she ever come foul of them."

The next sketch shows the Saloon or State Cabin of the vessel, with her furniture and stores in course of removal. Such of our readers as may be pleased to refer to our description of the magnificent fittings of this superb Saloon, may imagine what a deplorable scene of havoc this removal must have presented

We add some details from Saunders's News Letter, dating from the period at which our Artist's communication ends:—

"Dundrum Sands, Friday, October 16, 1846, Four o'Clock, p.m.—The Great Britain remains in the same position (due west) she was in when I last wrote. The landing surveyor, from the Newry Customs, has been superintending the landing of her stores for the last two days; and he has relaxed the rigidity of the Custom's rules at first adopted, much to the comfort of all on board. The stores are deposited in the watch-house of the Coast Guard, very near where the vessel lies. Yesterday, a party of gentlemen came from England, who are interested in the concerns of the ship, among whom was Mr. Patterson, who superintended her building at Bristol. Mr. Gabriel, R.N., who assisted in bringing off the Gorgon, steam-frigate when aground, in February, 1845, has also been here for several days, examining the position of the vessel, and communicating with the agents and owners, with the view of undertaking to float her, which he expresses himself perfectly able to do, provided he is supplied with the requisite materials and hands. He has made drawings and calculations, from which he feels quite sure of success. Mr. Coppin, from Derry, who succeeded in raising the engines, &c., of the Rambler, lost on the Maidens, came here yesterday, and had communication with Captain Hosken. All hands on board now muster about thirty-four; but several are about to quit her to-morrow. Mr. Patterson examined her very minutely, and expressed his opinion that she had not suffered any injury at all likely to affect her being got off. Her bedding and the internal fittings have been taken down, and the cabins and saloons present the appearance of lumber or store-rooms. The removing of the coals has occasioned a good deal of dirt about the decks, and things do not look neat and tidy. At a meeting yesterday, on board, on the part of the Directors, it was decided that all hands should be ordered to lodge and board ashore. Mr. Gabriel, to whom I have referred, has written a letter to the Northern Whig, in which he says:

"There can be no doubt in the minds of any scientific men, but that she may be saved, and that without trusting to the treacherous spring tides. Every person who has visited her has expressed his doubts as to her ultimate fate; and the general opinion appearing to prevail is, that she may be given up as a total loss. From the first moment I was made acquainted with the exact position of the Grea Britain, I stated that she could be got off; since which, my opinion has not been altered one iota; and the more I see, the more I am convinced, that if it is the general wish of the parties concerned in her fate, she may be again afloat. My plan of proceeding with respect to this ship is founded on purely scientific principles. We well know that we have a large body to contend with, the dead weight of which is upwards of fifteen hundred tons. To move this ponderous mass, by any other means than those of many adjuncts, is quite impossible. No power of traction could be applied to any one point, and even if applied to different points, would be as useless and futile as were the attempts at the last spring tides. The ship's position is as favourable as it can well be for any proceedings that may be taken towards her rescue. The means applied to her Majesty's steam-frigate Gorgon are, from their results, sufficient of themselves to recommend them; and upon the same principles would I proceed in the case of this ship. She has from seven to nine feet water alongside, at high water, quite sufficient to float her. Upon the whole, I do not consider her position so precarious as is generally supposed. She is well secured by the head and stern; but, as to how she may weather the ensuing six months' gales and seas, I should be sorry to venture an opinion."

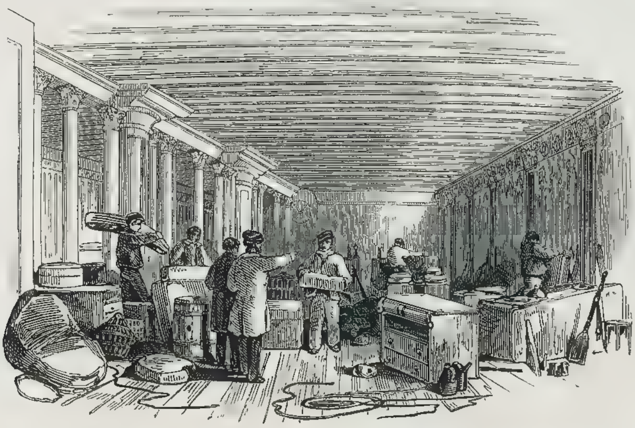
It remains to be seen whether the Directors will accede to Mr. Gabriel's proposal; and, for the purpose of learning their determination, he was to remain in the neighbourhood a few days. Captain Hosken arrived at Liverpool, viâ Belfast, on Sunday; he has been waited on by several nautical gentlemen, and has had an interview with the agents of the vessel, Messss. Gibbs, Bright, and Co.; and it is stated that, from Liverpool, he would proceed to Bristol, to communicate personally with the Directors.



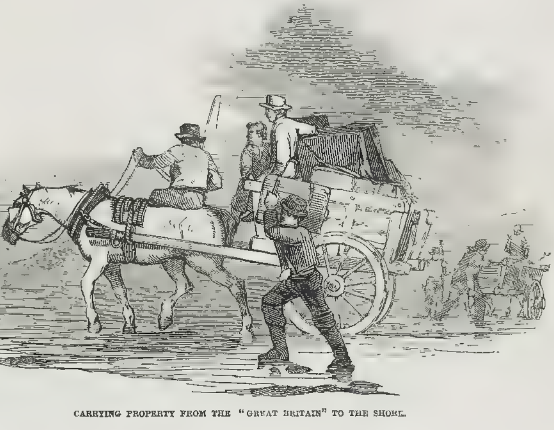
STATE CABIN OF THE "GREAT BRITAIN."—REMOVAL OF THE STORES.

In the European Times, Oct. 20, we find this intelligence:—"In a conversation which we had yesterday with Captain Hosken, at our office, we were glad to learn that he entertains sanguine expectations of getting her off. Breakwaters, tanks, and other machinery are now preparing, which will not be put into practical execution for about six weeks; and, as she now lies fast on a bed of sand, between two rocks, it is expected she will not sustain much damage."

The following explanatory paragraph, concerning the imputed incorrectness of the Admiralty Charts, has appeared in the Times.—"It has been supposed that Captain Claxton, in his letter describing the cause of the Great Britain running ashore, referred to an Admiralty chart, whereas he referred to a chart sold by some persons who call themselves agents to the Admiralty. The error appears to have been participated in by the Liverpool Mail, which, in its publication of the 10th inst., has a paragraph saying: 'I have made special inquiries as to the date of the erection of the St. John's Light, which, it is said, was mistaken for the Calf of Man Lights, and find that this will be the third winter of its existence. How, in the name of common sense or justice, was this light omitted in the Admiralty Chart?' This strange statement has called forth from Mr. Bate, the agent for the Admiralty charts, this contradiction: 'The fact is, that the St. John's Light has been laid down in all the Admiralty charts since its erection, as may be seen by a reference to those charts. It is also fully described in the Admiralty List of British Lighthouses, published 8th May, 1846.'"

In the early accounts of the disaster, the people at Dundrum were stated to have carried off the passengers' property, but this has been proved to have been done with no felonious intent, but merely to preserve it. A sufferer by the Great Liverpool, appears, from a letter in the Times, to have fared very differently to the above. He writes:—"In the present instance, the voyagers were so far fortunate as to be wrecked on the British shore, and to have a captain who retained sufficient nerve and self-possession to save their property; but, in the case of the Great Liverpool, which went on shore on the coast of Spain a few months back, on board of which I had the misfortune to be a passenger, from the moment that ship struck her commander appeared to have lost all control over both the crew and himself; and although, by a miracle, we lost but three lives, our property, in too many instances the whole of worldly wealth of the owner, was entirely lost; every vestige which had been spared by the waves being seized by the pitiless harpies of the coast, or, I regret to say, by the unnatural cormorants among the crew themselves."

The main object of this letter is, to the public, an important one, viz., that some inquiry should be made how far the owners of steam-vessels, which may be lost through the negligence or want of knowledge of their servants, are responsible to the unfortunate passengers who have entrusted life and property to their unsafe guardianship.

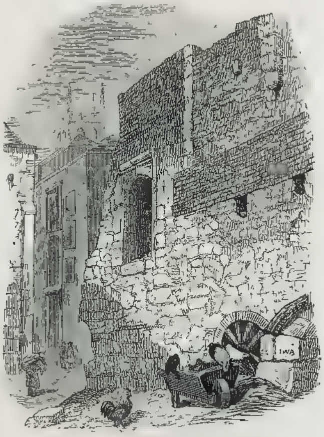


CARRYING PROPERTY FROM THE "GREAT BRITAIN" TO THE SHORE.

NOOKS AND CORNERS OF OLD ENGLAND.

WINCHESTER HOUSE, SOUTHWARK.

Winchester House, which continued to be the residence of the Bishops of that see until the 17th century, was erected by William Gifford, Bishop, in the year 1107. Extensive remains of the building existed down to the present century and part of it continued habitable, and was let to different families. Winchester-square had been originally the site of the great court, and an abutment of one of the gates still exists, together with the fragment above represented. However, the proposed establishment of a railway terminus on the spot may be expected ere long to terminate the last visible evidences of this ancient seat of Episcopal dignity; and, instead of the train of events which the present appearances serve to recall, a train of carriages, first and second class, and Parliamentary, will be ready to spirit him who lists to the distant parts of Kent, in as brief a space as might be consumed during a walk to Hyde Park Corner.



REMAINS OF WINCHESTER HOUSE, SOUTHWARK.

Some other portions of this pile of seven centuries may, indeed, be said to exist; but they are mingled with the more modern structure of warehouses and manufactories, and it is only here and there that a bolder angle, or a mass o bulkier materials, appears to indicate the masonry of an earlier period. Some indication of the Bishop's Stairs, by which the Palace was approached from the river, is likewise observable. The shattered remains of the fair rose window, which once adorned the Great Hall have been transferred to the wall of an adjoining warehouse, in the neglect which has failed to provide a better situatio However, even this is a worthier fate than has befallen the beautiful western doo of St. Saviour's, hard by; for that is reported to have been carted away piecemea with the rubbish, at the time when the present unseemly edifice was erected upon the site of the ancient nave.

Few situations have been more favourable to the observations of the antiquary and curious observer, than the purlieus of Winchester House; and, though the devices of modern times have made great innovations upon their antique graces, the neighbourhood is still far from being devoid of interest, to such as go well into the root of the matter. St. Saviour's is not wholly desecrated, and it yet contains much that is both curious and beautiful; and many old houses, and other vestiges suggestive of the olden time, even to the Roman period, are to be recognised, by dint of patient research and heedful observation.

GOLD; OR, THE HALF-BROTHERS.

BY CAMILLA TOULMIN.

CHAPTER XIV.

Catherine Joyce and Mr. Charles Sefton were tête-à-tête. An event had just occurred which is either the momentous one of a life, or a very awkward affair—the gentleman had proposed. To own the truth, Catherine did not appear to advantage; though, so far as mere person was concerned, she had never looked better, for the rich beauty of health bloomed in her cheek, and she was attired in the most becoming costume in the world—an elegant morning one. Nevertheless, she seemed involuntarily to shrink into the shadow of the window curtains, and so far from evincing one particle of feminine triumph, appeared thoroughly mortified, and ashamed of herself.

"You have used me ill, Miss Joyce," he said, in a tone in which real feeling was leavened by no small degree of bitterness, "you have used me in a manner—I was going to say—unworthy of yourself. But I was wrong to think there was one woman in the world superior to the perfidy and meanness of the sex."

Catherine was silent; she did not even raise her eyes, but continued her employment of the last five minutes, namely, playing with the links of her watch-chain. Mr. Sefton proceeded rather in the form of an angry reprimand, than as if he expected an answer.

"You have received with something more than complacence, attentions too marked for them to have been mistaken by you. Aware of the influence you have for months possessed over me, you have allowed it to ripen to a deep and ardent attachment, for the sake of enjoying the petty trium——"

"Oh, no—no—no!" interrupted Catherine.

"How otherwise can I read the riddle of your conduct?" he exclaimed.

"I did not know—that is—I did not think you were really attached to me," stammered the poor girl; "I fancied—I thought it was my fortune, such as it is, which had——"

"Well, it was your reputed wealth which first drew me to your side; but, like many a man so attracted, I have learned to love the woman better than her gold. And you, Catherine Joyce, you are too completely a Woman not to have known this; raise your eyes, look at me, and deny it if you dare?"

Involuntarily she obeyed; she was not weeping, but her eyes glistened with restrained tears.

"To prove to you," he continued, in a somewhat gentler tone, "to prove to you how little money has entered into my consideration of You, within these few days, I have transacted business with your father, in which, for your sake, I have accommodated him with many thousands. And this, too, at a time, when, from unforeseen losses, money bears with me almost a cent. per cent. value."

"You have done this?" exclaimed Catherine, seriously and collectedly.

"I have."

Catherine raised her hand to her brow, and swept back the braid of hair which seemed to oppress her with its weight. "This must be repaired," she said after a moment's pause; "I can do it; I can refund the money."

"There is no need—it is not worth while. I asked your hand, and do not wish a compromise between it and your fortune."

That had been no "fire of straw," no boyish flame, which had taught Charles Sefton's tongue—and from his heart—to speak thus!

"It must be," said Catherine firmly, "indeed it must;" and she rose from her seat as she spoke. "Oh, Sir! Oh, Mr. Sefton! you would not judge me so harshly if"——She paused, coloured, and grew confused. She felt that she could have died rather than descend to the poor subterfuge her feelings had drawn her so near. She could not accuse her father.

"If what, Madam? You have encouraged my devoted attentions or months, yet now you positively and definitively refuse my suit. What more is to be said?"

"Let us be Friends," she murmured, and held out a trembling hand. He took it—pressed it warmly—raised it half way to his lips—then flung it almost roughly from him, exclaiming, "We are not Lovers, and we can't be Friends!"

He rushed from the drawing-room, leaped down the stairs, and was in the street in a few seconds.

And Catherine! she sank upon the floor, crushed and crouched, as it were, into a shapeless heap, from the overpowering sensations of shame, bitter remorse, and compassion for the anguish she knew she had inflicted. Truly had the wrong she had suffered from one been revenged on another. Truly had Charles Sefton received a wound from the hand which should have been the last to inflict it!

Catherine, however, soon roused herself from the indulgence of unavailing regrets; roused herself to action; her first step being to seek an interview with her father. It was a very painful one. Both parties felt that they had been to blame; yet, for this very reason, they tacitly avoided censuring one another; and each took up the defensive to a certain extent.

"Really, Catherine," said Mr. Joyce, "I have latterly thought it possible you might accept Mr. Sefton. At times I have fancied you not indifferent to him; and, had such been the case, I should have felt it my duty not a second time to thwart your inclinations. Besides, he has behaved very kindly to me; and, whatever suspicions might once have been started, I have every reason to consider him a very honourable man. As for family quarrels, they are nothing to us; and, for that matter, strangers never get to the rights of them."

"Simple facts, Papa, even in family disagreements, speak for themselves. No, no; I cannot delude and excuse myself, with the idea that I ever thought of accepting him. It has taught me a bitter lesson—a lesson I ought to have known before—that there is no middle course; that a girl, to act honestly, must either discourage or encourage the evident suitor. And I to have done this—I, who have always so hated and despised a coquette!"

"I know that," said her father, adding, though, perhaps, scarcely aware of the great truth of his remark, "you are by far too earnest a person to be one."

"And yet, I have behaved like a Coquette of the worst sort. Papa, you must promise me one thing; never again to reproach me with my former folly; all that, believe me, looks fair and innocent compared with this despicable deception. At worst, it arose from the warm affections and trustfulness of youth."

"Have I reproached you, Catherine?"

"No; you have not. But I feel were you so to do, I could not bear it now. With regard to my fortune releasing you from all your engagements to Mr. Sefton, it is a thing which I insist on, and which can alone restore to me my self-respect. Two-thirds of my property will still be mine; enough for independence—enough to assist, with my income, the family means, until you can work yourself free from the consequences of these foolish speculations."

Mr. Joyce was far from remaining unmoved at his daughter's right resolves, or the generous devotion of a third of her fortune to the fulfilment of them; but he was quite incapable of understanding her feelings, as he had always been of comprehending her character. Poor Catherine! Surely it is not the least evil of the many shapes of domestic uncomfort—not to say unhappiness—to be among those who never judge of anything but one's Actions, who never penetrate to the Inner World of the heart, which, I sometimes think, is the more real of the two. But Mr. Joyce was an every-day sort of person, neither any better nor much worse than his neighbours, and the pen has played falsely if he be not depicted as such.

"If Margaret Clifford had been in London," thought Catherine to herself—she did not say it—"I wonder would her counsel have prevented things going so far! But I will write and give her the unvarnished tale; and well I know I shall have the consolation of her approval of to-day's proceedings."

Such a letter was written the following morning. But the post crossed which brought one from Margaret to her friend, making extracts from a brief and hurried letter from Trevor Sefton, which he had penned immediately after the death of his benefactress; relating, of course, the consequences of that event to himself, and telling of his proposed speedy return to England!

THE MARKETS

Corn Exchange (Friday).—Owing to the boisterous weather the arrivals of English wheat for our market since Monday have been on a very limited scale, consequently the show of samples to-day was small. On the whole the trade was firm, at the late improvement in value. There was a free sale for free foreign, at late rates, but bonded qualities were quite neglected. Scarcely any malting barley was on offer, and such was held at extravagantly high prices. Grinding and distilling sorts commanded a fair amount of attention. Malt was very scarce, and held for extreme figures. In oats comparatively little was doing, at previous currencies. Beans, peas, and flour as on Monday.

Arrivals.—English: wheat, 2770; barley, 2960; oats, 640. Irish: Wheat, —; barley, —; oats, 9800. Foreign: wheat, 590; barley, 660; oats, 2350; flour, 2380 sacks; malt, 490 quarters.

[illegible] Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 53s to 63s; ditto white, 58s to 70s; Norfolk and Suffolk, [illegible]; ditto white, 58s to 65s; rye, 37s to 39s; grinding barley, 34s to 36s; distilling, 37s to 40s; malting ditto, 42s to 47s; Lincoln and Norfolk malt, 60s to 65s; brown ditto, 55s to 58s; Kingston and Ware, 66s to 67s; Chevalier, 67s to 68s; Yorkshire and Lincolnshire feed oats, 25s to 30s; potato ditto, 31s to 33s; Youghal and Cork, black, 25s to 27s; ditto white, 27s to 30s; tick beans, new, 37s to 39s; ditto old, —s to —s; grey peas, 41s to 46s; maple, 41s to 46s; white, 55s to 57s; boilers, 58s to 60s, per quarter. Town-made flour, 56s to 60s; Suffolk, 49s to 50s; Stockton and Yorkshire, 42s to 50s, per 280 lbs. Foreign.—Free wheat, —s to —s; Dantzig, red, 50s to 60s; ditto white, 60s to 66s per quarter. In Bond.—Barley, —s to —s; oats, new, —s to —s; ditto, feed, —s to —s; and peas, —s to —s per quarter. Flour, American, 28s to 30s; Baltic, 30s to 31s per barrel.

The Seed Market.—Linseed and rape cakes continue in good request, at full prices; but all kinds of seeds are dull.

Linseed, English, sowing, 55s to 60s; Baltic, crushing, 39s 9d to 41s; Mediterranean and Odessa, 41s to 42s. Hempseed, 36s to 38s per quarter. Coriander, 12s to 14s per cwt. Brown Mustard-seed, 11s to 15s; white ditto, 10s to 13s. Tares, 5s 6d to 7s per bushel. English Rapeseed, new, £21 to £22 per last of ten quarters. Linseed cakes, English, £11 10s to £12; ditto, foreign, £8 10s to £10 per 1000; Rapeseed cakes, £5 to £5 2s per ton. Canary, 46s to 52s per quarter. English Clover-seed, red, 45s to 50s; extra, 25s to 55s; white, 60s to 62s; extra, up to 68s. Foreign, red, 40s to 48s; extra, 50s; white, 60s to 62s; extra, 75s per cwt.

Bread.—The prices of wheaten bread in the metropolis are from 9½d to 10d; of household ditto, 7½d to 9d per 4lb loaf.

Imperial Weekly Average.—Wheat, 50s 10d; barley, 38s 8d; oats, 25s 8d; rye, 38s 3d; beans, 45s 5d; peas, 47s 3d.

The Six Weeks' Average.—Wheat, 54s 2d; barley, 36s 6d; oats, 24s 2d; rye, 35s 0d; beans, 42s 11d; peas, 43s 11d.

Duties on Foreign Corn.—Wheat, 4s 0d; barley, 2s 0d; oats, 1s 6d; rye, 2s 6d; beans, 2s 0d; peas, 2s 0d.

Tea.—A fair average amount of business has been transacted in this article, yet no alteration can be noticed in the general quotations. The deliveries continue on a fair average scale.

Sugar.—All kinds of raw sugar have been in fair request, at fully last week's quotations. Refined goods are firm, and 6d dearer—brown lumps selling at 63s 6d to 64s, and standard lumps 64s 6d to 65s per cwt.

Coffee.—Ceylon is rather cheaper, with a very inactive inquiry. All other kinds of coffee are a slow sale, with full average supplies on offer.

Rice.—Bengal is again cheaper. Good white may be quoted at 18s to 13s 6d, and middling, 16s to 16s 6d per cwt.

Provisions.—We have to report an inactive demand for Irish butter, the supply of which is large, at barely late rates; indeed, in some instances, a decline of from 1s to 2s per cwt has been submitted to by the holders. Fine Carlow and Clonmel, landed, 97s to [illegible] and Cork and Waterford, 96s to 98s per cwt. On board, or for future delivery, very little is doing, and prices have a downward tendency. Carlow, 95s to 100s; Waterford, 92s to 95s; Cork 91s to 95s; Limerick, 91s to 94s; and Sligo, 88s to 90s per cwt. Dutch butter is heavy, and somewhat cheaper. The best Friesland may be quoted at 100s to 106s per cwt. English butter moves off steadily, at full rates. The best Dorset brings 106s to 110s, middling to good, 100s to 104s per cwt. Prime parcels of bacon are in good request, but other qualities are neglected. A few sales are reported in sizeable Waterford for the next two months, at 58s on board. The best hams are in request. All other kinds of provisions, including lard, which is 1s per cwt lower, are a slow inquiry.

Potatoes.—The supplies of potatoes being small, prices have advanced to £8 per ton for the best samples.

Hops (Friday).—On the whole, there is rather more business doing in the best col[illegible] parcels of hops, yet we can notice no improvement in value. In the middling and inferior kinds, comparatively little is passing, at our quotations. The duty is called £220,000. Sussex pockets, £3 16s to £4 6s; Weald of Kent ditto, £4 4s to £4 15s; Mid and East Kent ditto, £4 12s to £6 10s per cwt.

Coals (Friday).—Ord's Redheugh, 16s; Tanfield Moor, 17s; Clarke and Co., 17s 6d; and Lambton, 20s 9d per ton.

Smithfield (Friday.)—The supply of beasts on sale here, this morning, being small, and the weather more favourable to slaughtering, the beef trade was steady, at, in some instances, a trifling advance on Monday's currencies, and at which a good clearance was effected. There were in the market 21 beasts, and 310 sheep from Holland. The numbers of sheep were limited, yet the mutton trade was in a sluggish state, at barely stationary prices. Prime small calves produced late rates; but all other kinds of veal were very dull. The pork trade was in an inactive state, yet we can notice no alteration in the quotations. Milch cows sold heavily, at from £16 to £19 each, including their small calf.

Per 8lb. to sink the offals:—Coarse and inferior beasts, 2s 10d to 3s 2d; second quality ditto, 3s 4d to 3s 6d; prime large oxen, 3s 8d to 3s 10d; prime Scots, &c., 4s 0d to 4s 2d; coarse and inferior sheep, 4s 2d to 4s 4d; second quality ditto, 4s 6d to 4s 8d; prime coarse-woolled ditto, 4s 10d to 5s 0d; prime South Down ditto, 5s 2d to 5s 4d; large coarse calves, 3s 8d to 4s 4d; prime small ditto, 4s 6d to 4s 8d; large hogs, 3s 10d to 4s 6d; neat small porkers, 4s 8d to 4s 10d. Suckling calves, 18s to 30s; and quarter old store pigs, 16s to 19s each. Beasts, 627; cows, 100; sheep, 3670; calves, 221; pigs, 420.

Newgate and Leadenhall (Friday).—We had a steady trade to-day at full prices.

Per 8lb. by the carcase.—Inferior beef, 2s 8d to 2s 10d; middling ditto, 3s 0d to 3s 2d; prime large ditto, 3s 4d to 3s 6d; prime small ditto, 3s 6d to 3s 8d; large pork, 3s 8d to 4s 6d; inferior mutton, 3s 8d to 4s 0d; middling ditto, 4s 2d to 4s 6d; prime ditto, 4s 8d to 4s 10d; veal, 3s 8d to 4s 8d; small pork, 4s 8d to 4s 10d.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

The business and consequent fluctuations in the English Market during the week have been very unimportant. On Monday, Consols opened at the closing price of Saturday, and afterwards advanced about ⅛ per cent, but this improvement was not supported; 94⅞ to 95 for money, and 95 to ¼ for time, being the last quotation. Notwithstanding the Market has since received some support by purchasers, on account of the East India Guarantee Fund, prices continued to droop, and as the week advanced quotations became a shade worse. A disinclination on the part of the public is very apparent, which is attributed to the anticipated demand likely to arise from the various railways borrowing on debentures. Exchequer Bills have also receded a point, which, under ordinary circumstances would indicate an advance in the price of money. Such, however, is far from being the case, as money in the Discount Market continues very easy. This state of thing is not easily accounted for; but the most probable reason is a general disposition on the part of the public to await the result of events, both in connection with foreign politics and home prospects. At the close of the week prices were heavy, at the following quotations: Bank Stock, 207½; 3 per Cent. Reduced Annuities, 93⅞; 3 per Cent. Consols Annuities, 94⅞; New 3½ per Cent. Annuities, 95⅛; India Stock, 259; Consols for November 26, 94⅞; Exchequer Bills, 16.

Although the news of a sudden change of Ministry in Portugal was received at the opening of the Foreign Market, Portuguese advanced to 43. This price, however, yielded towards the close of business, and 41 to 42 was the closing quotation. An improvement has since occurred, of nearly one per cent, and the last (nominal) quotation is 42½ to 43. The prospect of Mexican Stock still continues gloomy, and, notwithstanding a long communication from Mr. Murphy, prices have gradually receded to 22⅞ for Account. The length of Mr. Murphy's vindication, precludes any examination of it in detail; but it is evident that there was great haste to convert the Bonds, and that he did not await the sanction of his Government, before he commenced, upon the terms agreed on, after the rejection of those which the Mexican Ministry had proposed: the Market at closing, continued very heavy, both for Mexican and Spanish. The latter betrayed some inclination to activity, on Monday, the Five per Cents advancing to 27½. A reaction, however, occurred on Tuesday, and the last quotation for the Five per Cents, is 26¼; Three per Cents, 37⅝; Dutch Two-and-a-Half per Cents are 59; Four per Cent Certificates, 92; Grenada, 21; Belgian Two-and-a-Half per Cents, 55; Brazilian, 85 to 87.

There is a decidedly improved feeling in the Share Market, although the advance at the commencement of the week is not fully maintained. Ambergate, Nottingham, and Boston, have improved, and an arrangement between the Shropshire Union and North Western Company is announced upon very favourable terms. The established lines have been generally dealt in during the week, and the dulness that prevailed towards the end, is mainly attributable to the state of business in the English Market. The closing prices of the lines last dealt in is subjoined. Amber., Notting., Boston, and East. Junction, 2⅞; Birmingham and Oxford Junction, 6¼; Caledonian, 21½; Direct Northern, 1¼; Eastern Counties, 21⅞; Perpetual Five per Cent, No. 1, ¾ pm; Ditto ditto, No. 2, ½ pm; Ditto, York Extension, 3⅝; East Lancashire, 18⅝; Ditto, New, 8⅝; Ely and Huntingdon, 6¼; Great Southern and Western (Ireland), 29½; Great North of England, 236; Gt. Western Half Shares, 79¾; Do., New, 7¼; Leeds and Bradford, 73½; London and Blackwall, 9; Ditto, New, 5; London, Brighton, and South Coast, [illegible]; Ditto, Fifths, 48¾; London and Croydon, 22; London and Greenwich, Preference, 22; London and North Western, 199; Ditto, Quarters, 23; Ditto, ditto, New Shares, 16½; Ditto, Fifths, 20; London and South Western, 72; Do., New, 31½; Lynn and Ely, 14⅞; Lynn and Dereham, 14¼; Manchester and Leeds, 105½; Do., Half Shares, 48¾; Do., Quarters, 6; Do., Fifths, 8⅛; Do., Extension, 1⅛ pm; Midland, 137; Do., New, 35½; Newcastle and Berwick, 26; N. British, 34½; Do., Half Shares, 15½; Do., Quarters, 3⅛; Do., Extens., 1¼; Oxford, Worcester, and Wolverhampton, 6⅞; Preston and Wyre, 30; Reading, Guildford, and Reigate, 1⅛ dis; South Devon, 30; South Eastern and Dover, 37⅝; Do., No. 2, 14⅞; South Wales, 4⅝; Vale of Neath, 1¼; West Riding Union, 1¼ p; York and Newcastle, 42; Ditto New, 16½; York and North Midland, 95½; Do. Selby, 81; Do. Extension, 33; Boulogne and Amiens, 14½; Direct Bombay and Madras, ⅝; Dutch Rhenish, 5¼; East Indian, ⅝; Great Western Bengal, [illegible]; Northern of France Constituted, 12½; Orleans and Bordeaux, 8½; Paris and Lyons Constituted, 5⅝; Paris and Rouen, 36½; Sambre and Meuse, 4⅞.

Saturday Morning.—The Consol Market remained inactive yesterday, closing at the quotations of the previous day. In the Foreign Market, Mexican Stock had rather a tendency to recede, and Spanish was quoted at mere nominal prices. The Railway Market was steady, without any material alteration.

LORD GEORGE BENTINCK stated at the meeting at Coleshill, on the 9th of September, that by the destruction of the POTATO crop, as proved, food to the value of £10,000,000 had been lost, and that France, through the failure of the crops, would require 2,000,000 quarters of grain. This vast demand must cause great excitement, and render correct information as to the supply, and the quarters [illegible] may be obtained, of the highest importance. No trouble nor expense is spared to furnish the latest and best intelligence in the MARK-LANE EXPRESS, which has been for many years the authority in the CORN TRADE IN ENGLAND and in FOREIGN COUNTRIES. THE NEW CENTRAL DRAPERY ESTABLISHMENT,
LINWOOD HOUSE, LEICESTER-SQUARE.
INTRODUCTORY ADDRESS.

MORRISH and MORRISH, in taking the Premises in Leicester-square, which will henceforth be styled "LINWOOD HOUSE," are induced briefly to state the principles upon which they intend to conduct their business; and in strict adherence to which, they confidently rely on receiving the unlimited support and extensive patronage of their friends, "THE LADIES," both resident and visitors, to the latter of which, from its CENTRAL POSITION and contiguity to the City and West End, will be found most particularly convenient.

From the peculiar advantages in the purchase of Goods, and the experience M. and M. possess, they will be enabled at all times to submit for inspection A LARGE AND WELL-ASSORTED STOCK of every description of Manufacture connected with their trade, inclusive of the costly and elegant, as well as the economic and useful; and their prices shall be uniformly so low as to defy the keenest competition.

M. and M.'s distinguishing principles are these:—
1st. TO SELL FOR THE LOWEST POSSIBLE PROFIT.
2nd. IN THE PURCHASE OF CHEAP GOODS, TO GIVE THE ADVANTAGE TO THE PUBLIC.
3rd. TO PAY THE UTMOST ATTENTION AND CIVILITY TO THEIR CUSTOMERS.

To enable them to carry out the above with a remunerative profit, they must secure a large and increasing business upon the system of cash terms only.

In conclusion, M. and M. would request the favour of an early visit to their New Establishment, as they have purchased from the manufacturers, at reduced prices, in consequence of the lateness of the year, an extensive, varied, and tasteful Stock of all the Novelties of the Season, to which they beg to call the especial attention of Ladies procuring their Winter Costumes—consisting of Silks, Shawls, Furs, Plaids, Oregon, and other Dresses, Ribbons, Lace, Hosiery, Gloves; in order to make room for which, every article comprising the late stock of Garrard and Rotherham, bought in one lot by M. and M. at less than half its cost, will be kept entirely distinct from the New Goods, and marked in plain figures, at such nominal prices as must effect an immediate clearance.

The Sale will COMMENCE at Linwood House on SATURDAY, the 31st October, at Ten o'Clock.

SELF MEASUREMENT—GREAT ACCOMMODATION.—The following Directions will ensure an exact Fit, and will be found a most convenient accommodation. ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL.—The singular virtues of this successful invention for Restoring, Improving, and Beautifying the Human Hair, are too well known and appreciated to need comment. The very fact of its having stood the test of nearly half a century of probation, and obtained the especial patronage of her Majesty [illegible] 7s. Family bottles (equal to 4 small), 10s. 6d.; and double that size, 21s. per bottle. CAUTION: On the Wrapper of each Bottle of the Genuine article are the words, in two lines, ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL. All others are FRAUDULENT COUNTERFEITS!!

FEATHER BEDS PURIFIED by STEAM. HEAL and SON have just completed the erection of machinery for the PURIFYING of FEATHERS on a new principle, by which the offensive properties of the quill are evaporated and carried off in steam, thereby not only are the impurities of the feather itself entirely removed, but they are rendered quite free from the unpleasant smell of the stove, which all new feathers are subject to that are dressed in the ordinary way.
OLD BEDS redressed by this process are perfectly freed from all impurities; and, by expanding the feathers, the bulk is greatly increased, and consequently the bed rendered much softer.
The following are the present prices of new feathers:

Mixed .. .. 1s. 0d. per lb.	Best Foreign Grey Goose .. 2s. 0d. per lb.
Grey Goose .. .. 1s. 4d.	Best Irish White ditto .. 2s. 6d.
Foreign ditto .. .. 1s. 8d.	Best Dantzic ditto .. .. 3s. 0d.

THE CHEST.—MARKWICK'S PATENT CHEST PROTECTORS are acknowledged by all to be the very best ever invented. "They are, in our opinion, calculated to secure general public patronage. We have little doubt but as this very useful article becomes known, it will, at the same time, become very popular."—Advertiser. [illegible] specimens, and pamphlet explaining their uses, &c., and containing the opinions of the press, will be sent free, on the receipt of two postage stamps. Depot, 69, King William-street, City. Liberal allowance to the trade.

TROWSERS! TROWSERS!! TROWSERS!!!—A good fit in this garment can seldom be obtained.—R. GRAVES, Fashionable Trowsers' Maker and Tailor, 313, High Holborn, after many years' experience and study, is enabled to assert, without fear of contradiction, that he can fit gentlemen with this garment better than any other person in London. The characteristic of his fitting is a gentlemanly style, with perfect ease for stooping, sitting, walking, or riding. A well-assorted stock of the newest designs to select from.—R. GRAVES, 313, High Holborn.

H. J. and D. NICOLL, Registered PALETOT Manufacturers and TAILORS to their Royal Highnesses Prince Albert, Prince George of Cambridge, his Grace the Duke of Wellington, &c., respectfully beg to announce that the same moderate prices are still maintained; and that the Fashionable OVER-COAT is made of Llama Cloth, of a substance as suitable for winter wear so as much as that which has obtained general approval during the past summer.—To be had only, in London, at 114, Regent-street, and 22, Cornhill; and of the recognised agents in the country.

NOTICE.—The PUBLIC is respectfully informed that BERDOE'S NEW PREMISES, No. 96, NEW BOND-STREET, are now OPENED, where [illegible] LLIUM, and other celebrated OVER-COATS, may be had [illegible] extensive variety for the present season, adapted to every purpose; also, of SHOOTING-JACKETS, now ready, or made to order, at a day's notice; all of which are confidently guaranteed to exclude any rain whatever. The long-established reputation for efficiency and respectability of W. B.'s well-known Waterproof Outside Garments renders any other recommendation now needless.—W. BERDOE, Tailor and Over-Coat Maker, 96, New Bond-street (Near Oxford-street), and 69, Cornhill (north side).

ROYAL NURSERY.—"DELCROIX'S MACASSAR OIL," imported under the sanction of the "Lords of the Treasury," for the use of her Majesty [illegible] Royal Nursery, is protected by two elegantly-executed correct likenesses, in embossed medallions, of her Majesty and his Royal Highness Prince Albert. It produces beautifully flowing curls, and, by the transcendant lustre it imparts, renders the hair truly enchanting. No Nursery, where personal advantages are considered important, should be without it. All orders should be sent to Messrs. Delcroix, 158, New Bond-street; as hairdressers (not being appointed agents), for the sake of gain, vend the most spurious trash as the genuine.

THE BALL-ROOM, THE RIDE, or THE PROMENADE.—The peculiar virtues of C. and A. OLDRIDGE'S BALM of COLUMBIA completely removes the difficulty experienced by ladies in preserving their ringlets after exercise. Its use so invigorates the hair, that tresses, previously the straightest and most destitute of curl, rapidly acquire a vigour which maintains in permanent ringlets the head-dress of the most persevering votary of the ball-room, the ride, or the promenade. Its efficacy in preserving, strengthening, and renewing the hair has become a matter of notoriety among all civilised nations.—3s. 6d., 6s., and 11s. per bottle. No other prices. Oldridge's Balm, 1, Wellington-street, the second house from the Strand.

ASHLEY'S ANTI-DEPILATORY EXTRACT, the cheapest and most speedily efficacious article offered to the public, warranted to stop the hair from falling off; also to thicken the same, and to free the head immediately from Scurf. Sold by Ashley, Post-office, Brixton, in bottles, half-pints, 2s. 6d.; pints, 4s. 6d.; quarts, 7s. 6d., and may be had from all respectable Perfumers and Chemists throughout the kingdom. Wholesale [illegible] 150, Oxford-street; Prout, [illegible]

TO LADIES.—ROWLAND'S KALYDOR is of unfailing [illegible] FRECKLES, TAN, and DISCOLORATIONS, producing a Healthy Freshness and Transparency of COMPLEXION, and a Softness and Delicacy of the HANDS, ARMS, and NECK. Its purifying and refreshing properties have obtained the exclusive patronage of her Majesty and the Royal Family of Great Britain, as well as of the principal Courts of Europe, and the most distinguished Nobility and Gentry of all civilised nations.—Price 4s. 6d. and 8s. 6d. per bottle.—CAUTION—The Genuine article has the words ROWLAND'S KALYDOR on the Wrapper.—Beware of FRAUDULENT IMITATIONS, composed of Mineral Astringents, utterly ruinous to the complexion.

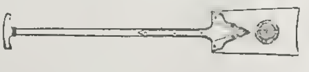
DIAMOND HISTORY, or, History of the Diamond, and Uses of the celebrated Diamond Dust.—To be had of JOHN BROTHERS and Co., Importers of Diamond Dust, at the Diamond Mine, No. 1, Angel-court (opposite Somerset House), Strand, London; and of all Diamond Dust Agents.

COMPLICATION OF DISORDERS CURED BY MORISON'S PILLS, THE VEGETABLE UNIVERSAL MEDICINE.—Mr. Job Davies, Tailor, [illegible]land, near Liverpool, cured of the above, after having been under the treatment of [illegible] years, without receiving any benefit therefrom. N.B. The [illegible] the Pills can be forwarded by post, on sending a p[illegible] Health, London, payable to Messrs. Morison. The British C[illegible] has now upwards of 500,000 cases of cure, which amply prove the truth of the Morisonian System, viz., that all diseases arise from impurity of the blood.

COMMENCEMENT OF THE SHEFFIELD AND LINCOLNSHIRE RAILWAY.

THURSDAY, the 15th inst., was the day fixed for the ceremony of cutting the first sod of this important line—the only link requisite for connecting by railway the Humber and the Mersey. The spot selected was on the side of a hill in a field, the property of W. Jeffcock, Esq., at the Hazles, near Darnall, where the ground was staked for the purpose. The day was wet; but great numbers of persons on foot, in carriages, and on horseback, thronged the line of road from Sheffield to the scene of action. Among the company and Directors were Jobson Smith, Esq., Chairman of the Directors; M. Ellison, Esq.; Colonel Humphreys; Edward Bramley, Esq.; Wm. Jeffcock, Esq.; Thos. Dunn, Esq.; Thos. B. Turton, Esq., the Master Cutler; Samuel Butcher, Esq., the Mayor; W. Smith, Esq.; Thomas Badger, Esq.; H. D. Wilkinson, Esq.; Dr. Bartolemé; R. I. Gainsford, Esq.; I. P. Cutts, Esq.; M. Hunter, Esq.; John Spencer, Esq.; T. A. Ward, Esq.; Thos. Blake, Esq.; Alderman Woodcroft; Rev. B. T. Stannus; Alderman Lowe; Thomas Raynor, Esq.; G. Waterhouse, Esq.; Edwin Unwin, Esq.; Henry Unwin, Esq.; Wm. Steer, Esq., &c. The Mayor of Sheffield, accompanied by Mr. Alderman Dunn, arrived shortly after one o'clock, amid loud cheers.

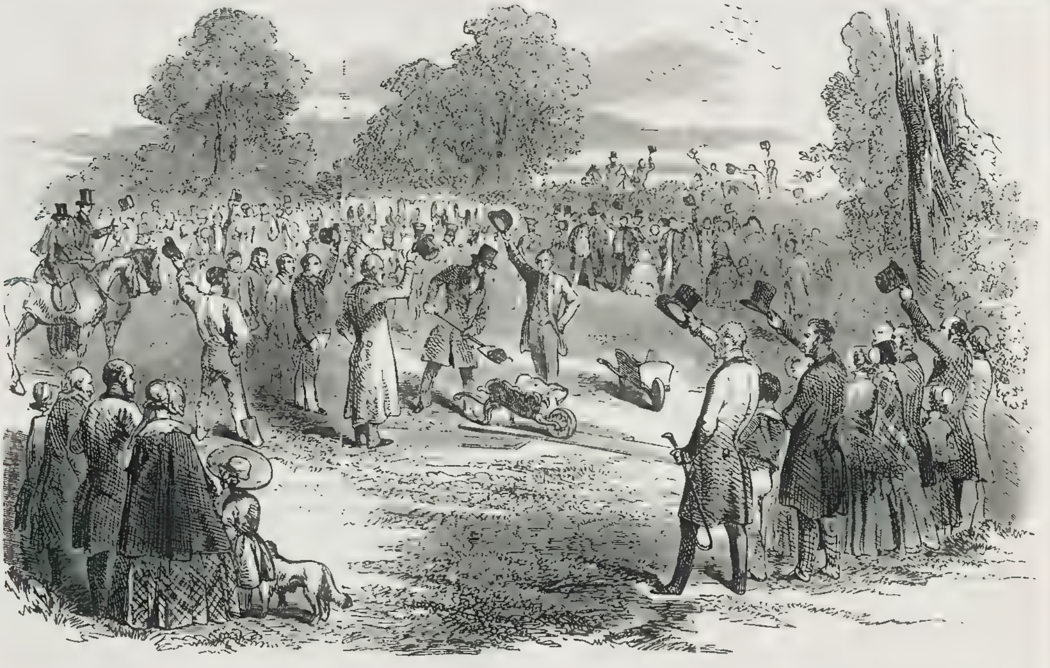
The Spade and Wheelbarrow, designed and manufactured for the occasion, were then brought upon the ground. The Spade is from the Establishment of Messrs. Rodgers and Son, of Norfolk-street: the handle is of snake-wood, and the Spade itself of highly polished steel: it bears the following incription: "With this Spade, Samuel Butcher, Esq., cut the first sod of the Sheffield and Lincolnshire Railway, Oct. 15, 1846;" signed by the Chairman and Directors. The Wheelbarrow, designed by Mr. George Eadon, of Fargate, is of Spanish mahogany, boldly carved on the upper edges and exterior, with foliage and shell ornaments. The whole is exquisitely finished and polished, and on the interior front ledge is a shield with a rich emblazonment of the Sheffield, Retford, and Lincoln Arms, surrounded by a scroll with the inscription "The Sheffield and Lincolnshire Junction Railway Company."



THE SPADE.

The ceremony commenced after a ring had been formed on the ground; the Mayor, Samuel Butcher, Esq., and the Chairman of the line, Jobson Smith, Esq., remaining in the middle. Mr. Smith having congratulated the Mayor upon the railway being commenced in his year of office, and upon the great benefit it would realise to the town of Sheffield, and the whole community, the worthy Chairman presented the Spade to his worship, who, on receiving it, addressed the company on the benefits of the railway, observing that it would connect the Mersey with the Humber, forming a direct line of communication between them. It would also form a line of communication between the port of Great Grimsby and Sheffield, Manchester, and Liverpool. He was sure that all who heard him would agree that the Directors merited the gratitude of the public for their exertions, and more particularly for their unwearied exertions in stemming the powerful opposition [illegible] Parliamentary campaigns, [illegible] which they had ultimately [illegible] by receiving her Majesty's consent to the bill. The Mayor then concluded by congratulating the company on the probability of Sheffield soon becoming a central station, and proceeded to turn up the first sod upon the line, amid loud cheers.

THE WHEELBARROW.



CUTTING THE FIRST SOD OF THE SHEFFIELD AND LINCOLNSHIRE RAILWAY.

The fine band of the B. Division of the First West Yorkshire Yeomanry Cavalry then played the National Anthem; after which Jobson Smith, Esq., wheeled the sod in the mahogany Barrow, and upset it into the hollow, a short distance below the spot.

Mr. Alderman Dunn then proposed three cheers for the Directors, and for the success of the Sheffield and Lincolnshire Line.

Sods were afterwards dug by Thomas Asline Ward, Esq., the Town Regent; and T. B Turton, Esq, the Master Cutler; after which three loud cheers and one cheer more were given for the navigators, with a hope that they might escape from accident during the formation of the Line.

The company then returned, and the "real navies" set to work in right good earnest to cut away the sods across the whole line marked out. The men were afterwards entertained at some public-houses in the village; and the band were regaled at their Captain's, W. Jeffcock, Esq., before returning to Sheffield.

After the ceremony, an elegant cold collation was served in Cutlers' Hall, Sheffield, to a company of about 250 gentlemen; Mr. Jobson Smith in the chair, supported by the Mayor and —— Vernon, Esq.; the vice-chairs being filled by E. Waterhouse and J. W. Dixon, Esq.

After the customary loyal toasts had been drunk, the Chairman addressed the company upon the event of the day, and observed upon the first proposal of the Railway: "it was found that Sheffield possessed not the advantages which she was entitled to from her population and her commerce, and that she was merely an appendage to the Midland Railway Company. The commerce from east to west was very bulky and of great weight, and of such a description as would usually be sent seaward. The goods made here, and which were sent to Norfolk, Suffolk, Essex, &c., were usually sent to London, and from thence back again by water into the above counties. Such a state of things could not and ought not longer to exist. He had, therefore, been bold enough to propose 'that a Committee be formed to carry into effect the Sheffield and Lincolnshire Junction Railway;' and he had done so because he felt it to be necessary for the welfare of Sheffield. From that small beginning, then, had come the great event which they had that day met to celebrate; and it gave the Directors the greatest satisfaction to find it acknowledged by the leading merchants and manufacturers of this district that this Railway was to be of great benefit to the town. (Loud cheers). The first consequence of the projecting of this Railway was the springing up the Grimsby line—and it always occurred to his mind that this was necessary to the ultimate sucess of this great, national, and magnificent undertaking. He was sure that whenever gentlemen would visit those docks they would be highly satisfied with them, and would agree with him that the Directors had been grossly libelled by things that had been unjustly said of them. An inspection of these docks would convince any gentleman that they were absolutely necessary to the prosperity of the commerce of this country. The Sheffield and Lincolnshire Company would, however, soon loose its individuality, a bill having been passed in the last session of Parliament, to amalgamate them with the Sheffield and Manchester line. Under these circumstances, he thought there was no Railway in the kingdom which would afford so great an amount of accommodation as that one of which they had the pleasure of seeing the Mayor cut the sod that day. The Chairman then gave 'Success to the Sheffield and Lincolnshire Railway Company.' Drank with loud cheers."

T. A. Ward, Esq., gave "the Duke of Norfolk," and complimented the noble Duke upon the exertions which he had made in promoting the cause of the Sheffield and Lincolnshire line. Michael Ellison, Esq., returned thanks. Several other toasts were drunk, among which were "the Lord Lieutenant of the County," "Lord Yarborough" (received with deafening cheers), "the Mayor and Corporation," "the Master Cutler," &c.

The entertainment was got up under the superintendence of Mr Geo. Wescoe, and gave universal satisfaction. The viands and wines were excellent. During "the dessert," our Artists' sketches were handed round to the company, and excited considerable interest as evidence of our anxiety to commemorate the event of the day with due fidelity.

For the substance of this report of the proceedings, our acknowledgments are due to the Sheffield Iris.

LONDON IMPROVEMENTS.

GREAT as are the inconveniences which have grown with the growth of this vast City of London, we seem to have little of that courage with which such difficulties should be grappled with; all our principal thoroughfares have become too small for the enormous streams of traffic hourly poured through them; we want new roads, long and wide, establishing perfect lines of communication between the extremities—yet the best we can do is to patch and mend bit by bit; and, fearful of the cost of a real, grand improvement, fritter away half a million in a back street! The defect of all the improvements of the Metropolis is visible in the plan recently laid before the Court of Common Council: compared with what is wanted, it is petty and insufficient; it is not the public work that would win for its originator a place of honour for bust or statue; nor is it worthy of a Corporation that commands little short of a million sterling a-year. The proposal is to cut a new thoroughfare from "the top of King William-street, along Cannon-street, to the south side of St. Paul's Churchyard." Of course, making a straight and wide street where nothing but narrow and crooked ones now exist, is a benefit to a certain extent; but the remedy is only partial, while the evil is universal; at both ends of the new line, the confusion will be as bad, if not worse than ever; what is wanted is, not so much the improvement of the old routes through this nation of streets, but the creation of new ones altogether; and their length must not be computed by yards, but miles.

London, we repeat, is not now a city; it has outgrown the dimensions and population of a capital, and has become a nation of itself, busier and more populous than many Sovereign States that fill a considerable space on the map of Europe. What was the old "city" has become the mere centre of the mass, surrounded for miles in every direction by thickly peopled districts: their traffic passes through from point to point in every possible direction; railways pour in their hourly contributions from every corner of the kingdom; and, from the centre outwards, there is a never-ceasing export of men and merchandise; the mutual trade of nearly two millions of human beings, the intercourse and activity of an Empire, and the commerce of half a world, now run through streets and ways built nearly two centuries ago, and very badly built even for the age that planned them, or rather built them without any plan at all; the result is that the "streets of London" are choked by their ordinary traffic. The life-blood of the huge giant is compelled to run through veins and arteries that have never expanded since the days and dimensions of its infancy: what wonder is it that the circulation is in an unhealthy state—that the quantity carried to each part of the frame is insufficient for the demands of its bulk and strength—that there is dangerous pressure in the main channels, and morbid disturbance of the current in all, causing daily stoppages of the vital functions—a kind of diurnal apoplexy, which the ministration of Mr. Daniel Whittle Harvey, and his "surgeons of the staff," palliates slightly, but can never prevent? No widening of these channels between point and point, within the great fabric, can remove the pressure; at best, it will only re-distribute it; lessening it on some points, to concentrate it again on others. The real remedy is the opening of entirely new routes through the whole mass. The streams of traffic would then be diverted into parallel lines; and it would be possible to pass through the Metropolis—in which time is more valuable than in any other in the world—at something above "the pace of a funeral," which is the present average rate.

The greatest improvement of this kind is one that has more than once been proposed, but, as yet, has not been attempted, on account of its magnitude; for the same public that no scheme, however gigantic, can startle anywhere else, become timid and despairing when a great improvement is proposed for the metropolis. The proposal to which we would recall attention, is that of a complete embankment of the Thames, and the construction of a roadway along it from Charing-cross to the extreme east of the City. Then, instead of the wretched and miserable spectacle the river bank now presents, we should have a magnificent series of quays, a wide road from East to West — that would relieve every street from Aldgate to Northumberland House—lined with warehouses, shops, and dwellings, which might be raised with that attention to ornament which we are beginning to display in our domestic architecture. The contrast such a change would present to the present foul and pestilential congregation of smoke, mud, and dinginess, may seem too fairy-like for anything but a scene in a pantomime, and yet we are convinced it is perfectly practicable. As to "engineering difficulties," they are slight, compared with those which have been overcome in twenty other cases: it at last only resolves itself into a "question of money;" and as to that, ten times the sum that would effect it has been raised by many a railroad company. We have only to remember that money will do other things beside build railroads, and the thing is done.

We cannot resist the temptation of waving (in imagination) a magic wand over what is called the "along-shore" part of London, and building it anew, as it yet will be; but, first, for a glimpse of what it is at present. It has two aspects—bad, when the tide is up; and worse, when it is low water: under the more favourable circumstance, it is a dismal range of irregular buildings, of every variety of height, colour, shape, and purpose; warehouses, coal-sheds, manufactories, low taverns; brick, wood, stone; of all heights, all angles, and every age, from the fabric "run up" yesterday to the crumbling pile that only seems to stand because it cannot make up its mind which way it will fall. As to the purposes to which all the premises in this region are devoted, the slightest glance is sufficient to show that they are such as a great city should at once banish to "a more removed ground;" some do not require description, and others cannot be described; most of those purposes are very useful, but, carried on where they stand, are decidedly disagreeable; in fact, the "seamy side" of the Metropolis is the one presented to the great highway of nations through it. What should we think of the taste or sanity of the wealthy owner of a splendid mansion, who should persist in piling the dunghill on the hall steps, taking in the supply of coals through the dining-room windows, and having the shoes blacked on the grand staircase? We do something not unlike this in our capital; what should be the main approach to it, a vestibule worthy of its wealth and importance, is actually turned into its inferior offices, of which some are as repulsive as all are needless; the richer part of the Commerce of London has left the river side; the East and West Indian trade, the discharge of sugar, tea, and all the most costly goods, is confined to docks; passengers might land on a quay instead of scrambling over all kinds of intervening vessels, and clumsy contrivances; and surely we could unload cargoes of timber, corn, and coals elsewhere. All this might be removed, and, instead of a chaos of mud-banks, floating-piers, barges, pot-houses, mills, and gas-works, there would arise a noble terrace and road, which, with a river frontage through its whole length, would have no equal to it in the world. Something like this was the plan of Sir Christopher Wren for rebuilding the City after the Great Fire; the necessity of keeping an open roadway was then so strongly felt that any building within forty feet of the water's edge is expressly prohibited by the Statute 19 Chas. II. But the profligate Government of that Monarch did not enforce the salutary law; King and Ministers were alike needy and corrupt, and to City jobbery and bribes may be traced the disfigurement of the greatest metropolis in the world. In the limits of this article we cannot go into the subject so fully as we could wish, but we may return to it, and examine the plan more in detail; immense sums are about to be expended on alterations that, comparatively, will have but little effect: might not a little greater effort produce ten times the result?

"Impossible!" is the first exclamation uttered when anything beyond the scale of ordinary doings is proposed; but the word is losing its terror; we have disposed of so many impossibilities in the most effectual manner, that the despairing voices grow fewer and fainter; we even find men acknowledging that the obstacles resolve themselves into two—want of money and want of will; they are, indeed, the real difficulties, and, of the two, the last is the most formidable; as to money, let us only have the courage to spend a quarter as much in the constructions of peace as for the destruction of war, and we should find it easy enough to get. A Government would make no scruple to-morrow in raising, the people would make no difficulty of lending, twenty or thirty millions to carry on a year's war, the whole to be exploded in gunpowder; yet countless would be the objections made to the same Government raising a tenth of that sum to make the Capital of the Empire convenient and healthy as a place of abode or business, though the improvements themselves would amply repay all the money expended on them! The fact is, we have not yet directed our energies to social improvements; the spirit is not yet created among the people that can alone enable a Government like ours to act in this direction. So a waste of many millions in a campaign in Affghanistan, is quite possible; but the wise expenditure of one, to make a free road through the Metropolis, is not: there can be no question which would be the better outlay; but the boldness and power that may be shown in the enterprises of Peace, it has not yet entered into the hearts of our Rulers to conceive. True, we have only had thirty years of it, and have not got rid of the impressions of a bad period; all our leading Statesmen grew up to manhood in the midst of War, and do not sufficiently estimate the opportunities of Peace; but, as certainly as the present hour is passing over us, the time will come when those who govern England will deal more largely with the physical evils of society—and wage war with every deteriorating influence that presses on the daily life of the masses, that exposes them, in some forms, to suffering and disease, in others, to perpetual loss and inconvenience.

"THE GREAT WESTERN" STEAM-SHIP.

The Engraving upon our front page shows this well-tried vessel, during the awful gale, on her late passage to New York. The moment depicted by the Artist is when the steamer was struck amidships, by a tremendous sea, as recorded in the following extract from the Log:—

"Eleven o'clock, A.M.—A heavy sea broke over the fore-part of the starboard wheel-house, which started the ice-house, &c., washing all to leeward.—Attempted to wear ship; lowered the after gaffs down; manned the fore-rigging, and loosened the weather yard-arm of the foresail to pay her off, but of no effect, and the sails blew away from the yards; the lee-quarter boats torn from the davits by the heavy lee-lurches."

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

FRANCE.

The rumours of a change of Ministry, to which we alluded in our latest edition last week, have since acquired additional strength, particularly as the Portefeuille, which is known to have relations with the Foreign Office, states that there is to be a modification of the Cabinet, and that M. Guizot is to be appointed President of the Council. Marshal Soult, it is said, is to retire altogether from the Cabinet. According to other accounts, MM Lacave Laplagne, Martin, and Salvandy, are to give up their respective departments to MM. Bignon, or M. H. Passy, MM. Hebert and Rossi. La Réforme mentions the report that M. de Salvandy is to be placed at the head of the Civil Government of Algeria, with the view of paving the way for the promotion of the Duke d'Aumale to the "Vice-Royalty" of that country. The Duke d'Aumale arrived at Bayonne on Friday (last week), but he only remained to take some refreshment, and then set off for Paris, where he arrived on Monday

The Journal de l'Aisne quotes a letter from Soissons, one of the most important corn markets in the province, which states that "the price of wheat is beginning to decline in all the markets in this country, and is expected to be much lower before the end of January next. The uneasiness which had been caused by the efforts of speculators is beginning to abate, and it is now generally believed that the last harvest will be sufficient for the wants of the population."

The opening of the line from Abbeville to Amiens, which was to take place next month, has, it appears, been postponed until the end of December or the beginning of January ensuing. As part of this line runs through peat grounds, the delay is judicious, for it will give the foundations more time to settle. It is but just, however, to say that the whole line appears to have been laid with every possible regard to solidity; and as there are scarcely any embankments of importance, the road promises to be one of the safest in France.

The King of the Belgians arrived at the Palace of St. Cloud on Sunday.

On Sunday, the first trial of the atmospheric system was made at Saint Germain, under the direction of M. Flachat, the railroad engineer. One of the pneumatic machines, of 200 horse-power, and a condensing machine of 20 horse-power, were set in motion. The experiment was crowned with complete success

Most disastrous accounts are given, in the Paris papers, of the effects of the inundations in the south of France, which for some days impeded all communication.

At Roanne, Nevers, Orleans, and Blois, great damage has been caused by the overflowing of the Loire, and some of its tributary streams. Whole villages have been destroyed, and rich valleys ruined, together with several large industrial establishments. Several persons also have been drowned. At Roanne, Andreizeux, and in the vicinity of Orleans and Nevers, the waters of the overflowed Loire exercised the utmost violence.

The Tours road had been entirely intercepted, and a large portion of the Orleans and Tours Railroad has been invaded by the waters of the Loire.

The magnificent bridge over the Loire at Orleans, the viaduct connecting the Orleans and Vierzon Railway with the terminus in that city, has been swept away by the resistless fury of the torrent. It cost 6,000,000 francs in the erection, and will probably delay the opening of that line for at least two years to come!

The following are particulars of this accident and of other casualties: "At Orleans, the Loire in twenty-four hours rose sixteen feet: a sudden fall then took place. The reduction amounted to twenty inches in two hours, and continued during the night of the 20th. This abatement produced a new disaster; the embankments cracked, and at one place were carried away to an extent of sixteen feet A horrible noise like an explosion was heard upon the quays of Orleans, it was the railway viaduct of Vierzon, which the violence of the torrent had burst. The levée near St. Pré has been carried away through a length of about thirty-five yards, and immediately the Loire assumed the appearance, not of a river, but of a sea! As far as the eye could see, there was only a horizon of waters. All the communes of the Val are literally submerged. Some houses are inundated to the depth of twenty feet; others are totally submerged. Help is cried for everywhere, but difficult to be afforded. How can boats be directed through gardens intersected by hedges? besides, the numbers of boats available are utterly insufficient. Boatmen cannot be obtained, and the danger is as great to those who offer as to those who receive assistance. Unfortunates who took refuge in the upper chambers of the houses are taken out by means of rope ladders. Several of the houses in Orleans have fallen by the pressure of the waters. The conservatories are all destroyed. In the country, the unfortunate inhabitants are insulated, some on the roofs of their houses, others in barns, some among the branches of trees. Meanwhile, food fails; the bakers cannot make bread; desolation is universal. On the afternoon of the 20th the tocsin was sounded in all the communes of the Val, and in the night the common cry was, 'sauve qui peut.' Here and there upon the quays, and in the city, peasants were seen driving beasts before them, which they had saved from the river; whole families were nearly naked, stripped of all resources, and barely able to save themselves from the fury of the waters."

At Nevers (says one of the papers), during the memory of man, the waters of the Loire had never risen to so considerable a height, even on the occasion of the 13th November, 1790, the most disastrous inundation hitherto experienced. The most fatal episode of the disastrous day of the 19th at Roanne, was the loss of the municipal councillor Merle, his son, and some other persons, who were upset in a boat, within sight of hundreds of spectators, and perished. Another bark having struck against some wreck, a young woman was thrown out by the shock. By a spontaneous movement she clung to her husband, and seizing him by the neck, she prevented him from swimming; but the husband, being a powerful man of lofty stature, by a desperate exertion, succeeded in bearing his burden to near some houses, where the inhabitants threw him two sheets twisted together, with which the husband and wife were hauled into a house through the windows. A watchmaker of Roanne, who had been roused from his bed by a gendarme, had barely time to escape almost naked through his shop door. His wife and daughter were saved during the day, more dead than alive, seeing the houses crumbling to pieces behind them, and the flood rushing down the Rue Royale before them. In all quarters were to be seen old men and children lamenting their friends, from whom they were separated. It is said that the entire of the Rue Royale would have been destroyed, but that M. Boutoux, of the corps of Royal Engineers, effected a passage for the water, by which the depth of the flood was diminished nearly four feet. The high road to Briare was covered with water to the depth of several feet, and the passage over the bridge of Brionne was completely closed. The torrent, which extended over the land to a distance of a quarter of a mile from the Loire, roared like a stormy sea, and carried with it wrecks of every description.

The Loire committed dreadful ravages between the plain of Aurec, Andrezieux, and Roanne. The St. Etienne Railway had been partly destroyed at Andrezieux. All the boats, laden with merchandise to the amount of 1,000,000f., lying in the canal of Digoin, had been sunk, and 1000 hhd. of brandy, each worth 800f., and 1500 casks of wine were lost. At Pouilly, 1700 pieces (hogsheads) of wine of the country and of Beaujolais, had been carried away by the floods. The swell in the Loire began to be felt at Nantes on the 21st, but the authorities had cautioned the inhabitants residing along its banks against its consequences, and no accident has as yet occurred. The Allier and the Loire, at their junction, became an immense sea. 1400 labourers, engaged in the construction of the railroad, would have inevitably perished, had not provisions been sent to them by a steam-boat, which took the men on board and brought them to a place of safety. In the Val of Orleans 10 districts were entirely laid waste; 80 boats and 250 boatmen had arrived at Orleans from Paris, and were employed in carrying provisions and relief to the inhabitants of the inundated country. Near Amboise, the Loire had burst the great bank by which its course is partially restrained, and flowing with irresistible force through the opening thus made, had made an immense breach in the Orleans and Bordeaux Railway, which is there carried along an embankment. About four kilometres of this embankment are said to be entirely washed away, and the line for some miles, although it would not have been materially injured by an ordinary inundation, is supposed to have received so much damage that some months must elapse before it can be again opened for traffic.

A Bordeaux journal of the 21st gives the following account of the loss of the diligence near Feurs:—"The diligence, in which there were nine passengers, was carried away by the flood, and only three persons escaped. When assistance arrived, the carriage, horses, and passengers had disappeared. It was only eighteen hours afterwards that the three passengers who had escaped were found under the trees in an alarming state of exhaustion. They were removed to an inn, where every attention was paid to them, but one of them, it is said, remains dangerously ill. The conductor of the diligence, whose name was Hardi, and the driver, seeing that the horses had broken their traces, endeavoured to save themselves by grasping the tails of two of them; but the torrent was so rapid that horses and men were carried away and drowned. Amongst the passengers who were lost were a lady and an Inspector of Diligences. It is said that there were 260,000f. in specie in it. The diligence had not been found on the following day."

"The list," says the Débats, "of the districts wheer this awful inundation has extended, is daily increasing. From the whole course of the Loire, fresh accounts of losses and misfortunes are reaching us. Hitherto, we had no detailed accounts from Tours, but some have this day arrived. The Val is ravaged like that of Orleans. We are beginning to receive advices from the Lower Loire, below Tours. At Angers, the rise of the Loire and Maine were creating great alarm. The Allier had done fresh damage in the district that bears its name, and in that of the Puy-de-Dôme, which it partly crosses. In the south, the rise of several torrents, and especially that of the Rhone, excited great anxiety. At Lyons, the Rhone and Saone do not appear to have as yet given rise to much uneasiness." The loss of life has, unhappily, been considerable; that of property incalculable. The main embankment of the Loire has given way not only at Amboise but at Meung, Beaugency, Vouvray, and other places along the course of the river. Most of the principal streets of the city of Tours—among others, the Rue Royale up to the Palais de Justice—are under water. The communication with Paris is completely cut off, except by the circuitous routes of Chartres and Vendome; and the service of the railway (Orleans and Bordeaux) is restricted to the portion of the line between Orleans and Blois. This visitation would, it was believed, prevent any fêtes or other demonstrations in compliment to the Duke and Duchess de Montpensier in the south of France.

We select the incidents which follow from provincial French papers:—"At Roanne, several persons have perished. Fifteen hundred have lost their habitations, and about 120 houses have been destroyed. A thousand persons are lodged and fed at the hospital at Roanne and in the charitable institution the Phénix. The loss to the state and to private individuals is immense. The defensive dyke and road are broken through, and there is no communication between Roanne and Coteau except by boats. Not less than 85,000 francs worth of tobacco has been lost. The canal between Roanne and Digoin is much damaged, but less than was imagined. The passage is interrupted at Pouilly, from the dreadful state of the road, but the bridge is intact. An arch of the suspension bridge at Hegally has been carried away. At Balbigny thirty-eight houses have been destroyed. A person who took refuge in a tree perished, without its being possible to succour him. A girl of eighteen was lost, with three children committed to her charge. The greffier of the Juge de Paix, when going to take down a statement relative to the dead bodies, fell dead himself suddenly. At Digoin, M. de Jagny, aged 70, formerly an officer in the hussars, persisted in remaining in his house, which fell down over him. His servant-girl escaped by a sort of miracle. At St. Yon, a woman was crushed to death. M. Gollet, mayor of Avrilly, perished with one of his servants, whilst endeavouring to carry aid to others. Dead bodies are seen floating down the Loire, and the river is covered with casks of wine, ricks of hay and corn, and other articles. At St. Rambert, all the boats that were being built, others that were finished, and a large quantity of timber, were swept off. At St. Just, the suspension-bridge was carried away."

The Moniteur contains three Royal ordinances, dated the 26th inst., whereby, in consequence of the "immense losses" caused by the overflowing of the Loire, Rhone, and their tributary streams, a sum of 3,900,000 francs is granted towards relieving the sufferers, and repairing the roads, bridges, dykes, &c., which the inundation has destroyed or damaged. A fourth ordinance applies a sum of 1,500,000 francs to works on the Royal roads. The object of this grant is to afford occupation to the labouring classes during the winter season.

The rejoicings appointed to take place at Versailles are suspended, as we find from the following announcement in a Ministerial paper:—"We announced that a grand theatrical representation was to take place at Versailles, on the occasion of the marriage of the Duke de Montpensier, but the King, deeply touched with the disasters which have fallen on several of the departments, has countermanded all kinds of rejoicing There is no family fête for our Princes when a public disaster has scattered misery and mourning amongst so many cottages. The Royal generosity will be vouchsafed to the great number of unfortunate persons who have no other resource but the sympathy which they inspire—it will be the most noble manner of fêting the marriage of the Duke de Montpensier."

SPAIN.

The promised amnesty appeared in the Madrid Gazette of the 18th. It is by no means an extensive one, and it has been received with contempt and derision by the public. It only extends to Colonels in the army, and to civilians who have not held a higher office than that of Political Chief

The ball given at the Palace on the 16th was extremely brilliant. It was the Duke de Rainzares who acted on the occasion as Master of the Ceremonies. Messrs. Costa Cabral, Gonzales Bravo, Salamanca, General Narvaez, Alexandre Dumas, &c., were present at it. Mr. Bulwer was absent.

The Queen and the Princes again attended at the bull-fights on the 18th. The wetness of the day, and the repetition of nearly the same ceremonies producing a monotonous effect, deprived the spectacle of the enlivening character of the previous days.

The Queen, besides, was fatigued from the attendance of the previous days, as well as the Palace ball. One circumstance occurred which must not be passed unnoticed. As the Queen was leaving the square in her carriage, the usual respectful salutes were paid her. But, when Munoz and Maria Christina appeared, a hiss broke from the assembled crowd. Munoz put his head to the carriage windows, but hastily drew it back again when he beheld the angry countenances of the multitude. Maria Christina also looked at the window, and endeavoured to smile, and nodded her head; but the hiss did not cease; on the contrary, the sight of the Duchess of Rianzares seemed to render still stronger the signs of dislike to her person. She hastily drew back to the corner of the carriage, but the unpleasant sound followed as it moved off.

The President of the Council gave a grand banquet on the 19th; at which all the Ministers, the members of the diplomatic body, and the superior officers of the Palace were invited.

On the 14th inst. a grand banquet was given in honour of Mr. Cobden, at Madrid, by the members of the Spanish Commercial Association. The guests assembled at half-past six, among whom were D. Alvaro Flores Estrada, the Spanish economist; the Duke of Sotomayer, Spanish Ambassador to the English Court; and numerous other persons of distinction. Counts Santa Olalla, Gonzalo, Moren y Pena Aguyac were prevented from attending by different causes. The chair was taken by S. Alvara, having on his right Mr. Cobden, Duke de Sotomayer acting as Vice-President. The health of Mr. Cobden was proposed by the President, after a short and emphatic speech, in which he alluded to the services rendered by Mr. Cobden to his country.—Mr. Cobden then rose, and spoke in English:—"Gentlemen, it is with the deepest gratitude that I accept this manifestation of your sympathy; I accept it as a proof of your approbation of the principles of Free-Trade, and of the means resorted to by the leaders of the League in England. We stood up, gentlemen, as the advocates of Free-Trade, not in a party spirit, but in the common interest of all; and we obtained our end solely by moral means, which deserve, I hope, the praise of the honourable men of every country. From the very beginning of the struggle we never entertained the slightest idea of having recourse to physical force; we placed our confidence in the strength of reason and argument. Our only weapon was the pen, our loudest artillery the voice of our orators. We did not make proselytes by force, but by conviction. For seven years a fierce struggle was kept up amongst twenty-seven millions of people, without shedding a single drop of blood. The battle was long and fierce; but, once gained, the victory is eternal. All present are, no doubt, well aware of the precise object we had in view in our struggle for Free-Trade We had, Gentlemen, a great principle in view. We demanded for every Englishman the right of exchanging the produce of his labour for that of every quarter of the globe. We demanded the suppression of all protective duties. What we advocated has become the dominating policy of the people of Great Britain. Gentlemen, the cause of Free-Trade is not confined to one country alone, it is the cause of humanity and civilisation all over the globe. And where may I hope to meet with greater sympathy than in this illustrious capital of the Iberian Peninsula? To no country does Free-Trade offer greater advantages than to Spain; to no country has Nature been so prodigal in her gifts. Spain produces what other lands must acquire by labour and by industry. Commerce is the exchange of articles of equivalent value, and the nation that exports is, likewise, in the necessity of importing. I am confident, gentlemen, that, before long, this great nation will have emancipated its commerce from the restrictions which, but a short time since, weighed upon the commerce of my own country. Another page of your history will be filled, like the immortal page which records that three centuries ago a great man left your shores to discover a new hemisphere. You must not accuse me of detracting from the glory of that great man, when I say that in my opinion the establishment of Free-Trade will confer greater benefits on your country than the discovery of America. I conclude, gentlemen," said Mr Cobden, in good Castilian, "by drinking to the universal adoption of Free-Trade, the surest guarantee of the peace of nations." The meeting was then addressed by several Spanish merchants and nobles, advocating the general principles of Free-Trade, and especially the liberty of discussion; at the conclusion, the meeting expressed its gratification at the presence of its illustrious guest.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.—THE OPERATIONS AGAINST THE KAFFIRS.

Cape of Good Hope papers have reached us to the 3rd of September.

They contain official reports of the operations of Colonel Hare and Lieutenant-Colonel Johnstone, in their combined attack with Sir Andreas Stockenstrom, on the Kaffirs in the Amatola mountains. These reports are long, and not of sufficient importance to be given in detail. The skirmishes in which the attacking parties were engaged appear to have been of much the usual character. The colonial troops succeeded in driving the enemy before them, killing several, wounding many, and capturing 400 or 500 head of cattle, sustaining little or no loss themselves. Both Colonel Hare and Lieutenant-Colonel Johnstone appear to have exhibited a great deal of personal bravery, as well as the officers and men under their command. The Graham's Town Journal of August 22nd says:—

"No movement of any importance has taken place for the last week. A few days ago twenty-one waggon-drivers left the General's Camp to go in search of Kaffir corn. After proceeding a few miles, seven of them returned. the remainder (all Hottentots) persisted, were surrounded by a large body of Kaffirs; and, of the whole party, fourteen only escaped. Umballa and Macomo have again sent in for peace, but their messengers were not allowed to enter the camp. Sir Andreas Stockenstrom is at the Kabusi, Dhone's station, with his division. Colonel Johnstone was to join him immediately, and they were to proceed to Kreli's country for cattle. His Excellency remains at Fort Beresford with the infantry, to patrol the mountains. Colonel Somerset has returned with his corps to Fort Peddie. Four or five spans of oxen, in the employ of the Commissariat, have been adroitly carried off by the Kaffir marauders in the immediate vicinity of the camp."

ARRIVAL OF THE BOMBAY OVERLAND MAIL.

An express has arrived with the Overland Mail, which left Bombay on the 1st instant. The intelligence is not of much political importance.

At Lahore everything remained quiet, the troops were healthy, and were expecting an early visit of inspection from the Governor-General. Lady Singh betrayed great anxiety as the time for the departure of the British forces approached.

From Cabul, there were, as usual, rumours of intrigues and insurrections. A report that an English army would invade Peshawur upon the arrival of the cold season, had produced much alarm, and it was said that proposals for a treaty of alliance would be made to Lord Hardinge.

An insurrection had broken out in Cashmere, fomented, it is reported, by the Lahore Durbar; and a force sent against the insurgents by Gholab Singh had been defeated with some loss. Several English officers who were visiting the country had been seized, and would be detained as hostages, though no fears were entertained for their safety.

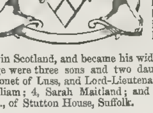
Cholera was still raging in Scinde, and provisions were so enormously scarce and dear that an absolute famine was apprehended.

At Bombay there was no news. Trade was rather dull, and all transactions on a very limited scale.

A volcano had appeared on Saddle Island in the Red Sea.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED.

LADY COLQUHOUN OF LUSS.

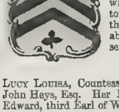


Janet, Lady Colquhoun, whose death took place at Rossdhu, Dumbartonshire, on the 21st inst., was daughter of the late Right Hon. Sir John Sinclair, Bart., of Ulbster, by Sarah, his first wife, daughter of Alexander Maitland, Esq., of Stoke Newington. At the period of her decease, her Ladyship had completed her sixty-fifth year, having been born 17th April, 1781. She married, in 1799, the late Sir James Colquhoun, Bart., of Luss, M.P., the representative of one of the oldest families in Scotland, and became his widow in 1836. The issue of the marriage were three sons and two daughters—viz.: 1, James, the present Baronet of Luss, and Lord-Lieutenant of Dumbartonshire; 2, John; 3, William; 4, Sarah Maitland; and 5, Helen, wife of John Page Read, Esq., of Stutton House, Suffolk.

THE DOWAGER COUNTESS OF HUNTINGDON.

Eliza-Mary, Countess of Huntingdon, who died on the 20th inst., was eldest daughter of Joseph Bettesworth, Esq. She had been married three times, but has left no child. Her first husband, Alexander Thistlethwayte, Esq, died six weeks after the marriage: her second, was the late Earl of Huntingdon, whose succession to his family honours, gave rise to one of the most interesting Peerage claims on record; and her third (whom her Ladyship married in 1838) was Colonel Sir Thomas Noel Harris, K.B.

EDWARD STRUTT ABDY, ESQ.



This gentleman, late Fellow of Jesus College Cambridge, and the able author of a "Journal of a Residence and Tour in the United States," died on the 12th inst., in Pulteney-street, Bath, aged fifty-five. Mr. Edward Abdy, uncle of the present possessor of Albyns, Essex, was youngest son of the late Rev. Thomas Abdy Rutherforth, who inherited the estates of his maternal ancestors, the Abdys of Albyns, Baronets, and assumed their surname. The family is one of high respectability in Essex, and the chief line is now represented by Sir W. Abdy, Bart., of Felix Hall.

LADY WINTERTON.

Lucy Louisa, Countess Dowager of Winterton, was the daughter of John Heys, Esq. Her Ladyship was married the 28th May, 1809, to Edward, third Earl of Winterton, by whom (who died the 6th January, 1833) she had issue, beside another son and two daughters, Edward, fourth and present Earl of Winterton. The Dowager Countess of Winterton died suddenly, of a disease of the heart, on the 26th inst., at her residence, Lodge Villa, St. John's Wood.

Sudden Deaths On Monday evening, Mr. W. Payne held an inquest at the workhouse, Mint-street, St. George's, Southwark, on the body of Mary Anne Donoghue, aged fifty-five, a widow, of 31, Great Union-street, Borough-road. The deceased, on Friday evening (last week), called at the house of Mr. Jones, 4, Westminster-road, to sell some artificial flowers, when she fell down and suddenly expired. Mr. Hooper, surgeon, who was called in, said the probability was that deceased had died from some disease of the heart. Verdict, "Natural death."—A second inquest was held before the same Coroner, concerning the death of Richard William Thomas, aged twenty-four, lately residing at 11, Ann's-place, Lant-street. The deceased was a cellarman at Guinness' stout stores, kept by Sparks and Co., under London Bridge. After leaving his employment on Saturday night last, he went home and retired to bed, where he died suddenly the next morning of disease of the heart. Verdict, "Natural death."

THE COURT AND HAUT TON.

THE COURT AT WINDSOR.

Last Saturday afternoon, her Majesty and Prince Albert returned to Windsor. On Sunday, the Queen and his Royal Highness Prince Albert, her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, the Ladies and Gentlemen of the Court, the Lady-in-Waiting on the Duchess of Kent, and the domestic household, attended Divine service in the private chapel of the Castle. The Hon. and Rev. C. Leslie Courtenay officiated.

Windsor, Thursday Evening.—(From our own Correspondent).—Her Majesty and Prince Albert took their usual promenade this morning, in the private grounds around the Castle. Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, visited the Queen and the Prince at the Castle this morning, and remained to luncheon. The Royal Family were taken for their accustomed exercise in the Home Park, this afternoon. Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, attended by Lady Anna Maria Dawson, and the Baroness de Spath, had the honour of joining the Royal dinner party this evening. The band of the 1st Life Guards, and her Majesty's private band of musicians, were in attendance.

Royal Visit to Arundel Castle.—The visit of her Majesty and the Prince Consort to Arundel Castle, the seat of the Duke and Duchess of Norfolk, has been deferred for a few days. We believe that it will take place on Tuesday next.

Present to her Majesty.—A very rare and curious bird, of the stork species, was received at the Royal Aviary, at Windsor, on Saturday, as a present to her Majesty from Lord Saye and Sele. Her Majesty had previously been graciously pleased to accept from his Lordship a pair of swallow-flight and a pair of beautiful white Java pigeons, which now form a portion of the Royal ornithological collection at Windsor

The Prince of Wales. His Royal Highness the youthful heir apparent's natal day, on Thursday next, when he will complete his 5th year, will be celebrated by public dinners at Windsor, &c.

Lord J. Russell's Cabinet Dinner.—Lord John Russell gave a dinner to the Cabinet Ministers on Wednesday evening, at his residence in Chesham-place. Nearly the whole of the noble Lord's colleagues were present.

Lord John Russell. -Lord John Russell, who has been occupying Mr. Arthur Edin's villa at Wimbledon during the summer, is about to remove from that mansion, with his family, to Chesham-place, for the winter.

Death of Sir Henry Featherstonhaugh, Bart.—This, the oldest Baronet in the empire, expired on the 26th instant, at his seat, Up-park, Sussex, at the advanced age of ninety-two years, during seventy-two of which he enjoyed the title. He was born in the year 1754, being the son of the first Baronet, who received the honour in 1747, by the only daughter of C. Lethieulliere, Esq., of Belmont, Middlesex. He married in 1825, being then far advanced in life, Miss Mary Ann Bullock, of Orton, but does not leave any issue.

ACCIDENTS AND OFFENCES.

Accident to Mr. Newdegate, M.P.—A serious accident occurred to Mr. Newdegate, while hunting with the Warwickshire hounds, near Annesley, on Friday (last week). The Hon Member was leaping a brook, when his horse fell with him, and before he could extricate himself, the animal kicked him severely about the breast and face. Mr. Newdegate, although still suffering severely, is progressing favourably, and not the slightest apprehension of fatal consequences is now entertained. The hon. gentleman is at his seat, Arbury Hall, near Nuneaton, where he was removed some few hours after the accident occurred. He has not been internally hurt, but his jaw has been fractured in two places. The inquiries relative to the hon. gentleman's health are most numerous, and strongly evince the great esteem in which he is held in the county.

Awfully Sudden Death of a Solicitor. On Wednesday morning Mr. W. Lake, an old established and highly respectable City solicitor, whose offices are at No. 18, Aldermanbury, left his residence at Camberwell at the usual time, so as to reach his office by half-past nine o'clock in the morning. About eleven o'clock his son, Mr. John Lake, called at the office, and was surprised at finding his father lying on the floor, and, on close examination, he was ascertained to be quite dead. Medical assistance was instantly procured, but resuscitation could not be effected.

Sudden Death at Marlborough-street Police-court.—A melancholy instance of sudden death occurred at Marlborough-street Police-court, at about half-past one o'clock on Wednesday afternoon. An aged and feeble man, named Thomas Pavery, of No. 5, Park-place, Knightsbridge, summoned his employer, a house decorator, for an arrear of wages. The case was partly heard on Saturday last, and was adjourned until Wednesday. The complainant, with his witnesses, was in court; and Mr. Hardwick, noticing that he appeared to be suffering, ordered a chair for him. The case was proceeding, when it was observed that he appeared to be dozing. His wife, who was standing close behind him, took hold of his arm. She uttered a loud shriek, and cried out, "He is dead!" Dr. Sparkes was sent for, and, on his arrival, applied the usual remedies, but all without avail; he was dead.

Lamentable Deaths from Starvation.—On Saturday, two inquests were held by Mr. Baker, respecting the deaths of two persons, both of whom died from starvation. The first proceedings commenced at the White Lion, Mile End Old Town, on the body of Mary Miles, aged seventy-three. The evidence showed that the only support of the deceased and her husband was 1s. and a loaf weekly, from the Whitechapel Union, and casual relief from their neighbours. Through the dread of being separated, they would not avail themselves of the offer to enter the workhouse. Deceased was recently attacked with a lingering illness, brought on by the want of necessary food, of which she died on Thursday morning. The apartment occupied by them gave every appearance of the utmost destitution and want. Verdict, "Natural death." The second inquest, held by the same Coroner, was taken at the White Hart, Shadwell, on the body of Charles Green, aged fifty-three. The daughter of deceased stated that her father being out of employment upwards of nine months, he was supported by witness and her mother, but was greatly in want of the necessaries of life. On Thursday he was seized with vomiting blood; the parish surgeon was sent for, but he shortly afterwards died. The Jury recorded in this case a verdict similar to the preceding.

Fatal Accident at Hoxton.—On Tuesday a melancholy incident occurred at Hoxton, by which two poor men lost their lives, and three others narrowly escaped a similar fate. Some old houses near Saint John's Church, situate in Pimlico-walk, have recently been pulled down, and, before laying the foundation, a drain was being dug out, to flow into the common sewer, about 20 or 25 feet from the houses, under the main road. The builder employed had placed five men to work in this excavation, and, whether from the inexperience of the men employed in not shoring up sufficiently, or from whatever other cause, about one o'clock, a heavily-laden waggon passing over the road, the earth from above where the men were digging fell in upon them, burying two of them (Haynes and another), and three more had a narrow escape of meeting with the same fate. Men were set to work immediately, and one of the men, after the lapse of an hour, was got out, but every exertion used failed to restore him to life. Both men are stated to have left wives and families

Another Accident on the Eastern Counties Railway.—On Tuesday, the train which should arrive at the Cambridge station at half-past two o'clock A.M. was proceeding from Ely to Cambridge, and when a few miles below Stretham, the line rail broke, and the engine tore it up for several yards, ploughing up the ballast. The shock is described as terrific. The train was rather a long one, and the back carriages were thrown on to the foremost most violently. Fortunately the engine having escaped the broken part of the rails, recovered the line, and the train was stopped. The guard was thrown off the train, but, beside a few bruises, escaped unhurt, though he was unable to continue the journey farther than Cambridge, where the train arrived at four o'clock—having occasioned a delay of two hours in all the trains up and down the line.

A Young Woman Poisoned by Mistake.—A painful sensation has been occasioned in Sunderland, by the death of a young woman named Mary Elizabeth Liddell, twenty-five years of age, under the following circumstances:—It appears that the deceased, being unwell, on Thursday evening (last week), sent the daughter of a neighbour to the shop of Mr. Meldrum, a chemist, for some tincture of rhubarb. It was dark at the time, and the drug was supplied by a young man, about seventeen years of age, Mr. Meldrum's apprentice. Immediately after Miss Liddell had swallowed what was brought, she was taken ill and died on the following morning from the effects of poison—it being then ascertained that laudanum had, by mistake, been substituted for the rhubarb. On Saturday the inquest was held, and the Jury returned a verdict of "Accidental death," at the same time severely censuring the young man (Mr. Meldrum's apprentice) for the negligence which he had manifested.

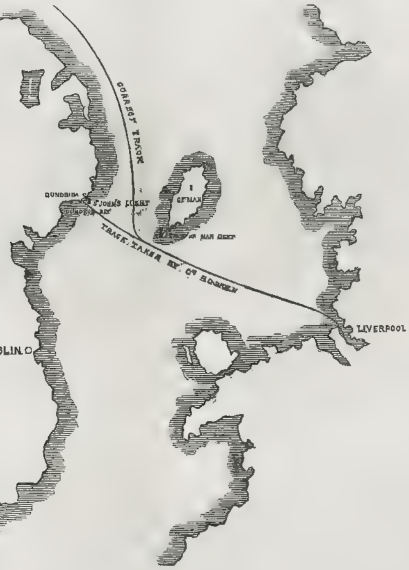
The Alleged Manslaughter in Essex.—At the Central Criminal Court, on Thursday, Richard Haywood, William Branch, and Henry Boddy, three journeymen of respectable appearance, surrendered to take their trial for the manslaughter of John Harold Levitt. We mentioned the facts at the time. On the 15th of September there was a foot-race on the Barking road, between the three-and-a-half and four-and-a-half mile-stone, at which the prisoners, with others, were present in a phaeton. The deceased was also present. Whilst the race was being run, the prisoners obstructed the deceased, who was in a cart. Words ensued, and the prisoners struck and severely cut and wounded Mr. Levitt. He was taken to a surgeon's and his wounds dressed; but he became daily worse, and on the Monday, four or five days afterwards, he died. The Jury returned a verdict of "Not Guilty" of manslaughter, but "Guilty" of assault.—The Lord Chief Baron sentenced the prisoners to three months' imprisonment.

Attempted Murder in Cheshire. On Friday (last week), Mr T. M'Gill, a travelling draper, was shot in the head (supposed with a pistol) at Tabley (Cheshire), and then robbed of two £20 Bank of England notes, two £5 notes, £.8 in gold, and from £3 to £4 in silver, and a £10 Bank of England note—total, £82. The deed was effected by a man named John Wright, who, after robbing his victim, attempted to drag him to a brook, no doubt with the intention of drowning him, but was prevented from effecting his purpose by some men who were working in an adjoining field, near to the high road. Wright is a Scotch traveller, and was living at Benton Cross, with his father, about three miles from Northwich. Wright is well known by Mr. M'Gill, having been formerly in the same business as a Scotch traveller; he met him near Tabley, and entered into conversation with him, and shortly stopped until Mr. M'Gill passed on, when the report of a pistol was heard, and M'Gill fell. Wright then rifled his pockets, but on some labourers coming from a field, he made off. Inquiry was made of the wounded man, who stated where he lived, and he was taken to Manchester in a coach. Notice was given to the Cheshire constabulary of the crime, with a description of its perpetrator, when he was speedily captured. Mr. M'Gill was brought home to Manchester, and surgical aid called in, but he lies still in a precarious state. Wright was also brought, that Mr. M'Gill might see him, with a view to identification; but in Mr. M'Gill's present state it was not thought advisable that he should be taken into his presence.

THE "GREAT BRITAIN" STEAMER.

We understand that Mr. Mackintosh, the contractor and army-accoutrement maker, has undertaken to float and bring off the Great Britain from her position in Dundrum Bay. Although extremely novel, the plan proposed by Mr. Mackintosh is simple and easy to be comprehended; and, if it should answer as well in practice as in theory, it would be, doubtless, made extensively available in various other similar cases. It appears that there is to be a ridge of stones in a half circle, placed at a short distance from the stern of the vessel, and some hollow iron shells in a like circle, charged with gunpowder, besides a few smaller charges being placed along the course to which the ship is expected to be driven. Upon the semi-circular train being fired, by means of the usual galvanic appliances, the water at the stern of the ship will be lifted with such force as to loosen the sand, and set her afloat, the continuance of the wave being accomplished by the firing of the smaller charges, while the tug steamers are towing in advance. It is calculated that the water will be agitated to a given extent, not more than equal to the force already withstood by the Great Britain when at sea, and that a certain number of casks deposited in the engine-room will give her sufficient buoyancy. The grand point must necessarily be to ensure such a precise arrangement of the explosive materials as to prevent any untoward injury to the ship, and at the same time to accomplish a simultaneous action of the tug-steamers, should the auspicious event come off, and the noble ship be once more afloat. A letter from Liverpool says that the position of the Great Britain is much the same as before reported, though she had approached somewhat nearer to the formidable ridge of rocks which rise from the sands near her. Capt. Hosken has written a report to the Directors of the Great Western Steam Ship Company, in explanation of the circumstances which led to the unfortunate accident to the Great Britain steamer. Captain Hosken commences his report by explaining his reasons for taking the north instead of the south channel, and after stating that the log was hove regularly, proceeds to give a narrative of the reasons which induced him to steer the vessel as he did. The effect of this explanation will be understood from the following resolution of the Directors of the Company:—"With respect to the occurrences which preceded the stranding of the unfortunate ship as explained now by Captain Hosken, and by the report of Captain Claxton to the Secretary, the Directors are of opinion that the ship was stranded in consequence of an error in judgment, into which it appears her Captain was betrayed, through the omission of a notice of St. John's Light in the chart of this year, by which he was navigating, and of the want of knowledge on his part of such a light being established,—it being to the Directors obvious, that, had the light been laid, Captain Hosken would have known that the judgment which led him at eight o'clock to put his ship in the proper course for the North Channel, ought to have been persevered in."

We have engraved a portion of the coasts, and the Irish Channel, showing the usual track of the Great Britain, and that taken by Capt. Hosken in his late disastrous voyage. St. John's Point Light, at Dundrum, is intermitting, and shows at each revolution of one minute, a bright light for 45 sec., succeeded by an eclipse of 15 sec.; the light is 62 feet above high-water mark. The Calf of Man Light, Isle of Man, has two revolving lights, making the revolution every two minutes; it is 396 feet above high-water mark.



TRACK OF THE "GREAT BRITAIN."

NATIONAL SPORTS.

THE CLOSE OF THE RACING SEASON.

> Last scene of all
> That ends this strange, eventful history.
> SHAKSPEARE.

The mighty progress of improvement by which the last quarter of a century has been distinguished in every part of the globe, and more especially in our own atherland, has also brought about some changes that one would quite as soon had been let alone. Comfort, in its various social relations—whether as regards style, convivial intercourse, or domestic arrangement is less cared for than it used to be——the more the pity. A quarter of a century back, we can call to mind going to the Houghton Meeting in one of Adams's double-springed travelling chariots—behind four posters, trotting their twelve miles an hour—to say nothing of the pace when the boys "sprung them" half way down one hill, and half way up the other. A few days since, we went there in "a smoking saloon"....in a blue and silver estaminet upon wheels: among a couple of dozen voyageurs as invisible, from the vapour, as if they had been in another world. Wasn't that a terrible falling off in the poetry of the thing? And, then, there's your fashionable Club? We would ask, is it fair, is it creditable treatment of a chop to eat it in a chamber as big as Westminster Hall? Is it giving the gravy a decent chance? Does the ineffable essence of its legitimate flavour ever pass the threshold of the door? We will pass the question of domestic arrangement—(as, being in a state of single infelicity, unfitting to discuss it) and return "to our muttons." It was but a few hours ago that, arrived from the metropolis of the turf, we sought some creature consolation in our club. We tried the experiment, and it was a majestic failure. They put before us a cutlet too cruelly used for our philosophy. So, fleeing the fashionable hostelry, we sought a familiar nook in a familiar and more modest mansion. A humble place it is but repaying with a premium of a hundred per cent. for the quality of the company in the quality of the comfort. We should like to lay long odds that there never was as glad a heart in the drawing-room of the Conservative as in that little room—seated beside its "friend and pitcher." . . . .

To-day brings to an end the Houghton Meeting at Newmarket, and the turf season of 1846. The last week is ever attractive; it brings those who have had bad luck to try to mend it, and those who have had good luck to try to make more of it. As regards the sport, this meeting is only remarkable for two issues of much account, the Cambridgeshire Handicap and the Criterion two-year-old stake, and to those we may conveniently limit our special notice. A great deal of money had been laid out on the former, and—of course—a great deal of interest was connected with its result. It brought a very sporting field to the post, though the state of the atmosphere—a considerable pea-soup foggery—damaged wholly its effect as a spectacle. The course on which the Cambridgeshire is run is one of the prettiest at Newmarket; and, on this occasion, it had three-and-twenty gallant steeds to grace it. Alarm, the favourite till near the time of starting, then gave way to Mr. Nunn's colt by Touchstone, out of the sister to Joanna—at 3 to 1; 5 to 1 about Alarm, 9 to 1 Iago, 14 to 1 Best Bower, 16 to 1 Lady Wildair, 18 to 1 Red Robin, the same about Conspiracy—a few others backed at long outside prices. This large lot was admirably got off by the very efficient starter, the first to make play being Best Bower. The field came well together past the turn of the lands, and up to the Duke's Stand, where the Joanna colt was well clear of everything, with Sting next, and Lady Wildair third—all the others now disposed of. At the cords, Sting challenged, ran up to the "crack"—all but caught him—but ran out, and was finally beaten by half a length. The Criterion turned out but a very poor criterion of the animals engaged in it. Out of 41 nominations, only four showed, and those certainly none of the best. The fortunate winner was Coningsby, beating Clementina by a head—but it was the 7lbs. penalty that beat her—no joke, up such a "gradient" as the Criterion course. The weather, as aforesaid, was not so propitious as could have been wished—but the sport was in every way a fitting finale to a season of peerless pastime.

Lord Sandwich's Plantagenet, 5 yrs, 7st 6lb	(Nat)	2
Sir J. Hawley's Prospect, 3 yrs, 5st 7lb	(Prince)	3

At the turns of the lands Plantagenet went in front, and with Prospect, Glossy, Footstool, Ennui, and Seven's-the-Main in attendance, kept the lead to the Duke's Stand. Footstool now showed in advance, was never afterwards caught, and won cleverly by a length; Plantagenet beating Prospect for second by a head, Glossy fourth, and Seven's-the-Main fifth.

The Criterion Stakes of 30 sovs each, 20 ft, for two-yr-olds; colts 8st 7lb, and fillies 8st 5lb; the second to save his stake. From the Turn of the Lands in. 41 subs.

Lord Stradbroke's Coningsby	(F. Butler)	1
Mr. Payne's Clementina (7lb extra)	(Nat)	2
Mr. Gully's Main Brace	(S. Day)	3

Coningsby made play at a good pace, followed by Main Brace and the Redshank colt, Clementina waiting. In this order there was no change till they reached the Duke's Stand, where Main Brace and the Redshank colt were beaten, and Clementina went on in waiting on Coningsby, gradually drawing up from the distance. She came a few strides from home, but never quite got up, the horse winning, not without severe punishment, by a head. Main Brace was a very bad third.

Match, 100 h ft, 8st 7lb each; D.M.—Duke of Bedford's Captain Phœbus (Butler) beat the Duke of Rutland's Paultons (Robinson). 6 to 4 on Paultons. Won by a neck.

Match, 100, h ft; Last half of Ab. M.—Duke of Bedford's Bethpage, 2 yrs, 8st (Butler), beat Mr. Osbaldiston's Giselle, 3 yrs, 8st 7lb (Marlow). 5 to 4 on Bethpage. Won by a head.

Fifty pounds; for two-yr-olds, a feather; three, 7st 5lb; four, 8st 9lb; five, 9st 3lb; six, and aged, 9st 7lb. The winner to be sold for 300 guineas, if demanded, &c. Last three miles of B.C.

Lord Eglinton's Eryx, 2 yrs	(Treen, jun.)	1
Mr. Wreford's Wit's-end, 3 yrs	(A. Day)	2
Mr. Crockford's Mistress Jean, 2 yrs	(Rodney)	3

Eryx made all the running, was never approached, won by five lengths, and was claimed. A more complete tail was never seen.

Wednesday.

Handicap Sweepstakes of 30 sovs each, 10 ft if declared. Last mile and a dis. of B. C. Five subs, two of whom declared.

Mr. Bowes's Mowerina, 8st 5lb	(Butler)	1

Mr. Merton's Peasant, 7st 10lb	(Abdale)	3

Match, 500 Ab. M.—Mr O'Brien's The Traverser (Marlow) beat Lord Glasgow's Miss Sarah (Holmes), 8st 7lb each. Even betting. Won by three lengths.

Match, 150 sovs, h ft; first half of Ab. M.—Mr. Payne's Sir Francis, 4 yrs, 7st 10lb (Nat), 1; Lord Strathmore's Secundus, 5 yrs, 8st 7lb (Crouch), 2.

Match, 200, h ft; T.Y.C.—Colonel Peel's Garry Owen, 8st (Nat), beat Mr. Mostyn's Winchester, 7st 12lb (Abdale).

Handicap Plate of 50 sovs; for three-yr-olds, &c. A.F.

Sir C. Monck's Flattery, 4 yrs, 7st 8lb	(Simpson)	1
Mr. Mostyn's Ennui, 3 yrs, 7st	(Kitchener)	2

Ridiculus Mus made play at a good pace, followed by Mr. Mansfield, Campanile, and Dr. Husband, the others lying off. Dr. Husband retired at the bushes and Ennui took the second place, which she held into the bottom. She then took up the running, followed by Campanile, Flattery third, and gradually catching them. The race up the cords was closely contested by this trio, Flattery winning on the post by a head, and not more than a neck between the other two. Ridiculus Mus was fourth.

Match, 100, h ft; A.F.—Lord E. Russell's Dulcet, 4 yrs, 8st 7lb (J. Marson), beat Mr. Mostyn's Wilderness, 3 yrs, 7st 5lb (Abdale). Betting: 7 to 2 on Dulcet. Won by half a length.

FRIDAY.

ROYAL BULL-FIGHT AT MADRID.

Oh! 'tis a joyful festival, and brightly beams the sun
Upon the shore of the Campeador—on Castile's prairie dun;
Bright beams he on the orange grove—on th' olive soft and clear—
On shepherd's home, on Royal dome—on glittering casque and spear.
The dark eyed Madrilenas smile in their beauty's power,
From casements deck'd in tapestry fair and many a lovely flower;
The bells ring out, the banners flout the mild autumnal breeze,
And all Madrid seems swarming like a hive of human bees
Ay! joyful is the festival, but nobler is to come.
The Bull-fight on the Plaza—the scene of blood and doom.
Such scenes mark the commencement of a young Queen's wedded reign,
And the gladiators sword is waved by matadors of Spain.

Ay! 'tis a joyful festival. The Queen sets in her pride
High in the Plaza Mayor, with the Infanta by her side;
And Don Francisco there is seen, D'Aumale, Montpensier,
With all the proudest blood in Spain—oh! 'tis a bright array.
Boldly the marshal music bursts: excitement fills the air,
Four caballeros enter now th' arena of the square.
With low obeisance to the Queen they take their fearless stand,
While near them waits the matador with ready dart and brand
Loud shouts the multitude- and now the crowd is mute and still—
They wait the dreadful toro. He comes, and terrors thrill
The boldest hearts. Right on he comes undaunted to his foes,
Then round the joyful circus another shout arose.

Most joyful is the spectacle. Away! bold cavalier,
Hold hard the rein, keep stirrup true, and bravely couch the spear;
The furious foe comes rushing on: he makes one noble bound,
And horse and rider both are seen stretched wounded on the ground.
Brave bull! brave bull!' the myriads shout, while dies the gallant steed.
Now gored to death another and another horse succeed;
And of the four the matador now finds but one remain.
And Don Romero, young and brave, sways gallantly the rein.
On to the furious foe he flies, and plants the fatal steel,
Right through the toro's foaming neck. He falls, he dies, while peal
The cries of gratulation wild, and many a dona fair
Waves with delight her kerchief white upon the perfumed air.

CORRIDA. DE TOROS.

Three of these national spectacles have been given in Madrid, in celebration of the Royal Marriages. We have illustrated their most striking scenes and incidents; and append the following details, abridged from the Times of Saturday.

The Grand Bull-fight came off on the 16th inst. The Queen, accompanied by her husband and the rest of the Royal Family, entered her balcony at a quarter to three o'clock, in the Casa de Panadicia of the Plaza Mayor, or Great Square; and seated herself under a magnificent canopy of crimson velvet embroidered in gold.

At half-past two, a company of halberdiers, dressed in ancient costume, made their appearance; and, to the sound of clarions and drums, took their places in the space in front of, and immediately under, the balcony set apart for the Royal personages. The position occupied by these domestic guardians of the Royal person, might, no doubt, be one of high honour, but it was by no means one to be envied, nor was it without its danger. Placed outside the barrier which separated the spectators from the arena, they were exposed to an encounter with the furious animals whose tortures were to afford amusement to the young Queen and her sister; and, as etiquette prevented them from turning their backs on their Royal mistress, their danger was still the greater. As the code of Royal etiquette is not, however, so cruel as to be unredeemed by some traits of tenderness, the halberdiers enjoyed the enviable privilege of being permitted, in extreme cases, to turn round for a moment when they felt the bull's horns at their back, and defend their lives with the lance of their halberds - the only weapon allowed them. Owing to the Royal bounty, they have also a right to the bull, in case they kill him.

The Queen's appearance in the balcony was the signal for a burst of martial music, which continued until she and those immediately about her had taken their seats. The Princes, Spanish and French, were dressed en bourgeois black dress coats; and on their breasts flashed diamond stars. The Queens and Infanta were simply habited, and with few ornaments.

In a short time afterwards some stir was noticed amidst the crowd collected near the arch through which there is a passage to the Calle Toledo. Places were gradually made by the attendants, and then entered four very handsome carriages, each drawn by six horses, covered over with the richest and most massive caparisons. From their lofty crests nodded high plumes of different colours, designating the noble houses to which they belonged. They were the state-carriages of four Grandees; namely, the Count of Altamira, the Duke of Abrantes, the Duke of Medina Celi, and the Duke of Osuna. The horses were of the pure Andalusian breed, and were certainly beautiful creatures.

GOING TO THE BULL-FIGHT.

The Count of Altamira, Duke of Montemar, is a man of about forty-five years of age, under the middle height, and of ordinary appearance. The Duke of Abrantes is a young man about twenty-five years of age, small in size, chétif in person, pale and thin, with nothing whatever of the distingué about him. The Duke of Medina Celi is about the same age; in height he is about four feet eight inches, and his appearance recals nothing of the ancient glories of the house of La Cerda.

The Duke of Osuna is a young man of about thirty years, rather under than above the middle size, with a quiet, placid, and not very expressive countenance. In his appearance there is little of the Spaniard He is of very fair complexion; and looks more like a German or Englishman than a native of the South.

A short digression must be here permitted, to explain why the Grandees just mentioned presented themselves in the Plaza Mayor. On occasions like the present, Royal marriages, or the birth of a Prince of the Asturias, a Royal bull-fight is exhibited; the ordinary toreros are not then considered worthy of encountering risk, or showing off their skill in the presence of their Royal mistress and her Court. A number of persons is accordingly taken from a large list of names of gentlemen, who eagerly contend with each other for the honour of being selected by Royalty as her special bull-fighters on that day. At length her Majesty makes her irrevocable decision, and four candidates are selected as worthy of the honour. In addition to the mere honour of the thing, a few material advantages are attached to the exhibition The successful competitors are, in case of escaping with life, generally appointed to some inferior employment in the household; are named assistant equerries, or to some occupation connected with the Royal stud; or they are granted a pension of 6000 reals—£60, in addition to any presents the Royal generosity may deign to bestow.

Those gentlemen—caballeros en plaza, as they are technically termed though no doubt abundantly rich in blood and descent, are not equally so in the gifts of this ungrateful world. As soon as their names are pricked off by the Royal hand the four caballeros present another petition, explaining their inability, from want of means, to procure themselves the fitting costume, horses, trappings, &c., to appear en champ clos before the Queen; and they pray her Majesty to graciously permit them to select, from amongst her Grandees, four padrinos, or sponsors, who shall defray the necessary expense of their equipment—one for each. The padrino, or sponsor, has to provide for his adventurous godson a magnificent costume, the finest horse, and, in fact, pay all the other incidental expenses of the day—independently of the outlay he feels himself obliged to make to exhibit himself, his equipages, and the numerous retainers of his house, in the grandest possible style. However, on the present occasion the horses used by the caballeros en plaza came from the Royal stables.

The Queen receives the petition, and condescendingly permits the caballeros en plaza to choose each a padrino, subject to her Royal approval. They then select the Grandees to act in the capacity; who are, as a matter of course, approved of.

When all preliminaries are arranged, various rehearsals are performed, under the tuition of the professional bull-fighters, in order to accustom the caballeros to the sight of the animal. For instance, on the morning of the 15th, not less than eight bulls and fifteen horses were killed as an avant-gout.

These exhibitions are, from an ancient period, held in the Plaza Mayor the grand square of the capital; whereas the ordinary bull fights take place in the locality constructed expressly for the purpose -the Plaza de Toros. The caballeros are brought to the ground in the state carriages of their respective padrinos, with a long train of domestics, habited in ancient costume, and wearing the colours of the houses they belong to. They are then and there conducted in front of the Sovereign, to whom they are presented in due form. They then mount on horseback, and the spectacle begins.

The caballeros of this Bull-fight were —R. Roman Fernandez, of the Guard of Halberdiers; padrino, the Count of Altamira; he wore a costume of the time of Austrian dynasty, his colours, sky-blue and white; the padrino wore a Court dress;—D. Antonio Romero; padrino, the Duke of Abrantes, costume of the same period, colour, green; padrino, the maestrante uniform; -D. Frederico Varela y Ulloa; padrino, the Duke of Medina Celi, costume, blue and white; padrino, the maestrante uniform;—D. Jose Cabanas; padrino, the Duke of Osuna, costume, red and yellow; padrino, the uniform of a Colonel of Cavalry. The caballero of the Duke of Abrantes is a Lieutenant of the Regiment of Maria Christina; and that of the Duke of Osuna an officer of the Halberdiers.

After the carriages, came, led by grooms dressed in the richest livery, 28 horses, at the rate of seven for each carriage. The harness of the horses was of the most gorgeous description. A complete band of toreros, bull-fighters, engaged to protect the caballeros en plaza, accompanied each carriage, on foot. All this train made the circuit of the square, until they came in front of the Royal balcony, when each caballero and his padrino descended, and made a profound obeisance to her Majesty. They again entered the carriages, and, having once more made the circuit of the place, they disappeared in a direction different from that they entered.

About half-an-hour then elapsed · after which a new spectacle made its appearance in the same place where the carriages had entered. Seven Kings-at-Arms, with their Pages and Esquires sustaining the shields of the house of each Grandee, entered, escorting each caballero en plaza, and followed by the respective bands of toreros. They again placed themselves in front of the Royal balcony, and bowed low. The caballeros, with the exception of one who was flung from his horse the moment he mounted, saluted her Majesty on horseback. The toreros knelt, and bent their foreheads to the ground. In addition to the above, a number of musicians, dressed in grand costume, followed the cavaliers, and with their martial strains seemed to animate their courage. The picadors, or bull-fighters, armed with lances, and on horses, followed also.

The key of the stall where the bull is kept ready for the combat is in possession of whoever the authority may be that presides. On this occasion, the care of the key was entrusted to the Queen. It was flung from the balcony with much grave ceremony. At the moment the Queen delivered the key, a multitude of pigeons, their necks adorned with gay-coloured ribbons, suddenly rose from each corner of the place; and their flight was hailed with shouts of applause from at least 30,000 spectators.

The cavaliers then took their stations on horseback: the stall was opened, and a brave bull leaped forth. He bounded in in the first exultation of freedom, and made the circuit of the square in a few minutes. He then stopped for a space in the centre—tossed his head, and surveyed—with an eye in which terror and rage were mingled—the surrounding multitude, whose mad shouts rose higher every moment at the gallant bearing of the noble brut

The rigidness of etiquette melted away like frost-work before the sun the moment the animal appeared. The alguazils, who were stationed in front of her Majesty's box with their faces turned to her, forgot their respect, and scampered away; the ring was cleared in a moment, and the ground was left alone to the bull and his antagonists.

The cavaliers—whose only arm was a short light spear with a steel point about five or six inches long—did not quail. Their spurs were dashed into the horses' flanks, and they bounded into the centre of the square. The ardour was equal, but the glory was not so. They poised their lances, and attempted to dash them at the bull. One was thrown from his horse at the very first encounter, and another fell under the animal. They were both obliged to retire from the arena, having received contusions from the fall of too severe a character to allow their remaining any longer. Two cavaliers only remained at their post, D. Antonio Romero, lieutenant of the Maria Christina Regiment, whose padrino was the Duke of Abrantes; his assistants were the Chicianeros and Labi, two eminent toreros; the other, Cabanas, the godson of the Duke of Osuna, a young man twenty-five years of age, an officer in the Halberdiers. Well and bravely did these two champions do their work. The last-mentioned planted with great skill and force three lances in the bull; the last blow was mortal; but, at the moment it was given, his horse got frightened, became completely unmanageable, and, at length, flung his rider, who was compelled to retire from the arena, and was carried off in the arms of the attendants; his wounds being of a serious character.

Romero was now left alone of the four cavaliers, and, in truth, he was the hero of the day. His lances were most beautifully aimed, and most accurately planted. His management of his beautiful and fiery charger was so consummate, his bearing so graceful, his coolness in encountering the furious animal before him so perfect, and so unusual in a mere amateur, as to excite the most frantic enthusiasm amongst the concourse. Nothing could give you a just idea of the prolonged shouting of the vast multitude. Four bulls fell by his hand—two of which were, however, to be relieved from the death agony by the cachete, or knife used for that purpose. The fourth, before receiving the death-blow, made a rush at him, and placing his horns low under the horse's belly, actually lifted into the air the noble animal and his rider. The cavalier fell under the horse, into whose entrails the horns had entered, and both rolled together on the ground. A shout of terror at the danger of the cavalier, and of applause at the brave act of the bull, rent the air. It was for a moment believed that Romero was either killed or dangerously hurt, but tranquillity was at once restored, when, in a minute or two, both horse and rider rose from the ground, the rider seated as firmly in his saddle as if he had never been disturbed from it. Another shout hailed this new proof of excellent horsemanship. But the cry of admiration was beyond all description, when the next moment the spectators beheld the bull fall dead, in the very act of preparing for another bound. This attack on the horse had only been a desperate effort of expiring strength, and was made at the very moment he received the last lance of the cavalier.

This was the last display made by the caballeros en plaza. Romero retired with some slight bruises; and was again and again saluted with the waving of handkerchiefs from the balconies, and the shouts of the multitude.

The professional bull-fighters then continued the combat. Montes never conducted himself better. His play of skill with the sixth bull was most artist-like and beautiful. The others lost nothing of their reputation. Eleven bulls were killed, and the usual proportion of horses. The spectacle ended at six o'clock, when the Queen and Royal Family quitted their balcony.

It may be necessary to say that the horses mounted by the caballeros were of the best kind, and, it is said, were given by the Queen for the occasion. The animals employed in ordinary bull-fights are of the worst possible description. The duty of the professional bull-fighters, while the caballeros were engaged, was to attract the attention of the bulls, and assist them, when hard pressed. They did their duty well.

The balconies of the houses were hung with splendid tapestry of various colours; and, with the immense multitude—not less than 30,000 were present—state carriages and retainers of the Grandees, picturesque costume of the attendants, alguazils, halberdiers, pages, esquires—all presented a spectacle of a rare and most exciting character.

The last time such a display was made was at the ceremony of the Jura, or the taking the oath of allegiance to the Princess of Asturias, now Isabella II.

THE ILLUSTRATIONS.

"The Bull-fight," says Mr. Ford, in his excellent Handbook of Spain, "or, to speak correctly, the Bull-feast, Fiesta de Toros, is decidedly of Moorish origin, and is never mentioned in any authors of antiquity. Bulls were killed in ancient amphitheatres, but the present modus operandi is modern." The Royal Festival, or Fiesta Real, is the coronation ceremonial of Spain; the Cabaleros en Plaza represent our champion.

The large Engraving upon the left-hand page shows a picture of the road on the day of a Bull-fight, when all the world is crowding to the Plaza. "Nothing," according to Mr. Ford, "can exceed the gaiety and sparkle of a Spanish public going, eager and full-dressed, to the fight. All the streets, or open spaces near the outside of the arena are a spectacle. The merry mob is everything. Their excitement, under a burning sun, and their thirst for blood of bulls is fearful. There is no sacrifice, no denial, which they will not undergo to save money for the Bull fight. The men go in all their best costume and majo-finery; the distinguished ladies wear, on these occasions, white lace mantillas; a fan is indispensable. Fine ladies and gentlemen go into the boxes, but the real sporting men, los oficionados, prefer the pit; the tendido, or los adamios, the lower range, in order, by [illegible] nearer, that they may not lose the nice traits of tauromaquia. Upon the [illegible]d page we have engraved a specimen of the company á la sombra, those s[illegible]d in the shade; and al sol, those in the sunshine. The phrases are here ap[illegible] in the inverse ratio of the world's favour, for here the best classes are "in t[illegible]sewhere a low stage in the world's prosperity. Previous to going to a [illegible]s gather from Mr. Ford's "Handbook," "the first thing is to secure a [illegible] beforehand, by sending for a boletin de sombra, a shade-ticket. The prices of the seats vary according to position. The great object is to avoid the sun: the best places are on the northern side, and are in the shade. The transit of the sun over the Plaza, the Zodiacal progress into Taurus, is decidedly the best astronomical observation in Spain: the line of shadow defined on the arena is marked by a gradation of prices."

COUNTRY NEWS.

The Cobden Testimonial.—The additional subscriptions of the week, at Manchester, are £685, making a grand total of £7[illegible] 310.

The Leeds Mechanics' Institute.—The "Grand Soirée" of the Leeds Mechanics' Institute took place on Friday (last week), in the Music Hall, Leeds, and realised all the expectations previously entertained of it. Fifty ladies presided at the tea-table, and in the saloon were seated about 600; in the orchestra, 110 ladies and gentlemen. It was impossible to obtain sufficient accommodation at the tables for all who wished to be present; but the gallery was opened for spectators, 200 of whom filled it. The entire area within reach of the speakers' voices was crowded. The reception of the noble chairman, Earl Fitzwilliam, was enthusiastic; and the distinguished, self-taught scholar of America, Elihu Burritt, excited the liveliest interest, on his being recognised. Many friends of education from a distance, including a large body of Secretaries of Mechanics' Institutes, were also present. After tea, Earl Fitzwilliam opened the proceedings by a speech. E. Baines, jun., Esq., President, then made a statement of the condition and prospects of the Institute; after which the meeting was addressed by W. Beckett, Esq., M.P.; Rev. Dr. Scoresby; W. Aldam, Esq., M.P.; Elihu Burritt; Professor Grove; W. West, Esq., F.R.S., and others.

The Agricultural Labourers of Dorsetshire.—A county meeting was held in the Town Hall, Dorchester, on Monday, with a view to the formation of a society for ameliorating the condition, morally and physically, of the agricultural population, by carrying out the field garden allotment system, under judicious regulations. The announcement of the meeting drew together a very large assemblage; indeed, it has seldom happened that Dorchester has enjoyed so large an influx of visitors. This was attributed partly to the interest which has recently been excited throughout the country with respect to the improvement of the labourers, and partly to the fact that the day fixed upon was that devoted to the great annual exhibition of stock. Most of the farmers who were induced to visit t[illegible], for the sake of the exhibition, attended the meeting, and some of them joined in the proceedings. C. Porcher, Esq., High Sheriff of Dorset, was called to the chair. He was supported by the Lord Bishop of Salisbury, R. Floyer, Esq., M.P., R. B. Sheridan, Esq., M.P., the Archdeacon of Dorset, and a large number of other clergymen and gentlemen of the district. Resolutions were carried, for the establishment of a society for improving the condition of the agricultural labourers of the county. An influential committee for that purpose was appointed.

Education in Wales.—The Government have at length issued the Commission to inquire into the State of Education in Wales. Mr. Henry Vaughan Johnston has been appointed to North Wales; and it is understood to be his intention to commence his inquiries in Anglesey forthwith. There are three Commissioners. The object of the Commission is to ascertain, as accurately as circumstances will permit, the existing number of schools of all descriptions, for the e[illegible]tion of the children of the labouring classes, or of adults—the amount of [illegible]ance, the ages of the scholars, and the character of the instruction given in the schools; in order that the Government and Parliament may be enabled, by having these facts before them, in connexion with the wants and circumstances of the population of the principality, to consider what measures ought to be taken for the improvement of the existing means of education in Wales.

The Public Parks of Manchester.—The meeting of the Public Parks' Committee for closing the accounts, and finally dissolving itself, was held in the Town Hall, Manchester, on Monday last, the Mayor in the chair. The balance-sheet was read and highly approved of. The outstanding debts, now considered doubtful, amount to the very small sum of £129; and the balance in hand was £114 6s. 1d., which has been laid apart as a nest egg for future contributions towards the formation of another park for the neighbourhood. The whole business connected with the establishment of the beautiful public parks of which Manchester can now boast has occupied but two short years. The obtaining subscriptions and the Government grant occupied one year, and the whole of the transactions connected with the purchase of ground, and laying out the parks, occupied the second year. The committee, to whose exertions the public is greatly indebted, was on Monday finally dissolved, the whole of its work being accomplished.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON ALMANACK,
AND PICTURESQUE CALENDAR FOR 1847.

This ALMANACK is submitted to the Public by the Proprietors, with confidence of its superiority over its predecessors. The Work was commenced in 1845, with a view of furnishing a Repository of Useful Knowledge of permanent value, for constant reference, in Astronomy, Astronomical Occurrences, and the Natural History of the Year.

The Astronomical Department has been placed entirely under the superintendence of James Glaisher, Esq., F.R.A.S., and of the Royal Observatory at Greenwich.

On the third page of each month is a series of tableaux of Memorable Events, carrying out in a true spirit what is usually and properly introduced into our Almanack not for occasional reference only, but to cherish respect for these landmarks of British History.

The fourth page of each month is devoted to Natural History. The whole of this portion is from the very able pen of Mrs. Loudon; and the interesting series of Illustrations to this department has been drawn and engraved by Miss Loudon, under the immediate superintendence of Mrs. Loudon.

The Calendar Illustrations are from the masterly pencil of William Harvey, and engraved in the first style of Art, by Linton; illustrative of the National Sports.

"A Correspondent."—The line is from Lee's "Alexander the Great":—
"When Greeks join'd Greeks, then was the tug of war."

"B. O."—Before the commission can be gazetted, the Agents must certify that the purchase money is lodged; but the sum need not be paid at the time the Applicant's name is entered in the Commander-in-Chief's list.

"Studiosa."—The wyvern is a fabulous animal used as an heraldic bearing—a kind of dragon, with wings, and its lower part resembling that of an adder or snake.

"Erigena."—To illegitimatise the children of the second marriage, it must be shown that the first husband was living at the time the said second marriage was contracted. The onus probandi rests with the party disputing the legitimacy.

"C. T. P."—"Honi" means ashamed or accursed. It is the participle of an obsolete French verb, having the same derivation as the modern word "Honte." Honi soit qui mal y pense should be thus translated, "Accursed be he who thinks there is evil in it."

"Worstil."—A person intended for the Church should be sent to one of the Universities, where he may graduate and take holy orders.

"Demandeur."—Edward III. claimed, in right of his mother Isabella, daughter of Philip the Fair, the kingdom of France, and assumed, in consequence, the title of King of that country. Thenceforward, and until the Union of Great Britain and Ireland, in 1801, when the absurd assumption was relinquished, the Sovereign of England added to his designations that of "King of France."

"A. W. Y."—We do not think a person holding either of the situations alluded to, would be admissible as a Member of the Middle Temple. A Law Student, who has not graduated at a University, must, in addition to the payment of the fees and commons, deposit with the Inn £100. A Barrister pays a small sum annually to the Society of which he is a Member.

"The Rev. C. E. W." is thanked for his communication; we will consider it.

"Jessica."—A marriage before the Registrar is as binding as any other.

"Tufthunter."—The moment a Commoner is raised to an Earldom, his children are allowed, by courtesy, the titles accorded to that rank.

"C. M. B."—The New Police Act takes cognisance of the hoop nuisance at Islington, and Highbury.

"T. T."—Certainly, not.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 31, 1846.

The week has not been prolific of domestic incident: we have been discussing the affairs of others, rather than engaged in any very striking ones of our own. There has, of course, been an accident on the Eastern Counties Railroad, its want of novelty fortunately not redeemed by any fatal result; and the clubs have been very much gratified by the publication in one morning paper of some letters by a Minister to a noble Lord, which have crept into print by a dishonest proceeding somewhere. Most of the daily papers refused to have anything to do with the purloined or lost documents; but the event will tend to make Ministers and ex-Ministers more careful of the keys of their writing desks. Ireland still furnishes the same gloomy intelligence as to the want of food and work; but still there is, on the whole, an absence of turbulence and riot highly creditable to the people, whose patience must be sorely tried by the official and legal delays that seem inevitable whenever a Government undertakes to do anything. We believe they are necessary, but trust they will not be prolonged a moment longer than is strictly required. The Government positively declines as yet to sell provisions; and the head of the Commissariat Department has written, in the shape of a short letter, a "lecture" on the causes that influence the price and supply of food: it is sound and correct in principle; but there are times when a little error may be a benefit; a clear, coldly-stated theory, reads somewhat heartless in the presence of actual want, sharpened in the present case by the sight of such anomalies as the following:—

> No less than sixteen ships arrived in the river Thames on Monday from the Irish ports, laden almost exclusively with food and provisions of various kinds, the produce of that country, having collectively 14,950 packages of butter, 224 packages of pork, 1,047 hampers and bales of bacon, several of hams; 140 sacks, 2,[illegible] barrels, and 7,788 quarters of oats; 434 packages of lard, 75 of general provisions, 40 of oatmeal, 44 of porter, 259 boxes of eggs, and a variety of other articles of lesser importance, which it would be quite needless further to particularise.

We may admit that, according to the best of theories, it is quite correct that food should leave where it is most wanted, and be sent to where it is not wanted so much; at the same time it is an anomaly which a people will be slow to believe a Government could not prevent.

At the same time, even out of this very fact, some hope may be derived; the average of prices must still be higher in England than Ireland, or the articles would not flow to it; employment and money—capital, in short, are quite as much the great necessity of Ireland as food; if one could be earned, the other could be purchased; the Government need not sell food, if it will put in circulation the means of buying it, or, if necessary, compel those who are most interested, to do it themselves. England appears likely to go through the period of difficulty better than either of her neighbours—Ireland or France,—another confirmation of the truth of the principles of political economy, which, in this case, resolve themselves into the simple fact that in all times of distress, the richest individual, town, or nation, suffers the least. The importations of grain and flour from America are immense and increasing; and we are exempted from any internal calamity; while in France, the scarcity threatens to press still more severely, and whole districts have been devastated by floods, causing an immense destruction of property. It has cast a gloom over the rejoicings of the French Court at the Montpensier marriage, and the fêtes to have been given on the occasion are said to have been countermanded.

Where authority is absolute, and has been abused till a mass of discontent is created, a bold and talented ruler is "a lucky accident." Joseph of Austria, and Alexander of Russia, were fortunate in their disposition to do good, if not always happy in the modes of doing it, or the results when done. To the list of Reforming Monarchs must be added the name of Pope Pius. From the enthusiasm that is sure to hail a new Prince who stands in favourable contrast to his predecessor, little can be gathered—it may be well founded or not, according to the event. But of the manner in which expectations are fulfilled, all can better judge. We do not believe that Europe was prepared to find in the Pope a temporal ruler of such a determined character. Austria and Sardinia must feel uncomfortably anxious; they can hardly conceive it possible to find the political spirit of "Young Italy" under the tiara; yet something not unlike it is at work. The Pontiff seems to be what Carlyle calls a man of "insight" and vision; he sees clearly, and acts promptly; his last movement is reported to be the imprisonment of some of the Roman Cardinals, who have been plotting against him, and opposing his reforms. The Castle of St. Angelo has received many a political prisoner, but seldom a batch of Cardinals; their Eminences must have been much astonished at finding themselves in the place to which they had sent so many others; but thus the "whirligig of time," even in the Papal States, where everything was stationary, "brings about its revenges."

It may be remarked that the reforms of the Pope do but destroy abuses that could not have existed in any other place than one where laymen were excluded from all share in the Government, and every office, civil and political, was in the hands of the clergy; in one thing, however, he has made a step in advance of Austria and Prussia, though these States, in other respects, were models of good Government compared with Rome: he has established a journal that is to publish the proceedings of the Courts of Law—a Gazette des Tribunaux, printed by authority. Publicity and Discussion! They are words of fear to the Rulers of Italy, yet they are beginning to be spoken; and they will find many echoes in the Peninsula: Metternich must regard the Roman Ruler as a most innovating and uncomfortable Pontiff: Spielberg has been peopled for mere talk about what he is actually doing, and there is cause enough of dissension between the two Powers, even though the story of the arrest of the Cardinals should turn out what we suspect it to be—an exaggeration.

THE PROROGATION OF PARLIAMENT.

The Gazette of last night sets at rest the reports as to the early meeting of Parliament At the Court at Windsor, held yesterday, Parliament was prorogued from Wednesday, Nov. 4, to Tuesday, the 12th of January next; but, as no mention is made of meeting for the "dispatch of business," there will, in all probability, be another prorogation.

Death of Mr. W. H. Williams, Comedian.—This well-known actor expired on Thursday morning, in Amwel-terrace, Pentonville. Mr. Williams was born at Weston, Somersetshire, in 1792. He made his first appearance at Drury Lane, as Rusk, in "Love Laughs at Locksmiths," and was engaged for five years. He generally acted as a substitute for Munden, Dowton, Harley, Knight, and Oxberry the elder. He had a quarrel with Elliston, left Drury, and took to the minors, appearing at Astley's, the Surrey, Coburg, Sadler's Wells, &c. He has left a widow and four children; the eldest twenty-two, the youngest nine years of age Mr. Williams was married twice.

The Penny a Mile Omnibus System.—Yesterday, in consequence of the apparent success attending this experiment, a number of the old omnibus proprietors, who have hitherto charged sixpence, started their vehicles at the reduced rate, so that there are nearly thirty omnibuses carrying passengers from Hungerford-market to Paddington for twopence each.

Accident from Gun-Cotton.—An accident has happened to the son of Mr. Lancaster, the gun-maker, of Bond-street, which might have been attended with serious consequences. Mr. Lancaster was engaged with Mr. Taylor in making some experiments on the projectile power of gun-cotton, and several charges of 50 grains each, with 1¼ ounce of shot, had been fired from a strong 14-gauge gun with perfect safety, when on increasing the charge to 83 grains and 1 ounce of shot, the gun burst with great violence. The sleeve of Mr. Lancaster's coat was torn through, and he received several wounds on the fleshy part of his arm, none of which, we are happy to add, are of a serious character In some previous experiments which Mr. Lancaster had made with the cotton of Dr. Schönbein, in the presence of that gentleman and Professor Faraday, the same quantity of cotton had been fired with perfect safety. We, therefore, caution those who may be trying experiments with this powerfully explosive compound to be exceedingly cautious, as an accident has occurred even in such experienced hands. The gun used by Mr. Lancaster had been previously proved with an ounce of powder and a ball fitting the bore

More Rioting in Ireland.—The town of Templemore was, on Monday last, for more than two hours, in possession of a riotous mob, who showed every disposition to do mischief, and certainly would have accomplished much, but for the gallant conduct of a very small band of police, consisting actually but of five persons A local paper gives the following account of the affair: The steward employed by the Board of Works was about to employ fifteen men in accordance with his list of instructions, when a body of about one hundred and fifty persons insisted that unless the work was given to all, the others should not work. The steward was obliged to abandon his post and leave the parties to themselves. The police, being engaged with this affair, were unavoidably absent from Templemore—an opportunity of which the mob of Templemore proceeded immediately to avail themselves. Bread carts were attacked and plundered, and matters were proceeding to a general sack, when the constabulary appeared to contend with the rioters—some three hundred in number the constabulary army consisting, as already mentioned, literally but of five men. The battle lasted with various fortune, for about two hours, when victory was declared decisively for the police. The regular army then came up, headed by Sir Henry Carden and other magistrates, when the rioters fled in all directions, carrying off, however, a good deal of spoil in the shape of twopenny and threepenny loaves, taken from the shops of bakers. Six of the ringleaders in this affair have been made prisoners. The weapons used by the mob were stones. The constabulary only used their bayonets, and did not fire. Wounds were inflicted on both sides, but none of a very dangerous character.

Boiler Explosion at Ashton-Under-Lyne.—A very serious and fatal accident occurred at Ashton-under-Lyne on Thursday, by which three lives were destroyed, and many others placed in imminent danger. The cause of this sad catastrophe was the explosion, about half-past six in the morning, of a steam-boiler at the cotton factory of Messrs. Bailey and Dewhurst, which lifted up the superincumbent brickwork and materials, consisting of a second and third story of that portion of the building, filled with heavy and valuable machinery, and laid them in ruins. A portion of these ruins fell upon four cottages at the back of the mill, and destroyed them; and another portion fell across Nelson-street, burying underneath them four persons, and setting fire to some storehouses on the opposite side. One woman, Milcah Irwin, was in the room over the boiler, at the time of the explosion, and, though buried in the ruins, she was found, extraordinary to relate, alive, and almost unharmed, having received only a few bruises on one side. A young married woman, named Margaret Fitzgerald, and a man named Abraham Fitton, aged 42 years, and his daughter, Emeline Fitton, aged 13, were the other persons taken from the ruins, their bodies being blackened and frightfully scalded and disfigured corpses.

LATEST FOREIGN NEWS.

PORTUGAL.

News has reached us from Portugal so late as the 17th inclusive. The Ministry of the coup d'etat encountered an opposition more irresistible and general than they expected, and the insurrection had spread throughout all the provinces of the north, the richest and most populous of the kingdom. The intelligence from Oporto is fully confirmed. In that city and Coimbra a provisional junta has been formed, at the head of which is the Marquis of Loulé, the husband of the Queen's aunt, who had been previously Governor-General of the province of Coimbra, and Grand Master of the University of that city under the Palmella Ministry. The other members of the Junta were Sa da Bandeira, the former Minister, General Count Bonfim, and Baron Das Antas, who also filled important offices under the Palmella Cabinet. The forfeiture of the Queen, and a Provisional Regency, were decreed by this Junta. On the other hand, great efforts were being made by the Queen and Saldanha to make head against the storm with which they are menaced. Lisbon was declared in a state of siege. The King-Consort was appointed generalissimo of the army, and was about to march at the head of a part of the garrison of Lisbon against Oporto. The insurgent party were organising national guards in all the cities and towns which had declared for them. The Spanish refugees at Oporto formed a body of volunteers to support the insurrection. A proclamation was issued by the Queen on the 14th, promising to re-establish the constitutional charters and menacing the insurgents. The Minister of Finance, Viscount D'Oliveira, overwhelmed with the embarrassments of his office, had resigned, and was replaced by M. de Souza Azevedo, who was not expected long to retain the office.

One account states that the Duke of Palmella had applied for passports to France, and another that he had joined the Marquis de Loulé, Count Bonfim, and Das Antas, in the North. The telegraph having been entirely destroyed, the communications between the capital and the north were cut off, so that all immediate intelligence between Lisbon and the insurgent provinces was intercepted. A report prevailed there that a body of insurgents, under the command of Count Bonfim and the Baron Das Antas, was in full march upon Lisbon.

El Clamor Publico announces that an intervention has already been actually demanded on the part of the Portuguese Government, by the Spanish Chargé d'Affaires at Lisbon.

A letter, dated Lisbon, 17th, concludes thus:—"The fermentation is universal; it becomes every moment more doubtful whether the King and Queen will save, not their crowns, but their heads. Two-thirds of the population of Portugal have risen. The Algarves have followed the movement."

UNITED STATES AND MEXICO.—SURRENDER OF THE CITY OF MONTEREY.

The Hibernia steamer has reached Liverpool, with accounts from New York to the 16th instant, being seven days later than by the Great Western, which arrived on Monday. The chief feature of news is the important intelligence of the surrender of the city of Monterey to General Taylor on the 24th September, after having been defended with some obstinacy for three days. The terms granted to General Ampudia were of the most liberal kind, including an armistice of eight weeks. The New York papers state that this armistice had been annulled at Washington, and an order sent to General Taylor to advance immediately upon Mexico. They add, also, that instructions had been forwarded to General Wool to move on Chihuahua, and for an attack to be made on Tampico.

The protracted action, which resulted in the capture of Monterey, seems to have been severe, and admirably fought. The city was well fortified. It was defended by a force of from 7000 to 10,000 men. The assailing forces numbered 6000. After a tedious march, General Taylor and the forces under his command came in sight of Monterey on Sept. 18. The men were much wearied, and began to give out, their food having been spoiled by severe rains. The advance were immediately saluted with a heavy cannonade, the sound of which acted like a charm on the jaded men. All became life and motion, and severe fighting followed. On the 20th, a successful attack was made by General Worth on the Mexican forts, routing the artillery and capturing their ordnance. On the 22nd, the fortified palace of the Bishop of Monterey was attacked, and after a struggle was captured. On the 23d the whole Mexican force, about double the American, was driven into the plaza; where, unable to run away, the Mexican soldiery occupied the houses which surrounded the square, keeping up an incessant fire from the windows. The conflict was tremendous, lasting from early morning till late night. The 24th brought a cessation of hostilities.

The New York Correspondent of the Times states that he has received a private letter from Washington, stating that Mr. Fox, the late British Minister at Washington, died at his residence in that city, on the 13th. He had been indisposed for a long time, but his death is supposed to have been hastened by an over dose of morphine.

The domestic news of the United States is not of an important character. In the elections which had recently taken place the Whigs had gained a decided majority, a fact which is attributable to the dissatifaction generally felt respecting the new tariff and the Mexican war.

The papers contain some particulars of the seizure of Santa Fé by General Kearney. His landing was quite unopposed. In his declaration, made to the people of Santa Fé on the 19th of August, he states his intention to annex all New Mexico to the United States on both sides the Rio Grande. He assures the people of protection in their property, persons, and religion; he absolves them from their allegiance to Mexico and Governor Armigo; and proclaims himself Governor, with full powers; and claims the people as citizens of the United States. The Acting Governor and Alcaldes then took the oath of allegiance to the United States in the public square, and the people vociferated loudly "Vive le General."

The Great Western reached New York on the 30th ult.; and the Hibernia, with the mails from England of the 19th of September, arrived at Boston on the 3rd instant. Both arrivals had immediate effect on the Cotton and Corn Markets of the United States and Canada, and both advanced considerably in price.

In the New York Money Market, there has been no material change. For all purposes, there has been, and still is, an abundance of money; but there is no disposition shown to use it.

Trade of almost all kinds is active. Some extensive purchases of flour were made, up to the latest period, as high as 5 doll. 75 cents for the best brands; but, on the steamer's departure, the obtainable price was 5 doll. 62½ cents.

France.—The Paris papers of Thursday announce the arrival in France of the Duke de Montpensier and his newly-married bride. They reached Bayonne on Monday last.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

Cabinet Council.—A Cabinet Council was held at the Foreign Office, on Thursday. The Council was attended by Lord John Russell, Earl Grey, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, Lord Palmerston, the Marquis of Lansdowne, the Earl of Clarendon, Sir George Grey, Lord Campbell, Lord Auckland, Sir John Hobhouse, Mr. Macaulay, and Mr. Labouchere. The Lord Chancellor did not join his colleagues until rather late.

New Pictures at the National Gallery.—The National Gallery opened on Monday last with sixteen new pictures; two of which (the "Boar Hunt" of Velasquez, and the "Temptation of St. Anthony," by Annibale Caracci), are recent purchases, and the remaining fourteen the bequest of Richard Simmons, Esq. The purchases, on this occasion, exceed in importance the value of the bequest. A catalogue of the names of the artists, and the subjects painted, will give no bad idea of the character and value of the recent acquisition:—1. Godfrey Schalken—"Lesbia weighing jewels against her sparrow." 2. Sassoferrato—"The Madonna." 3. Joseph Vernet "A Seaport" 4. Hondikoeter "Domestic Poultry." 5. Gerard Van Harp—"Conventual Charity." 6. Backhuysen—"A Brisk Gale." 7. Deitricy—"Itinerant Musicians." 8. Greuze—"Head of a Girl" 9. Nicholas Maes—"The Idle Servant." 10. Breenberg—"Landscape with Figures" 11. Both "A Landscape," figures by Poelemberg. 12. Canaletto—"The Piazza of St. Mark, Venice." 13. John Van Hugtenburg—"A Battle Piece." 14 Theodore de Keyser—"A Merchant and his Clerk." The pictures in the Gallery are now 212 in number.

The Distressed Needle Women's Society.—On Tuesday, the third annual meeting of this Society took place at Willis's Rooms. The Secretary (Mr. Roper) read the Report, which alluded to the destitute condition of this class of females, and said he himself knew an instance where a poor woman worked incessantly day and night making shirts for a farthing each. The Chairman (Mr. Alderman Farebrother) alluded to the obligation which ladies were under to encourage such institutions as the present, and instanced one or two cases which had come within the sphere of his own observation, and which forcibly illustrated the beneficial effects resulting from the operation of that and similar societies. Some time since, an extensive warehouse keeper in St. Paul's Churchyard directed his attention to the lamentable condition of two ladies (sisters), who were living together in a small back room, without fire or candle, and almost without food. These ladies he had himself seen stepping into their carriage in the county of Kent. Family reverses, however, came upon them, and the only remnant of property that was left to them was a sum of £800, which they generously bestowed on their brother, thinking it would be of service in advancing his fortunes in life The brother entrusted the money to the hands of a third party, and it was lost. He died shortly afterwards, in a state of the most deplorable mental anguish, and the sisters were left literally without the means to purchase food. In this wretched condition they were when the Society took compassion on them and procured them work. Resolutions in support of the Society were agreed to. It was stated that Mr. Luke James Hansard would be the Chairman for the ensuing year

Meeting to Petition for the Opening of the Ports.—A public meeting of the parishioners of Marylebone was held on Monday evening at the Princess's Assembly Room, Castle-street, Oxford-street, at which Mr. T. Cochrane gave a lecture on the duty incumbent on Government of removing all remaining restrictions on the importation of food, in consequence of the famine in Ireland, and its threatened extension to this country. The room was filled with an intelligent and attentive auditory, who agreed to a memorial to the Queen, praying the immediate opening of the ports.

Hungerford Suspension Bridge and Steam-boat Pier.—The long pending dispute between the directors of the Charing-cross Bridge and Hungerford Market Companies is at length brought to a termination, and the public will, after Monday next, be permitted to land and embark from steam-boats by the medium of the Suspension Bridge

Opposition to Public Baths in Shoreditch.—At a full meeting of the vestry and inhabitants of Shoreditch, held on Monday afternoon, a proposal for establishing baths and washhouses by means of a parish rate, was made. An amendment against the measure having been put, was carried by a majority of 28 to 20, which was decisive, the Act of Parliament requiring that the resolution for the establishment of baths and washouses shall be supported by two-thirds of an open vestry, before it is submitted to the Secretary of State.

The St. Pancras Poor. At a meeting of the vestry which took place on Monday, and which was presided over by the Rev. T. Dale, it was proposed that a committee be formed, consisting of twenty-five vestrymen, not directors of the poor, to inquire into the management of the workhouse. This resolution was carried in spite of strenuous opposition.

Indication of Winter—The First Fog.—On Wednesday, the first fog of the season made its premature appearance—a few days before the month prescribed for such visitations, November. It was unusally dense, and much inconvenience, with a few fatal casualties, were the consequence. The trains on nearly every railway arrived behind time, in consequence of the slow rate it was necessary to travel to prevent accidents. Most of the steam-boats on the river did not ply at all whilst the fog was at the thickest, and very little business could be done at the wharves. The departure of several vessels from the docks was delayed, and many on their way to the Pool were unable to proceed to their destination. The Greenwich and Woolwich and above-bridge steamers were laid up for several hours, and the passengers who generally proceed daily by those vessels were compelled to travel by land. The fog extended below Gravesend, and several of the Continental steamers were unable to enter the river. At an early hour in the morning a barge, heavily laden with coal, was being towed up the Pool, when it was struck by a collier brig; the force of the blow capsized the barge, and, from the darkness which prevailed, it was impossible to render any assistance to its crew, three in number. One, named Henry Wilkinson, managed to swim to the shore: the other two are supposed to have perished.—In the streets several serious accidents took place:—A young woman, whilst crossing Cheapside, was knocked down and run over by an omnibus. Both wheels passed over her legs, and she was picked up to all appearance dead. She was conveyed in a cab to St. Bartholomew's Hospital, and is not expected to survive.—Shortly afterwards, in the City-road, Frederick Williams, a lad of about eight years of age, was run over by a butcher's cart: his arm and collar-bone were broken, and his skull was fractured.—About five o'clock, one of the Paddington omnibuses, in the eastern portion of Oxford-street, ran with a fearful crash against another, throwing a passenger violently to the ground from the top. The injuries sustained were of such a nature that but little hopes are entertained of his recovery.

Mortality in the Metropolis.—The total number of deaths registered in the metropolis, in the week ending on Saturday last, was 882—viz., 437 males and 445 females. The number is less than the average of the last five autumns, which amounted to 1000. The number of births registered during the week was 1337.

Opening the Ports.—The Chronicle, probably speaking from official information, says, "We regret to find that the general, and, we fear, the correct impression respecting the intentions of the Government, is unfavourable to the views and hopes of those who, with ourselves, had anticipated a prompt suspension, on Ministerial responsibility, of legislative enactments that artificially aggravate an acknowledged natural scarcity and dearth. The Government have not, it is understood, deemed themselves justified, either in clearing away the four shilling barrier by which the State partially obstructs the ingress of those supplies for which the Church has been solicited to pray, or in relaxing the fiscal compulsion by which, at a heavy fiscal sacrifice, the Legislature has ordained a particularly wasteful use of our existing stores."

Another Result of the Electric Telegraph.—The electric telegraph stopped a marriage a few days ago. It appears that a young lady and gentleman decamped together by rail from Nottingham to have the indissoluble knot tied at Lincoln; but, about an hour after the loving pair had set off, the lady's mamma, finding her daughter absent, went to the railway station, and ascertained that she had left for Lincoln with her lover. The telegraph was instantly set to work; and, when the lady and gentleman arrived, a policeman was in attendance to receive them, and the pair were forthwith taken out of the carriage, placed in a return train, and sent back to the mamma.

EPITOME OF NEWS.—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

Accounts from Alexandria to the 9th inst., mention that the Nile had risen to such an extent as to entirely destroy the maize crops on its banks. The cotton crops, likewise, were materially damaged. The Dundee Courier mentions the death of Thomas Adamson, the Patriarch of Pittenweem. He was born on the 1st of May, 1746, and on the 1st of May last had completed the extraordinary age of one hundred years. Mr. Adamson was a weaver, and continued to ply the shuttle until within a few years back. He was, what most long livers are, an early riser. He had a perfect recollection of seeing Paul Jones sail past Pittenweem, on his way to Leith, about 70 years ago, and of the tempest which providentially arose and drove the pirate out of the Frith. He never was what may be called really sick, and never complained of head-ache.

The Frankfort Diet has closed its session, and adjourned to the 14th of January, to examine anew the questions of Schleswig-Holstein and the expediency of granting liberty of the press. The Diet has voted a recompense of 100,000 florins to Dr. Schönbein and Dr. Bœttiger, the inventors of the cotton-powder, provided the federal military commissioners and the authorities of Mayence, after seeing it tried, should pronounce it to be a substitute for ordinary gunpowder, and to possess advantages that the latter has not.

The Sydney papers of the 19th of June, contain the particulars of the intelligence we have published on a former occasion of the attack by the New Zealand natives on the Hutt Camp. The writers in these journals say they understand it to be the opinion of Governor Grey, that to protect the colony 2000 troops will be required. The local intelligence by this arrival is not of the slightest interest.

The Greek papers, which are to the 10th instant, contain an account of the death of General Londos, who had twice been Minister of War. The Greek Monitor will have it that he put an end to his days by shooting himself with a pistol; whereas the Athens Courier denies this fact, and says that the death was caused by the accident of his pistol going suddenly off.

From this table it appears that the imports are improving steadily. The total amount of duties received for the first nine months of 1844, was 112,772,099 francs; for the same period of 1845, 113,292,137; and for 1846, 114,394,806 francs

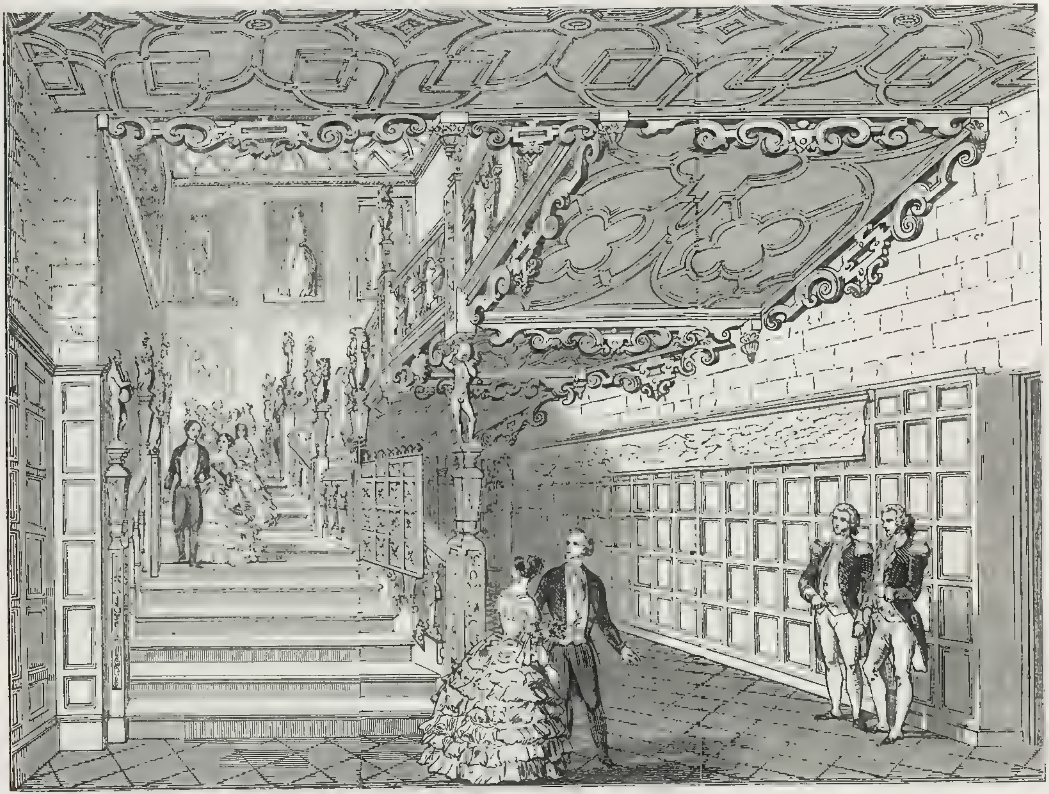
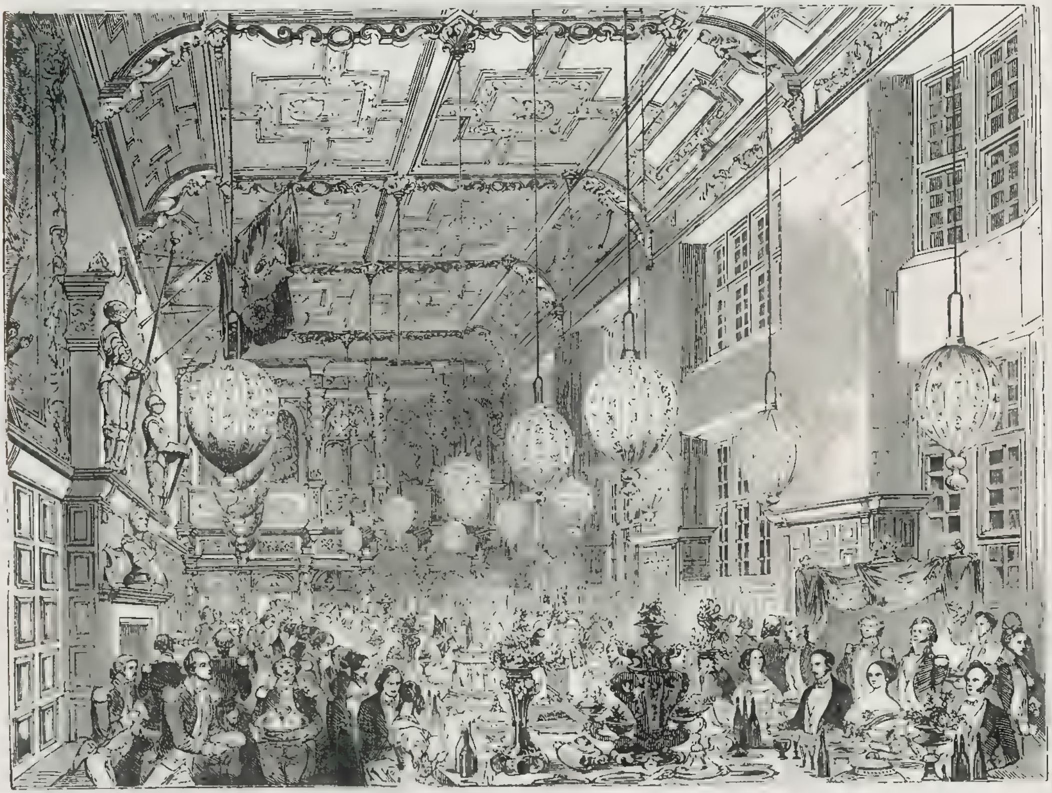
THE ROYAL VISIT TO HATFIELD HOUSE.

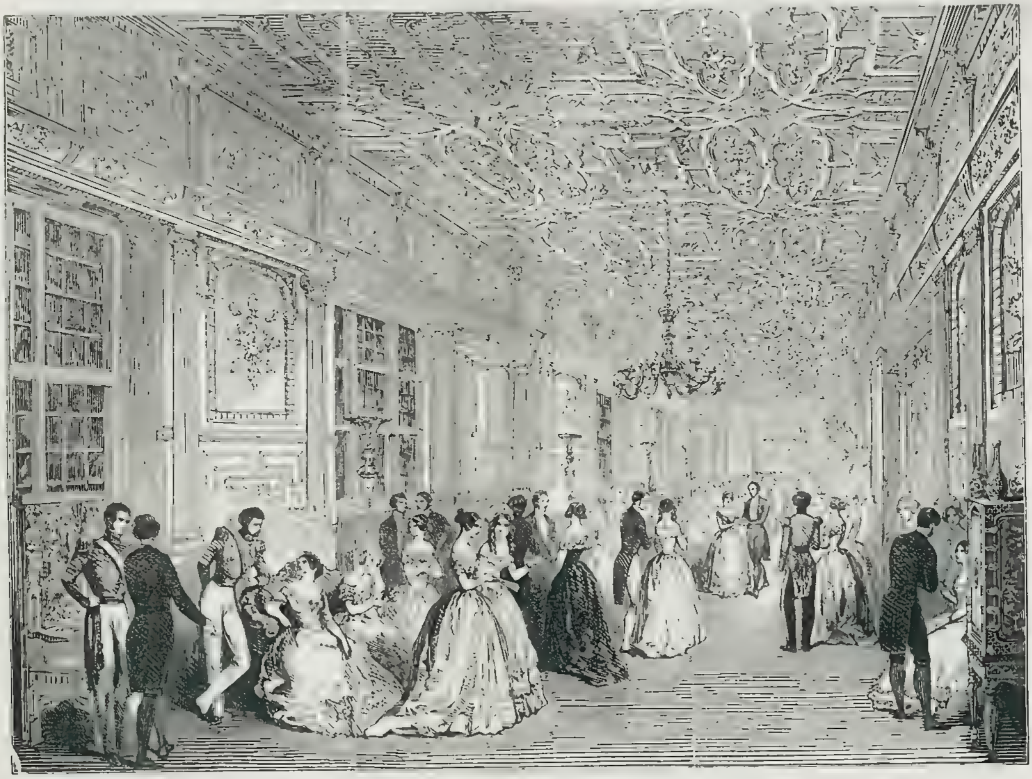


THE GRAND STAIRCASE.



THE BANQUET, IN THE GREAT HALL.

THE ROYAL VISIT TO HATFIELD HOUSE.



THE GRAND BALL IN THE CORRIDOR, OR LONG GALLERY.

In our Journal of last week, we chronicled the Royal progress to Thursday night; reserving the completion for the present Number, to accompany our Illustrations of this very interesting event. It may, however, be requisite to add a few incidents of the approach to Hatfield.

On the Royal party arriving within about four miles of Hatfield, they were met by the Marquis of Salisbury, the Duke of Wellington, Lord Charles Wellesley, Lord Robert Cecil, and Mr. J. M. Balfour, on horseback. Her Majesty, at once, ordered the carriage to stop; and, having lowered the window, thanked the Duke of Wellington for his attention: her Majesty also spoke to Lord Salisbury for some moments.

The cortege having passed completely through the town, proceeded by the London road to the great southern entrance of the Park.

The Marquis of Salisbury having conducted her Majesty to the Park gates, galloped up the avenue, and arrived at the mansion in sufficient time personally to receive his august visitors.

Two companies of the South Herts Yeomanry, with the band and colour of the regiment, formed a guard of honour to receive her Majesty in the courtyard.

The cortege having entered the great gates, the Royal carriages drove up to the grand porch in the south entrance.

On alighting, her Majesty was received by the noble Marquis and by his Lordship's daughters, the Lady Mildred Hope and Lady Blanche Balfour, both of whom her Majesty greeted in the most affectionate manner.

The Royal party then proceeded up the Grand Staircase, to King James's Room, where were assembled the Duke of Wellington, the Marquis and Marchioness of Exeter, Earl and Countess Spencer, Earl and Countess Brownlow, Lord Sandys, Lord and Lady Braybrooke, Lord and Lady Charles Wellesley, &c. After the reception, the Royal visitors retired to their apartments.

The banquet was served in the Great or Marble Hall: the menu comprised every luxury; and the dessert was excellent. The table was lighted with superb gold candelabra, interspersed with costly vases of flowers; and from the ceiling were suspended several Chinese lanterns. All the attendants were in full dress; and each wore a silver badge of the Salisbury arms on the left coat-sleeve. Our artist has engraved the brilliant coup d'œil which the Hall presented during the Banquet. At its close, the Marquis of Salisbury rose, and proposed as a toast, "The Queen," when the military band stationed in the music-gallery played "God save the Queen;" the whole of the guests rising. The health of her Majesty having been drunk, the noble host then gave "His Royal Highness Prince Albert," and the band played the Coburg March.

At a quarter to ten o'clock, her Majesty retired, and was followed by the ladies, to King James's Room; where they were soon joined by Prince Albert, the noble host, and his guests. Previous to the Queen and the Prince leaving for their private apartments, twelve of the German artists who have been employed by Mr. Sang in the embellishment of the mansion, sang some popular airs, among which were "Die Capelle," "Das Schwertlied," "Der Nogel," and "Der Kohlerbauerbube."

In the evening, the town of Hatfield was illuminated in good style.

FRIDAY.

The Queen and Prince Albert did not leave their apartments in the early part of the morning. The Duke of Wellington and the majority of the guests attended prayers in the Chapel; the service being performed by the Rev. Mr. Faithful, assisted by the Rev. A. B. Stackie.

During the forenoon, the court facing the northern front of the mansion was thronged with people; and the park presented a very animated scene; the focus of attraction being the spot where a bullock was roasting whole, according to the old English custom from time immemorial.

After breakfast, Prince Albert went out shooting in the preserves adjoining the mansion, accompanied by the Marquis of Salisbury, the Marquis of Exeter, the Duke of Wellington, Earl Spencer, Lord Charles Wellesley, Lord Ingestre, Mr. G. E. Anson, Mr. Balfour, M.P., and Colonel Seymour, the Equerry in Waiting. The shooting was confined to the Prince, the Marquises of Salisbury and Exeter, the Duke of Wellington, and Earl Spencer. The Prince killed 140 head. The whole game shot was 158 pheasants, 4 hares, 150 rabbits, and 4 partridges. The Duke of Wellington shot 14 pheasants.

In the afternoon, after luncheon had been served in the Great Hall, Prince Albert drove her Majesty in a pony phaeton (the use of which was offered by Capt. Gaussen, of the Herts Yeomanry), through the northern court and avenue, where the Queen and Prince were received with loud and long continued cheering by the people.

The royal cortège having reached the end of the avenue, proceeded, by the right, to "Queen Elizabeth's Oak," said to be the tree under which Elizabeth was sitting when the news of Queen Mary's death was brought to her. We have engraved this "historical tree:" a great portion of the trunk has been protected by a lead covering, and it is inclosed by a low fence. The Queen was much interested with the memorial, and, as a memento of her visit, had a small branch lopped from the trunk.

From the Oak, the Royal party, preceded by the Marquis of Salisbury, Earl Talbot, Lord Ingestre, and several other gentlemen on horseback, proceeded to the curious garden known, as "the Vineyard." The entrance is through a castellated lodge, at the extremity of a drive nearly in a line with Elizabeth's Oak; and here, a rare specimen of olden gardening presented itself to the Royal visitors. From a bold terrace-walk, right and left, extend three secluded walks, formed by yew-trees, the branches of which are trained, so as to present regular walls, the spaces between which are planted with laurels. There is, likewise, a screen of yew, in which are cut windows; and in the centre is a doorway, leading, by a grassy flight of steps, to the bank of the river Lea: higher up, on the right, is a handsome bridge, built about two years since; directly opposite the yew garden was "the Vineyard," cleared away some years since, the space being now a kitchen-garden. Nothing can exceed the tranquil beauty of this scene: its geometrial arrangement is, altogether, characteristic of a grotesque age, and hence, imagination could scarcely fail to people it with stiff brocades and high-heeled shoes, such as became the courtly dames of other days. The Royal visitors evidently admired the curious scene: it has been partially sketched by our Artist. At the Lodge, a skeleton flower of the hydrangea, the exquisitely prepared by Mrs. Beale, the wife of the head-gardener, was presented to her Majesty, who appeared much gratified at the attention, and gave the flower to her Maid of Honour. The Royal and distinguished party then drove round the Park, and visited the existing portion of the ancient palace, engraved in our Journal of last week. It is a fine specimen of early brickwork, without any admixture of stone, in high preservation. The main feature is "the Greate Halle," in which "the Ladye Elizabeth" was often entertained with plays and sumptuous pageants; the walls hung with tapestry, and the cupboards garnished with gold and silver vessels. This scene of ancient revelry is now a well ordered stable for thirty-two horses; it has a finely constructed open timber roof, and is kept throughout in good repair. (See the Engraving.) Adjoining the remains of the old Palace is the Privy Garden, about 150 feet square, inclosed on the south, east, and northern sides, with an avenue of limes, arched somewhat in the Tudor form; in the centre of the plot, is a rock-work basin of water; and, at each angle, is a mulberry tree, reputed to have been planted by King James I. This unique Garden is a solitary memorial of the horticultural taste of the Elizabethan period; it was much admired by her Majesty, who returned to the mansion at half-past four.

Meanwhile, a genuine scene of rustic festivity was being enacted, before the north front of the mansion, in the presence of some 2000 or 3000 persons. At four o'clock, the huge ox being roasted, the iron cradle in which he was enclosed was shifted to a moveable truck, which was then drawn by some eight or ten rustics, followed by a shouting crowd in procession, to the tables, where the savory carcase was to be cut up. A long line of barrels of beer were rolled out; and the tables being laid for between 400 and 500 persons, with hunches of bread, platters, and knives and forks, a portion of meat was served to each, and consumed with high relish; as was, also, the delicious ale. A party from the house, consisting of the Prime Minister, the Duke of Rutland, Lord Brownlow, Lord Marcus Hill, and Lady Spencer, came down to witness this rude rustic banquet.

In the evening, the Mayor of Hertford arrived at the mansion, charged with addresses to her Majesty and the Prince Consort, from the Corporation of that borough. It had been previously arranged that these addresses were to be presented personally by the Mayor immediately before dinner. Accordingly, at half-past seven o'clock, her Majesty and the Prince Consort, attended by their respective suites, passed into King James's Room, where the Duke of Wellington and nearly the whole of the guests within the mansion had previously assembled. A Court having been formed, the Mayor was introduced to his Sovereign by the Marquis of Salisbury, and permitted to kiss hands, after which he read the addresses, which were most graciously received.

Her Majesty, the Prince, and the Royal party then proceeded to the Marble Hall, where a banquet on the same scale of magnificence as that of the previous evening was served.

The Duke of Rutland, Mr. Hasley, M.P., and Mrs. Hasley, Mr. Felix Calvert (High Sheriff of the County), and the Mayor of Hertford, were the only additions to the circle.

The Grand Gallery had been prepared for a Ball; and the whole range of apartments within the mansion were thrown open upon the occasion, brilliantly illuminated by Perry and Co., of Bond-street. The company invited to the Ball began to arrive shortly before nine o'clock, the carriages setting down at the Principal Entrance, and the guests passing from the Cloister, by the East Staircase, into King James's Room.

On the breaking up of the Dinner Circle, the Queen retired to the Saloon for a short period; and, at half-past ten o'clock, her Majesty was conducted, by the noble host, to the Gallery, where a State Chair was placed in the recess, near the centre of the apartment, as a temporary throne for her Majesty. This chair is reputed to have belonged to Queen Anne: it is in the Venetian style, boldly carved; and it was re-gilt and covered with cloth of silver for the occasion.

As the Royal party entered the Gallery, the band, under the direction of M. Jullien, played the National Anthem.

Her Majesty having taken her seat, with Prince Albert on her right hand, her noble host upon her left, and the Lords and Ladies of the Royal Household around, the general company passed before the State Chair, and paid homage to their Sovereign.

After a brief interval the Ball was opened by a quadrille, in which her Majesty was graciously pleased to honour the Marquis of Salisbury with her hand. His Royal Highness Prince Albert danced in the same set with the Lady Blanche Balfour.

Her Majesty subsequently danced with the Marquis of Exeter and the Earl Spencer.

His Royal Highness Prince Albert also danced during the evening with Lady Beauvale and Lady Charles Wellesley.

Throughout the evening the Gallery presented a most magnificent scene, which the Artist has endeavoured to convey to the reader. The gorgeous refulgence of the "Frette Seielinge" (just regilt), and the flood of light streaming upon the polished oak, and the superb furniture, together with the splendid dresses of the company—the élite of the county—and the reception held by her Majesty, brought into recollection "the golden days" of our history, with which Hatfield is inseparably associated. The Gallery, it is true, belongs to a somewhat later period than the Hall in which Elizabeth was wont to beguile her captivity with "lute or virginals," and courtly pageants; but the apartment is equally characteristic of the festal magnificence of the ancestral homes of our nobility.

The festivities were kept up until half-past twelve o'clock, when her Majesty withdrew from the Gallery and proceeded to the Marble Hall, where supper was served.

At one o'clock, the Royal party left the supper table, and retired to their private apartments.

The general company began to break up shortly after, and the last carriage had departed before two o'clock. Admirable order was preserved in the court-yard by Inspector Otway, and a body of constables of the A division.

SATURDAY.

In the morning, the weather being unfavourable, the Queen and Prince Albert could not take their usual walk. After breakfast, however, it cleared up a little, and the Prince, accompanied by some of the guests, went out shooting. Upwards of 300 head of game were killed by the party, of whom six only shot, including the Prince.

Several of the chief visitors left during the morning, among whom were Lord John Russell, and the Earl and Countess of Brownlow. The Duke of Rutland left at an early hour, as did also the Duke of Wellington. His Grace was loudly cheered by the people of the place as he passed through.

The Queen passed a portion of the forenoon in inspecting the valuable collection of historical documents contained in the Library of her noble host. The librarian had the honour to show her Majesty a draft of the forty-two articles of Edward VI., with the superscription of that pious Monarch; the first Council Book of Queen Mary; Cardinal Wolsey's Instructions to the Ambassador sent to the Pope by Henry VIII., with that eminent churchman's autograph; the original draft of the Proclamation Secretary Cecil used at the Accession of James I.; and a very amusing Pedigree of Queen Elizabeth, emblazoned (dated 1559), by which the ancestry of that Sovereign is exhibited as traced to Adam.

Her Majesty then inspected several manuscript letters of Elizabeth, and the celebrated Cecil Papers. The cradle of Elizabeth was also pointed out to her Majesty, in the bay of the central window: this relic has been erroneously described in the reports of the Royal visit to be "Queen Anne's Cradle;" it is of oak, ornamented with carving, decidedly Elizabethan. Some exquisite roses, which had been sent from the Nursery of Messrs. Paul and Son, of Cheshunt, and placed in the Library, were much admired by the Queen.

On the return of Prince Albert from his shooting excursion, the Queen and his Royal Highness inscribed their names in the Autograph book in the Library, with the date of their visit; and to the left of the folio, beneath the Royal signatures, the noble host and such of his family as were present, also signed their names.

After partaking of luncheon, served in the Winter Dining-room, the Queen and her illustrious Consort, attended by the Marquis of Salisbury and the whole of the guests remaining at the mansion, proceeded to the Eastern garden, overlooking the "Maze," for the purpose of planting two oak saplings. This ceremony concluded, the illustrious party returned to the mansion and passed into the cloister, at the southern entrance, where the Royal carriages were in waiting. At a quarter to three o'clock, her Majesty and the Prince Consort, having taken an affectionate leave of the Lady Mildred Hope and the Lady Blanche Balfour, and expressed to their noble host the pleasure they had derived from their visit to Hatfield, entered their carriage, and drove off by the south avenue amidst the loud cheers of the spectators, who had assembled in considerable numbers, notwithstanding the heavy fall of rain.

The Marquis of Salisbury, on horseback, accompanied her Majesty as far as St. Alban's.

Captain Paris's troop of the Herts Yeomanry escorted her Majesty as far as St. Alban's, where they were relieved by the troop under the command of Captain Gaussen. On reaching Watford, they were succeeded by Captain Halsey, M.P., and his troop.

Before her Majesty left Hatfield House, the Lady Mildred Hope and the Lady Blanche Balfour, received each from the Queen's hand, as a souvenir, a valuable bracelet.

From Watford, the Royal cavalcade passed through Moor Park, Pinner, and Harefield (where a troop of the 12th Lancers relieved the escort of the Herts Yeomanry), and so on to Uxbridge, where there were another change of horses. They arrived at Windsor Castle at about six o'clock, escorted by a detachment of the 1st Life Guards, commanded by the Marquis of Worcester. Both her Majesty and the Prince looked extremely well and in excellent spirits after their journey.

HATFIELD HOUSE.

This fine old mansion was for many years "a show house;" but, owing to the repairs in progress since a portion of the west wing was destroyed by fire in 1835, the entire building had been closed to the public. On Monday and Tuesday last, however, the Marquis of Salisbury very liberally permitted the mansion to be inspected between the hours of twelve and four o'clock; and great numbers of persons availed themselves of the privilege. The fittings and re-furnishings for the Royal visit were then seen by the public to advantage; the only condition being that each visitor inserted his or her name, &c., in a book provided for the purpose. The attendance of company in carriages and on foot was very numerous when the clock struck twelve, and the northern door was opened.

The situation of Hatfield House has few parallels among the domains of our nobility. In the old Palace, the principal windows looked towards the court in the centre; and the new, or present house, is, perhaps, the very first mansion where a view of the landscape was considered in the design: the site, too, possesses great advantages to recommend the choice, the ground rising with a gentle ascent, and the house on every side presenting itself as a noble and commanding object. Then, what a host of interesting objects present themselves in the fine views from the windows of the mansion. Directly westward, is the venerable Abbey Church of St. Alban's, crowning a beautiful eminence: the hill at Sandridge next breaks the line, and the wide-spreading woods of Brocket Hall and Wood Hall Parks appear on the north. Eastward are Digswell House, Tewin Water, and Pansanger, the seat of Earl Cowper; while south are two very interesting spots, Gubbins, or Gobions, near North Mims, once a seat of the illustrious Sir Thomas More; and Tyttenhanger, the former residence of the powerful Abbots of St. Alban's, to which King Henry VIII. and his Queen, Catherine, retired for the summer season in 1528.

The Park and woods, occupying the foreground of this panorama, are very extensive. The gardens and vineyards were celebrated as early as the days of Evelyn and Pepys, who, in their amusing Diaries, have thus described them. The former, under the date of 1643, March 11, says: "I went to see my Lord of Salisbury's palace at Hatfield, where the most considerable rarity, besides the house (inferior to few then in England for its architecture) was the garden and vineyard rarely well water'd and planted. They also show'd us the picture of Secretary Cecil in Mosaiq worke, very well don by some Italian hand." Pepys is not less pleased at a later period:—"1661, July 22.—I came to Hatfield before twelve o'clock, and walked all alone in the vineyard, which is now a very beautiful place again; and, coming back, I met Mr. Looker, my Lord's gardener, who showed me the house, the chappel with brave pictures, and, above all, the gardens such as I never saw in all my live; nor so good flowers, nor so great gooseberrys, as big as nutmegs." And, on the 16th of October, 1664, this amusing entry occurs:—"Lord's-day. It raining, we set out betimes; and about nine o'clock we got to Hatfield in church time, and I alight and saw my simple Lord Salisbury sit there in the gallery." He visited it again on the 11th of August, 1667, when he walked into the park and to the vineyard, and says:—"On our return, the women had pleasure in putting on some straw hats, which are much worn in this country, and did become them mightily, but especially my wife." We quote the details from a well-compiled "Historical Notice," in the Herts County Press.

The Vineyard, which we have elsewhere noticed and illustrated, is mentioned in the accounts of building the mansion and laying out the grounds, all which cost but £7631 11s. 3d. The Privy Garden, on the west side, we have already described. The Garden facing the east front has been laid out but a few years, though it is in the quaint, geometrical style of the seventeenth century; and a Maze below it belongs to the same period of taste.

Of the South Front we have already spoken: it is, architecturally, the most ornate, but it has not the most diversified prospect. This advantage must be awarded to the East Front, in which are the principal apartments. The Terrace Walk is fronted with a pierced parapet, upon which are vases of choice flowers; you then descend to the Elizabethan Garden, with its large parterres or masses of flowers; next to the Maze; and then to the Lake; the whole backed by the most picturesque wood scenery. In this front is the bijou of the interior—King James's Room. "The principal feature of the Northern Front," says Mr. Robinson, "is in the centre compartment, in which is the Entrance Doorway; but a perfect idea of the architectural beauty of this extensive building can only be obtained by an examination of the lateral fronts: on these the bold projections produce alternate masses of light and shade, exceedingly pictorial; a proof of the master skill with which the original plan was contrived. Time has given the whole a venerable impression, and the primitive colour of the brick has acquired a rich hue from the lichen that now covers it, such as Nature alone can bestow." Each of the principal fronts differs from the other, but possesses perfect unity of design and execution, in which the chaste and vigorous feeling characteristic of the Tudor period is remarkably prevalent. It is, also, believed that no house in the kingdom erected at so early a date, remains so entire as this. The additions or restorations are made accordant with the original style: the three pair of gates which have just been placed at the north and south fronts are evidences of this judgment: they were cast in Paris, and are extremely rich and beautiful in detail; the coronet and crest of the family, in the head-way, being picked out in colours.

THE INTERIOR.

The arrangement of the interior of the mansion is as convenient as it is splendid. Within the last two years, the principal apartments have been superbly embellished, it is stated, at a cost of nearly £30,000.

Her Majesty and his Royal Highness Prince Albert had the whole of the east wing devoted to their accommodation. The apartments appropriated to the private use of the Sovereign and Royal Consort and their suites, were seven in number, all superbly furnished and re-decorated. The ceilings have been embellished, under the superintendence of Mr. Sang; the Royal arms and the insignia of the Order of the Garter being superbly emblazoned in the compartments. The State Bedchamber has bed and window draperies of crimson and gold India silk damask, lined with crimson ducape; the counterpane of rich white India silk brocade of the richest chintz colours; and the walls of the room are hung with early English tapestry. The Queen and the Prince's dressing-rooms are hung with crimson and white India silk damask, and furniture to correspond. The Queen's dressing-room has blue and white India silk damask draperies and furniture covers; the walls are in rich colours, and bear single sconces, with chased silver shields: and the richly-carved glass frame is silvered. Prince Albert's private sitting-room has rich velvet tapestry, curtains, and sofas, &c., to correspond.

The Grand Staircase is one of the most magnificent features of this palace-home. It is ascended by a flight of five landings, and occupies a space 35 feet by 21 feet in dimension. The balusters are massive, and boldly carved in the Italian form, and above the hand-rail are represented genii, armorial lions, &c.; and a carved hatch-gate, probably, to keep the favourite dogs from ascending to the drawing-rooms. The upper division of the ceiling is enriched by a very beautiful pendant in the Florentine style, and has been recently coloured and relieved by gold and silver enrichments, which are not, however, just to our taste. The wall is hung with choice portraits of the Cecils, many of them whole lengths, by Lely, Kneller, Vandycke, Zucchero, Reynolds, &c. "We noticed one, the fourth Earl of Salisbury, which had a novel appearance, there being a portrait of the unfortunate Duke of Monmouth rising rather above and immediately behind that of the Earl. It was discovered on the cleaning of the painting. The canvass originally possessed a portrait of the Duke of Monmouth, by Wissing, but which had been repainted over, and the fourth Earl painted on it by Dahl."—(Correspondent of the Morning Herald.)

At the foot of the staircase is the door of the Dining Parlour, and over it a white marble contemporary bust of Lord Burghley. This room is paneled throughout with oak, and has an enriched chimney-piece and ceiling. This apartment is in the east front; it has just been hung with rich blue and gold tapestry velvet curtains. Adjoining, are the Summer, Breakfast, and Drawing Rooms; and the remainder of the eastern wing, on the Ground Story, is occupied by spacious private apartments, furnished in the olden taste; with massive fire-dogs, for burning wood. Some of the most valuable pictures are in these rooms; among them Zucchero's celebrated Portrait of Queen Elizabeth. The entire collection consists of nearly 250 paintings, among which are found the finest specimens of Zucchero, De Heero, Hilliard, Mark Garrard, and other esteemed portrait painters in the reign of Elizabeth. A portion of the collection having been the private property of that Queen, consisting of portraits of the favoured nobility and popular characters who formed her Court and household. There are five highly-finished original portraits of Elizabeth (including the large one by Zucchero), profusely decorated with jewels, pearls, &c.

The Great Staircase, also, communicates with the upper end of the Great Hall, or, as it is called, the Marble Hall; a conspicuous apartment, 50 feet by 30. It is lighted by three bay windows rising the whole height of the hall, besides the oriel at the upper end, near which the lord's table stood in the "golden days" of our ancestors. A massive carved screen runs the whole length of the Hall at the east end with an open Gallery, enriched with carving, amidst which are introduced lions, forming part of the heraldic insignia of the family, bearing shields of the cartouche form, on which are blazoned the family arms. The room is panelled with oak, and the walls lined with splendid tapestry lately brought from Spain. The parts under the galleries have been decorated under Mr. Sang's superintendence. The apartment at night was illuminated by twenty Chinese lanterns, as shown in our Illustration of the Grand Banquet. This Hall presents one of the earliest departures from the ancient open timber roof and louvre; the

THE THEATRES.

The past week has been a busy one in the theatrical world; and it may be regarded as the commencement of one of the most bustling seasons of several years. It has been as much as the dramatic critics could do to keep pace with the novelties produced; and only by dint of railway activity, and posting constantly from one house to another, has this been accomplished.

HAYMARKET.

Mr. Lovel's comedy of "Look Before You Leap; or, Wooings and Weddings," was produced at this Theatre on Thursday evening, with triumphant and legitimate success; indeed, we have not for a long time witnessed a piece that so completely enlisted the audience in its favour from the very commencement. There were several reasons for this. The action was laid in the present day; the incidents were natural and rapid; and the interest, which never once flagged, was assisted by most sparkling and forcible dialogue.

In the beginning of the comedy we find Mr. Oddington (Mr. W. Farren) sitting over his wine at an inn, with three young men—Rashleigh (Mr. Hudson), De Vere (Mr. Holl), and Brandon (Mr. Howe). The two former of these are anxious to be engaged to his nieces Claribel (Miss Fortescue), and Mary (Miss P. Horton). The latter is in love with an orphan adopted by Oddington—Elinor Mortimer (Mrs. Edwin Yarnold). The old gentleman tells the gallants that he is sure they do not know their own minds; and dares them each to give him a bond for £5000 that they will not change, before one month is out, in their opinions. Rashleigh and Claribel are both talkative, De Vere and Mary sentimental; and the consequence is, that the couples so worry or wear each other, that in the end they are delighted to exchange partners. But whilst this is going on, the second interest is also at work. Mr. Hardman (Mr. Rogers) is the guardian of Brandon, whom he has brought up in ignorance of the possessions he is heir to. He is anxious that Brandon should marry his daughter, Fanny (Miss Julia Bennett); but the young man is already deeply in love with Elinor, which so enrages Hardman—the villain of the piece—that he puts forward a story of the attempted seduction of his daughter by Brandon, and turns him out of doors. The third plot is worked out by Hardman's clerk, Jack Spriggs (Mr. Webster), who loves, and is beloved by, Fanny, and who runs away with her to church, turning honest as soon as he is married, and clearing the character of Brandon in Mr. Oddington's family, as well as letting him into the secret of his possessions, that he may marry Elinor; and moving amongst all these interests is Miss Brown (Mrs. Glover), a very original lady, of a certain age, who befriends every body, and turns out to be the sister of Mr. Oddington, who had been thirty years in America; and who, returning thence, wished to see something of her brother's real character—hearing that he was a quaint, obstinate, self-opinionated old gentleman before she made up her mind to reside with him.

There is much cleverness shown in constructing the links which connect the fortunes of all these people together. If we have a fault to find, it is, that the concluding action—too tardily carried on in the fourth act—is hurried over with too great rapidity in the fifth. There was a general disappointment at not seeing Mr. Hardman again; the audience were not satisfied at simply hearing that he had run away; they would have wished him on the stage, to be detected, humbled, and scouted. It was said in the house—we know not how truly—that considerable alterations had been made by Mr. Farren in the last scene. We can hardly believe this to have been the case—that any actor, whatever his position, would assume so much.

We will not raise the quæstio vexata of what is comedy and what is not. We can only state that it is long since we have witnessed so agreeable and refreshing a five-act play: possibly, not since "London Assurance." We do not even except Mr. Jerrold's "Bubbles of the Day," and "Time Works Wonders" albeit, the brilliantly sustained epigram of their dialogue, with their running fire of jokes and cutting sarcasms, so ably concealed the want of interest felt in the plot, or fortunes of the characters. We have seldom been present at a more satisfactory representation: we have never heard anything go with the house as the three first acts did. The last two may be curtailed; but we think much of their comparative lagging may be attributed to Mr. Webster's unfortunate hesitation, with which all are acquainted who can call to mind a few of that otherwise admirable actor's first-night impersonations. Where the dialogue was wanted to go like wildfire, he hung and waited, until many of the audience got perfectly nervous: otherwise, his acting, as the graceless lawyer's clerk, was everything that could be desired. We have little to say respecting the individual acting; the very cast is a guarantee of its excellence; and all the performers were well fitted. Of course, Mr. Farren and Mrs. Glover played up to each other with that effect which they only are capable of producing; and, of course, the remaining ladies were as lady-like as the most fastidious taste could wish them to be. Mr. Rogers is a most careful and intelligent actor; and Mrs. Edwin Yarnold's gentle, natural pathos, came out to great advantage in the scenes with Mr. Howe, who is always a safe and agreeable performer. Buckstone made everybody laugh at the right place, and turned a trifling part to some account.

The applause at the fall of the curtain was tremendous. All the performers had to re-appear; and Mr. Lovel bowed from his private box. It will have a long, and, without doubt, a lucrative career.

THE OLYMPIC.

We thought proper last week to speak somewhat severely of a production at this house, which has since been withdrawn from the bills. It gives us now great pleasure to chronicle the entire success of the revival of Sir John Vanbrugh's comedy, "The Relapse," performed here on Monday evening. We confess to having had, in common with a large proportion of our colleagues, some misgivings as to the reception it would meet with. The grossest scenes and characters were so involved in the action of the play, that we did not well see how they could be even softened, much less cut out, without destroying whatever interest the story possessed. Nor, indeed, has the difficulty been altogether got over. But of this anon.

The intelligent critic of the Times favoured its readers with so admirable an history of the comedy, that there is little occasion for us to say much on the subject. It was first played nearly a century and a half ago, and was written as a sequel to Cibber's "Love's Last Shift," in which that author was the original representative of Sir Novelty Fashion—a character he wrote for himself. A pamphlet might be composed of anecdotes, highly interesting to the play-goer, connected with this comedy and its continuation: even to Sheridan's failure, in the alteration of the latter, which he produced as "The Trip to Scarborough." But we are somewhat hardly driven this week; and we refer our readers to Sir John Vanbrugh's own preface, and the ten-volume "History of the Stage," for much diverting matter on this subject.

Much care was evident in the version of the "Relapse" played at the Olympic on Monday. There was nothing to offend: and, although the chief scenes from which the play derives its name were omitted—and judiciously so—there was still enough situation in the plot, and breadth in the principal characters preserved, to carry on the attention of the audience, and lead to a most satisfactory conclusion. And it was so carefully acted, with very few exceptions, that scarcely a point escaped the recognition of the audience: the exquisite dialogue was listened to throughout with the keenest attention and every evidence of great satisfaction; and a warm, honest round of cheering at the conclusion stamped its success. Of the characters, the greatest praise must be given to the ladies—a point which has been universally conceded. The Amanda of Mrs. R. Gordon, the Berinthia of Miss Charles, the Miss Hoyden of Mrs. Walter Lacy, and the Nurse of our old favourite, Mrs. C. Jones, were so capitally played that we question whether more effective representatives of the parts in question have ever been witnessed. And all these are characters more or less difficult to interpret. Mr. Walter Lacy and Mr. Leigh Murray were most worthy of commendation amongst the gentlemen—the former for his clever impersonation of Sir Novelty Fashion, and the latter for his careful reading and, even, unassuming, excellence as Loveless. Mr. Romer invested the trifling part of Syringe with much drollery. We were less pleased with Mr. Wilkinson's Sir Tunbelly Clumsy: he was far from perfect, and he rather looked the old squire of the opening of a pantomime than the father of Miss Hoyden. Nor was Mr. Archer's Worthy well conceived: it was boisterous and too evident; at times, his declamation verged on the dangerous. Messrs. Cowell — father and son, we believe — were more effective as Coupler and Lory. We cannot compliment Mr. Bolton upon his performance of Young Fashion. The dance which concluded "The Relapse" was loudly encored; and after the curtain had fallen, the audience insisted upon having it drawn up again, to congratulate the performers upon the success they had contributed to achieve. The comedy was well put on the stage: the costumes, especially, were excellent.

ADELPHI.

Mr. Charles Dickens appears, for a short time, to have taken the place of the French authors, and furnished our native playwrights with a number of types, as nuclei upon which they may form perfect pieces. We have already had all his works dramatised; and now, the works being exhausted, the authors have come down to their component dramatis personæ. Mrs. Harris has already proved that she was no fiction, at the Lyceum; and now Mrs. Gamp offers a "tea and turn out" at the Adelphi. We expect, before long, to have "Pecksniff at Home;" "A Night with Pinch;" "Mark Tap[illegible]; or, The Rover Recalled;" and "The Doom of Dot," displayed as titles of pieces on the bills

We are sorry we cannot say a great deal in favour of "Mrs. Gamp," at the above house. Anywhere else she would have met with the most uncomfortable of receptions; but the Adelphi audiences are always predisposed to be pleased: and, whenever Mr. Wright shows his quaint and welcome face, they shout with laughter, before he has uttered a word. In fact, he can command the house by the mere expression of his countenance, and this is no small praise. He is the Mrs. Gamp—and, in fact, he is everything; inasmuch as the piece possesses not a vestige of a plot, but depends upon his comicalities mainly to be carried through. It may be compared, in a great degree, to a damp firework, which has occasional sparkles, and then burns on in hazy gloom to the end. Mr. Munyard, to the best of his abilities, as Betsy Prig, seconded the efforts of Mr. Wright, and Miss Ellen Chaplin as Selina Gamp, a "Pet of the Ballet," looked the character to the life, and acted it most pleasingly. Mr. Wright sang and winked at the pit, and the pit applauded in return, and he was loudly called for at the fall of the curtain, 'which he did' in Bozzian language. The trifle is not, in any respect, taken from the original of the Lyceum piece, La Garde Malade, but altogether original as far as it goes.

French Plays.—Mr. Mitchell has not been idle during the recess; and has already put forward a most attractive synopsis of his engagements with distinguished French artistes for the ensuing season, which is about to commence. M. Perlet may be looked for at the beginning of the campaign; and, in addition to him, we are promised our old favourites MM. Rhozevel, Cartigny, Bouffé, and the inimitable Frederic Lemaitre, together with Mdlle. Rose Chéri, and, at the conclusion of the season, Mdlle. Rachel. Alcide Tousez, of the Palais Royal, will also visit us for the first time; Lafont will again display his agreeable talents, and several names new to our public, but in high repute with the Parisian audiences, will give effect to Mr. Mitchell's spirited entreprise. The original "Claresse Harlowe" will be one of the earliest productions, in which Rose Chéri will enact her own rôle of the heroine; and an original drama has also been written expressly for her by M. Scribe. There is little doubt of Mr. Mitchell's liberality and spirit meeting with an adequate reward. As the facilities of communication with the Continent become every year more extended, so does the taste for these fashionable, and, withal, intellectual entertainments, become more and more popular.

An original Comedy, in five acts, is announced in the bills as in rehearsal, at the Olympic Theatre, from the pen of "P. Palmer, Esq."

MUSIC.

DRURY-LANE THEATRE.

Auber's ballet-opera of "The Maid of Cashmere" was revived on Thursday night, for the purpose of introducing the new vocalists, Miss Messent and Mr. Rafter. Their reception was favourable. The young débutante has a mezzo-soprano voice, of good quality and of sufficient calibre. With care, practice, and experience above all, she may attain a high rank in the profession, and at present she is fully capable of sustaining the duties of a seconda prima donna. Mr. Rafter is a pupil of Crevelli, to whose school he bids fair to do honour. He lacks self-possession; but, with an organ of such promise, he may, in due course, arrive at distinction. Mr. Weiss is improving both in singing and acting.

EDWARD LODER'S OPERA OF THE "NIGHT DANCERS."

At the re-opening of the Princess' Theatre, on Wednesday night, this long announced production met with signal success. Mr. Soane is the author of the libretto, the subject of which is based on the ballet of "Giselle; on Les Wilis," by M.M. St. Georges, Theophile Gautier and Coraly, first produced at the Académie Royale de Musique in Paris, in June 1841. The first English version of "Giselle" was represented at Sadler's Wells, written by the blind poet, the veteran Moncrieff, who altered the dénouement, by making St. Walburg the instrument of defeating the Wilis or Phantom Dancers, and restoring Giselle to life. Mr. Soane has availed himself of Mr. Moncrieff's drama, to introduce into his piece an induction, in which Giselle is supposed to fall asleep, and during her slumber, two acts of the doings of the Wilis occur, until she sinks into the willow grave, only to awake and ascertain what she has been dreaming. This judicious treatment of the story by Mr. Soane, would be complete without the tiresome introduction, in which, neither author nor composer shine. The characters are thus distributed. —Giselle, Madame Albertazzi; Bertha, (daughter of the Duke) Miss S. Flower. Mary (cousin of Giselle) Miss G. Smithson; Queen of the Wilis, Miss Marshal; The Duke, Mr. Bodda; Albert, Mr. Allen; Godfrey, Mr. Walton; Fridolin, Parish-beadle and Sexton, Mr. Leffler. Mr. Soane has written some average poetry, and has been wise not to regard so much the jingle of the syllables as the sentiment of the music,—with curtailments his libretto will be excellent.

Mr. Loder's music is of a very high order, although it is unequal. There are many things that he would probably criticise himself severely, but he has yielded to the necessity of writing popular themes. After all, it is the music publisher who influences composers of operas to concoct saleable materials for the drawing-room. In this instance, the tact of Mr. Loder has been displayed in satisfying all parties: he has proved himself to be a first-rate musician, and he has not slighted the popularity of the barrel-organs. His abilities have been long recognised, but now he must take a higher position. The son of the late Loder of Bath, one of the most distinguished leaders of orchestras in this country, Edward Loder, studied in Germany under Ferdinand Ries. It was at the English Opera House, under Mr. Arnold's management, that the maiden essay of Mr. E. Loder, the opera of "Nourjahad," was first heard, and great fame did he acquire by this youthful work; but he has remained for years since that period either a composer of operatic melodramas or a writer of fugitive pieces for the publishers. "The Night Dancers," in fact, may be recorded as his second ordeal, which he has passed through most triumphantly. We will rapidly glance at the prominent pieces of this remarkable production.

The overture, which was encored, will be liked by the severest critics, except the last movement, a trivial polka theme. The subject for the oboe and the incantation passages for the stringed instruments are beautiful. In the Legend, sung by Miss G. Smithson, there was nothing striking, nor was the laughing song "Laugh my Girls," given by Mr. Walton, of any distinction. The Serenade with Allen's solo, produced little impression. Madame Albertazzi's air "Wild as the Spirit," in G, if sung with more energy might be effective. It has a clever waltz accompaniment, but all this induction passed over heavily. The real interest began in Act I., with a spirited chorus of Vintagers, admirably grouped. A parody on "Othello's Occupation Gone" was not done justice to by Mr. Leffler, whose acting, by the way, was really most comical in the Beadle. It was Allen who drew down the earliest plaudits, and rapturous were they, in a charming Serenade in D flat "Wake, my Love." This lovely melody, which is quite equal to Donizetti's "Come è Gentil," will be immensely popular. It was, of course, enthusiastically encored.

Madame Albertazzi's grand Scena of Giselle's dream was rendered so tamely, and her intonation was so imperfect, that it was impossible to decide on its merits. In the next pleasing ballad, "I cannot flatter, if I would," Mr. Allen secured another encore. A drinking song, "The cup is oak, the wine is gold," was allotted to Miss G. Smithson, whose faulty intonation sadly marred the effect of a most animated composition—quite a gem in its way. In the concerted piece that follows, Miss Sarah Flower has an unpretending air, "Our way has been both rough and long," which will be important whilst sung in her artistical style. Mr. Bodda, a baritone, a pupil of the Royal Academy of Music, afforded signs of promise in a ballad, "Believe me, honest friends," which was encored, after a division, the ayes carrying it. A Chorus of Huntsmen was after the approved Teutonic models, preceded by a well constructed Sestet. In the recitative and air, "I breathe again," Madame Albertazzi was encored, some of her lower notes ensuring her this compliment. The finale of the first act was replete with dramatic intensity. The Flower Duo between Madame Albertazzi and Mr. Allen is quite a gem, and its theme has been most skilfully interwoven throughout the Opera.

The music in the second act rises with the situations. Here, the fancy and imagination run riot in melodious imagery and harmonic combinations of the most exciting nature. The gem will be found in the duo, "Peace to the Dead," most exquisitely sung by Miss S. Flower and Mr. Allen. It created a perfect furore, and a demand for a repetition was unanimous. An equal sensation was produced in the next air, "Wake from thy Grave," in E flat, given by Mr. Allen, with overwhelming passion. Next in succession was the descriptive music of the unearthly gambols of the Night Dancers or Wilis; and, whether we consider the choral or ballet effects, the skill and inspiration of the composer are at every point developed. The scene of the vanishing of Fridolin was well managed. In the duo between Albert and Giselle, in this incantation, Mdme. Albertazzi had a narrow escape. As she rose from under the stage, her muslin skirt caught fire, and, in an instant, was in a blaze, causing the most intense agony on the part of the audience; which, however, was in a moment relieved by the presence of mind of Mr. Allen and some of the carpenters, who tore away the burning portion of the dress. Never, within our recollection, have we witnessed such a state of excitement as the house presented before and after the incident. The cheering at the rescue was renewed again and again; and Madame Albertazzi had the extraordinary nerve to remain on the stage, and complete her part. Criticism of the remainder of the opera, after this disaster, is out of question, since artists and audience were equally unnerved. We shall, therefore, take another opportunity of returning to the merits of this clever work; but we cannot but render justice to the truly efficient and picturesque mise en scene. We may add, that, as yet, the vocal honours appertain to Miss S. Flower and Mr. Allen, it will be for the other singers to take their revenge; as also may be observed of the chorus and band. It is, however, enough that we record the decided triumph of another British composer.

MUSICAL CHIT CHAT.

M. Jullien's Concerts.—At the hour that we go to press we shall be unable to report progress as to the opening of these concerts last night. Next week we shall supply ample details. It will be a source of gratification to amateurs to learn that M. Jullien intends to have the "Marseillaise Hymn" executed with the full power of his own orchestra and of the four military bands.

On Monday night will be the first Concert of the Society of British Musicians, Mr. Lavenu's opera of "Loretta, a Tale of Seville," is in active rehearsal, and will be produced next week, the principal parts sustained by Madame Bishop, [illegible], Harrison, King, Borrani, Weiss, S. Jones, &c. Next Saturday evening the Western Madrigal Society meets for the first time this season.

The Sacred Harmonic Society's Concerts will be resumed on the 4th Nov., (Wednesday next,) at Exeter Hall, when Spohr's Oratorio "The Last Judgment," a Te Deum and Jubilate by Prince Albert, and several other compositions will be performed. The Society has, during the past ten years, given no fewer than 157 concerts to audiences amounting in the aggregate to upwards of 300,000 persons, and has disbursed amongst the musical profession nearly £19,000.

MUSICAL REVIEW.

The Music Book, No. I. St. Bride's Avenue, Fleet-street.

A new weekly periodical of original music, has just been started on the cheap principle, each number costing 6d., and the monthly part, containing four or five songs, at 2s. or 2s 6d., thus affording to the purchaser half-a-dozen pieces for the price of an ordinary ballad. Nothing but a large circulation can sustain this new undertaking, for it is printed neatly on engraved plates, on good paper, of the usual musical dimensions. The words are to be original or selected, by permission, from the most popular authors; there is no attempt, therefore, at piracy. The artistical skill of Doyle is also put in requisition for an illustrated wrapper, and some quaint designs has he made for the first number: there is the Spanish serenader, the Teutonic street brass band; the Savoyard organ grinder, with monkey obligato; the shepherd's pipe; the periwigged-pated minnet-player, the amateur domestic music; the Welsh band; the hunter's horn; the bugle and drum of war's alarms; the convivial glee singers, and divers other conceits. Mr. Balfe appears as the opening contributor, with Barry Cornwall's words of "Sing, Maiden, Sing." To state that the melody is essentially Balfish, is to afford the precise notion of the quality of this inspiration a kind of cross between an Irish air and an Italian cavatina. Pieces by Wallace, Tully, Mrs. à'Beckett, Edward Loder, Alexander Lee, Benedict, &c., are promised in turn; and there are to be sacred as well as secular compositions.

The Musical Treasury, Vocal and Instrumental. Davidson.

The fifth volume is now before us, and we have only to renew our former praises as to the taste and judgment that have been displayed in the getting up of this cheap work. The typography is excellent; and the care observed in the arrangements is worthy of especial commendation. The moderation of the price is another incentive to purchase this really "Musical Treasury." In the present volume, gleanings from Verdi's "Nabucco," with English words, by Mr. G. Soane, are published. There are Polkas, Waltzes, Mazurkas, Quadrilles, and Galops in abundance, with vocal gems from Auber's "Crown Diamonds," Flotow's "Stradella," Pianoforte Fantasias, Sacred Pieces, and Ballads classical and homely, to suit every voice. This publication is accessible to all classes, as it is published in threepenny weekly sheets and shilling parts.

Come, Buy my Flowers. By Henry Leslie. Addison and Hodson.

The Bells of New York, The Opossum Finder, The Song of the Ohio, The Emigrant Ship, The Huron's Prayer, The Bear Hunt, Bye-Gones. Composed by Henry Phillips. Addison and Hodson.

Ave Maria. By Mrs. H. Stracey. C. Ollivier.

Deux Rondeaux. By H. Rosellen. Three Fantasias. By E. Wolff. For the Pianoforte. D'Almaine and Co

Illustrated Book of British Song. How.

Mr. Henry Leslie is a young musician, who has already gained fame by a very clever Quintet, which was performed last season at Mr. Lucas's Classical Evenings, and was noticed at the time in our columns. The Ballad before us is his maiden essay in the world of publication, and is a graceful melody, with an elegant accompaniment; although the latter, to be effective, will tax the powers of a good pianist. Mr. Leslie has composed an opera, which is expected to come before the world in due course. He has studied in the best schools, is an excellent musician, and bids fair to take a high position as a composer.

The songs of Mr. Phillips, sung by him in his entertainment, entitled "Adventures in America," derive their interest from his effective vocalisation, combining, as he does, declamatory power with dramatic feeling. Writing to display the qualities of his own organ, these songs claim no distinction for originality or variety of melody. The Canzonet of "Bye Gones" is of a higher order.

Mrs. Henry Stracey's "Ave Maria" is more remarkable for its descriptive accompaniment than for its melodious imagery.

Rosellen's Rondos on themes from Auber's opera of the "Serment" are clever and effective, with brilliant and difficult passages, requiring some practice for mere amateurs to accomplish. Fantasias on Rossini's "Guillaume Tell" have been quite exhausted, but there is merit and some elegance in Mr. Wolff's treatment of the hacknied themes.

The eighth part of "How's Illustrated Book of British Song," edited by Mr. Hogarth, contains the English air of "The Neglected Tar," to which the words of the well-known "Vicar of Bray" are adapted. Moore's "Exile of Erin" and the Welsh air of the "Note of the Black Cock," with an original air by F. N. Crouch, "The Two Brides," are included in this selection, which is interesting from the editorial notes and the excellence of the illustrations.

FINE ARTS.

"Sir Tatton Sykes," the Winner of the Great St. Leger. Bailey, Brothers.

The admirable portrait of the winner of the last St. Leger, painted by Mr. Herring, sen., has just been engraved and coloured in first-rate style. The points of the horse are given with great fidelity; the lop ears and Roman nose are carefully depicted; and the gentle disposition of the noble creature is exemplified by his playfully biting a stick, held by his venerable master, Sir Tatton Sykes. The portrait of the worthy Baronet, by its vraisemblance, completes the excellence of the picture.

LITERATURE.

A Picturesque Handbook to Carlingford Bay. Green, Newry.

There cannot be a finer qualification for a topographer than enthusiastic love of the district he is to describe; and this high recommendation the author evinces in every page of the well-filled volume before us. Still, there is abundance of matter-of-fact information in his work: he first shows how readily accessible to English tourists is "the lovely bay of Carlingford and Rosstrevor," "a district remarkable beyond most others for scenic beauty, salubrity, and cheapness of accommodation;" and, secondly, he furnishes a descriptive and pictorial record of the numerous objects of historic, legendary, and poetic interest with which it abounds. The book, in short, appears to be filled with useful and amusing information for the tourist, written in a very attractive vein, and in just the humour which this delightful excursion will be likely to inspire. Here is a specimen, from the account of Carlingford Oysters:—

"The fish has an indescribably delicious flavour—piquant and luscious at once an incentive and a sedative to the stomach—simultaneously awaking and appeasing hunger, and almost literally realising the aspiration of the epicure in 'Pelham,' when he sighed for 'perpetual appetite—a digestive houri, that would renew her virginity every time she was embraced.' A Carlingford oyster is considerably larger than a real London 'native' in the best condition; and, unlike the latter, its sweetness and delicacy increase in proportion to its size. The colour of the centre is of that creamy glittering white observable in a plump London 'native,' with smaller beard—which, by the way, is not by any means coarse or unpleasant, and is seldom removed by the most fastidious. There is no peculiarity about a Carlingford oyster that requires a peculiar taste to determine its immeasurable superiority over everything of a similar kind—none of the haut-goût of incipient putrefaction which gives its relish to some species of game in the estimation of gourmets. Any one who has ever tasted an oyster of any sort must give the preference a thousand times over to those of Carlingford—a place which, I should imagine, must have been the Gunter's or Verey's of the submarine world of the Heathen Mythology, when Thetis and her Nereides gave cold collations to Neptune and the briny gentlemen of his suite."

This very agreeable and intelligent compagnon-de-voyage is profusely illustrated with vignettes of the most picturesque localities.

Hood's Own; or, Laughter from Year to Year. Moxon.

"By the deep nine," this goodly volume enshrines the contents of as many "Comic Annuals," embodying a system of Practical Cheerful Philosophy, for the gladdening of every hearth and home in the empire. Yet, there is a sort of melancholy mirth in the Author's telling us, in the Preface, of "a certain 'blue-and-yellow visage, and attenuated figure,' and that the merriest effusions in this volume have been the relaxations of a gentleman literally enjoying bad health—the carnival, so to speak, of a personified Jour Maigre. The very fingers, (he adds,) so aristocratically slender, that now hold the pen, hint plainly of the 'ills that flesh is heir to:'—my coats have become great coats, my pantaloons are turned into trousers, and, by a worse bargain than Peter Schlemel's, I seem to have retained my shadow, and sold my substance. In short, as happens to prematurely old port wine, I am of a bad colour, with very little body. But what then? That emaciated hand still lends a hand to embody in words and sketches the creations or recreations of a merry Fancy: those gaunt sides yet shake heartily as ever at the Grotesques and Arabesques and droll Picturesques that my good Genius, (a Pantagruelian familiar,) charitably conjures up to divert me from more sombre realities." This is exquisite humour, yet touching to the very heart's core, when we reflect that the pen of the amiable writer is laid down, and his eloquence, alas, is mute!

What a host of mirthful recollections crowd upon the mention of poor Tom Hood's nine Annuals, with their light come-and-read-me pages, and their quaint pen-and-ink wood-cuts, in their fun and drollery pleasing children of the larger as well as the smaller growth. Nothing but the nicest perceptions of the ludicrous could have created such illustrations as these said woodcuts: they have none of the perked-up primness of professional art; but their fun is so broad and striking as to be instantly seized by the reader. Their humour requires none of the "second-sight" so fatal to a poor joke; it is instant and irresistible. Who that has once seen the Dutch-built figures of this author-artist, his square clodhoppers and washerwomen, and ever forgot their grotesqueness; or the homeliness of the incidents, mostly social miseries, with just enough vexation in them to raise a laugh at the endurance. Then, the letter-press may be said to have raised a school of imitators: "The Pugsby Papers," for instance, were among the earliest specimens of vernacular etourderie; and the "Report from Below," ("Skying a Copper,") one of the raciest flights of the humorous Alexandrine:

> Well, Ma'am, you won't believe it, but its gospel fast and true;
> But these words is all she whispered—"Why, where is the powder blew?"

All who wish to be transported "from *Dull*age to *Grin*nage," should provide themselves with this stout volume of cheerful philosophy, which really teaches us "to make a sunshine in a shady place, to render the mind independent of external-foul weather, by compelling it, as old Absolute says, to get a sun and moon of its own." Reader, the season for such consolation is fast coming; so you cannot do better than become the possessor of "Hood's Own."

Sharpe's London Magazine: a Journal of Entertainment and Instruction for General Reading. Vols. I. and II. T. B. Sharpe.

This Magazine has now been before the public some twelve months; so that its characteristics must be pretty well understood, and its claims to popularity duly appreciated. The Editor's statement, at the close of the second volume, assures us of his success; and, seeing that the work is expensively illustrated, yet sold at the same rate as its unembellished contemporaries, nothing short of a very large circulation can repay the spirited publisher. In another respect, too, it differs from them: it is not addressed to objects of direct individual, sectional, or class interests; but aims at improving the minds of all its readers, at the same time that it delights them, by means at once useful and graceful. Every dozen years or so, we suspect there to be a reaction in the public taste for periodical literature. utilitarianism has had its day, and a more poetic taste has succeeded it; and the staple of the present work is a good specimen of this new phase. The Illustrations, too, partake of this poetic spirit; and the artists' fancy judiciously alternates with the graver illustrative realities: there is just enough of both to prevent our becoming tired of either. Altogether, this work is recommended "for general reading," by its humanising tone, as well as by the active intelligence with which it is conducted.

The Cabinet Lawyer. 13th Edition. Simpkin, Marshall, and Co.

The extensive success of this domestic Justinian is told in its title-page. We remember the not very flattering definition of the advantages of a man being his own lawyer; but it does not follow that a knowledge of the law should invariably render a man fond of litigation; and, therefore, we do not hesitate to recommed "The Cabinet Lawyer," especially to save some of our "Constant Readers" the trouble of seeking information in our "Correspondents' Column." As the edition before us has but just appeared, it contains all the Statutes of the last Session of Parliament; besides being, in every other department, brought up to the present time.

Staggs's Gardens was uncommonly incredulous. It was a little row of houses, with little squalid patches of ground before them, fenced off with old doors, barrel staves, scraps of tarpaulin, and dead bushes; with bottomless tin kettles, and exhausted iron-fenders, thrust into the gaps. Here the Staggs's gardeners trained scarlet beans, kept fowls and rabbits, erected rotten summer-houses, (one was an old boat,) dried clothes, and smoked pipes. Some were of opinion that Staggs's Gardens derived its name from a deceased capitalist, one Mr. Staggs, who had built it for his delectation. Others, who had a natural taste for the country, held that it dated from those rural times when the antlered herd, under the familiar denomination of Staggses, had resorted to its shady precincts. Be this as it may, Staggs's Gardens was regarded by its population as a sacred grove, not to be withered by railroads; and so confident were they, generally, of its long outliving any such ridiculous inventions, that the master-chimney-sweeper at the corner, who was understood to take the lead in the local politics of the Gardens, had publicly declared that, on the occasion of the railroad opening, if it ever did open, two of his boys should ascend the flues of his dwelling, with instructions to hail the failure with derisive jeers from the chimney-pots.—From No. 2 of "Dealings with Dombey and Son," by Charles Dickens.

POLICE.

A TRADESMAN COMMITTED FOR ROBBERY.

On Tuesday, James Galloway, a cheesemonger, in the Walworth-road, who had been in custody for a week, on a charge of stealing a parcel of 71 pair of gloves which formed a portion of goods of the value of £600 that had been stolen from 17, Regent-street West, in the year 1844, was re-examined at Lambeth office.

Mr. Wright, the landlord of the Black Horse public-house, in the Walworth-road, being sworn, said that while he was out of town a parcel had been left at his house by the prisoner. The parcel was made up in brown paper, with a note on the outside addressed to Mr. Jackson, and the prisoner said it would be called for. The paper became torn, so that he saw that the parcel consisted of gloves; but he had never taken any gloves from it, nor had he ever offered any for sale. Had no suspicion that the gloves had been stolen until a fortnight since, when the prisoner, after quarrelling with him, charged him with having stolen property in his possession. In saying this he did not mention the parcel of gloves; but he (Mr. Wright), believing he meant the parcel he had left himself, sent for Mr. Inspector Haynes, and gave him up the parcel. The next day two persons called at his house, and said they had called for the parcel that had been left there by Mr. Galloway; but he told them they had called too late, as he had given it up to Mr. Haynes. He did not think it necessary to give these persons into custody And though he had told them he had given the parcel up to Mr. Inspector Haynes, he had it in his possession at that time. He did not know either of the persons who had called for the parcel. Since the last examination witness had accompanied the officer to Brentford, to serve a summons upon a Mr. Gunning there to appear and give evidence. Gunning told him that Galloway had actually offered him the gloves for sale before he took them to his (Mr. Wright's) house

Mr. George Gunning was next called, and deposed that he had formerly resided in the Walworth-road, with his brother, and was at present a draper in High-street, Brentford, but knew nothing whatever about the gloves in question. When he lived in the Walworth-road he used to frequent the house of Mr. Wright, and was also well acquainted with the prisoner Galloway. Did not tell Mr. Wright that the prisoner had offered him any gloves for sale.

Mr. Hobler to Mr. Wright: Was there any person present when this person called as a witness had the conversation with you, and mentioned about the prisoner offering him the gloves for sale?—Mr. Wright: Yes, my servant was there and she is now present.

Lydia Goulding then got into the box, and deposed that on last Friday week she heard Gunning tell her master that Galloway had offered him the parcel of gloves for sale before taking them to his (her master's) house. This was after her master had quarrelled with Mr. Galloway.

H. Wright said he was at his father's bar at the Black Horse, Walworth-road, when the prisoner brought a parcel there, and said it would be called for. The parcel had a brown paper covering on, was tied with a string, and on the outside was a note addressed to Mr. Jackson. The note produced was, he had no doubt, the same.

The note, which was admitted to be in the handwriting of the prisoner, was here read, and was as follows -

June 13.

Dear Sir—The party returned last night will look at the goods to-morrow, if you think proper to leave them.

Yours respectfully,
J. G.

Addressed to Mr. Thomas Jackson.

Mr. Elliott said that he felt it to be his duty to send the case before a jury, and the prisoner was fully committed for trial

Upon the application of counsel, Mr. Elliott offered to take large bail for the prisoner's appearance at the Old Bailey.

EXTRAORDINARY COUNTER CHARGE.

On Monday, at Worship-street, a young woman, named Lucy Hastings, with an infant in her arms, was charged with having stolen five sovereigns, the property of Mr John Bradbury, a ginger-beer manufacturer.

The prosecutor stated that, at an early hour on the preceding morning, the prisoner, who had lived with him for a considerable period as his wife, but had nearly ruined him by her extravagant habits, took advantage of his temporary absence from home to purloin the above mentioned sum, with which she immediately absconded. In the course of the day, however, he succeeded in tracing her to her mother's house, in the Broadway, Westminster, and gave her into custody; but she had contrived, in the interim, to get rid of the stolen money, as only a few shillings were found in her possession.

In answer to the charge, the prisoner, who was greatly affected, stated that after living for several years with the prosecutor, he had lately formed a connection with another woman, and having no other means of support, she took the money she was accused of stealing, to save herself and child from starvation. She declared, however, that her accuser had not himself come honestly into possession of the money, as he had been in the habit, whenever his real business failed, of pursuing the occupation of a coiner, and using her as an instrument in the circulation of the spurious money, for which she was apprehended a few days since, and examined before one of the City magistrates. Until a recent period he had fabricated the base coin on his own premises, in conjunction with a man named George Saunders, who was tried for the offence at the last sessions, and sentenced to transportation; and if the magistrate would allow one of his officers to accompany her to the house, she would point out a copper in which a quantity of the base money was then deposited, unless the prosecutor had removed it before he gave her into custody

On hearing her statement, the magistrate directed Hayward, the warrant officer, to take the woman with him and search the house, and adjourned the case for that purpose.

The officer subsequently reported to the Bench that, while proceeding to the house, the prisoner informed him that on searching a certain part of it, he would find a broken vase, in which the prosecutor had been in the habit of concealing the base coin; and that in a cellar beneath the staircase, he would also discover an iron ladle, and the remains of some pewter, which he had used in the coining operations, the whole of which articles he afterwards found where she had indicated them to be, but he had not discovered any counterfeit coin. In further corroboration of her statement, however, the prisoner insisted that he should accompany her to various shops in the immediate neighbourhood, where she alleged that she had uttered base coins at the prosecutor's instigation, and at no less than eight of these shops the respective owners at once recognised her as having passed upon them spurious shillings and half-crowns in payment of goods she had purchased there within the last few days.

In answer to the above statement, the prosecutor explained that the iron ladle and pewter produced by the officer had been used by him for the purpose o mending one of the pipes of his soda-water machine, which had got out of repair, and declared that the whole of the prisoner's defence was a tissue of falsehoods

Mr. Broughton said he should leave the subject of the extraordinary disclosures the prisoner had made to be further investigated by the police; and with regard to the charge against her, as the prosecutor himself admitted that she stood in the position of a quasi wife towards him, he did not consider that an act of felony had been satisfactorily established: he should therefore order her, for the present, to be discharged.

The prosecutor expressed a hope that he would be promptly apprised of whatever course might be taken in the matter.

Mr. Broughton: You will hear further about it, you may depend upon it.

QUEEN ELIZABETH'S OAK, IN HATFIELD-PARK.

ceiling being coved, and its ten compartments filled with relievo heads of the Cæsars. On ascending the Staircase, the first apartment entered is the great chamber called King James's Room, nearly 60 feet long and 27 wide, and lit by three immense oriel windows. This vast apartment has been entirely re-embellished; the ceiling is most elaborately decorated in the Florentine style, enriched by pendents, and most elaborately gilt. From it hang six gilt chandeliers, of pure Elizabethan design. Upon the walls are hung whole length portraits of King George III. and Queen Charlotte, by Reynolds; Emily, Marchioness of Salisbury, a most charming picture, by the same master; the late Marchioness, by Lawrence; the late Marquis, by Beechey; and the present noble owner. Over the lofty chimney-piece is a marble statue of James I.; and in the fire-place are lofty and massive silver fire-dogs, for burning wood. The whole of the furniture is heavily gilt; the curtains are of rich white satin, trimmed to correspond with the chairs, sofas, &c., &c., which are covered with the richest crimson silk velvet. On the floor is a superb carpet, of the finest patent Axminster, 15 yards by 7; the colours are rich brown, gold, scarlet, and blue; designed and manufactured by Messrs. Lapworth and Co., Old Bond-street; the pattern is pure Elizabethan. From this establishment were supplied all the new carpets for the late Royal Visit; consisting of Turkey fabric, Persian rugs, &c.

The new draperies throughout the mansion, we may here mention, were manufactured by Sewell and Co., of Compton House, Soho, from patterns designed expressly for the Marquis of Salisbury.

From King James's Room is entered the Gallery, or Corridor, which extends the whole length of the southern front to the library. It is above 160 feet long, and 20 feet wide. At each end is an Ionic screen, the entablature and attic of which break the extreme length of the room, which is altogether highly enriched with architectural ornament. The "Frette Seelinge" displays a skilful variety of combination and intricacy in its numerous compartments. The ground is now entirely gilt, the intersections being ornamented in colours. It is pronounced to be unrivalled in this country, and is only equalled on the Continent by the celebrated ceiling in the same style at the Royal Palace at Munich. Mr. Sang was engaged several months in its decoration. The Gallery is lighted by nine large bay windows, the centre one being deeply recessed. The panelling is of oak, and the general furniture corresponds with the architectural decoration. In this magnificent Gallery was given the Ball of Friday evening.

At the west end of the Gallery is the Winter Dining-room, a large apartment, richly carved, and hung with fine whole-length portraits; the chimney-piece, of marble, is very superb.

The Library is, also, west of the Gallery, and is of equal dimensions with King James's Room. Over the chimney-piece is a Florentine mosaic portrait of Robert Cecil, Earl of Salisbury, 1608. The books and manuscripts are ranged in oaken cases around the room; and above them is a series of Royal and noble portraits. The large windows have just been hung with rich crimson tapestry curtains. There is a fine view of the Privy Garden and the old Palace from the windows.

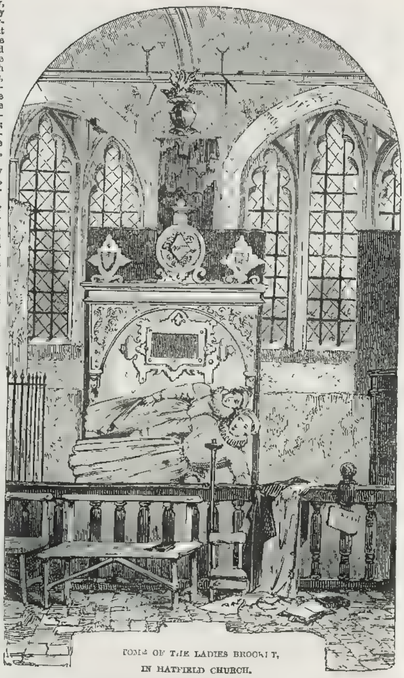
The Domestic Chapel remains to be noticed: it is in the west wing, and narrowly escaped destruction at the fire in 1835. It is enriched similarly to the rest of the mansion; the seats are of oak, and have carved finials. Over the altar is a large window, filled with brilliantly painted glass, after scriptural designs, from the Flemish and German schools. Around three sides of the Chapel is an oaken gallery, hung with paintings of scriptural scenes.

The chapel and a suite of ten rooms have been completed by the present Marquis, in the old baronial style, and each room differs, from the panelling being of various woods, some being of oak, walnut, ash, sycamore, &c.

We have thus made the détour of the chief apartments of this princely pile. In every respect, the antique character of the edifice is studied, but never at the sacrifice of comfort, that main characteristic of an English home. There are, indeed, throughout the building several instances of mechanical ingenuity which belong to our own times. In short, the mansion is as complete as it is splendid in all its accommodations; in its arrangements for State visits, and for domestic retirement; so as to realise the "proper house and home."

The larger Engraving on this page shows the picturesque approach to Hatfield, by the London road; with the old church tower at the upper end of the town. The church is an interesting structure, with a nave, chancel, and aisles; and north of the chancel, a chapel, or burial-place, built by Robert Cecil, Earl of Salisbury, in which is a curious monument of a slab of marble, supported by the Cardinal Virtues, to the memory of the founder.

On the south side of the chancel is the Chapel of the Lords of the Manor of Ponsburne, in which are several monuments of the Brockets and Reads, of Brocket Hall. One of them is in memory of Sir John Brocket, Knt., who died in 1598, and near it is that engraved in the adjoining column; it is in memory of Sir John's two wives, Helen and Elizabeth, both of whose effigies are lying on the tomb, one above the other, habited in the grotesque costume of their time.

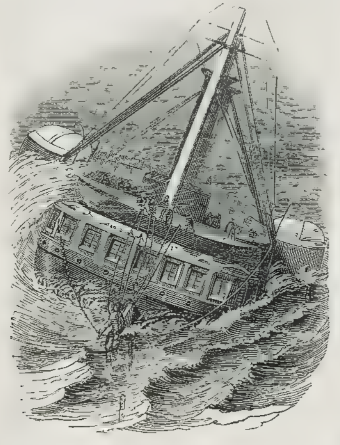


TOMB OF THE LADIES BROCKET, IN HATFIELD CHURCH.

HATFIELD CHURCH, [illegible]

THE "RIPON" STEAMER.

The new iron steamer Ripon, Captain Moresby, belonging to the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Company, which started from Southampton on Tuesday, the 20th inst., for Alexandria, with the East India mails, 120 passengers, and a large cargo, was obliged on the following day, owing to the severe gale, to put into Torbay with loss of her rudder, part of a paddle-box, and one boat, besides other damages. The intelligence of the circumstance reached Portsmouth on Friday night, and the Oriental, Queen, and Achilles steamers were despatched to take on board the Ripon's passengers and mails, and to tow the vessel back to Southampton. The Ripon was an untried vessel, not having made an experimental trip, as is customary with new steam-vessels.



THE BOATSWAIN MAKING FAST THE RUDDER OF THE "RIPON" STEAMER.

During the gale, the boatswain, James Grant, after the rudder had given way, descended in the manner shown in our Engraving, from a sketch by a passenger, and made fast the chains to the rudder. He volunteered this dangerous service, and accomplished it, though the heavy sea broke over him several times. Thus, the vessel was steered by the capstan on the quarter-deck. Throughout the storm, the crew behaved with great steadiness; nor were their services overlooked by the passengers, who most considerately subscribed £50, to be divided amongst them.

Will of the Late Major-General Sir R. H. Dick, K.C.B. The will of this gallant officer, who was killed at the battle of Sobraon, was proved in London on the 14th inst. Sir Robert had made his will at Arthurstone, on the 21st of March, 1831, by which he devises to his eldest son, William Dick, all lands and estates in the barony of Mullymet, as well as real and heritable property belonging to him in Great Britain and Ireland; and leaves to his son, James Abercromby Dick, and to his daughter Rose, £1500 each, which, together with the property settled on the children of his marriage, will make £4000 sterling to each of his younger children, and to his said daughter he leaves the jewels and trinkets which belonged to her mother. The remainder of his personal estate he leaves to his eldest son, William. The executors are his brothers, Abercromby Dick, Esq., of Calcutta, a member of the Civil Service, and one of the Judges of the Sudder Dewany Adawlut, and William Fleming Dick, Esq.; the latter is the acting executor in England. The personal estate within the province of Canterbury was valued for duty at £3000. The will was first proved in the Supreme Court at Calcutta, on the 9th of June last, Sir Robert having died possessed of property within the provinces of Bengal, Behar, Orissa, and Benares.

The Bey of Tunis.—The Bey of Tunis, Ahmed Pacha Bey, who is shortly to visit Paris, is 40 years of age. He succeeded his father in the Regency of Tunis in Oct., 1837. He is married, but without children. His mother was a Christian. She was taken to Tubarque with the Geneose colony established there, and, being carried to Tunis, she changed her religion, and married Mustapha, Ahmed's father. This woman enjoys in the Regency the utmost consideration, and possesses much influence in the management of affairs. She owes this importance more particularly to the veneration which her son feels for her. The Bey is accompanied in his journey by several personages of his Court, amongst the rest his Kasnadar, a young Greek; his Highness's brother-in-law, and M. Raffa, his interpreter and Councillor of State.

A Heavy Train.—On Tuesday morning one of the longest and most heavily laden goods trains, propelled by a single engine, left the Paddington terminus of the Great Western Railway for Bristol, en route to Exeter. The train consisted of fifty-nine trucks (mostly six-wheeled), loaded with merchandise and cattle. It extended more than a quarter of a mile, and was impelled by the Goliah luggage engine, a powerful locomotive, having six wheels connected, built at Swindon, upon the plan and under the superintendence of Mr. Brunel. The weight of the trucks alone was estimated to be nearly 200 tons, and, with the loading, to nearly 300 tons. It was considered advisable to attach the Harpy passenger engine a-head of the Goliah, when it proceeded with as much ease as an ordinary train.

Lamentable Effects of the Late Gale.—A most fearful storm occurred off the western coast during Thursday and Friday (last week). The loss of life and property has been very great. At Newport the gale burst forth about ten o'clock on Thursday morning from N.W. Late in the evening the brig Charlotte, and the schooner Union, Whitehaven, both bound for Glasgow, were driven from their cables on to the beach, near Poolgwaelod, and became total wrecks. The Martha, of Yarmouth, was a total wreck—captain and mate drowned. A schooner, bound for Southampton, was lost, with all hands, seven in number. The Sir Peregrine, from Bangor for Cork, foundered in shallow water during the hurricane. The crew took to the rigging, and were in that critical position for eight hours, exposed to the full force of the gale ere they were rescued. Eleven heroic fellows manned the life-boat and preserved them. On Friday afternoon a brig and a schooner went ashore at the mouth of the Dovey, and it is feared that several of the seamen have perished. Many fearful wrecks took place near Milford. A barque of full 500 tons burden was wrecked about four miles to the eastward of St. David's Head, and as nothing has been seen of the crew, it is supposed that they have all been lost. A small box has been washed ashore, by which it appears that she is the Buctouch of London, from Archangel. At Swansea, Exmouth, Cardigan, Bideford, and Portland the damage is described to have been of the most lamentable character. At each of these ports many wrecks occurred, some being attended with loss of life. Some parts of the Irish coast, it appears, experienced the gales severely.

INSURRECTION IN PORTUGAL.

Accounts have reached us from Lisbon, to the 16th instant. A letter of that date says:—"Seven decrees are published in this morning's Diario, dismissing from their posts as many civil governors, who had received their appointments from the late Administration: amongst these are the Marquis de Loulé, the Conde de Linhares, Castro Perreira, and the two Castello Brancos. The Diario publishes, on authority, that the Duke de Palmella presented himself at the War-office, on the day before yesterday, and demanded his passports for France. Our communications with Oporto are cut off, and likewise with Coimbra, in consequence of the telegraphs being broken. Some symptoms of disturbance were exhibited in Lisbon yesterday, and the troops were for a while called out. To-day the people are quiet. The Queen's Grenadiers have marched to Cintra, which has lately more than ever shown a disposition to revolt. We know not whether there may not be a rebellion in the province of Minho." There has been a report in Paris that telegraphic despatches had arrived from Madrid, announcing that the Queen of Portugal had been dethroned, and that 30,000 Spanish troops were to march into Portugal under the immediate command of General Narvaez. This report should be received with caution, however; and it is right to state that there is yet no confirmation of the rumour, from any direct source.

According to our latest intelligence from Madrid, the Spanish Government had received unfavourable news from Portugal. Immediately after the arrival of the courier, the bearer of the intelligence, a Cabinet Council was held, which lasted until a late hour in the night of the 20th. Queen Donna Maria was believed to have demanded assistance from Spain, and an armed intervention had accordingly been agreed on by the Spanish Ministry. In the morning of the 21st expresses were sent off to Lisbon, and also to the Captains-General of Andalusia, Salamanca, and Galicia, with orders to march troops to the frontier of Portugal. General Narvaez was spoken of as likely to be invested with the command of the invading army. The Duke de Rianzares had been promoted to the rank of Brigadier.

Accounts from Portugal, to the 13th instant, have been received, through Spal letter from Lisbon, dated the 13th, at four P.M., says:—

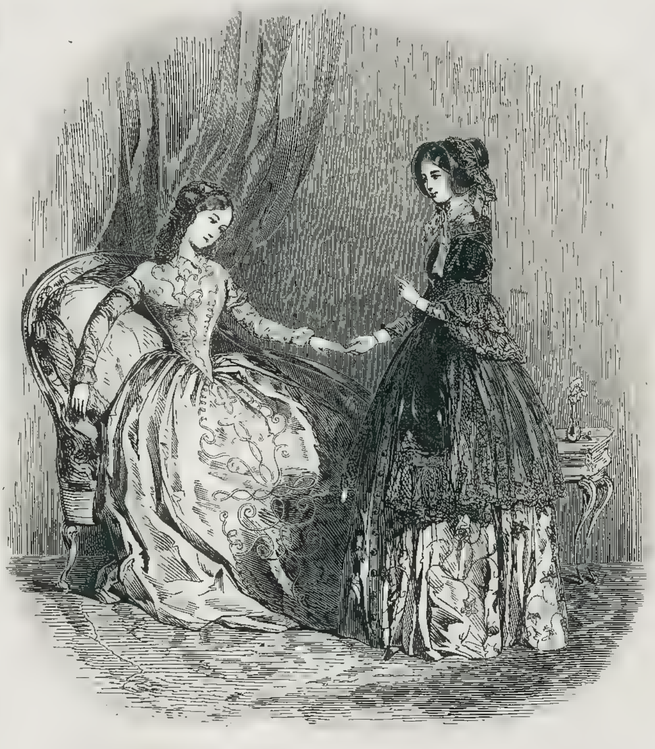
"The Duke of Terceira and those who accompanied him, are prisoners in the Castle of Foz. The Count Das Antas is the President of the Junta of Oporto, which has proclaimed a Regency, and Don Pedro V.

"The Marquis of Loulé, husband of the Infanta Donna Ana de Jesus Maria, is the President of the Junta of Coimbra, which proclaims the same. In the same city four provisional battalions have been organised, which are to unite with the forces of Aveiro and other provinces, and march on the capital.

"All the steamers belonging to the State and the Companies are in the service of the Junta of Oporto.

"On Sunday the refugees were removed from Cascaes, and transferred to the ship Don John VI. The same was done with those of Santarem."

The National says:—"Accounts from Portugal represent the insurrection as making rapid progress. Coimbra and Braga have followed the example of Oporto. The official journal of Lisbon of the 13th publishes a decree, betraying the embarrassments and apprehensions of the Government. The officers and soldiers dismissed in 1842 are recalled into service. Those who comply are promised reward, and those who refuse threatened with being treated as deserters."



PARIS FASHIONS FOR NOVEMBER.

PARIS FASHIONS FOR NOVEMBER.

Our acknowledgements for these portraits and the accompanying details are due to that beautiful Journal, Les Modes Parisiennes. The bonnet, in the promenade costume, is of velvet, trimmed with black lace and roses; the mantelet of dark green velvet, trimmed with black lace; redingote of damson colour, with velvet buttons. The other figure has a coiffure of black lace, and ribbons of brilliant colour; and a silk dress, with designs woven in the material.

(From the "London and Paris Ladies' Magazine of Fashion.")

Black continues to be the favourite colour for walking dresses in velvet, silks, or woollen materials. Damas will be fashionable for soirées as well as the promenade, reps brochés. Plaids and stripes, particularly the carreau royal, reps bluet, taffetas d' Italie, &c., &c., rank among the principal materials for winter toilettes. Double and triple skirts are not so much used, but the trimmings on robes de soirées are very deep in gauze, tulle, or ribbon, rendering the skirt bouffante, increasing rather than lessening the width. Many of the richer materials are made with trains for full dress, a little raised in front, and the corsages with points both before and behind. The caracos, basques, and waistcoat corsages—all that has been attempted to recal the costumes of by-gone days—are now to give place to the Diana style, a kind of tight body confined at the waist and widening on the hips. Embroidery in soutache is superseded by the new gimps of every width, mixed with beads and chenille; the zephyrine is executed in silver, gold, silk, or worsted, and is equally applicable for dresses, coiffures, bonnets, caps, cordeliéres, &c. Ribbon is also very generally used this season; long broad ceintures are much worn, called écharpes; the new ribbons are very elegant, either brocaded or with edges resembling blonde, termed guipure ribbon. For morning wear, the finest cachemires and cloth dresses are worn, the latter with gimp trimmings, the former with flounces festonnés and embroidered; some are with so deep a tuck as to have the effect of a double skirt. Mantes of taffetas d'Italie, lined with sarcenet, the small sleeves slightly wadded, replace the visites of summer; the form is pretty, reaching low behind, with one and sometimes three pélérines. Marquises of satin form short mantelets in front; the sleeves are formed in the material; these are trimmed with a very deep flounce; the Manteau Infanta is, in the Spanish style, of black velvet, with large collar trimmed with rich laces: besides these we have the Roulière, Mouresque, Garrick, and Grecian.

Bonnets have undergone but little change: the form is small, and lace trimmings much in favour; bavolets are added to the winter bonnet; velvet ones are much enlivened by coloured linings; cerise is a favourite mixture with them; the fashionable colours for velvet, or velours épinglé, are myrtle green, violet, blue jacinthe, and black, ornamented with velvet flowers, frequently of the same colour. For children, the gipsy form in beavers is preferred.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"L. M. A."—The solution is as follows: 1. B to Q Kt 6th, 2. R to Q R sq; 3. B to Q R 5th; and 4. R to Q R 3rd.

"W. H. C."—They shall have immediate attention.

"Muff."—You are correct in No. 144, but have failed in the previous one. See the pendant to our Games this week.

"W. T. L.," "A Rugby Tyro," "H. H.," "G. P.," and "J. T. B.," Settle.—Mr. Walker has not yet responded to the "Defi" of Mr. Staunton; but, as the expected match appears to excite the liveliest interest among the Chess-playing community, it is to be hoped no trifling impediments will be permitted to prevent it.

"D. P. G."—The December Number of the "Chess-Player's Chronicle" is usually a double one. You may obtain almost any modern Chess work of Hastings, in Carey-street, Lincoln's-inn.

"J. T. B."—Many thanks for your good wishes. We know nothing of the collection to which you allude.

"Sopracitta."—You have not hit upon the true solution of No. 143.

"W. H. A." The moves are—1. K B P two; 2. P to K Kt 6th; 3. K to Q 4th; 4. Q to K B 7th. Black's moves are all forced.

"G. P.," Liverpool.—Thanks. With your others, they shall be reported on speedily. The solution of No. 63 is correct.

"Red Rook's" position, although a little wanting in originality, is very pretty: we shall find space for it in a week or two.

"J. P. K.," Hillingdon.—Merely a designation for Problems of unusual intricacy.

"V." School.—Tomlinson's "Amusements of Chess."

"J. J. G.," Broad Oak.—They shall now be duly examined.

"A Member of the Plymouth Chess Club."—"A" is perfectly justified in moving his Pawn two steps, although it passes your Pawn; but you have the privilege of taking it with your Pawn in its transit: if you decline doing so, his move stands good.

"Alpha."—Somewhat too simple for our columns. Try again.

"J. B. C."—The solution we gave was Mendheim's own. Your variation of playing the King at the fifth move, instead of taking Black's Knight, certainly appears to gain a move. Henceforth, the Problem should be given as one in seven moves.

"L. K. C.," Hull.—The other shall appear shortly.

"An Old Well-Wisher."—The yearly subscription to the Berlin Chess Journal is only 10s. Apply to Messrs. Williams and Norgate, the Foreign Booksellers.

"Bou Maza." We fully appreciate your courtesy and kind intents, and were sure our frank speaking on the subject of the diagrams would be taken in a proper spirit. As you requested, we have looked attentively at the positions. In that of eleven moves, we find that mate can be effected, by the simplest process imaginable, in four; and, in the one last sent, that the solution, owing to some oversight at the fifth move, is a chaos of error and confusion. With regard to Problem No. 143, we can assure you that you are wrong. There is but one correct solution, and yours is not that one. Try once more.

Solutions by "Omega," "R. H. W.," "N. M.," Middleton, "J'adoube," "J. Rushworth," "D. N.," "G. A. H.," "W. B.," "J. B. P.," "Clio," Carmarthen, "Chesso-Mania," "J. A. G.," "J. W. D.," "P. W.," "Badmanser," "W. H. C.," "Sopracitta," "Bloomfield," "G. H.," "J. B. C.," and "J. F. Weston," are correct. Those by "Caerphilly," "M. S.," Southampton, "Muff," and "W. B. R.," are all wrong.

(a) We like this play. The preceding moves are all "book," but this strikes us as a step beyond the record.

(b) Kt to his 4th is better, according to the authorities.

(c) All White's efforts for some moves to come are centred on winning this Q's Kt.

(d) He would have gained sufficient advantage to decide the game, we believe, if he had now played Q to her R 4th. As the variations arising from this mode of play are interesting we subjoin an abstract,

14. Q to her R 4th — Kt to Q B 5th, or * (The most obvious, but not the best, move.)

15. Q to her Kt 3rd, (winning, at least, "the exchange," since Black must either protect the Kt with Q P or lose it. His playing it back again will not save it.)

(e) Here again, instead of this unavailing abandonment of a choice Pawn, he should have moved his Q to R's 4th.

(f) Q to her B's 2nd would have been very, very much more effectual.

(g) This completely foils White's pretty devices for winning the captive Kt.

(h) We have now to marvel at Mr. Harrwitz's play. He has at this point a Pawn a-head and a position in no way inferior to his opponent's, and yet by two or three inconsiderate moves of this kind he permits his advantage to melt away, and his opponent to come in a winner after all.

(i) It is quite evident that if he exchanged Rooks he could not afterwards take the Kt.

(k) Even here Black might have drawn the game by playing K Rook to K 2nd, but the move in the text is fatal.

(l) Had he moved K R to Kt 4th, Black would have drawn the game ingeniously enough. Can our young players see how?

* 14. Q R P one (best)

15. P takes Q R P. (Better than taking the Kt, because then Black would take Pawn, with P attacking the Queen, and bringing his Q Rook to bear upon the Bishop, which must fall. — Kt to Q B 3rd

16. Q Kt to Q 2nd. Having a Pawn more and a great superiority in position, White might also play Q to her B's 2nd or Q B to R's 3rd instead of bringing out the Q's Kt, and in each case he would have a very fine game.

(a) This opening has never yet had justice done it by the analysers; and the present games may serve, perhaps, in some measure, to supply a deficiency which must have been felt by every one who has searched for information regarding it in the Chess books of the day.

(b) In these, as in the games with Mr. Kieseritzkij, Mr. Horwitz plays very much below his full strength. A move of this description, involving the loss of a clear piece in two or three moves, is deplorable.

Game the Fourth.

14. K R to K sq	Q to her sq (a)	38. Q to her B 3d (ch)	K to Kt 3d
15. Q Kt to Q 2nd	K B P one	39. Q takes Q B P	Q R to Q B sq
16. Q to Q B 2nd	Q Kt to Q 2nd	40. Q to her 5th	K R P one
17. K B to Q 3rd	Q Kt to K B 3rd	41. Q to K 6th (ch)	K to Kt 2d
18. Q B P one	Q B P one	42. P to Kt 5th	P takes P
19. Q B P one	P takes Q B P	43. Q to K 7th (ch)	K R interposes
20. Q P takes P	B to Q B 2nd	44. Q takes Kt P (ch)	K to R sq
21. P takes P	P takes P	45. Kt to B 6th
22. Q Kt to Q B 4th	Q B to R 3rd	Black strikes his colours.
23. Q R to Q sq	Q B takes Kt
24. B takes B	Q to Q Kt sq (b)

(a) This forced retreat of the Queen to her home again, and the undeveloped position of Black's forces, while the opponent's are in active array, show clearly that the line of defence which springs from playing K B to Q B 4th, on the third move, will not do.

(b) Bad as this is, from its keeping the Q's Rook out of play, he appears to have no better move.

(c) Taking the Rook would equally have cost him a Pawn. White would have taken Q B Pawn, and afterwards Q R.

(d) A clever expedient. If White take the Knight, Black retorts by taking the Bishop, thus attacking both Queen and Rook.

(e) The winning move.

 Since the above, two more games of this match have been played, with the following result.—Horwitz, 4; Harrwitz, 2; Drawn 0.

IRELAND.

MEETING AT FERMOY UPON THE SUBJECT OF DISTRESS.

An important meeting took place at Fermoy on Saturday last, to consider the subject of the distress in Ireland. Some resolutions were agreed to, deprecating the course adopted by the Commissioners of Public Works, and stating that it was the duty of the Government to provide food for the people. It was also agreed that a deputation should wait upon the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, to urge the matter upon the consideration of his Excellency.

Mr. O'Connell addressed the assembly upon the topic of distress. He complimented both Sir Robert Peel and Lord John Russell upon what they had done to relieve Ireland, but said some energetic steps must now be taken to mitigate the evil. "If," he said, "Government do not establish depôts, and scatter them in different parts of the country, I announce emphatically my opinion that the people will starve in thousands." Mr. O'Connell, in conclusion, said, "There have been dissertations here upon wages. I don't like to speak of myself, but in reference to the question of wages, I may state that 6d. a day was the ordinary wages when I got into possession of the greater part of my property. I raised it to 8d., and now I have raised it to 1s. (Hear, hear.) Less than that is no subsistence for a man. (Hear, hear.) More I should wish to see him earn. Things are coming to a frightful pass. Don't you authorise me to tell the Lord Lieutenant that the peace of the country is not secure? (Loud cries of 'We do, we do.') Don't you authorise me to tell him that there is actual starvation in the country at this moment—('We do, we do')—and that he will be responsible for human lives in countless numbers if something be not done? (Hear.) I will repeat the echo of your voices to the Lord Lieutenant; I know that he has a generous heart and a noble disposition, and I am of opinion that he will do the best he can for the people. If any attempt be made in England to control him, my reverend friend, Mr. Daley, has suggested what my line of duty will be, to tell Lord John Russell that he shall get no support from the Irish members. ('Hear, hear,' and cheers.) I belong to no party but the people. I ought to be attached to the people. I owe them everything, and they owe me nothing. (No, no.) Let no man mistake me; when I say the people, I do not mean merely the poor man who earns his precarious livelihood with the spade, by the sweat of his brow, or the cottier or the farmer; but everybody, from the highest Peer of the realm to the lowest peasant boy. 'Tis my solemn duty to attend to their interests—to watch over the rights of the landlords, and the interests of the tenant and the labourer, and to do injustice to no man; to secure better prospects for the country, and to devote my heart and soul to the best fulfilment of my duty to you." (Cheers.) The honourable gentleman sat down amid loud and prolonged cheering.

Captain Collis proposed the warm thanks of the meeting to Mr. O'Connell, for his ready co-operation, and for his appearing amongst them on that occasion, at so much personal inconvenience to himself; and also to their other valued county representative, Mr. E. B. Roche.

Dr. O'Neill seconded the resolution, which was carried with acclamation.

The meeting then agreed that Mr. Roche should accompany Mr. O'Connell, when waiting on the Lord-Lieutenant.

An Ignominious Rejection.—At the Repeal Association, on Monday, a sort of remonstrance was presented from the Young Ireland party, the reception of which is thus graphically described by the Dublin Correspondent of the Morning Herald:—"The Chairman: Gentlemen, I have just received this. What shall I do with it? Tom Ray took a glance at its heading, and, muttering something about Young Ireland, handed it to John O'Connell, who peeped at the first page, and cried out, 'Messenger—where is the messenger of the association? Throw this into the Liffey, throw it out.' (Great excitement.) Tom Steele roared out for 'Hanlon,' and the messenger arrived in the midst of a good deal of commotion. Hanlon then seized the document, with as much trepidation as a young cornet would a bomb-shell that had fallen on the mess-table during the regimental repast. The members of the Committee opened right and left, and on the disappearance of 'Hanlon' they breathed freely and audibly. 'Kick it out—kick it out,' exclaimed Pat Costello, and into the Liffey was hurled the 'remonstrance' of the seceded Repealers of the city of Dublin, which bore, apparently, some thousands of names." The week's rent was announced to be £116 3s.

Rioting in Cork.—On Tuesday a body of about 300 starving labourers entered Cork, and created some alarm to the inhabitants. They required to see the Mayor, to represent to him their absolutely starving condition, and were with difficulty kept under control by the police. The bakers, in particular, were not a little apprehensive for the contents of their shops. The mob went to the "Imperial Bakery," which half a dozen of the most prominent entered. The doors of this establishment were immediately besieged by the hundreds that composed this gathering, while the parties inside demanded something to eat, at the same time disclaiming any attempt at violence. A party of policemen, under the command of Head Constable Condon, were in a very short time in attendance, and succeeded, with considerable difficulty, in clearing the shop of its hungry occupants. Fearing that the threats and expressions of three or four individuals would ultimately induce the people to commit outrage and violence, and thereby lead, probably, to the most disastrous consequences, Mr. Condon ordered the apprehension of four individuals of the party. The names of those taken into custody are John Lucey, Jonathan Tanner, Bartholomew Keefe, and John Shean. The apprehension of these parties caused, for the present, the dispersion of the mob that threatened this establishment.

THE MARKETS.

Corn Exchange (Friday).—On the whole the arrivals of English wheat for our market this week have been moderate. To-day the stands were fairly supplied with those left over from Monday, as well as the fresh receipts, owing to which the demand was in a very depressed state, and in some instances, the quotations suffered a decline of 1s per quarter. In free foreign wheat next to nothing was doing, yet the holders refused to accept of lower prices. So little was passing in bonded grain that the rates were nominal. The foreign barley arrived this week being fit for malting purposes, the barley trade was heavy, and the currencies were not supported. There was a steady trade for malt, at extreme figures. Oats, beans, peas, and flour without alteration.

Arrivals.—English: wheat, 3710, barley, 1460, oats, 700. Irish: Wheat, ——; barley, ——; oats, 8930. Foreign: wheat, 3740; barley, 6720, oats, 13,280, flour, 2730 sacks; malt, 890 quarters.

English. Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 55s to 66s; ditto white, 60s to 73s; Norfolk and Suffolk, red 55s to 60s, ditto white, 60s to 68s; rye, 42s to 44s; grinding barley, 36s to 38s, distilling, 39s to 41s; malting ditto, 43s to 49s, Lincoln and Norfolk malt, 68s to 72s; brown ditto, 70s to —s; Kingston and Ware, 70s to 74s, Chevalier, 72s to 74s, Yorkshire and Lincolnshire feed oats, 27s to 30s; potato ditto, 31s to 33s; Youghal and Cork, black, 25s to 25s; ditto white, 28s to 30s; tick beans, new, 40s to 44s, ditto old, 48s to 52s, grey peas, 45s to 46s; maple, 45s to 46s, white, 56s to 60s, boilers, 58s to 61s, per quarter. Town-made flour, 56s to 60s; Suffolk, 48s to 50s, Stockton and Yorkshire, 42s to 50s, per 280 lbs. Foreign.—Free wheat, —s to —s; Dantzig, red, 60s to 70s; ditto white, 64s to 74s per quarter. In Bond.—Barley, —s to —s; oats, new, —s to —s; ditto, feed, —s to —s; and peas, —s to —s per quarter. Flour, American, 34s to 36s; Baltic, —s to —s per barrel.

The Seed Market.—There has been a large business doing in linseed for feeding, some parcels of which have produced 48s per quarter. Cakes, English, are selling at £13 to £13 10s per 1000. In all other articles we have very few sales to report.

Linseed, English, sowing, 55s to 60s, Baltic, crushing, 44s 0d to 48s; Mediterranean and Odessa, 46s to 48s. Hempseed, 38s to 40s per quarter. Coriander, 12s to 16s per cwt. Brown Mustard-seed, 10s to 12s, white ditto, 8s to 9s. Tares, 4s 6d to 6s per bushel. English Rapeseed, £24 to £26 per last of ten quarters. Linseed cakes, English, £13 to £13 10s; ditto, foreign, £8 10s to £10 15s per 1000. Rapeseed cakes, £5 15s to £6 per ton. Canary, 56s to 61s per quarter. English Clover-seed, red, 45s to 50s, extra, 25s to 55s, white, 60s to 62s; extra, up to 68s. Foreign, red, 40s to 48s, extra, 50s; white, 60s to 62s, extra, 75s per cwt.

Bread.—The prices of wheaten bread in the metropolis are from 9½d to 10d; of household ditto, 8d to 9d per 4lb loaf.

Imperial Weekly Average.—Wheat, 60s 10d, barley, 40s 2d, oats, 28s 6d, rye, 39s 0d; beans, 46s 9d; peas, 48s 10d.

The Six Weeks' Average.—Wheat, 56s 0d, barley, 37s 7d; oats, 24s 8d; rye, 36s 2d; beans, 43s 8d; peas, 45s 7d.

Duties on Foreign Corn.—Wheat, 4s 0d; barley, 2s 0d; oats, 1s 6d; rye, 2s 0d; beans, 2s 0d; peas, 2s 0d.

Tea.—Large public sales of this article have been held this week, at which the biddings have ruled inactive, and prices have been with difficulty supported. The stock, in London, is now 32,525,000lbs, against 31,307,000lbs, at the corresponding period in 1845.

Provisions.—Although the importers of foreign butter have submitted to a further decline of from 1s to 2s per cwt, a good business is doing in that article, at 98s to 104s for the best Friesland, and 76s to 94s per cwt, for inferior qualities. Irish butter is a dull sale, and fully 2s per cwt cheaper. Prime Clonmel and Carlow, landed, 97s to 100s; and Cork and Limerick, 94s to 96s per cwt. For forward delivery, next to nothing is doing. English butter, the supply of which is extensive, is a slow inquiry, and prices have a downward tendency. The best Dorset may be quoted at 108s to 112s; inferior to good, 96s to 102s; and Devon, 100s to 104s per cwt. Fresh, 10s to 12s per dozen pounds. The arrivals of new bacon being on the increase, the trade is heavy, at a reduction in value of 2s to 3s per cwt. Prime sizeable Waterford, landed 60s to 66s. A few parcels of Limerick, for delivery in the next three months, have sold at 53s. Bale and tierce middles, 2s lower. Prime small hams are quite as dear; but all other qualities are neglected. Lard is 1s to 2s lower, with a fair demand. In all other kinds of provisions next to nothing is doing.

Hay and Straw.—Meadow Hay, £2 8s to £3 16s; clover ditto, £3 8s to £4 17s; and straw, £1 6s to £1 14s per load.

Coals (Friday).—New Tanfield, 15s 6d; Ord's Redheugh, 16s 3d; Stewart's Hartley, 18s 3d; Wylam, 17s; Adelaide Tees, 20s 9d; Lambton, 21s, and Stewart's, 21s 3d per ton.

Hops (Friday).—Very large supplies of hops are on offer in this market. For the finest qualities, we have to report a steady sale, at full prices; but all other kinds are much neglected. In the duty, very little is doing. It may be called quite £220,000. New Sussex pockets, £3 16s to £4 6s; Weald of Kent ditto, £4 4s to £4 15s; Mid and East Kent ditto, £4 12s to £6 10s per cwt.

Smithfield (Friday).—The supply of beasts on sale, this morning, being extensive, and the attendance of buyers small, the beef trade was in a very depressed state, and, in some instances, to effect sales, the salesmen were compelled to submit to a reduction in Monday's quotations of 2d per 8lb. There were on offer 362 beasts, 540 sheep, and 26 calves from abroad, in fair average condition. The numbers of sheep were small; yet the inquiry for that description of stock was heavy, at barely stationary prices. Calves—the supply of which was by no means large—moved off slowly, at late rates. In pigs, exceedingly little business was transacted, at our quotations. Milch cows were a dull inquiry, at from £16 to £18 each, including their small calf.

Per 8lb. to sink the offals:—Coarse and inferior beasts, 2s 8d to 3s 0d; second quality ditto, 3s 2d to 3s 4d; prime large oxen, 3s 6d to 3s 10d, prime Scots, &c., 4s 0d to 4s 2d, coarse and inferior sheep, 4s 2d to 4s 4d, second quality ditto, 4s 6d to 4s 8d; prime coarse-woolled ditto, 4s 10d to 5s 0d; prime South Down ditto, 5s 2d to 5s 4d; large coarse calves, 3s 8d to 4s 2d; prime small ditto, 4s 4d to 4s 8d, large hogs, 3s 8d to 4s 6d; neat small porkers, 4s 8d to 4s 10d. Suckling calves, 18s to 29s; and quarter old store pigs, 16s to 18s each. Beasts, 1007; cows, 120; sheep, 3480; calves, 222; pigs, 480.

Newgate and Leadenhall (Friday.)—We had a very inactive demand for all kinds of meat, the prices of which had a downward tendency.

Per 8lb. by the carcase:—Inferior beef, 2s 6d to 2s 8d, middling ditto, 2s 10d to 3s 0d; prime large ditto, 3s 2d to 3s 4d; prime small ditto, 3s 6d to 3s 8d; large pork, 3s 6d to 4s 4d, inferior mutton, 3s 8d to 4s 0d, middling ditto, 4s 2d to 4s 4d; prime ditto, 4s 6d to 4s 8d; veal, 3s 6d to 4s 6d; small pork, 4s 6d to 4s 10d.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

Money continues easy in the Discount Market, the leading brokers refusing to give more than 2½ per cent. for large sums, "on the call." No anticipation of scarcity for some time is at all entertained.

The English Funds opened heavily on Monday, and remained stationary during the day, at 94⅝ ¾ for money, and 95 for account. A better market, however, advanced Consols to 95 on Tuesday; and on Wednesday there was more buoyancy, a trifling support having been given to prices by the purchases of the Government broker on account of the Commissioners of the National Debt. On Thursday, however, a reaction of ⅝ per cent. occurred in Consols. In the early part of the day, some leading brokers sold largely, depressing prices about ½ per Cent. Rumours were then circulated that Government meditated an armed interference in Portugal, and this at once depressed the price of Consols to 94⅛. A slight rally has, however, made 94¼ for Money and 94¼ to 94⅜ for Account, the last quotations. Exchequer Bills have also receded to 9s. to 12s. premium, and Bank Stock fell to 204½, but is since rather better. Reduced closes at 93¾; New Three-and-a-Quarter per Cents., 95⅛; Long Annuities, 9⅞.

There was an approach to buoyancy in the Foreign Market at the beginning of the week, the price of Mexican, Spanish, and Portuguese, all showing improvement. The news, however, received from Lisbon on Tuesday, announcing the disturbed state of Portugal, immediately depressed Portuguese to 38 39, being a fall of about 3 per cent. On Thursday it was stated, on the authority of French accounts, that Narvaez, at the head of a Spanish army, was about to enter Portugal, which increased the depression, the last price quoted being 38½ for the Four per Cents. Spanish has also receded; the Five per Cents. from 26¼ to ¾, to 25¾; and the Three per Cents. from 37⅝ to ⅜ to 36⅝. Mexican still continues declining, closing at 22. The bondholders are tired of the continued correspondence and await impatiently the result of the meeting of Congress. Little business has been transacted in the other Foreign Stocks. Belgian closes at 97 for the Four-and-a-Half per Cents. Dutch Two-and-a-Half per Cents., 59½ to ⅝. Four per Cent. Certificates, 92 to 91⅞.

A decided improvement has taken place in the Share Market, arising from the cause stated some weeks since in the Illustrated News, viz., the continued purchases in the established lines, as permanent investments. Scrips have also, in several instances, improved. Caledonians have advanced to 23½, in consequence of a projected alliance between that line, the North Western, and Lancaster and Preston. It is also stated that the Scottish Central is to be leased by the North Western Company, at seven per cent., and this has contributed to improve the value of Aberdeens. Ambergate, Nottingham, and Bostons have receded since last week, notwithstanding a vigorous attempt to force prices. All negociations with the Eastern Counties Company are at an end. Nor can this astonish any one who has attended to the follies perpetrated by the present direction. The arrangement effected with the Nottingham and Grantham Canals is only one of the abundant proofs daily occurring. Attention has been particularly attracted to this scheme, in consequence of various high quotations having been given in certain papers, evidently with a view to mislead and deceive. The Indian lines have receded. The anticipated report from the Committee to the Directors of the East India Company having been postponed, prices at closing were rather flatter from the state of the other markets, and the preparations for account day. The closing quotations are:—Aberdeen, 16; Ambergate, Nottingham, Boston, and Eastern Junction, 3¼; Birmingham and Oxford Junction, 7½; Bristol and Exeter, 9; Caledonian, 23½; Caledonian Halves, 1⅛; Eastern Counties, 22½; Eastern Counties, New, 7⅛ pm.; Eastern Counties Perpetual, 5 per Cent., No. 1, pm.; Eastern Counties Perpetual, No. 2, pm.; Eastern Counties, York Extension, 3⅜, East Lancashire, 17⅝; East Lancashire, New, 8⅝; Edinburgh and Glasgow, 70½; Edinburgh and Glasgow, Halves, 18⅛; Exeter, Yeovil, and Dorchester, 3¼; Great Southern and Western (Ireland), 29¼; Great North of England, New, 61; Great North of England, New, 54⅛, Great North of England, New, 2¼; Great Western, 137; Do., Halves, 80½; Do., Fifths, 30½; Leeds and Bradford, 74; London and Blackwall, New, 5½; London and Brighton, 60; London and Croydon, 21⅞; London and Greenwich, 9⅛; Do., Preference or Privilege, 21½, London and North Western, 20[illegible]; London and North Western, Quarters, [illegible], London & North Western, New Shares, 10½, Do., Fifths, 20; London and York, 2[illegible], Manchester and Leeds, 10½, Ditto Quarters, [illegible], Ditto Extension, 1½ pm; Manchester and Birmingham Quarters, A, 13; Midland Stock, 13[illegible], Newcastle and Berwick, 27⅞; North British, 85⅝; North British, Carlisle Extension, 1½; Oxford, Worcester, and Wolverhampton, 6⅝; Scottish Central, 20¼; South Eastern and Dover, New, No. 2, 13½; Ditto New, No. 4, 2⅝, South Wales, 3⅞, York and Newcastle, 42½; Ditto New, 17¾; York and North Midland, 27, Ditto Extension, 39; Ditto E. and W. Riding Extension, 11½. Dutch Rhenish, [illegible], East Indian, ¾; Namur and Liege, 3½; Northern of France Constituted, 11⅝; Orleans and Bordeaux, 7½; Over Yssel, 2⅛ dis; Paris and Lyons Constituted, 5⅝; Sambre and Meuse, 4¾.

Saturday Morning.—The English Market continued as depressed as on the previous day. Consols closed at 94¼ for Money, and 94⅝ for time. In the Foreign House, Portuguese Four per Cents. were about one per cent. better. The Share Market was well supported, with the exception of the French lines. Ambergate, Nottingham, and Boston were lower, from the reason previously assigned.

"THE PROOF of the TEA is in the DRINKING."—As you pass by Number One St. Paul's Churchyard, ask the tea-merchants to send you a pound of their stout, old fashioned tea at 4s. 6d.; and, after the tea-pot has gone its round, and comes to be again filled with water, then taste, and say if "The proof of the tea is not in the drinking."—P.S. If Number One St. Paul's Churchyard is not in the way for everybody then drop DAKIN and COMPANY a line by post, and they will send this choice tea any distance, by their own vans, within seven miles of St. Paul's.

TROWSERS! TROWSERS!! TROWSERS!!!—A good fit in this garment can seldom be obtained.—R. GRAVES, Fashionable Trowsers Maker and Tailor, 313, High Holborn, after many years' experience and study, is enabled to assert, without fear of contradiction, that he can fit gentlemen with this garment better than any other person in London. The characteristic of his fitting is a gentlemanly style, with perfect ease for stooping, sitting, walking, or riding. A well-assorted stock of the newest designs to select from.—R. GRAVES, 313, High Holborn.

GRAVES' WATERPROOF COBLENTZ. This WINTER OVER COAT has been pronounced, by all that have seen and worn it, to be decidedly the most gentlemanly and most comfortable of any yet produced. The unprecedented patronage which R. G. received last winter, induces him again to offer it to the notice of the Public, relying on its merits for a continuance of that unusually liberal support he then received. The same regard for superiority of Workmanship, Materials, and Moderate Charges will be again observed. 313, High Holborn.

MESSRS. NICOLL, Registered PALETOT Makers, 6th and 7th Vic., cap. 65, and TAILORS to their Royal Highnesses Prince Albert, Prince George of Cambridge, his Grace the Duke of Wellington, &c., respectfully beg to announce that the [illegible] prices are still maintained, and that the Fashionable Winter Over-coat, the Paletot, is made of Llama Cloth, of a substance as suitable for the coming season as that which has been so highly patronised for both its useful qualities and gentlemanly appearance during the late summer months.—To be had only, in London, at 114, Regent-street, and 22, Cornhill; and of the recognised agents in the country

Mr. THOMAS, Surgeon-Dentist, 64, Berners-street, Oxford-street.

FEATHER BEDS PURIFIED by STEAM.—HEAL and SON have just completed the erection of machinery for the PURIFYING of FEATHERS on a new principle, by which the offensive properties of the quill are evaporated and carried off in steam, thereby not only are the impurities of the feather itself entirely removed, but they are rendered quite free from the unpleasant smell of the stove, which all new feathers are subject to that are dressed in the ordinary way.

OLD BEDS redressed by this process are perfectly freed from all impurities; and, by expanding the feathers, the bulk is greatly increased, and consequently the bed rendered much softer.

The following are the present prices of new feathers:—

CHAPTER XV.

It is no longer in a home where Poverty was struggling with appearance, and where taste and refinement were harshly jostled by the stern necessities and realities of existence, that the reader must picture the Cliffords. No; the unequivocal success of the young actress had surrounded her family with every substantial comfort. She had fulfilled a short engagement in Dublin, another in the North of England, and was again acting with the greatest applause at M——, where her genius had first been acknowledged. A pleasant and commodious house had been engaged for a couple of months; and Mrs. Sefton, as well as Susan's mother and sisters, were residing with her. A great change had taken place in Hester. In due proportion, as her mind had seemed to regain something of its long lost power and clearness, the frail body had shrunk and faded. A stranger would have thought her on the brink of the grave. Nevertheless, the intelligence that once again beamed in her face so changed its expression that she looked seven years younger than before; and now it was easy to understand that she had been beautiful. Still the pencil was her chief recreation when she had strength to use it; but her inclination for horrible subjects seemed at last to have departed; and when she did indulge in drawing or painting it was generally to embody some feminine ideal of hope or happiness. And she had witnessed Susan's performance in some of her best characters, and had sketched her in them with wonderful power and fidelity. Precious were these at the time, but to become yet more so as dear memorials of the dead!

One morning a card was delivered to Susan, with an intimation that the bearer of it requested an interview with "Miss Susan Clifford"—for now she was known by her real name. As she recieved the card she grew so pale that Margaret, who was with her, thought she was fainting. But she recovered herself sufficiently to bid the servant "show the gentleman into the drawing-room, and say she would see him in a few minutes." Margaret had flown to her side, and saw in an instant that the card bore the name of "Mr. Frederick Drayton!" The paleness of Susan's cheek gave place to a deep flush, and Margaret could not help exclaiming:—

"Dear Susan, are you right to see him?"

"Quite right," replied her sister; "what is it that you fear?" and her words were accompanied by so arch a look, that it removed all sorts of fear. "And do help me," she added, "to fasten up the plait of my hair—(I must get a stronger comb; the weight of my hair is always pulling it down)—the rest is not much out of curl, is it? Don't laugh, Margaret· I have no wish to look a fright in his eyes, I assure you."

She left her sister very bravely; but, if the truth must be owned, she paused a few moments at the drawing-room door, before she gained courage to turn the lock.

Meanwhile, that drawing-room must be briefly described. It was a small, but elegant apartment. Musical instruments were there, open, as if in daily use; new books and new music were lying near; choice flowers made a pleasant atmosphere in the place, and these were in addition to six or eight bouquets, which seemed to have been hastily thrust into a large plateau of damp sand, and looked exceedingly like some of last evening's floral offerings to the "Juliet." On the table, too, there chanced to be a costly bracelet, a present just arrived from the D——— manager, reposing in its half-open morocco case, and looking almost as well as it would do on the white arm of its mistress. In the card-dish lay the cards of some of the first of the "county-people" who had paid the graceful homage of rank and wealth to Genius; and had he stooped—no one knows if he did—to the reading them, there were three or four notes of congratulation and heartfelt appreciation from admirers of both sexes on the table, left there in neglect, very much as if they were every-day affairs.

Mr. Frederick Drayton's comprehensive mind took in these details almost at a glance; and he thought———to be the husband of a popular actress would be the most delightful thing in the world! Especially as he really had liked her before she was famous. Visions of private boxes for bachelor friends, champagne suppers, and Ascot Races, floated through his mind in charming variety; these broad outlines being filled up with dim shadowings of an ad libitum supply of bank notes. Who has not heard of the girl and her basket of eggs? Now the kick to the basket was just paralleled by Susan turning the handle of the door.

The perfect self-possession of Susan Clifford, and the frigid dignity of manner she assumed, perplexed and embarrassed her visitor to a degree he would hardly have thought possible. Blushes, visible emotion, perhaps tears, he had been quite prepared for; but this—this calm collected deportment, it was like a totally unexpected move to a chess-player and put him out altogether. He stammered forth a few of the expressions he had prepared, but they fell on the ear with an air of burlesque; while Susan's manner was so cleverly assumed, and carried out with such delicate touches, that it would have defied the most keen-witted looker-on, to tell if it were natural or affected. In short it was the very perfection of acting.

When he tried to explain away his treachery, and renew his protestations of admiration and attachment, she appeared almost to forget that he had ever offered such homage before.

"Ah, yes, I remember now," she exclaimed, applying a scent bottle to her nose, and leaning back in her chair with an air of ultra fine-lady-ism. "I remember, it was when I was in London; but I never keep letters of that sort, I always put them in my waste-paper basket."

"For the edification of your servants, I presume?" said Mr. Drayton. He was angry if he had dared to show his wrath.

"If they like," drawled Susan, still busy with the stopper of the scent bottle. "But, really," she continued, "this is great nonsense. You must know there are only two conditions under which I could marry. For rank and wealth, perhaps, I would give up my freedom. To be presented at Court—to have an Opera box on the grand tier—it would be charming! And," she added, in the same languid tone, "to drive four divine greys, like the Duchess of V.—really the temptation might be strong enough."

"And the other condition, under which matrimony would be tolerable—may I enquire, Madam, what that is?"

"Of course, marrying for love. Ah! that would be more charming still. But it is not likely to happen; all the great men I know are married already; and I am sure I could only fall in love with a hero, or a statesman, or a poet, or a painter, or an orator, or ——"

"Or a gentleman;" interrupted Mr. Drayton.

"Why, you have named the rarest creature of all! How many have you seen in your life?"

What reply Mr. Frederick Drayton made to this question of arithmetic is not recorded. He soon brought the interview to a close, but not until he had fervently wished there were some way of vanishing through the floor or walls, without the preparatory step of leave-taking. He had never felt so insignificant in his life; and, for a moment, he absolutely staggered under a doubt of his own general powers of fascination. And—to borrow a term from Art—let us make this period of his extraordinary littleness the vanishing point of his existence from the canvass of this history!

"To think that I ever fancied myself in love with that creature," exclaimed Susan, throwing herself into her sister's arms, and hastening to answer Margaret's eager interrogations. "If I had any doubt upon the subject, I know now that I am perfectly heart-whole. Ah, I did not tell him one truth, though, that—for the present—I am in love only with—my Art!

COLOSSAL MARBLE STATUE OF O'CONNELL, ROYAL EXCHANGE, DUBLIN.

COLOSSAL STATUE OF MR. O'CONNELL.

This magnificent Statue, from the chisel of Mr. Hogan, and lately received from Rome, has just been placed in the circular arch of the Exchange, at Dublin. It is a colossal figure of "The Liberator," upwards of 8 feet high, of the finest Carrara marble, robed like a Roman Tribune, and in the position of haranguing a multitude. The likeness, taken from life, is generally allowed to be admirable; the right arm is extended, whilst the left hand grasps a roll, on which is inscribed "The Repeal of the Union." The head and bust are well set on; the expression of scorn in the compressed lip is truly characteristic of the eloquent orator.

Crowds of persons flocked to see this fine Statue for several days after it was set upon its pedestal; so that it became necessary to station policemen to stay the pressure of the admiring multitude.

No. 236.—Vol. IX.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 7, 1846. [Sixpence.

PAST AND PRESENT.

To refer to the past, for the purpose of comparison with the present, generally ends in painting the first better than it was, and the last worse than it is; because we have lost sight of old evils we suppose they did not exist, while the defects of an existing system are constantly brought under our eyes; there is all the difference in the world between things become matter of History and events that make up our daily experience; and it is a matter for wonder that, if extinct institutions had so much in them that was good, the world should have agreed so generally in getting rid of them. It is marvellous, indeed, to reflect on how that world is governed; the worst systems and most incapable men always contrive to be uppermost; the right men and the best laws are ever sought in the past—or the future. We have had them, but they are gone: by great exertions, we shall find them again; but how are we getting on in the meantime with everything bad, rotten, mismanaged, incapable? To take an instance or two from our own time; Sir Robert Peel was the first man of a great and powerful party; he "built it up," led it, advised it, spoke for it, acted for it, was, in short, the party in himself, and through him it ruled the Empire, and shared the prizes of power—generalships, governorships, livings, bishoprics, seats on the judicial bench; yet, now we are told, and in bitter earnest too, that, all this while, the Leader of this host was really a very inferior sort of man, a kind of middle-class intellect; his oratory common-place—of a superior kind, indeed, but only common-place still; as for his knowledge of men and things, he was blind, misled, cajoled by Cobden; altogether, one wonders, according to the present estimate, how such a man could have made himself influential in a parish vestry, much less in one of the greatest States in the world. Lord John Russell now rules in his stead; what is the estimate of him? Again, according to a great mass of opinion, we have fallen under the sway of a Statesman as unfit for his task as his predecessor. We could fill a whole Number of our Journal with the condemnation that has been poured forth on the Premier, from the Irish journals alone, within the last week. Weak, timid, "unequal to the crisis," hard-hearted, callous to the cries of the people—there is not one fault or failing a Ruler can exhibit, that is not being at the present time exhibited by Lord John Russell, according to these authorities; and yet events, and the voice of Parliament, have given the Realm to his keeping! Again, then, are we under the singular necessity of having our public affairs directed by one wholly unqualified for the duty. Men talk of Pitt and Peel, and make invidious comparisons; in Ireland, Peel is, at this moment, to use a sporting term, the favourite: to be rightly estimated, Statesmen should die, or at least go out of office; they then exhibit

> The virtues that possession would not show us,
> While they were ours.

And as it is with men, so it is with institutions; defects are inherent to all human things; but we forget those that existed at a former time, and are alive only to what we see in operation. It is right that it should be so: to deal actively with the business of daily life is the "prime wisdom," according to Milton. But it is a fault so far to forget the past as to praise it without measure, to hold it up in all things as an example to follow, to regret every departure from it as a change for the worse, to paint it all coleur de rose, and to dip the pencil, when we come to the present, in nothing but tints of darkness and gloom.

Something of this error has been committed by those who without qualification denounce the New Poor-Law System: it was made too rigid and unyielding, with too great a uniformity in its regulations, for a population so varied in its conditions as that of England; and in carrying out this uniform system much needless hardship has been occasioned. This must be admitted; but the cases of abuse, and oppression, and cruelty, that have been brought to light, are instances of gross mismanagement and neglect, which may occur under any system; and we are convinced that under the old Workhouse régime they occurred much more frequently. In the worst cases that have recently occurred—like Andover, for instance—the most unflinching defenders of the offending parties have been the local Boards, composed of men who ought to have known minutely the characters of those they employed.

The spirit of avarice, and what is called "grinding the poor," often flourishes in a local Board, even in such a centre of publicity as the Metropolis; it is with the local authorities, elected by the people, that it rests to suppress these abuses; yet they not unfrequently become the champions of those who perpetrate them! The conduct of some Boards of Guardians in this respect has been incomprehensible; but for this, the ratepayers have the remedy in their own hands, if they choose to exercise it.

Without going into the question of the policy of making all relief conditional on entering the workhouse, which we think a very doubtful one, and now in many cases abandoned as impossible to carry out, yet with respect to the condition of the poor when they have become inmates of the Union House, it will bear comparison in any respect with their state under the old Workhouse system—always provided the Guardians do their duty. If the country could go back for a single month to the old plan, with our present power of exposing its evils, there would be one cry of indignation and disgust throughout the land, to which the Andover tempest would seem a trifle. Cases of neglect, peculation, and cruelty would multiply with frightful rapidity upon us; and as to accommodation, the dirt, indecency, and disorder of the old Workhouses can scarcely be exaggerated. In cities and large towns, the size and arrangement of the Unions had been to some extent anticipated; but in the rural districts and remote places, the Parish Workhouse was generally a wretched den, seldom built for the purpose it was applied to, and used to lodge human beings because it was fit for nothing else. In the first escape from the old system there was too great a disposition to build the new houses with a suspicious resemblance to gaols and places of punishment, which a refuge should not be; but the tendency to soften the working of the Law rapidly extending, has bettered its architecture also. If the moral care of the poor within these edifices should be equal to their material arrangement, of which the reader may judge from our present number, the old system, in this department at least, would bring no improvement, if revived.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE

PARISIANA.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Paris, Wednesday.

There has just recurred another "Journée des Dupes." But it has been very unlike that under Louis XIII., when, the whole Court summoned to witness the [illegible] and departure of Cardinal Richelieu, he remained to know his enemies, to [illegible] their scourge, and wreak his vengeance at leisure, whether through humiliations or by the axe. I allude to the grand dinner just given by the King, to celebrate the sixth anniversary of the present Ministry—on which occasion, M. Guizot and his friends had reckoned (as the proverb says, "without their host") that he would receive the Royal intimation of his being raised to the Presidency of the Council and of that Ministry of which he has long been the dictator. The event had been long predicted, and then announced semi-officially on all sides; and, whether the position of the Minister, or the complete s[illegible] of the present President of Council, was considered, it was thought to be certain. [illegible] that ensued has appeared ominous; and now it is known that even his ductile colleagues are opposed to him, and that the Minister of the Interior, the true descendant of Tanneguy Duchatel, who slew the Duke of Burgundy with his battle-axe, at the parley on the Bridge of Montereau, has long been impatient of M. Guizot's sway, and is heartily inclined to dispose of his leader by a similar blow of the moral sledge-hammer.

On the other hand, M. Molé, both the Nestor and the Ulysses of French politicians, whom I have seen within these few days looking like a giant refreshed, is snuffing up once more the breeze of approaching office, as eagerly as war-horses do those which bear the sounds of a coming fight. At his beautiful seat near Luzarches, Champlatreux, he daily assembles new knots of politicians, who compare notes and devise plans without fear of eavesdroppers. The visits of the most influential statesmen have followed closely and continuously, up to this moment, that of Lord and Lady Normanby, which excited so much sensation. As Champlatreux is on the road from Calais to Paris, M. Molé, hospitably and slyly, intercepts the most noted travellers on their way. I have seen, within a few days, a note from his hand, adroitly urging upon a personage well known for his diplomatic acuteness as well as his rank, that, on his way to Paris, he could not pass so near without resting himself a few hours at Champlatreux. Amongst those thus intercepted was Lord Brougham. The English leaders are most sought after. Notwithstanding all their vapouring, Statesmen and Ministers, as well as the Princes and the King, look towards England for those alliances from which alone enduring power can be derived. Of the distress of his Majesty and M. Guizot at having so completely alienated England, I have myself had recent proofs. The union of England and France, two constitutional countries, is alone possible. At this moment Russia only coquettes with France, and the other powers recoil.

Balzac has conceived the singular notion of republishing his novels under the name of "La Comedie Humaine"—the Human Comedy. This comedy is a very long one, amounting to near seventy volumes. How little it is entitled to so [illegible] every one must know who has read these immoral works, in which bad passions are shown crudely and grossly transparent through the being of [illegible] h some of the heroes are the most detestable of [illegible] desperate [illegible] no baggage, [illegible] M. de [illegible] would outlive the yea[illegible] The bet was accepted, the friend deposited 10,000 francs at a banker's, to answer the possible demand, whilst M. de C—— made a codicil to his will by which he gave to his friend 10,000 francs, provided he died within the year. Thirteen months have now elapsed; M. de C—— is in an exceedingly bad state of health, but he is not dead, and is better now than when he first made the bet. Of course, an epicurean repast and due carousals have celebrated the result.

Three noted characters of the Empire and Restoration have departed this world within a fortnight: Ouvrard, Marshal Bourmont, and Admiral Duperré. A new edition of the "Memoirs" of the first is about to be published, when facts will be stated which were suppressed at the time when you gave an account of his life. That most curious circumstances will come out there is no doubt; for within fifty years he saw everything and knew everybody. Ouvrard was as intimate with the Duke of Wellington to the last, as he was formerly with Louis XVIII., and once with Napoleon and Madame Tallien; and he possessed uncounted millions at a time when every thing was to be bought in France, not excepting justice, and a man's honour, and a woman's integrity, however exalted their rank. Napoleon—whose principle it was that all those who made profits on contracts to the State, were thieves, were compressible commodities themselves, amenable to arbitrary military law—one day sent sixteen men to fetch away the boxes of ingots and dollars Ouvrard kept by him. From that day Ouvrard has never accumulated money; he made fortunes and immediately spent them; keeping up, whilst in prison, as great a state and epicurean luxury, as if he were another Lorenzo de Medicis in his Palace at Florence. In his latter years, having married his daughter, with an immense fortune, to one of the noblest personages in France, and given to his son the finest vintage in the world, the Clos de Vougeot of Burgundy, he flitted from place to place, revolving in his mind all the new commercial resources and speculations of his day, and visiting his old friends and patrons—almost his last hours being spent at the Earl of Lonsdale's, and at Strathfieldsaye with the Duke of Wellington, who delighted in the recital of his mishaps and misadventures. As to Marshal Bourmont, he was never highly esteemed; such is the military feeling, even amongst civilians, that a General Officer who waits until the hour of battle to leave his command, and go over to the adverse side, as he did at Waterloo, however goo[illegible] embraces, must forfeit confidence and respect. For a celebrated officer, [illegible] been made a General, whilst covered with blood, on the field of a well-fought battle, by Napoleon himself, and who had been made a Marshal of France for the Conquest of Algiers, he was the most insignificant personage to look at, and his voice and manner were as puny as himself. I remember playi[illegible] session of games at whist with him for a whole evening, in company with Charle[illegible] English gentleman; and the whole time, the latter [illegible] Abbé. He has bequeathed to France, [illegible] ters, an immense cemetery, where everythi[illegible] is buried blood and money; and the morals of the Army utterly corrupted, until the young men who have been dragged from the plough by the Military Conscription, return to their fathers' homestead, after their term of service, to uproot and demoralise all they touch.

It would seem from the latest Paris papers, that some consequence is attached to the question whether Parliament is or is not to meet at an earlier period than usual. The excitement about the Montpensier marriage is abated, and the affairs of Mexico appear to create the chief interest of the politicians of the capital. The King of the Belgians has left Paris for Belgium.

The Paris papers mention that when the Duke and Duchess de Montpensier were at Bayonne, on their way to Paris, a grand ball was given by the town at the theatre, the pit of which was boarded over, and formed with the stage a most splendid saloon; it was lighted up with a profusion of chandeliers, and the flags of France and Spain hung together in loving fellowship.

At nine o'clock the Duke de Montpensier and his youthful bride entered the ball-room, accompanied by a numerous and brilliant suite, among whom were the Duke de Ahumada, grandee of Spain, M. de Arana, Introducer of Ambassadors at Madrid; Martinez de la Rosa, Spanish Ambassador at Paris; General Urbistondo, Captain-General of the Basque Provinces; General Barnetches, Captain-General of Guipuzcoa; the Ladies of Honour, and the various eminent persons connected with the Government at Bayonne. The whole of the boxes and galleries were filled with elegantly-attired ladies, whilst those who intended to dance formed a double circle round the saloon. The Infanta has a dark colourless complexion, and seems by no means in robust health. She was dressed in white satin, covered with tulle illusion, looped up on each side with long bows of white satin ribbon, having a large diamond in the midst of each bow; she had four elegant bunches of flowers en tablier down the front of her dress, and a wreath of similar flowers in her hair; the sleeves were also looped up with white satin ribbon bows. She wore a profusion of diamonds on her head, neck, and arms, and had a sort of epaulette of diamonds on each shoulder. The effect on the whole was extremely elegant. She seemed to enter with much pleasure into the amusements of the gay scene, and danced no less than seven quadrilles. Her first partner was the Mayor of Bayonne, M. Belasque, and she afterwards honoured with her hand several Spaniards and Frenchmen of eminence. The Duke de Montpensier wore his General's uniform, with the Grand Cross of the Legion of Honour. He had round his neck the beautiful diamond collar of the Golden Fleece presented to him by the Queen of Spain, and wore the sword of Ferdinand VII., which was also a gift from his august sister-in-law. He danced several quadrilles. The Duke and Duchess retired at eleven o'clock, but the ball was kept up till six o'clock next morning.

Accounts have been received of the death of Marshal Bourmont, at his château, in Anjou. The Marshal, who was seventy-three years of age, was surrounded by his family at the moment of his decease.

The Journal des Débats states that on Thursday (last week), being the sixth anniversary of the formation of the present Ministry, the King gave a grand dinner at St. Cloud, at which all the Ministers attended.

The Epoque newspaper, which was started in Paris about a year since, on the joint-stock and half price principle, after spending the whole of its capital in twelve short months, and having attained a circulation of 12,000, was sold on Saturday last as bankrupt property. The nominal purchaser is M. Prosper Deville, the proprietor of Le Droit, an offshoot of the Presse, but the real purchaser is believed to be M. Emile Girardin, the proprietor of the Presse. The purchase price was £8,000 sterling.

The rumoured changes in the Ministry are this week contradicted. Upon this subject, the Constitutionnel says:—"We announced a few days back, as possible, certain changes in the Ministry. On one point we were in error. It appears that the retirement of M. Lacave-Laplagne and the entry of M. Hippolite Passy into the Ministry have not been thought of, but the resignation of Marshal Soult, and the accession of M. Guizot to the Presidentship of the Council, were points decided on. This news is, however, no longer certain, as the Ministry appears to have postponed all idea of change, and particularly as regards M. Guizot."

The Paris papers are again filled with melancholy details respecting the floods in the South of France; but we are glad to find that the Loire is beginning to return to its natural level, throughout the whole of its course. At Nantes, there has been a sensible fall. We learn by the journals of the Haute Loire, that the floods there were caused by a tremendous storm which burst in the valley of the Puy and the Velay, where the damage done is as considerable as on the banks of the two rivers. All communication between the different districts of the department are cut off, and the cross roads in each are impassable. The inundation is not known to have caused any loss of human life in the arrondissement of the Puy, but those of Yssingeaux and Brioude have paid a heavy tribute. At Langeac, three men, two of them fathers of families, perished in endeavouring to save six persons surrounded by the waters, and who had passed a whole night in trees suspended above the abyss. A sergeant of that place, while clearing the bridge, which was shaken and on the point of being carried away, was struck so severely on the head by a splinter of wood, that his life is despaired of. At Tence, a man was drowned in attempting to save a piece of timber brought down by the torrent. At Lavoute, the Allier carried away several houses, two of which belonged to the Baroness Romeuf, who, with her children, her uncle, the Abbe Romeuf, and her servants, were obliged to make their escape out of an upper window by means of a ladder. The roads in the department of the Loire, says a letter from Lyons, are re-established. At Roanne, a bridge of boats has been constructed. At Feurs and Montrond, the bridges are clear. At Andrezieux, the Loire is passed in a boat. In the Bourbonnais, the traffic to Nevers is carried through Decise. Official documents declare that the loss at Roanne alone of houses carried away by the late inundations, amounts to 200, and this number is being daily augmented. Not less than 2000 persons are without food or raiment, and to this amount must be added 60 families belonging to the neighbouring communes. A letter from Cosne, dated the 24th ult., and published in the Province, a journal of Moulins (Allier), contains the following picture of horrors not before mentioned, but which it is to be hoped are greatly exaggerated:—"We have acquired the lamentable certainty that the small town of Saint Firmin, above Briare, containing about 600 souls, has been entirely engulphed, and that the whole population have perished! This horrible news, which was first circulated on the 21st, is this day confirmed by a letter from the President of the Tribunal at Gien, which states that the banks are covered with dead bodies. The inhabitants, surprised in their beds, were unable to find any means of escape. The banks being broken down let in the body of the river at the back of the town, so that these unfortunate beings were completely surrounded by a torrent, which every minute narrowed its inner circle, and at last completely covered them." The little commune of Epercieu-St.-Paul, near Feurs, has lost 42 houses out of 91. Upwards of 40 important domains have been ravaged between Montrond and Feurs, on the banks of the Loire. At Vauchette all the inhabitants of the low grounds were forced to fly, and scarcely had they escaped when their houses were inundated. The water was in general three feet higher than in November, 1790. We learn from Pertius (Vaucluse) that the floods have forced the Durance out of its course, and its waters, driven back by the works at the canal of Marseilles, have formed a new bed on the side of the department of the Rhone. In consequence of the late heavy rain, a large building in course of construction at Marseilles, in the Rue St. Jacques, suddenly fell to the ground on the 28th ult., and buried under its ruins three workmen. Every effort was made on the instant to extricate them from their dreadful position, but ineffectually; as, when reached, they were all dead. Their Majesties and the Royal family have just placed at the disposal of the Minister of Commerce and Agriculture a sum of 120,000 francs, for the use of the sufferers by the inundation, independently of the private succours from the King and the Princes and Princesses, in such of their domains as have suffered by the inundations.

Admiral Duperré, one of the most distinguished officers of the French navy, died on Monday morning, at Paris, of a disease of the spine, from which he had been suffering for some years. He was born at La Rochelle, in 1775, and consequently was in his 72nd year. It is a coincidence worth noticing that he died within a few days of the same time as Marshal Bourmont, whom he joined in making the conquest of Algiers. He was more than once Minister of the Marine.

SPAIN.

A Madrid letter gives an account of an incident which a few days ago happened to Alexandre Dumas, and had nearly led to a tragical result. It will no doubt furnish the novelist with a subject for a startling romance, or at least for a feuilleton. It appears that M. Dumas, who, with his father and a party of friends, eight altogether, went to visit Toledo and Aranjuez, on their way to Andalusia, had a near escape from being robbed, and probably murdered, on the road from Toledo to Aranjuez. The party had left Toledo (where they had been imprudent enough to show that they had a good deal of gold about them) late in the day for Aranjuez, six of them in a coach, and the other two on mules. They had arranged with their mayoral that they should stop at Villa-Major, a village about three leagues from Aranjuez, that night, and they arrived at this village at midnight; but, contrary to what the mayoral had promised, they were told that they could not have beds there, and must go on to Aranjuez. They observed a number of suspicious-looking people in the inn, and that the mayoral talked aside with one of them; but, after some discussion, they proceeded on their journey, those who had come on mules from Toledo proceeding on foot, and each with his gun, whilst those in the carriage were fortunately all armed. They had just set out, and the pedestrians had got a little in advance of the carriage, when they heard a loud cry, which was repeated a second time, and they heard their own names called on; and, on hastening back, they saw the carriage overturned, and their companions getting out, some bruised, but fortunately not severely hurt; and, at that moment, a party of six armed men presented themselves, but, seeing the Frenchmen all armed and prepared to receive them, they made off. Their intentions were evident enough. They did not offer to assist the travellers, though the carriage was broken to pieces; and there is no doubt that the thing was planned with the mayoral, who went off without asking for fourteen dollars which they owed him, leaving them to manage for themselves, which they did by taking the mules from the carriage, and proceeding on them to Aranjuez, where the police authorities at once commenced an investigation of the affair.

There was some rioting at Saragossa on the 25th ult. Several shots had been fired by the rioters on the troops, but it does not appear that any were either killed or wounded. Twenty-four persons were arrested, and sixty stand of arms captured. Some cries of "Viva Espartero!" and "Down with the tributary system!" were heard; and the Political Chief, in his report to the Minister of the Interior, says that the revolters intended to proclaim the Constitution of 1837. Order was, however, completely restored on the succeeding day. The decree for the dissolution of the Cortes has been published at Madrid.

PORTUGAL.—PROGRESS OF THE INSURRECTION.

The Peninsula Mails have arrived with letters from Lisbon to the 30th ult. They state that the Count das Antas has left Oporto in charge of the 3rd Infantry and about 2000 volunteers, and has moved on to Coimbra with the rest of the regular troops—viz., the 2nd, 6th, 7th Infantry, 2nd, 3rd, and 9th Bacadores, about 800 deserters from various other corps, a small force of cavalry, and nine field pieces. The popular forces assembled at Coimbra are said to be three battalions of volunteers and a swarm of guerillas.

Viscount Vinhaes, with the troops in Tras-os-Montes (about 1500 strong), have declared for the Queen. The Diario states, from private sources, that they are marching against Oporto. The friends of the "movement" assert that, on the contrary, they are so surrounded and hemmed in by the armed peasantry that they dare not budge a step. Viscount Sa da Bandeira has been sent from Coimbra to take command of the popular forces at Oporto.

Colonel Salazar, with the force from Elvas, approached Evora on the 24th, but found the insurgents so strongly intrenched that he did not venture to attack them; instead of doing which, he sent back to Elvas to ask for more artillery. For this rather doubtful conduct he has been superseded in his command by General Schwalbach, a German who has been long in the Portuguese service.

The half Miguelite, half Radical, movement at Cintra continues unchecked. The insurgents have formed a Junta, at the head of which is M. de Barros, a brother of Viscount Santarem, who was one of Don Miguel's Ministers. They have been joined by a number of military deserters and civilians from this city, whose cry is "Down with the Saldanha Ministry," while that of the peasants is "Viva Don Miguel." The two parties together are said to be about 1500 strong, and if Antas should approach Lisbon will prove a valuable auxiliary to him.

Count Bomfim, late Military Governor of Lisbon, who was under strict surveillance in his own house, has made his escape, and gone off to join the Coimbra people.

The Diario do Governo of Oct. 30, contains several interesting documents, viz.:—

1st. A decree, by which the Queen, at the recommendation of her Ministers, assumes the exercise of absolute power as long as the present rebellion lasts.

2nd. A letter from the Queen to Count das Antas, inviting him to make his submission.

3rd. His answer in the negative.

4th. A decree, depriving Count das Antas, Count de Mello, the Marquis of Loulé, Viscount Sa da Bandeira, and Baron Algodres, of all their titles and honours, for having taken arms against the Government.

The first blood has been drawn by the Queen's troops. General Schwalbach has fallen in with the Algarve insurgents under Celestino, who were approaching to succour Evora, and had routed them, taking 200 prisoners, and killing a great number.

THE WEST INDIES.

The steamer Thames has arrived with the West Indian mails. The papers contain accounts of a very violent hurricane which took place at Havannah, on the 10th and 11th of October. It is stated that nearly eighty men-of-war and merchantmen were wrecked. The hurricane commenced in the evening, and continued to increase in fury until it reached its climax on the following day. The damage done is immense, both on the water and on shore. A considerable portion of the city lies in ruins.

Among the passengers brought by the Thames is General Paredes, the ex-President of Mexico.

The news from the West India Islands is of no great moment. The crops are looking extremely favourable, and promise abundantly. In Jamaica, heavy rains had fallen; much more, in fact, than had been experienced for many years. Several gales had been experienced, but no great damage had arisen.

THE SIEGE OF MONTEREY.

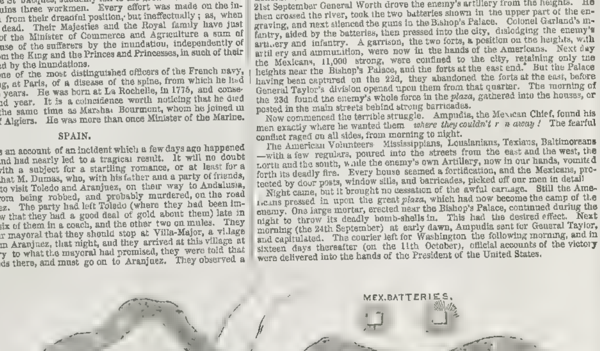
In the greater portion of our edition of last week's Illustrated London News, we gave the important intelligence of the surrender of the city of Monterey to General Taylor on the 24th September, after having been defended with some obstinacy for three days. The terms granted to General Ampudia were of the most liberal kind, including an armistice of eight weeks. The New York papers state that this armistice had been annulled at Washington, and an order sent to General Taylor to advance immediately upon Mexico. They add, also, that instructions had been forwarded to General Wool to move on Chihuahua, and for an attack to be made on Tampico.

We annex a plan of the operations from the American Sun, engraved from a hasty sketch furnished by one of the officers. The American Army, 6000 strong, approached from the east (right) on the 20th September. General Taylor ordered the second division, under General Worth, to pass round to the west (left) and take possession of the Saltillo road. The retreat of the Mexicans being thus cut off, General Taylor, with the First Division, menaced the city from the east, while General Worth drove the enemy in from the fortifications in the west. On the 21st September General Worth drove the enemy's artillery from the heights. He then crossed the river, took the two batteries shown in the upper part of the engraving, and next silenced the guns in the Bishop's Palace. Colonel Garland's infantry, aided by the batteries, then pressed into the city, dislodging the enemy's artillery and infantry. A garrison, the two forts, a position on the heights, with artillery and ammunition, were now in the hands of the Americans. Next day the Mexicans, 11,000 strong, were confined to the city, retaining only the heights near the Bishop's Palace, and the forts at the east end. But the Palace having been captured on the 22d, they abandoned the forts at the east, before General Taylor's division opened upon them from that quarter. The morning of the 23d found the enemy's whole force in the plaza, gathered into the houses, or posted in the main streets behind strong barricades.

Now commenced the terrible struggle. Ampudia, the Mexican Chief, found his men exactly where he wanted them—where they couldn't run away! The fearful conflict raged on all sides, from morning to night.

The American Volunteers—Mississippians, Louisianians, Texians, Baltimoreans—with a few regulars, poured into the streets from the east and the west, the north and the south, while the enemy's own Artillery, now in our hands, vomited forth its deadly fire. Every house seemed a fortification, and the Mexicans, protected by door posts, window sills, and barricades, picked off our men in detail.

Night came, but it brought no cessation of the awful carnage. Still the Americans pressed in upon the great plaza, which had now become the camp of the enemy. One large mortar, erected near the Bishop's Palace, continued during the night to throw its deadly bomb-shells in. This had the desired effect. Next morning (the 24th September) at early dawn, Ampudia sent for General Taylor, and capitulated. The courier left for Washington the following morning, and in sixteen days thereafter (on the 11th October), official accounts of the victory were delivered into the hands of the President of the United States.



PLAN OF THE SIEGE OF MONTEREY.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

It's good to be merry and wise. Old Song.

Between the seasons of the turf and the chase there is a brief interval—and that occasion is the present. Hunting, proper, does not set in till November is in its climacteric—that is in the estimate of people of true taste. We heard an individual, indeed, last week, at Newmarket, saying something about the Houghton Meeting being held too late in the year: we listened so long as patience permitted, and, turning away, soliloquised with the poet—"Mantua væ miseræ" no doubt a wretched tailor! No, no, our excellent friend: better be out of the flesh than out of the fashion. Go to the race course—so long as it is comme il faut—though the fog be as thick as Welsh flannel; hunt up to your knees in violets—chase Charley among the cowslips—if so be condition goes cheek by jowl with you. Taking our advice, you surrender to the snob the office of putting the genus pug upon its mettle: foxes never go straight, or, in sporting style, till they've had a few fillips: the first moiety of this present month—so far as relates to fox-hunting—is undeniably in the category Cockney.

This being the case, and the practical operations of the course having closed, with your leave we will ramble through its theories, and amuse ourselves with its speculations. You need not be ashamed of your company: the press is the modern arbiter morum: in the present instance we would be not only your "guide," but your "philosopher and friend" also. The turf has already attained an important place in our national statistics. "Horn, corn, wool, and yarn" no longer form the chief machinery which sets British capital in motion. A vast amount of money is yearly negotiated in the business of horse-racing; whether for good or evil it is not our present affair to canvass. Betting has become of moment enough to call for as regular treatment in the great organs of daily information, as commerce, agriculture, or manufacture. A leading morning journal of Tuesday last announced its intention henceforth to publish exclusive and full accounts of all that is transacted at Tattersall's, and in the provinces, connected with racing; and there is no question but its contemporaries will do the same. The time is ripe for it. Great abuses have been perpetrated with impunity, in consequence of the little notoriety given to the system of traffic on events of the course. Hundreds of thousands change hands during the season upon the various races to which it gives existence. The principle of all bets, unless the contrary be especially stipulated for, is, that they shall be "Play or Pay!" that is, that a man who backs a horse to win, loses, though the horse should not even be brought to the post. By this contrivance, the owner of a good horse has nothing to do but to keep him locked up in the stable, to make sure of netting a good round sum; for the public always back a good public performer. Here is a system by which robbery may be committed ad libitum, and the freebooters be "all honourable men." This is a crying evil, and with this the press must deal summarily. Racing men tell you that unless betting were P. P., it could not be worked at all. For the sake of argument, admit it to be so; still, all contracts have limits as to time; and why should it be otherwise on the turf? A vast deal of the mischief now done by the practice of "scratching" horses, would be avoided were all bets ipso facto void in reference to animals struck out of their engagements within twenty-four hours of the wagers being made. Probably a longer time might be better, but a day ought to be the least space in this statute of limitations. No doubt there would be difficulty in accommodating this rule to the complicated problem of betting round; but here is a monstrous mischief to be got rid of, and we must not stand upon the order of our practice. This, and much beside which has too long been suffered to exist, the opprobium of a great National Sport, will now be set right. Those who adopted the turf as a pastime, have heretofore paid too dearly for their whistles. The ring may be scarce better than those other places consecrated to speculation, not to be named to ears polite: it must be, then, some consolation to those who affect Tattersall's, and eke the like marts of Olympic commerce, to bear in mind that "nullum numen abest, si sit Prudentia."

TATTERSALL'S.

Monday.—A very bad settling on the last day's racing at Newmarket acted as anything but a check on speculation, a great number of horses having been backed for the Derby at the undermentioned prices:—

Thursday. Very little was done towards closing the numerous heavy accounts that stood over from Monday, or to soften the angry feeling against parties who backed horses by commission, and left their proxies to find the "wherewithal." Speculation, of course, was in a small way; enough business, however, was done to admit of the following quotation:—

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"A Beginner at Chess."—There is no rule of Chess which prohibits a Pawn taking a Knight.

"Alpha," Maida Hill.—The Laws of Chess, as lately revised by a Committee of the London Club, are published in the "Chess-Player's Chronicle," in Lewis's "First Series of Chess Lessons," and may be found in a little threepenny pamphlet by Cleave, called "The Whole Art of Chess," &c. Every amateur should make himself familiar with these Rules.

"D. T." There are not three sentences in your letter which are readable. If you will put the queries legibly, we will do our best to answer them.

"Amateur," Edinburgh.—The Rules for playing four-handed Chess can be got of Sherwin, Chess Turner, of Queen-street, Lincoln's Inn.

"Anti-Gallican." —Mr. Bryan's Pamphlet on the great Chess Match betwixt England and France can be got either at the Office of the "Chess-Player's Chronicle," or of Hastings, in Carey-street. The price, we believe, is only a shilling.

"C. H. S.," New York.—Received with many thanks—and acknowledged by a private communication as well.

"F. J. C." Your Problem is only adapted to very young capacities, but we shall find a place for it, probably, among the Enigmas.

"C R P"—"Juvenile."—"St. J." There was some talk of Mr. Harrwitz giving a public exhibition of his remarkable powers of playing without the Chess-board, as Philidor did sixty years ago; and we have no doubt it would excite a corresponding degree of interest among the amateurs of Chess. There are hundreds of players in the metropolis who are not members of any Chess Club, and have not the entrée to one, who would gladly pay a trifle to witness so pleasing and extraordinary an effort of memory and abstraction as that of playing two games of Chess at once, without seeing the Chess table. We would suggest Ries's Grand Divan as the most eligible place in all London for such an exhibition, and are sure the spirited proprietor of that fine establishment will do anything in his power to promote the success of it.

"A German." The London Publishers of the "Leipsic Schachzeitung," are Williams and Norgate. This Journal is published on the 1st of every month, and contains original articles on the openings and ends of games—Chess Biography—fine specimens of play by the first living masters—and a series of really beautiful Problems, by MM. Brede and Anderrsen. The Editor is Mr. Hirschbach.

"Sam Slick."—The opening Number of Mr. Stanley's New York Chess Magazine is now before us, and we shall take an early occasion to direct attention to its claims. In the meantime, amateurs desirous of obtaining it should apply to the London Agent, Virtue, of Ivy-lane, Paternoster Row.

"Bou Maza," Paris. It shall be carefully examined. The mistake appears to have originated in the wrong placing of the White King.

"W. P.," Plymouth. We have not got the Number at hand. You should address your communication to the office of the periodical to which you refer.

"An Occasional Reader."—The Problem No. 144 is perfectly correct.

"R. W."—There can be two or more Queens, belonging to White or Black, on the board at once.

"H T L" Your analysis seems to show conclusively that, in Mr. Kuiper's last Problem, mate may be given in four moves, instead of five.

"J T B"—There is no probability of the work in question appearing at present. In the position you give from the Scotch opening, we should take the Pawn with the Queen's Kt.

"Φιλος."—We do not know.

"Broomfield."—It is quite practicable to solve No. 69 in three moves: try once more.

"E."—"Bishop's Gambit." Get Tomlinson's "Amusements in Chess:" the price, we think, is about 4s.

"Titmouse." A note addressed to Mr. Spreckley, the Honorary Secretary of the Liverpool Chess Club, will obtain for you every information respecting it.

"J. W.," Barnstable.—You will find the whole of the games in the match between Messrs. Staunton and St. Amant in Vol. V. of the "Chess-Player's Chronicle." The "Chess-Player's Chronicle" is published in Monthly Numbers by Hurst, of King William-street, Strand, price 1s. The games in question were also published in Germany, by Dr. Carl Meier, of Zurich. Problem No. 144 is correctly printed: see the solution in our last Paper.

"Merman."—Too easy for any but very young practitioners.

Solutions by "H. M., Jun.," "A. B. C.," "Milo," "Chick," "Sopracitta," "J. K.," Ipswich; "Clio," "G. A. H.," "Broomfield," "Red Rook," "P. W.," "Φίλος," "Midge," "Badmansir," "Ohio," "Noll," "F. P. S.," and "Alpha," are correct. Those by "G. W. T." and "N. M." are wrong.

⁂ Any Amateur, within one day's post of Oxford, wishing to play a Game or two of Chess by Correspondence may hear of an Opponent by addressing "G. B. S.," Post-Office, Tetsworth, Oxon.

Solution to Problem, No. 145.

White.	Black.
1. Q takes B (ch)	K to his 4th (a)
2. Q to K B's 6th (ch)	K takes Kt (b)
3. B to K's 3rd (ch)	K takes B (best)

Black surrenders.

(a) This defence is at least original, if it has no other merit.

(b) Better, we think, to have taken off the Kt.

(c) Both players appear to have overlooked the jeopardy of Black's Q B P, which might have been taken with impunity either by Q or R.

(d) Black had apparently omitted to consider the consequences of the adverse Queen's check.

(e) A perilous venture. We should have thought Rook to K Kt square preferable.

(f) He might have gained the Q R P checking; but even then, with due care on Black's part, the game must have been drawn.

(g) [illegible] play is called for here.

(h) This is fatal. Had he played K to Q 7th, White must have been content "to draw."

Game the Sixth.

30. Q takes P (ch)	R interposes
31. R to B 8th (ch)	Resigns

(a) Q's P two steps [illegible]

(b) This is a poor spiritless game. There is hardly a point of interest on either side, from beginning to end.

(c) Black's only chance consisted in keeping up a vigorous assault upon the adverse King. He ought at once to have passed on boldly with his Q Kt's P.

(d) The advance of this Pawn now is unavailing. A few moves farther back it might have done him "[illegible]"

⁂ Since our previous report, a great change has taken place in the relative position of the players. Last week, Mr. Horwitz was two games in advance of his opponent: the score now stands—Harrwitz, 5; Horwitz, 4; Drawn, 0.

Problem No. 146.

This position occurred in actual play at the New York Chess Club in a game between Messrs. Stanley and Schulten.

White, Mr. Stanley, having to play, announced checkmate in five moves.

POLICE.

A PRISONER DIFFIDENT OF GIVING A RESPECTABLE REFERENCE.

At the Mansion-House, on Monday, a well-dressed young man, who stated that his name was Alfred Simpson, was charged with having attempted to pick the pocket of the Rev. Mr. Bird, of Chadwell, in Essex.

The complainant said: Between three and four o'clock, on Saturday, as I was going along the platform of the Blackwall Railway, through the doorway, I felt my pocket pulled, and, on looking round, I saw my coat-pocket pulled out, and the prisoner withdrawing his hand, my purse being, at the same time, in the act of falling down into my pocket. I accused the prisoner of attempting to rob me, which he denied, and he passed on to a railway carriage, into which I followed him. I there renewed my accusation, and he a[illegible] denied the truth of it; and I asked him whether he could satisfy me with a respectable reference or address. After some hesitation, he said that his name was Alfred Simpson, of Newington. I did not think that a satisfactory reference, but he would give no other; and, upon arriving at Blackwall, I gave him into the custody of an officer.

Mr. Robinson (solicitor for the prisoner): Did you see your purse in his hand?—Witness: No, I said nothing of the kind. I saw him withdraw his hand from my pocket, and I felt my purse fall into my pocket.

Mr. Robinson: And you would probably have let him go if he had given you a respectable reference? Witness: Probably that would have been the case; for, from the respectability of his appearance, nobody would have supposed him capable of such an act.

Mr. Robinson. Why did you not give him into custody on the platform of the London terminus?—Witness: Because there was no policeman there.

It will be recollected that it was near this spot that the present Lord Mayor was robbed of his watch and seals on returning from Blackwall, and that at that time a heavy charge was brought that not one policeman was employed there for the protection of the public.

The Lord Mayor: I suppose, prisoner, you can produce some respectable friends?—Mr. Robinson: I beg your Lordship's pardon, but he is not bound to do anything of the kind. It has not been shown that he is a suspected person, or that he went there with intent to commit a felony.

The Lord Mayor: Then I am not to ask him whether he can give a respectable reference?—Mr Robinson: No, my Lord. There is no proof that he was there to commit a robbery.

The Lord Mayor: Why, the prisoner's hand was in the man's pocket. Mr. Robinson: That's nothing. (A laugh.) Mr. Goodman knows that.

Mr Goodman (the chief clerk): That's quite enough to make a person suspected.

The Lord Mayor: I wish to know where the prisoner is to be found. Mr. Robinson: That's a question which your Lordship may ask when he comes before you again. (A laugh.) He is not bound to say under the present circumstances.

Mr. Goodman: Perhaps the Lord Mayor would think proper to make the experiment, by committing the prisoner to Newgate, whether he is not liable to imprisonment for two years, for the attempt to commit a felony.—Mr. Robinson: I never knew that. (Laughter.)—Mr. Goodman: A man was committed from this justice-room last session under similar circumstances, and he was convicted and sentenced to imprisonment for twelve months. I happen to know several instances of the sort.

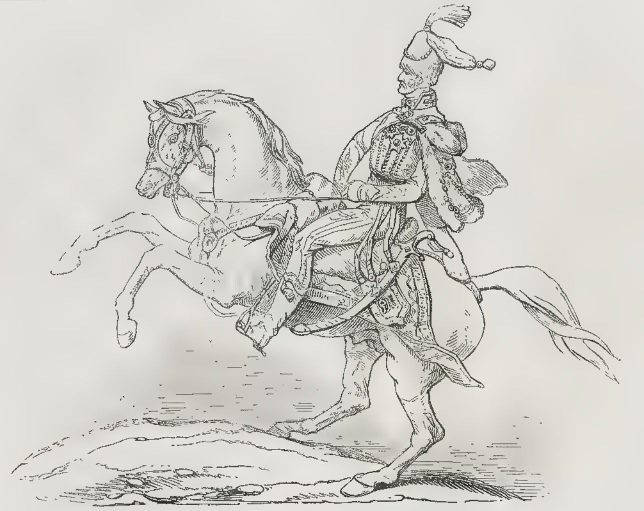
The Lord Mayor: Well, I shall either remand him till to-morrow, that he may give a respectable reference, or I shall send him to prison for fourteen days. Which does he prefer? Mr. Robinson: He prefers the latter, my Lord. (Great laughter.)

The prisoner was then committed for fourteen days.

A Young Woman Charged with Attempting to Strangle her Mother.—Ann Parker, a young woman, was on Tuesday charged at Clerkenwell Police-office, with having attempted to murder her own mother by strangling her. Elizabeth Jennings deposed, that the prisoner lodged in the same room with witness and her mother, who was a washerwoman, at No. 5, Vernon's-buildings, St. Pancras-road. At three o'clock that morning the prisoner came home intoxicated. A quarrel ensued between the prisoner and her mother, when the prisoner seized her by the throat; they struggled together for some time, until the prisoner forced her mother down undermost on the bed, and held her until she was black in the face. Witness separated them, and the mother lay on the bed apparently lifeless. Witness sent for a surgeon, and called in a policeman, who took the prisoner into custody. A surgeon attended, and the mother was restored to her senses. She said (meaning the prisoner), "She did it." (The witness gave her evidence with great reluctance, and was evidently desirous of concealing the truth.)—Haines, 194 S, deposed that at half-past three o'clock he was called in, and he found the mother to all appearance dead, lying on the bed. When she came a little to her senses, he inquired who it was that offered the violence to her? She replied, "She did it," meaning the prisoner. Witness took her into custody. The prisoner said several times, "I did it," and, making use of bad language and threats, exclaimed, "I will do it for all of them, one after the other." He produced a certificate from the surgeon that "Henrietta Parker was lying in a dangerous state, from the effects of violence by strangulation."—Mr. Combe inquired of the witness Jennings whether the marks of violence upon the mother's neck were caused by the prisoner's hands?—Jennings: I can't say whether by the hands or strings of the petticoat.—Mr. Combe asked the prisoner if she wished to say anything to the charge?—Prisoner (sullenly and indifferently): I came home and she was drunk. She began with me, and struck me on the nose first. Mr. Combe: Your mother's life is in danger. This is a serious charge against you. Perhaps she may die. I shall remand you until her fate is known.

Opening of an Homœopathic Hospital.—On Monday a house in Hanover-square was publicly opened for the reception of gratuitous in-patients. There are upwards of 800 out-patients suffering under chronic diseases at present on the books, besides a multiplicity of individuals daily applying for relief. The [illegible] the presidency of the Earl of Wilton, Lord Robert Grosvenor, M.P., the Earl of Shrewsbury, &c. &c.

Accidental Death.—An inquest was held at Reading last week to inquire into the circumstances attending the death of a man named John Allen, who was in the employ of Mr. Henry Knight, at the Crown-street Brewery, in that town. [illegible] Shepherd, a young man also in the employ of Mr. Knight, deposed that about a quarter before three o'clock on Tuesday, in consequence of hearing screams, he went to the place whence the noise proceeded, and found [illegible] struggling in a vessel called the "hop back," containing hot liquid to [illegible] of about eighteen inches, and at a temperature of 190 degrees. He assisted him out, and undressed him. In reply to some questions of the Jury, the witness said that deceased had got nine gallons of liquor to pour into this vessel to cool the wort, and he presumed that in lifting it the stool on which he stood slipped away, and he was thereby precipitated head foremost into the boiling liquid. Remedies were applied, but he died within ten hours of his admission, from the shock to the nervous system. The Jury returned a verdict of "Accidental Death."



STATUETTE OF THE MARQUIS OF ANGLESEY. BY COUNT D'ORSAY.

COUNT D'ORSAY'S STATUETTE OF THE MARQUIS OF ANGLESEY.

From the studio of Count d'Orsay we select the subject of the above Engraving—an Equestrian Statuette of the Marquis of Anglesey, which our readers may remember to have seen in the Exhibition of the Royal Academy. Count d'Orsay had already produced two small statues—those of Napoleon and Wellington : the latter of which was engraved in the Illustrated News. The attitude of both these was that of repose ; and it was in consequence of the recommendations of several of the Count's artistic friends—all of whom passed the highest encomiums on his works—that the above figure was undertaken—the horse being in action.

The Statuette has all the merits of its predecessors. The general coup d'œil, even for so small a subject, is effective and imposing; the nicest attention has been paid to detail ; and the group has the great advantage of presenting a most favourable appearance in whatever aspect it is regarded.

It is to be regretted that the Statuettes of Count d'Orsay are not made more available to moderate purchasers. We should conceive that they would command an extensive sale. The present figures have been cast in bronze, by Messrs. Storr and Mortimer.

STATUE OF THE DUKE OF ORLEANS.

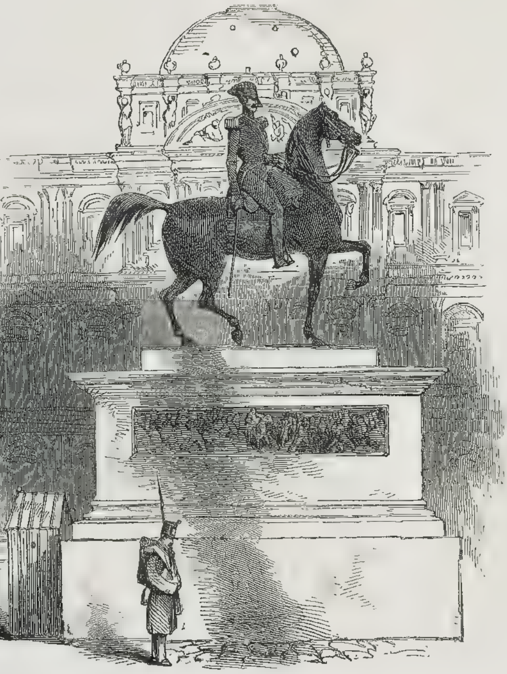
This noble Colossal Equestrian Statue of the late Duke of Orleans is placed in the centre of the Quadrangle of the Louvre, at Paris. It is the work of M. Marochetti, is of bronze, and occupies a marble pedestal. The Duke is habited in the uniform of a Lieutenant-General of the French army; and the portrait is considered one of the best likenesses of this lamented Prince. The action of the horse is remarkably fine; and the Statue, altogether, is considered to be one of Marochetti's most successful productions.

Captain Warner's Long Range.—Colonel Chalmers, Royal Artillery, attended by Captain Warner, has just selected the range of marsh required for the purpose on the east side of the Essex coast, suitable to the occasion, where no danger can arise from such experiments. The Lords of the Treasury have granted the sum of £1500, to defray the expenses consequent upon these trials, which are to take place in the course of a few days, and both the gallant Captain and the Government have unanimously selected Colonel W. Dundas, C.B., Royal Artillery, Inspector of Artillery, to carry out and decide upon the merits of these important experiments. It is stated that his Royal Highness Prince Albert, his Grace the Duke of Wellington, the Master-General of the Ordnance, and a host of the most scientific and distinguished officers will be present on the occasion.

Continental Railways.—The number of railways on the Continent at present in full operation is eighty-three. Of this number, eighteen are in France, the total length being 843¾ miles: in Belgium there are thirteen, forming in point of length between 600 and 700 miles; upon the borders of the Rhine there are eleven railways, making a total in length of 567 miles; in Prussia and the German States there are twenty-four railways, the length of rails being upwards of 1100 miles: in Austria, Bavaria, &c., there are twelve railways, the length being upwards of 860 miles; in Holland, only two, with a length of 96 miles; and in Italy the same number, length 62 miles.

The Weather.—From the extract of the Meteorological Register, kept at the gardens of the Horticultural Society, it appears that the quantity of rain recently was unprecedented for many years past, being no less than 4·92 inches between the 6th October and 3rd November. The barometer had also a wide range, being highest, or 30·260, on October 27, and lowest, or 28·934 inch, on October 11. The thermometer was highest, or 65 deg. F., on October 6, and lowest, or 29 deg. F., on October 29.

Sir Robert Peel.—Sir Robert Peel has been suffering from an attack of gout, at Drayton Manor Staffordshire.



STATUE OF THE LATE DUKE OF ORLEANS, AT PARIS.

GUY FAWKES'S LANTERN.

Below is a faithful representation of the rusty and shattered remains of the Lantern which the notorious Guy Fawkes had, when taken prisoner, November 5th, 1605 ; this interesting memorial being now preserved in a glass-case, in the Bodleian Library, Oxford.

The Lantern is of iron, and is a dark one, as is stated in the Histories of England ; the movement for inclosing the light being precisely the same as in those in use at the present day. As may be seen from the representation, it is extremely dilapidated, the top being broken off, and the bottom lost entirely ; the top, however, squeezed up and broken, is preserved with it in the case, as is also the socket for the candle. The horn or glass which once filled the door is quite gone. On a brass plate affixed to one side of the Lantern, the following Latin inscription is engraved, in script hand :—

"Laterna illa ipse quæ usus est et cum quâ deprehensus Guido Faux in Cryptâ subterraneâ ubi domo Parlamenti difflanda operam dabat.

"Ex dono Rob. Heywood, nuper
"Academia procuratoris,
"Apr 4°, 1641."

And the following is written on a piece of paper, and deposited in the glass-case with the Lantern, along with two or three prints and papers relating to the Powder Plot Conspiracy :—

"The very Lantern that was taken from Guy Fawkes when he was about to blow up the Parliament House. It was given to the University in 1641, according to the inscription on it, by Robert Heywood, Proctor of the University."

Although the Lantern has been so long in the possession of the University, it is only within the last few years that any, the least care has been taken of it, and thus its broken condition is easily accounted for ; and it is, perhaps, even more singular that, although so many Histories of England have been published ,and so much written about Guy Fawkes, that this is the first time a representation of the Lantern has been given to the public.

THE FIVE-SOVEREIGN PIECE.

By the courtesy of Mr. W. Wyon, R.A., Chief Medallist at her Majesty's Mint, we are enabled to present to our readers an outline of the Five-Sovereign Pieces, about to be struck, we hope, for public circulation. This new gold piece very nearly resembles a crown-piece in size and thickness. The design possesses high artistic merit—perhaps higher than had hitherto been reached in our coinage. The obverse bears a profile bust of the Queen, an admirable likeness; and on the reverse is the whole-length figure of her Majesty, as Una, holding the sceptre, with her guardian lion, the emblem of England. The following passages from the "Adventures of Una with the Lyon," in the "Faërie Queene" of Spenser have suggested this exquisite composition :—

Prorogation of Parliament.—Parliament was on Wednesday prorogued by Commission, in the usual form, till Tuesday, the 12th of January next. The proceedings excited very little interest. There was not a single member of the House of Commons present.

Mortality During the Summer Quarter of 1846.—An Official Return has been published of the number of deaths registered in 115 districts of England during the quarter of the present year ending with the month of September. Thirty-four of these districts are in London, and the remainder embrace the principal towns and cities of England. The whole comprise a population of six millions and a half of souls, according to the census of 1841, or, at a moderate estimate, seven millions at the present moment. From this document, it appears that the number of deaths during the quarter, and in the districts alluded to, was above fifty-one thousand, being an increase of more than fifteen thousand upon the corresponding quarter of 1845, and of ten thousand upon what should have been the number, if the mortality had increased uniformly in the ratio of the population since 1838. In London, the increase is 14 per cent. ; in the other 81 districts, 52 per cent., after deducting for increase of population; but in some densely populated towns the mortality has more than doubled. In Birmingham, where the deaths were 694 in 1845, they have risen to 1627 in 1846; in Liverpool and the adjacent district of West Derby, from 2595 to 4090 ; in Manchester and the contiguous districts of Salford and Chorlton, from 2411 to 4248 ; in Sheffield from 445 to 1039 ; in Sunderland, Gateshead, Tynemouth, and Newcastle-on-Tyne, from 1172 to 2313 ; in Brighton, from 219 to 372 ; Oxford, 89 to 194 ; Ipswich, 119 to 240, and so on in many other towns and districts. The deaths in London were 12,402, while in the summer quarter of 1845, they were only 10,842. Of the excess of 1567 deaths, 1303 were from diarrhœa, cholera, and dysentery which proved fatal respectively to 1549, 197, and 75 persons. The average mean-temperature in the metropolis for the quarter was 63.1 ; while, in the corresponding quarter of 1845, it was 57.1.

Murder in France.—The Courrier Français states that a murder was committed with unheard-of audacity on Sunday the 25th ult., at the village of Dunieres, in the Department of the Upper Loire, on the person of M. Teissier, one of the most wealthy and most esteemed proprietors in the Canton of Montfaucon. Towards nine o'clock in the afternoon, whilst the rain was falling in torrents, and a hurricane was raging over the village of Dunieres, a person knocked at the door of M. Teissier, saying that he was a stranger, and that he besought hospitality. M. Teissier, who had retired to rest, was unwilling to open his door ; but his wife having observed that, on such a night, he should not leave a human being exposed to the storm, he opened the door, and was instantly shot dead. His wife, hearing the noise, came to the assistance of her husband, and found only a corpse, whilst she saw the assassin hastening towards the village of Dunieres. The following day the police arrested two of M. Teissier's tenant-farmers, on one of whom was found a pistol recently discharged. The motive of the murder is supposed to be revenge.

THE CHELSEA OUT-PENSIONERS.

On Saturday morning, the four companies of the Woolwich division of the London district of Chelsea Out-Pensioners assembled on the guard mounting parade in front of the Royal Artillery Barracks, for the inspection of Major-General Sir Thomas Downman, C.B. and K.C.H., Commandant of the garrison. The veteran corps received the gallant Commandant with presented arms, the drums and fifes playing "British Grenadiers." They then marched past at slow and quick time, and went through the platoon exercises, under the command of Captain Forbes. The evolutions and firing of the Pensioners were executed with a steadiness and regularity deserving of the highest commendation, and, at the conclusion, they were formed into a square, and addressed by Major-General Sir Thomas Downman in terms of the warmest approbation. On marching back to the North-west square, Captain Forbes addressed the men, and expressed how highly he was pleased with their performances during the day, and general good conduct since they assembled for drill.

We have annexed a specimen of the new uniform of the Pensioners: a double-breasted blue frock-coat, with red collar and cuffs, and two rows of gilt buttons; red epaulettes, edged with brass; trousers, blue cloth, with red stripe; cap, dark blue, with red band, and brass star.

THE LATE FOOD RIOTS IN IRELAND.

Annexed is a pair of melancholy sketches of the localities of the late Food Riots in the south of Ireland—Youghal and Dungarvan; the afflicting details of which have been duly reported in our Journal. The Artist has refrained from heightening the picturesqueness of these scenes; but they are stern and striking realities of the sufferings of the people, and must bespeak the sympathy of every well-regulated mind.

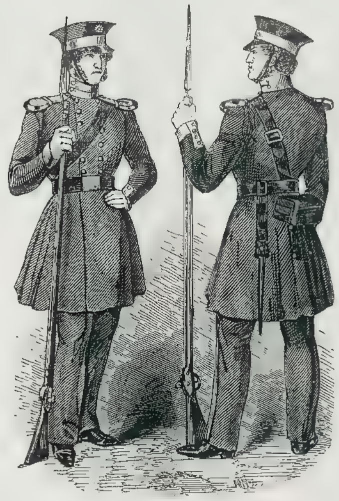
One of the Illustrations shows the Mall and Mall-house, or Town-hall of the seaport of Youghal, which, though merely a creek to Cork, has a considerable trade, for the accommodation of which there are extensive and commodious quays and a Custom-house. The Mall-house was erected in 1779; balls and concerts are held in it, and here, prior to the dissolution of the Corporation, were held the Borough Courts.

Youghal was the grand centre of the late Food Riots and turn-outs for wages. Our Artist was received somewhat roughly whilst he was sketching in the street, because he would not promise the mothers that their children, then working on the part of Government, should have an increase of wages over five or sixpence, which was insufficient to support them with Indian meal at 1s. 8d. per stone.

The Mall-house is a large, plain, whitewashed building: its situation and the open space which surrounds it, are well calculated to attract crowds; as well as from its large rooms affording accommodation to the Relief Committees. To the right is seen a portion of the Harbour, with the distant hills of the county of Waterford.

The other Sketch shows the Old Chapel-road, Dungarvan, on the road to Youghal, the scene of the late conflict between the military and the "food rioters;" one of the men shot was standing on the spot behind the cart in the sketch.

The distress, both in Youghal and Dungarvan, is truly appalling in the streets; for, without entering the houses, the miserable spectacle of haggard looks, crouching attitudes, sunken eyes, and colourless lips and cheeks, unmistakeably bespeaks the sufferings of the people.



CHELSEA OUT-PENSIONERS IN THEIR NEW UNIFORM.

We add a few descriptive notes from a Correspondent:—

"Dungarvan, the scene of the late riots, is the second town in the County of Waterford, and was, from an early period, a place of some, importance. Although well situated for carrying on an extensive trade, large vessels being able to come up to the quay, unfortunately, like other Irish towns equally well placed, it presents to the eye of the stranger, an appearance of want and untidiness: yet the Duke of Devonshire, to whom the manor belongs, has spent much in various improvements—amongst others, a fine bridge has been erected by him across the river, the stone for which was actually all brought from England! This bridge consists of a single arch of 75 feet, in addition to a causeway of about 1000 feet in length, and is justly admired for its fine proportions."

The Quarter Sessions commenced at Dungarvan on Monday week There were prosecutions entered against fifty-one persons, alleged to have been engaged in the late Food Riots in the neighbourhood. Mr. Hatchell, Q.C., was sent down especially by the Crown to prosecute the fifty-one persons alluded to. A farmer named Quinn refused to prosecute some of those poor fellows. He said, "Whatever would be the consequence he never would prosecute hungry people who offered no harm or violence to person or property." Quinn had been sent to Waterford gaol for refusing to prosecute. Fleming, the poor lad that was shot in the knee by the 1st Royals in Dungarvan, on the 28th of September last, died on Tuesday night in the workhouse here, after suffering much pain from the effects of his wound. An inquest was held on the body on Sunday evening. Dr. Christian made a post mortem examination of the body, and a verdict was returned "that the deceased had come by his, death from the effects of a gun-shot wound in the knee, inflicted on him by the 1st Royal Dragoons on the 28th of September last in Dungarvan, whilst in discharge of their duty."

The prisoners stated to be engaged in the Food Riots, arrived at Dungarvan, guarded by a large force of military and police. "Never," says the Cork Southern Reporter, "have I witnessed any scene so affecting as the meeting of the prisoners and their poor hungry wives and children."

On Tuesday, the trial commenced, when fifty of the prisoners pleaded guilty; but through the wise and merciful conduct of the Crown, were discharged, on finding securities to keep the peace; but, the ringleader Patrick Power, was sentenced to twelve months imprisonment, with hard labour.

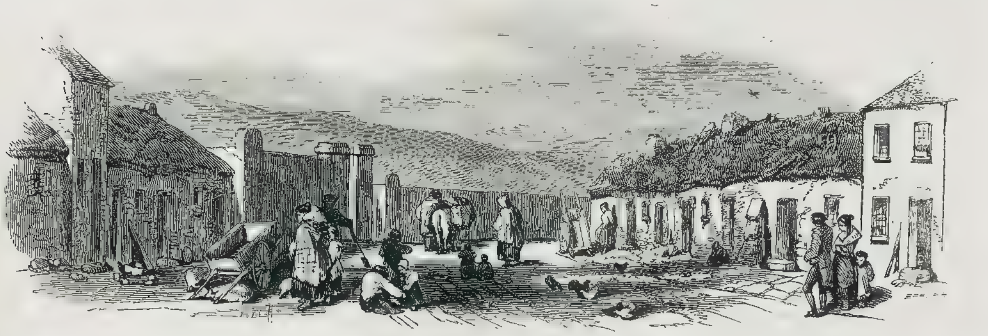
IRELAND.

ADDRESS FROM THE COUNTY OF CORK TO THE LORD-LIEUTENANT.

A few days ago, the deputation appointed at the late meeting at Fermoy, proceeded to Dublin to present to the Lord-Lieutenant the memorial adopted at it, praying that immediate employment and food should be given to the people residing in that district.

Mr. O'Connell briefly addressed his Excellency, and having informed him that the deputation were thoroughly convinced of his paternal anxiety to do everything in his power to save the country from the peril by which it was threatened proceeded to refer to the various topics in the memorial

The Lord-Lieutenant, in answer, informed the deputation that he had personally given the subject much consideration, and said he could assure them that the Government were most anxious to do everything which could be done to ameliorate the condition of the people, by giving them food and employment. They had been most desirous to procure the greatest number of persons that could be got for the purpose of superintending works, and they had secured the services of many qualified persons; but great difficulty was found in England or Ireland in finding such persons, for there were still 300 baronies to be provided for. Every exertion would be made to obtain sufficient assistance. As to the payment of wages weekly, that was a subject much attention had been paid to, and every means would be adopted to carry out the suggestion of the deputation. With regard to the establishment of local depots, the Government were inclined to think that it would be a rather dangerous system to commence; and, as to the purchase of corn, it would be a very difficult matter, as the farmer would object to sell it With reference to the abandonment of task-work, that was a subject which it was thought would also involve considerable difficulty—and he (the Lord Lieutenant was afraid some misapprehension existed with regard to it; the fact was, that the Board of Works were doing their utmost to carry out the act to its fullest extent and would arrange so that the people should be placed at work suitable to their age and strength; and in some cases where money had been paid, and this mistake existed, it was only paid on account, for it was perfectly seen that the ful wages could not be paid until the work was measured. In conclusion, his Excellency promised the deputation that, as far as he was concerned, not a moment should be lost in affording immediate employment wherever it was wanting, and paying for it immediately.



OLD CHAPEL-ROAD, DUNGARVAN, A SCENE OF THE LATE FOOD RIOTS.

THE REPEAL ASSOCIATION.

The meeting on Monday was rather a crowded one, and Mr. O'Connell made a long speech, in the course of which he made some hostile remarks upon Mr. Smith O'Brien.

Mr. O'Connell commenced by saying that he had intended to address them at great length with reference to the Cork resolution, and to discuss in many words the real position of all parties; but he was unable to do so, for his heart was too full, and his mind too much engaged with the misery of the Irish people, who wanted food and employment. (Hear, hear.) He (Mr. O'Connell) could think of nothing else. He was asked, did he know the real state the country was in? His answer was, that he knew her position well—knew her dangers, and could tell the gentry of Ireland and the Government that it was absurd to imagine that six or eight months would see them over their difficulties. He was sorry to pronounce it as his candid opinion that they were but at the commencement of their horrors, and that, if a beneficent Providence did not guide the Government, it was impossible to say what the position of the country might be in twelve months. Famine was almost universal, still he was rejoiced that even out of evil good should come, and that the wretched state of Ireland had been the means of circulating a feeling which never before existed a feeling which he had an opportunity of observing personally in the south of Ireland. (Hear, hear. It was stated that he had not done anything for the country under her present awful position. Now, the fact was, that he was occupied day and night in considering what ought to be done; and, as far as his own district, he thought he had made arrangements which would prevent want at least for some time. (Loud and continued cries of "Hear.") His great anxiety was that the people should know their position, and assist the Board of Works, and say or do nothing which might prevent the officers of that establishment doing their duty. There was no sacrifice he (Mr O'Connell) would not make to render himself useful at such an awful crisis, and he had made some sacrifices. ("Hear," and cheers.) He had left his native mountains to assist the Government to feed the people, and, although in his 72nd year, and requiring rest after a laborious session, he did so cheerfully; and, if he were not as strong and healthy as he had been, it was not to be wondered at at his years, and considering the exertions he had gone through, but, thank God, he believed he was still young enough and healthy enough to see the Parliament restored to College Green. It was perfectly clear that the Earl of Besborough knew the position of Ireland; but he was obliged to say that he thought Lord John Russell's recent letter to the Duke of Leinster equally showed that he knew nothing about her position, for he had written as if he altogether forgot the Union, the horrors of absenteeism, and the state of the country in a commercial point of view. He had been taunted for not suggesting a plan in the Association. Now, he had suggested one in its proper place, in the county which he represented in Parliament ("Hear, hear," and cheers), and had laid it before his Excellency; and he hoped those who approved of it in other parts of the country would follow it up, and show the Government they were in earnest. (Hear, hear.) The country was in a horrible state. It was only a few days back that his son paid £17 for a ton of meal; on the day after he paid £20 for another ton; and, on the next, he could not get one to purchase for love or money, and this was owing to the want of food in the country, and they should enforce on the Government the necessity of procuring it at once. (Cheers.) There was another matter he could not avoid alluding to, and that was the late conduct of the Young Ireland party (hear), and he was happy to say they had openly severed all connexion with the Association, if any existed, by their own act. (Hear) Mr O'Brien, the first who left that hall, and the leader of them, had written a letter to the editor of the Nation, seting up an agitation for himself (cries of "Hear, hear"); and he (Mr. O'Connell) hoped he would be successful in his virtuous inclinations. ("Hear, hear," and laughter.) He proposed that the leaders of the Young Ireland body should join as a phalanx to address the country in the Nation every week. Now, he (Mr. O'Connell) thanked the young gentlemen for the same (hear, hear); they had called themselves a phalanx, and they could, therefore, not blame him if he said they were a phalanx (laughter); and he would wish the phalanx every luck to go on, week after week, until it increased in ardour, and arrived at the bursting-point, when it would fly like a soda-water cork. (Hear, hear.) He blamed Mr. O'Brien for his physical force doctrines, and could not agree with him.

At half-past three o'clock the rent was announced to be £57.

Lord John Russell and the State of Ireland —Lord John Russell has written a long letter to the Duke of Leinster, embodying the views of the Government upon the present crisis. His Lordship expresses his regret that the landlords of Ireland had not commenced useful works on their estates, and thus given employment to the people. The letter proceeds to remark upon the inconvenience of Government interference with the sale of food, and concludes by giving an opinion that, in order to enable Ireland to maintain her position, her agriculture must be greatly improved.

More Provision Riots.—The Tipperary Vindicator states that on Thursday morning (last week), fifty-two drays laden with flour, belonging to the neighbouring millers, whilst proceeding to Shannon Harbour, escorted by the police and a party of the 16th Regiment, under Captain Bolton, were surrounded by a starving multitude, who succeeded in carrying off two of the bags. Were it not for the forbearance of the commanding officer matters might have ended badly. On the account reaching Tipperary, Neal Browne, with a party of soldiers, proceeded to the assistance of the first escort. Mr. Browne was struck with stones. His conduct was not very conciliatory towards the people when he came up with them.—The Nenagh Guardian says that on the previous day, as a car laden with wheaten meal was proceeding to Mr. Naughton's, at Portumna, and when near a place called Rathcabbin, a party, chiefly composed of women and boys, attacked it, and carried away three bags, 60 stone, of the meal. The Dublin papers state that in the King's County hordes of the populace lie in wait for provisions, and, except where guarded by strong escorts, they succeed in becoming their possessors.

More Murders.—Tipperary has been the scene of another awful murder. On Thursday night (last week) Mr. Benjamin J. Cooke, of Galbooly, near Thurles, was shot dead while proceeding from his stable to his dwelling-house. Deceased, who was married, was not more than twenty-three years of age, and was much esteemed in his neighbourhood. He was respectably connected, being a cousin of one of the county members. It is reported that he was about to eject three or four families for non-payment of rent. The Longford Journal says:—"On Thursday night (last week) a party of armed men broke into the house of James M'Carney, under-bailiff to Mr. M'Conkey, of Enchan, in the county of Longford. They first shot him in the bowels, and then beat his brains out with the butts of their guns. The offence lodged against him is that he paid his rent about a fortnight previously." "On Monday night (last week) two ruffians entered the cottage of a respectable farmer, named Thomas Walshe (between Broadford and O'Brien's Bridge), whom they mortally wounded with a pistol-shot through his body." Several other outrages are reported from the counties of Cavan, Longford, and Limerick.

Murder in Longford.—On the night of Thursday (last week), an armed party attacked the dwelling of a man named M'Alarny, the under agent or bailiff on the lands of Acnahan, near Ballinamuck, the property of George Maconchy, Esq., the high-sheriff, entered the house, took him out, and brutally shot him at the door of his house, in the presence of his wife and family. Afterwards they proceeded to the house of Joseph Woods, who acts in the same capacity on the estate of Mr. Cruikshank, fired a shot, and threatened him, if they should return, with death. M'Alarny had served some notices to quit on the day or two preceding.

More Outrages.—Some of the Provincial Irish papers publish long lists of outrages which have occurred in different parts of the country. A letter from Nenagh says:—"On Sunday, between the hours of two and three o'clock, this town was thrown into a state of alarm by the news reaching that Mrs. Finch, of Kilcoleman, was fired at on her way home from divine service. The facts are as follow:—Three ruffians, one armed with a pistol, stopped the coach of Mrs. Finch, about a mile from this town, and one of them presented a pistol at her, whilst the other gave her a threatening notice. They fired a shot, and broke the window of the carriage. They then decamped through the fields, and were followed by a son of Mrs. Finch's herd, who happened to be going to mass at the time. He came up with one of the ruffians crossing a trench, and succeeded in knocking him down, and injured him so that he was unable to proceed any further. He left him to the coachman, who followed close to him, and pursued the others, and succeeded in arresting one other of the ruffians of the town. They were both brought to Nenagh Gaol. Their names are Joseph Spain and John Hogan; the latter was arrested for the murder of Mr. Waller."

COUNTRY NEWS.

Trade in Worcestershire. The glove trade of Worcester has been reduced to a lower ebb during the past month than it has been known to have reached for years. The carpet trade of Kidderminster, which had somewhat revived during the months of August and September, has declined again to so low an ebb that the first houses are now only working four days a week. Altogether, the year 1846 has been the worst in this branch of trade since 1840.

A Confused Affair A mother and daughter being together in Westmoreland, were, a few days ago, brought to bed on the same day, of each a son. In the bustle of the moment both babes were placed in a cradle, and, to the confusion of the mothers, when the youngsters were taken from the cradle, the nurses were unable to tell which was the mother's and which the daughter's son! A matter which, of course, must for ever remain a mystery.

The North British Railway.—Accounts have been received, during the past week, of further dilapidations on the North British Railway. A portion of one of the embankments at Lamberton, where the line approaches within a few yards of the sea, has given way, and the trains have, since then, proceeded only on one line of rails. The embankment began to sink just as a train had passed over it; and, no doubt, the subsidence was hastened by the weight of the train [illegible] on the sandy material, which was saturated with water from the recent rains, and partially undermined by the scouring action of the sea. One of the temporary [illegible] by General Pasley to have been secure, and perfectly [illegible] has also been swept away. But the disasters are not confined to [illegible] many places ruptured by the recent frosts and [illegible], and masses of [illegible] descended, like vast avalanches, on the line, burying the railway, and interrupting the progress of the trains. On Thursday week a train from Edinburgh was on the point of being buried by one of these displacements, the escape being almost miraculous. A large mass of stone, several tons in weight, with a superincumbent mass of loose material, descended suddenly as the train was approaching the place, and the steam was only turned off in time to prevent a fearful catastrophe.—Newcastle Journal.

The Essex Poisonings—The adjourned inquest was again resumed on Saturday last, at the Cock Inn, Maunden, before Mr. C. C. Lewis, the Coroner for Essex, to investigate the deaths of Solomon Taylor, the offspring of Lydia Taylor, and Thomas Newport, farmer, of Clavering. It is, no doubt, in the remembrance of our readers that the woman Sarah Chesham, against whom a verdict of wilful murder was returned for poisoning her own children, was in the first instance detected putting salve or some other deleterious substance into the child's mouth, and upon the charge of attempting to poison, was apprehended and committed to Chelmsford Gaol, when circumstances transpired which led to the discovery of the murders by poison of Sarah Chesham's children. The verdict of the Jury was—"That deceased, Solomon Taylor, died from mesenteric disease of the glands, but whether from natural causes or otherwise there was not sufficient veidence to show."

National Anti-Poor-Law Provident and Benevolent Union.—A Public meeting, convened to promote the objects of this institution, was held on Thursday at the London Tavern, the Right Hon. the Lord Mayor in the chair. Mr. B. B. Cabbell, M.P., one of the chief founders of the institution, detailed the proposed plan to alleviate if not to remove the distress and sufferings which prevail amongst the working classes of the country. The proposed union would consist of three [illegible] friendly societies, building societies, and insurance societies. It was proposed now only to approve of the principle of the plan, and a future meeting would be called for sanctioning and carrying out the details. A resolution approving of the principle was unanimously agreed to.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON ALMANACK.

Just published, price 1s., gilt edges,

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON ALMANACK,
AND PICTURESQUE CALENDAR FOR 1847.

This ALMANACK is submitted to the Public by the Proprietors, with confidence of its superiority over its predecessors. The Work was commenced in 1845, with a view of furnishing a Repository of Useful Knowledge of permanent value, for constant reference, in Astronomy, Astronomical Occurrences, and the Natural History of the Year.

The Astronomical Department has been placed entirely under the superintendence of James Glaisher, Esq., F.R.A.S., and of the Royal Observatory at Greenwich.

On the third page of each month is a series of tableaux of Memorable Events, carrying out in a true spirit what is usually and properly introduced into our Almanack; not for occasional reference only, but to cherish respect for these landmarks of British History.

The fourth page of each month is devoted to Natural History. The whole of this portion is from the very able pen of Mrs. Loudon; and the interesting series of Illustrations to this department has been drawn and engraved by Miss Loudon, under the immediate superintendence of Mrs. Loudon.

The Calendar Illustrations are from the masterly pencil of William Harvey, and engraved in the first style of Art, by Linton; illustrative of the National Sports.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"J. B.," Post-Office, Windsor, is thanked for the details of "the Buckinghamshire's Disaster," but we have not room to engrave them.

"J. B." does not define whether he refers to the Magi, or Guebres, Worshippers of Fire, still numerous in the East; or to the philosophical doctrine of a Central Fire.

"Eusebius," Manchester.—We will see.

"Jutz," Dundee.—Neither.

"A Countryman."—"Aird's Self-Instructing French Grammar." St. Katherine's Docks are in Middlesex.

"A. B. C."—Bedford is one of the neatest towns in England, and is singularly well provided with schools.

"Chivalry."—We have not room for the Portrait.

"M. N.," Peterborough, should order our Latest Edition.

"G. B. H." will find the inscription in question in Jesse's "Windsor and Eton" we cannot spare space to quote it.

"A. B. C.," Harrow.—We do not undertake to decide wagers.

"Capt. ——," Peckham.—"The Patent Journal," No. 89, Chancery-lane.

"Eirenie." Declined.

"C. B." is thanked for the hint, but it reached us too late to be available.

"E. A.," Kennington.—Apply to Mr. Mogg, Map-publisher, Great Russell-street, Covent Garden.

"Merman" may find Mr. Scott Russell's New System of Ship-building described in the Reports of the British Association; or, a letter addressed to Mr. Scott Russell, Society of Arts, Adelphi, may be more satisfactory.

"J. J.," Deptford.—The hours of work depend upon the practice of the trade, with which we are not acquainted.

"E. A. P.," Hull.—The population of the parish of Sheffield is 111,091, of which 68 186 are inhabitants of the town of Sheffield.

"J. M.," Bolton.—The "Illustrated London Almanack for 1845" may be had, by order, of any News-agent. The Almanack for 1847 has just appeared.

"Cribbage."—We cannot recognise Card-playing questions.

"J. G.," Liverpool.—"Justice Shallow," Exeter.—"A Constant Reader," Kennington.—"Rosetta," Ayrshire.—We cannot spare room for replies to your questions.

"R. E.," Clithero.—See the blank verse, by Dickens, in No. 99, Vol. 4, of our Journal

"M. Frichot à Abbeville" should apply to Aubert et Cie., Place de la Bourse à Paris

"Y."—We do not clearly understand the exact point on which information is sought. The accession to a Marquisate, of the Chief of a family, and the assumption by him of the armorial ensigns attached to the title, would not confer the right of using the adopted Arms on a collateral descendant, who was entitled to quarter the original shield. Apply, for the painting, to Mr. Partridge, 122, Great Portland-street, Oxford-street.

"F. R." There are, now-a-days, so many persons seeking employment, that some interest is required to procure even such situations as those our Correspondent refers to.

"Βητα."—According to the Parliamentary Reports, the numerical strength of the British Army is about 120,000: that of the East India Company's forces, about 220 000.

"A Continual Peruser."—The military rank of the husband should not, we think in good taste, be added on the lady's card.

"Verlangen" shall be answered in our next.

"P. B. Z."—The form of address depends entirely on the relative position and the terms of familiarity that exist between the Correspondents. If the letter be written by an inferior (that is, by a person not in the sphere of a lady), this conclusion will do.—"I have the honour to be, most respectfully, your Ladyship's faithful, humble servant." But, if the Correspondent be a gentlewoman, however humble in means and position, "who has always been on intimate terms" with the Peeress, then the subscription may run thus:—"I am, my dear Lady ——, yours very truly."

""Ο Πυνθάνομενος," Chichester, should apply to a Philosophical Instrument Maker.

"A. A. W. K." is correct in his surmise.

"G. W.," Borough.—Mr. Macready was born in London, March, 1793.

"M. G. H.," Cambridge, is thanked for the Sketch.

"A Subscriber from No. 1," Plymouth.—We have not room for the subjects suggested

"H. D."—Apply to Mr. Wells, Bouverie-street, for Box-wood, for Engraving.

"L. M. M." may learn the value of Brass Money by applying to Mr. Webster, 17, Great Russell-street, Covent-garden.

"Louisa Mary."—Phonotypy is Printing according to Sound; and Phonography, Writing by the same rule.

"J. Stirrup."—We cannot recognise wagers.

"W. T. H.," Winton.—The Advertisements will not be liable to duty.

"W. D.," Maidstone.—The work on Gauging most in use is Symons's "Practical Gauger," 7s. On the Slide Rule, see Bateman's "Excise Officer's Manual," 7s 6d.

"Marnis."—We do not know the amount of compensation in question.

"A Constant Reader" should apply for a List of Shareholders in the Southwark Bridge Company to their Office, 10, Queen-street Place, Upper Thames-street.

"A Constant Reader."—Miss Eliza Cook is a native of England.

"C. D."—We cannot give any information as to the work on Artificial Incubation, or its author.

"A. F. T." The number of Vessels in the British Navy was given in the Times, a few months since

"J. R." had better apply to a Solicitor.

"Robert Ganjam"—We do not find Major Bevan's "Field Sports in India" in the London Catalogue of Books does our Correspondent refer to the "Thirty Years in India"?

"H. A.," Canterbury.—The Mail Steam Packets sail for Malta and Alexandria on the 3rd and 20th of every month,

"An Old Subscriber."—Next week, we shall be enabled to give the colouring of Mulready's "Choosing the Wedding Gown."

"F. M. S."—See our last "To Correspondents," for information relative to the Subscriptions for St. Mark's Church, Alexandria.

"J. W. G.," Ramsgate. Tilley, Fire Engineer, 245, Blackfriars-road.

"F. G.," Edinburgh—Nos. 218, 219, 220, and 221 of our Journal.

"J. M. S."—We prefer Murphy's Translation of Tacitus.

"Cork."—Liszt's Pianoforte "Recitals" consisted entirely of pieces played by himself, composed by various writers.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 7, 1846.

The foreign intelligence of the week has furnished a few incidents prominent enough to deserve a passing remark. India is on the whole tranquil; and it is possible the present Governor-General, having sheathed his sword, may retire, to make way for the "best man in Peel's camp;" who, it is said, is to be "drawn out" of it by the offer of this important post; though, as Lord Dalhousie is a civilian, he can hardly discharge the double duties which have been so well performed by Lord Hardinge. There is no knowing, however, what military tendencies may be latent in a man; he may turn out as great an amateur of the trade of war as Lord Ellenborough; though the Railway Department of the Board of Trade is not the most promising school for training an Indian warrior.

Whoever may be at the head of affairs in India should direct his attention to one subject mentioned in the last accounts—the corruptions and cheating of those who supply the army in Scinde with provisions: it appears that the Major Monsoons are at work there on a large scale, robbing the Government and the soldiers with exceeding boldness and impartiality. The question is a very important one; for mismanagement, or something worse, in this particular, is at the root of many of the abuses that make the soldier's life so unpopular. Armies in the field have always been a source of gain to the few who were in the position to trade in their supplies, from the vivandiere on the smallest scale to the great contractors, the Ouvrards of their time; all act in the spirit of ancient Pistol, who rejoiced in the prospect of being "suttler to the camp," because, as he justly anticipated, "profits would accrue." Immense fortunes were made in Spain and Portugal by those on whom our soldiers depended for food; and it is impossible to avoid a suspicion, when we read the history of those campaigns, with all their descriptions of want and privation, that large sums were paid for small and insufficient supplies: the Duke's Despatches are repeatedly urgent and complaining on this head; Napoleon has, we believe, been known to subject a peculating contractor to martial law, and balance accounts between the cheating purveyor and the cheated troops, by the muffled drum and a firing party; the Emperor was not to be trifled with in such things; though he had rather more than a soldier's ordinary indifference as to the lives of his men, when an object was to be gained, yet to starve his troops for the profit of a sordid gang of provision dealers, was no part of his system. Difficulties will always occur, and for those every Commander, nay, even the men themselves, will make every allowance, when explained; but, for direct, flagrant dishonesty, there can be no excuse or palliation. Grain and meat may be dear, and hard to get; but false weights are a shameful abuse in any circumstances, and worse, if possible, in the midst of a British Army, the bulk of which has no remedy against the harpies who plunder it. No one can read such an extract from our Indian intelligence as the following, without grief and shame:—

> Swindling to a most alarming extent is said to have been discovered in those supplying the troops with meat, false weights and improper steelyards having been made use of for the purposes of fraud. The bakers who supplied the bread, again, appear to have been partly paid in grain from the Government stores, higher prices having been charged for this than those current in the market; on both points severe general orders have been issued by Sir C. Napier. It is said that singular countervailing discoveries have been made, so that the parties presently inculpated may prove innocent, and the blame be further forwarded to other shoulders.

Certainly, General Napier is the man to crush this sort of iniquity in the bud, if any one can do it; but the last paragraph intimates that the evil spreads higher than suspected, and may require the aid of the Government of India to support the Commander-in-Chief. Are we retrograding in the matter of official honesty to the days of Warren Hastings? It must be looked to. These are not times in which the condition of the army can be made worse with safety. The necessary risks of climates and casualties are enough, with small pay and pensions that are little else than a mockery, to deter men from the service; but cheating and robbery, and such Old Bailey practices, furnish an item to the calculation that no Government should permit to exist for a moment; they must be at once put down.

From Spain, we hear little but accounts of balls and fêtes, and the giving of snuff-boxes to those who have had a hand in the double marriage. Some of these proceedings are absurd enough, but not more ludicrous than the useless pertinacity with which the French and English journals continue to discuss the propriety of an affair irrevocably settled. The grave citations from the Treaty of Utrecht, and appeals to international law, and formal extracts from the records of the Bourbon family, have now an air of burlesque, when the event they should have prevented and did not, has occurred. If we have been overreached, there is little wisdom in proclaiming the fact to the world with such persevering clamour. It is a pity we are obliged to derive our knowledge of Spanish politics almost exclusively through French sources, or through the English journals, equally coloured, perhaps, by antagonism. There is no independent or trustworthy press in Spain, for most of the Madrid journals are in the pay of France, and those of the provinces are beneath notice. There may be a deep feeling in Spain against the French alliance, but certainly no overt act has shown it. The most violent expression of dislike that can be traced is not among the people against the French, but among the grandees against Christina, and that more on matters of etiquette than principle or morals. Military officers are disgusted at having to mount guard at the door of Munoz as at the Palace, and the nobles are horrified at seeing the daughters of a private soldier sitting on stools the same height as those of the Princesses of the Blood Royal. The real evils the country suffers under—want of trade, roads, and enterprise—are never spoken of; they are nothing in comparison with the height of a stool!

COURT AND HAUT TON.

The Court at Windsor.—On Sunday last her Majesty and Prince Albert the Ladies and Gentlemen of the Court, and the domestic Household, attended Divine Service, in the private chapel. The Hon. and Rev. C. Leslie Courtenay officiated. During the week her Majesty, the Prince, and the Royal children have been out for airings

Windsor, Thursday Evening. (From our own Correspondent.)—Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent visited her Majesty this morning, and remained at the Castle to luncheon. The Duke and Duchess of Bedford took their departure this morning for town. The Royal dinner circle included, in addition to her Majesty's visitors, and the members of the Royal Household in waiting upon the Queen and the Prince Consort, her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, Lady Anna Maria Dawson, the Baroness de Speth, and Colonel Sir George Couper. The following compositions were performed by the band of the 1st Life Guards during the dinner:—March, "Stradella," Flotow; Overture, "Fidelio," Beethoven; Potpourri, No. 1, "Lombardi," Verdi; Quadrille, Scotch, Waddell, Polka, Labitzky. Her Majesty's private band attended the remainder of the evening

The Duke of Wellington.—The Duke of Wellington is expected to remain at Walmer Castle till the middle of the month, when his grace proceeds to Strathfieldsaye for the winter.

Proposed Marriage in High Life.—The Marquis of Ailsa, who has lately succeeded to the title, by the death of his grandfather, will be married on an early day next week, by special licence, to the daughter of Lady Jephson

The Earl of Auckland's Dinner to the Cabinet Ministers The Earl of Auckland gave a dinner to the Cabinet Ministers, on Wednesday evening, at his residence in the Admiralty. The Marquis of Lansdowne arrived in town in the afternoon, from his seat, Bowood Park, Wilts, and joined his colleagues. The Lord Chancellor, Lord John Russell, the Earl of Minto, Sir George Grey, Viscount Palmerston, Earl Grey, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, Sir John Hobhouse, Lord Campbell, Viscount Morpeth, the Earl of Clarendon, and the Marquis of Clanricarde were also present.

Proposed Arrangements of the Court.—The day for the visit of her Majesty and the Prince Consort, to honour the Duke of Norfolk with their presence at Arundel Castle, is now fixed for Tuesday, the 1st day of December. But her Majesty and the Prince will first visit the Isle of Wight again, the Queen being anxious to inspect the progress of some alterations and improvements which she suggested previously to the Court leaving Osborne House on the 26th of September last, and the visit to Arundel Castle will take place on her Majesty's return from thence. On Monday next, the Prince of Wales will have completed his fifth year, and the day will be marked by a larger dinner party at Windsor Castle than ordinary. His Royal Highness and the other juvenile members of the Royal Family, it is supposed, will then accompany the Queen and Prince Consort to the Isle of Wight on Wednesday or Thursday. The return of the Court to Windsor, as at present arranged, will take place on or about the 5th of December, as it is not expected the Queen will extend her visit to Arundel Castle beyond three days

Landing of her Majesty at Guernsey.—We understand that her Majesty was much pleased with Mr. Naftel's picture of the Queen's landing at Guernsey. The artist has received a letter with this gratifying announcement, and stating that the keeper of the privy purse would forward 25 guineas to him. The Queen has also allowed the artist to lithograph the drawing and to dedicate it and other views of Guernsey, to her Majesty. Our readers will recollect that we engraved this picture in No. 227 of our journal.

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

The Commencement of Michaelmas Term.—On Monday, Westminster Hall, and the avenues which lead to it, by mid-day evinced unmistakeable signs that the long vacation had passed away, and that the various Courts were about to wear their wonted aspect. Cabs, containing gentlemen "learned in the law," followed each other in rapid succession to the rendezvous of law; and clerks and cads, loaded with legal paraphernalia, trotted also in shoals, in the same direction. Bustle and animation appeared everywhere. The very officials of the Courts, and the various ticket-porters and hangers on, seemed to have brushed off the rust of the past, and looked fresher than ever; but the counsel, especially those who have something to do, expressed their joy in smiles and jokes. The entrance to the Hall, and the Hall itself, were lined by respectably-dressed ladies and gentlemen, anxious to obtain a sight of the Judges, as they passed on to their respective courts. They arrived at the Hall at half-past one o'clock.

In the Court of Queen's Bench, the Lord Chief Justice, Mr. Justice Coleridge, Mr. Justice Wightman, and Mr. Justice Erle, who has been appointed to that court, took their seats. Mr. Sergeant Talfourd and Mr Sergeant Manning were then invited to take their seats as Queen's Sergeants, and Mr. Sergeant Murphy and Mr. Sergeant Byles, who have received patents of precedence; and Messrs. Humphrey, Bacon, Rolt, and Walpole, of the Equity bar, who have been appointed Queen's Counsel, were called within the bar.

CRIMINAL INFORMATION AGAINST MR. FERRAND, M.P., AT THE INSTANCE OF A POOR-LAW COMMISSIONER.

Sir Frederick Thesiger, being called on to move, said he rose to move for a rule to show cause why a criminal information should not be filed against Mr. Ferrand, at the instance of Mr. George Cornwall Lewis, Poor-law Commissioner, for a libel published of and concerning him in the Times newspaper of 10th of August. The learned counsel then proceeded to state the case of the Keighley Union, which has so often attracted, at the instance of Mr. Ferrand, the attention of Parliament and the Government. That gentleman had stated, in his place in Parliament, in 1842, that great abuses had taken place in the union through the guardians' misconduct, and drew the attention of the Home Secretary, Sir J. Graham, to the subject. The right hon. gentleman communicated with the Board of Poor-law Commissioners at Somerset House, and Mr. Cornwall Lewis deputed Mr. Mott, an Assistant Poor-law Commissioner, to make the necessary inquiries into the case of the poor in the Keighley Union. Mr. Mott made that inquiry on the spot, and he, on the 23rd of April following, made a report to the Poor-law Commissioners, stating that there had been mismanagement of the funds for the maintenance of the poor in the union; that the guardians had exceeded their power, and put the union to great expense by their attempts to keep down wages in that manufacturing district, by the manner in which they distributed relief to the able-bodied poor, and that there was a want of control over their conduct in this respect, which entailed considerable additional expense, and hence the poor-rates were increasing. In effect, that in this manufacturing district the provisions of the Poor-law were evaded, the evils of the old Poor-law revived, and that unless care were taken to correct the present course of proceeding, the evils complained of would increase and be augmented tenfold. Upon this report, which was confirmed by that of Sir John Walsham, another Assistant Poor-law Commissioner, the Commissioners issued a remedial order, which was so disagreeable to Mr. Ferrand, that he gave notice in the house he should move an address to the Crown for the withdrawal of that order made by the Poor-law Commissioners in respect of that union. The committee to which Mr. Mott's report had been referred reported that his statements, though vague, had been borne out. The learned counsel said he should pass over the occurrences that subsequently took place until the appointment of a committee of the House of Commons, last session, to inquire into certain irregularities which had taken place in the Andover Union, when Mr George Cornwall Lewis was summoned to attend and give evidence before it The two cases were altogether distinct, yet Mr. Ferrand, after four years had passed away, thought he saw reason to connect them, and vent his spleen upon Mr. Lewis. There had been a letter of Mr. Ferrand in the Times of the 8th August last, in which he stated that, though ill, he had watched with intense interest the proceedings in the Andover Union case, in a committee of the house; and pledged himself to prove, next session, that the whole proceedings by the Commissioners, in respect to the Keighley Union, in 1842, were a foul conspiracy upon the part of Sir James Graham and Mr. G. Lewis, to crush him (Mr. Ferrand) in the House of Commons. This letter was followed by another on the 10th, of which the learned counsel said he would read extracts to the Court. It commenced thus.

> TO THE EDITOR OF THE "TIMES.
> Sir,—That the Poor-Law Commission has burst like a shell is indeed a great fact
> I will prove that Mr. George Lewis was guilty of the most deliberate falsehood, for the purpose of deceiving the House of Commons, and of rescuing his most confidential friend, Sir James Graham, from the infamy [illegible] am, had been convicted before the Committee of [illegible] erroneous statements in the House of Commons when he denied my charge at Leeds, "That he took steps to procure a report that was false, for the purpose of crushing me in the House of Commons." Upon the Committee it appeared that Mr Lewis was examined as a witness, and with the whole of this evidence the writer found fault, and asserted further, "That nearly the whole of the statements were false, and that Mr Mott received instructions to visit Keighley Union at least two months before my notice appeared on the journals of the House of Commons; that notice, I again repeat, being founded upon Mr Mott's false report of the previous April." The out-door relief order (which the arch Commissioner, Sir James Graham, declared in the House of Commons, on the 27th of June, 1842, was founded upon Mr. Mott's report) is dated the "30th of April," and the notice which I gave in the House of Commons to move an address to the Crown for the withdrawal of an order in regard to the Keighley Union, was given in June or July. It was this very out-door relief order of the 30th of April, 1842, which was founded on Mr Mott's false report of the 13th of the same month.

The writer then proceeds to infer that it was not in consequence of his notice, as stated by Mr. Lewis, that Mr. Mott was sent down to the Keighley Union, and therefore his assertion was false:

> Were a witness at the Old Bailey caught in such a deliberate falsehood as Mr. G. Lewis was guilty of on Tuesday last, he would be packed off in the prison van, and indicted for perjury
> I ask, is there no member of the committee who will move that Mr. G. Lewis be called to the bar of the House of Commons, to receive condign punishment for having deliberately prepared himself to give such scandalously false evidence before a Committee appointed by the House.
> [illegible] be permitted to go unpunished, the proceedings of Committees of the House of Commons will soon be looked on as a mere farce. I am, Sir, yours faithfully,
> Harden Grange, August 7. W. B. FERRAND.

The charge made throughout this correspondence is that Mr. Lewis and Sir James Graham had made use of Mr. Mott's false report to injure the writer, and that they had instructed him to get a partial report for that purpose. Sir Frederick Thesiger said he had affidavits on the part of both the late Secretary of State and Mr. Lewis, stating that such assertions were totally unfounded.

The Lord Chief Justice said the learned counsel might take a rule to show cause.

Right to Recover Railway Deposits.—Wontner v. Sharp.—This case was tried before Mr. Justice Erle, at the Middlesex sittings after Trinity Term, when a verdict passed for the plaintiff. It was an action brought by Mr. Wontner, solicitor, against the defendant, as one of the provisional committeemen of the Direct London and Exeter Railway, to recover the sum of £82 10s, money paid by the plaintiff for sixty shares in the said railway Mr. Fitzherbert on Wednesday moved in the Court of Common Pleas for a rule to show cause why a nonsuit should not be entered, or a verdict for the defendant, pursuant to leave reserved, or, why there should not be a new trial, on the ground of misdirection on the part of the learned judge. It appeared that the company was formed in the month of June, 1845, and that on the 25th September the plaintiff applied for thirty shares. On the 10th October he made an application for a further allotment of thirty shares; and on the following day he received a letter, stating that sixty shares had been appropriated to him. On the 17th October an advertisement appeared, to the effect that the committee had completed the allotment of shares, and that, therefore, they called upon all shareholders to pay the amount of their deposits. On the 22nd Oct. the plaintiff paid his deposit of £82 10s. upon the 60 shares he had obtained; and on the 4th Nov. he signed the parliamentary deed, and received the scrip. On the 15th Dec. a meeting of the shareholders was held at which the plaintiff was present. It was then announced that, out of the 120,000 shares which the scheme required, only 58,000 had been allotted, and it was agreed that steps should forthwith be taken, in order to procure a bill from Parliament. On the 31st of December it was found that the Company could not go to Parliament during the then session, and on the 6th of January the plaintiff commenced his action to recover back the money he had paid, alleging that he had been induced to pay it by a fraudulent representation on the part of the Company. The grounds upon which an application was made for a nonsuit were that there was no proof of money had and received, and no proof that the advertisement which contained the alleged fraudulent representation was circulated for the purpose of inducing the plaintiff to pay the money. The learned Judge, in summing up the case, told the Jury that, if they were of opinion that the advertisement in question contained a false statement, and that that false statement was a material inducement to the plaintiff to part with his money, the verdict must be for the plaintiff on that ground. His Lordship also left it to the Jury to say whether the plaintiff had signed the Parliamentary deed, under the same belief as he had paid the money. The learned Counsel submitted that, upon one or all of the ground he had mentioned, the defendant was entitled to a rule.—The rule was granted.

M. Minasi.—This ingenious yet suffering Artist is, we perceive, again a candidate at the National Benevolent Institution; the election takes place during the present month, and we hope to see this meritorious application, at length, successful.

POSTSCRIPT.

Singular Accident.—On Thursday, a female servant in the employ of Mr. Terry, a linen-draper in Chiswell-street, was carrying a pie-dish in the street, when by some accident she tripped and fell, and her throat was cut by the sharp edges of the broken dish. Dr. Jeffs, of Finsbury-square, who happened to be near at the moment, rendered every assistance, which proved unavailing: the carotid artery and jugular vein had been completely severed, and the poor woman expired in a few moments

Fire and Loss of Life.—Yesterday morning, between the hours of eight and nine o'clock, a fire broke out in the private dwelling-house of Mr. H. Shank, 18, Powell street East, King-square, Clerkenwell, which, besides destroying a deal of property, was attended with fatal consequences to a young man, aged twenty four, a clerk in a mercantile house in the City, named Henry Rigdon. It seems that he returned home between one and two o'clock in the morning, and retired to bed. Nothing was heard of him until six o'clock, at which hour Mr. Shank left home to go to the City. Previous to leaving he states that he distinctly heard Mr. Rigdon coughing, and there can be little doubt from what has since transpired that the unfortunate man was then in the agonies of death. The proprietor of the house, not knowing that anything had happened, went away and left his wife and family asleep in the upper floor of the house. At half-past eight o'clock the neighbours perceived flames issuing from the first-floor back room, in which the young man was sleeping. An instant cry of "Fire!" was raised; but, such a strong hold had the flames already obtained, that they had broken through the door, and were ascending up the staircase with such fury, that Mrs. Shank and her family had the greatest difficulty in effecting an escape. Upon making an inspection of the premises, as soon as the fire was got down, an awful spectacle presented itself. In the first floor back-room, lying on the remains of a bed, was the body of the unfortunate young man Rigdon, burnt almost as black as a coal. The feet were entirely burnt away, and the bones of the leg were protruding through the end of the bed. The other parts of the body were burnt in a most dreadful manner. It is supposed that the fire was caused from a spark having fallen from the deceased's candle into his bed.

More Provision Riots in Ireland.—The Irish papers received yesterday contain the following account of riots in Kinsale:—"The Board of Works having come to the determination of employing the labourers in the barony of Kinsale at task-work in future, an intimation to that effect was given on Saturday evening, when a number of them having refused to work on those terms were discharged On Monday all the men being out of employment assembled from the surrounding country, to the number of about 400, in the town of Kinsale, and not having tasted food during the day, proceeded to visit the bakers' shops in the town, and demand bread. Six of them were visited in this manner, and the owners, to prevent any injury being done to their property, handed the bread out to them, and the famishing labourers then left quietly."

Tragical Affair in Ireland.—The Limerick Reporter of Tuesday gives the following melancholy recital:—"On Sunday morning, Mr. John O'Grady, of Martinstown, near Kilfinane, took away the life of his wife, daughter of Mr. Henry Quinlan, of Ballyneal, near the town of Tipperary, to whom he had been married about six months, and, more awful still, he subsequently slaughtered the servant maid. The circumstances are briefly these: The servant was attracted by some noise to the bedroom of her master and mistress, when to her horror she discovered the latter weltering in her gore from a fatal stab in the neck. She screamed and ran down stairs, when she was pursued by Mr. O'Grady into the stable, where, seizing a pitchfork, he stabbed her in several parts of the body until he killed her. He then left the house, and was not seen till the next day, when he was taken into custody. It is stated by some that he surrendered himself, and by others that he was concealed in an outhouse. As a proof of the determined deliberation with which the deed was committed, it appears that he previously locked the outside of the bed-room of his sister, doubtless to prevent her giving any assistance or raising an alarm. This horrible tragedy appears to be shrouded in a great deal of mystery, and what adds to it is that a short time since the whole family were nearly poisoned by taking arsenic in bread, instead of soda. We say it appears mysterious, for Mr. O'Grady was comfortable, and had no manner of embarrassment, and was very much attached to his wife, living on most affectionate terms with her.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

HER MAJESTY'S APPROVAL OF SIR G. CARROLL AS LORD MAYOR.

On Monday, Sir G. Carroll, the Lord Mayor elect, went to the residence of the Lord Chancellor, to receive her Majesty's most gracious approbation on being elected Lord Mayor for the ensuing year. The Lord Mayor was accompanied by the Recorder, and Aldermen Hooper, Hunter, and Moon, and attended by the Sheriffs, the Remembrancer. &

The Recorder, in introducing the Lord Mayor to the Lord Chancellor, said—"My Lord, I have the honour to present to your Lordship Sir George Carroll, Knt., recently elected by the citizens of London into the office of Lord Mayor for the ensuing year. The laws and charters of London have been strictly observed in the election of this gentleman, and it is in accordance with the custom prescribed by the charter, that I have now the honour to solicit at the hands of your Lordship the gracious approbation of the Crown of the choice the citizens have made. The Lord Mayor elect, as a member of the Stock Exchange, was for more than thirty years engaged in extensive financial operations with the leading capitalists of the City, and enjoyed a well-earned reputation for undeviating integrity in all his dealings After a close attention to business for so many years, Mr. Carroll proposed to himself to retire from the more active scenes of life, and to confine the discharge of his public duties to the requirements of his office as a magistrate for the county of Essex, where he had long resided, was extensively known, and universally respected. But the opinion and earnest solicitation of his friends prevailed with him to change his purpose, and, in 1837, drew him from a temporary retirement to undertake the office of Sheriff of London and Middlesex. This being the year of her Majesty's accession to the Throne, her Majesty, on the 9th of November, vouchsafed to become a guest of the Corporation of London, and to adorn by her Royal presence the banquet prepared in the Guildhall. The honour of knighthood was on that occasion conferred upon the Sheriffs, the present Lord Mayor elect, and Sir Moses Montefiore, since created a Baronet. In 1839 Sir George Carroll was unanimously elected by the inhabitant householders of Candlewick to represent them as an Alderman of London, and by his accession to this new dignity he perfected the legal qualifications of a candidate for the office of Lord Mayor. As a Justice in the commission of the peace for the county of Essex, in the office of Sheriff of London and Middlesex, and as a Magistrate of the City, and Alderman of his Ward, Sir George Carroll has uniformly evinced his sense of loyalty to the Throne, and a zealous regard for the maintenance of the laws, together with the liberties and franchises of his fellow subjects. To these qualities are superadded the claims of a blameless life, and the evidence of a kind and courteous disposition in a constant urbanity of demeanour, which, whilst it derogates nothing from authority, conciliates opinion in enforcing the law. My Lord, on these grounds the citizens of London cherish the hope—I might be excused, perhaps, the expression, if I added the confident expectation—that her Majesty will be graciously pleased to approve of and confirm the advancement of this gentleman, a tried and faithful servant of the Crown and of the Corporation, to the highest station and employment of trust and dignity which our city can bestow—that of our Chief Magistrate, and of her Majesty's Lieutenant within the City."

The Lord Chancellor said he felt high gratification in announcing her Majesty's most gracious approbation of the choice made by the citizens of London of Sir George Carroll as Lord Mayor for the year ensuing. The highly-esteemed character of Sir George Carroll, the knowledge possessed by his fellow citizens of his qualifications for the office, and his zeal and activity as a magistrate, were convincing arguments of his efficiency, and her Majesty believed that in his hands the dignity of the distinguished office would be unimpaired.

Cabinet Council.—A Cabinet Council was held on Monday afternoon, at the Foreign Office. After the Council the Chancellor of the Exchequer left town, accompanied by Lady Mary Wood, on a visit to her Majesty, at Windsor Castle. The Marquis of Lansdowne was absent from the Council, his Lordship being at his seat, Bowood Park, Wilts

Court of Common Council.—At a Court of Common Council on Wednesday, a letter was read from the son of the late Sir Robert Sale, dated Simlah, August 31, acknowledging the arrival of the vase conveying the freedom of the City of London to his lamented father, and stating that his mother had handed it over to him to be preserved as an heir-loom in the family. Sir Robert, it will be recollected, fell at the battle of Moodkee. A letter was also read from Major-General Thackwell, late commanding the cavalry of the army of the Sutlej, acknowledging the receipt of the freedom of the City, voted him by the Corporation. Both letters were ordered to be entered upon the journals. The Court of Common Council also made a grant of £300 to the Society for Improving the Condition of the Labouring Classes, and one of 10 guineas to the Scripture Readers, Association.

Lord Mayor's Day.—It is arranged that the line of the pageant on Monday shall be from Gresham-street, and proceed along Princes-street, King William-street, and take water at London-bridge, when his Lordship and the civic authorities will proceed to Westminster Hall, returning from thence to Blackfriars-bridge, and disembarking at the new pier, will, after meeting the Learned Judges in Fleet-street, proceed to the banquet at Guildhall.

Metropolitan Improvements.—The following extensive improvements in the vicinity of Leicester-square will commence, it is expected, early in the present month. The whole of Upper St. Martin's-lane is to be demolished, and a street 101 feet wide to be formed, to be ultimately carried through the heart of the Seven Dials to Tottenham-court-road. A new street to be formed at the junction of St. Martin's-lane, Cranbourn-street, Newport-street, and Long-acre, in a line through to King-street, Covent Garden, and the Strand. The south end of St. Martin's-lane, near the church, will also be widened by throwing back the houses at the corner of Hemming's-row, and a communication opened between Coventry-street and Oxford-street, by throwing down the pile of buildings separating Rupert-street and Berwick-street. The cost of these undertakings will be £12[illegible],000.

Fall in the Price of Bread.—On Tuesday a reduction was made by the principal bakers on the Surrey side of the metropolis of one penny, and, in some cases of three halfpence, on the late price of a 4lb. loaf.

We have received papers from Sydney to June 27th, but the intelligence they contain is unimportant. The latest news from New Zealand is to the 4th of June, at which date all was quiet. Governor Grey had been met by a large assemblage of Chiefs, but Heki was not of the number.

As a curious proof of the remarkable character of the present season, we may mention that a branch, cut on Saturday, from an apple-tree growing in a garden in Loughborough-road, Brixton, bears on it two apples. They are "the second crop since the terrible hail-storm of 1st August."

According to letters from Constantinople of the 17th ult., a serious misunderstanding has arisen between the Porte and the American Legation in that city, in consequence of the American Minister having afforded protection to an Armenian priest who had been delivered up to the Austrian authorities, from whose custody he escaped, and sought refuge in the house of an American missionary at Smyrna. The Armenian, in the meantime, escaped to America.

According to a letter from Mr. Brooke, dated the 31st of August, the state of affairs in Borneo was more satisfactory. Subsequent to the late attack of the fleet under Sir Thomas Cochrane at Borneo Proper, the Sultan returned to Brunè, from thence he has addressed a letter to her Majesty, craving pardon for the past, and containing many assurances of future good behaviour. Mr. Brooke also stated that the Sultan had ratified all his former engagements.

PENSEROSA!—PAINTED BY WINTERHALTER.

Say! What's thy waking dream, poor Girl?
Thy tambourine has ceased to whirl
Its tiny cymbals—lark and merle *
Less blithe I ween
Than thou. While charming hind and earl,
Hast lately been.

Oh! joyous was thy dark eye's glance,
Elfin thy footstep in the dance,
And innocence that can enhance,
All gifts, is thine.
Why sink in this half torpid trance,
Sweet minstrel mine?

Art dreaming of thy native hills
Where Appenine pours down his rills,
And memory thy dark eye fills
With joyful tears?
Or can it be—misfortune chills
Thy budding years?

Or while thy careless footsteps rove
Through town or hamlet—mead or grove—
Hast ever thought young maid of love
And felt his power,
Soaring all human things above,
Thou fairest flower?

Beware! beware! for ruin lies
Within the lustre of his eyes;
Prudent the maid who timely flies
That fowler's snare.
Who seeks but to enjoy his prize
And then—despair!

Oh! may that doom ne'er fall on thee,
May true love thy companion be,
And joyful as the zephyrs free
Thy dance and song.
Jingling thy tambourine in glee,
Life's path along!

We have engraved this very interesting scene, from a remarkably fine print, by Joubert,† from Winterhalter's celebrated Picture.

The London Art-Union Annual for 1847. R. A. Sprigg.

This elegant folio, the second of the series, consists of nicely-etched and mezzotinted copies of the several pictures selected by the Prize-holders in the London Art-Union, in 1845. The subjects are 265 in number, and they afford correct ideas of the styles of the painters of the respective pictures. They include every variety of composition, from the dignity of Scriptural subjects to the playful humour of every-day life. Hence, there is abundant variety to please the most fastidious taste. They are very judiciously grouped; and the work is, altogether, produced in a highly tasteful style. The plates are sketched and engraved by Henry Melville. The volume is splendidly bound, and will prove a seasonable and superb present for the drawing-room table.

MUSICAL REVIEW.

Devotional Music. Edited by James Marquet. Lonsdale.

Mr. Marquet has been a lay vicar of Westminster Abbey some forty years; and, having compiled, for the use of the late Princess Augusta, and for her present Majesty, when Princess Victoria, in 1828, a selection of Sacred Musical Pieces, he has been induced to submit to the public a collection of Devotional Music, that may be sung on a Sunday evening in family circles. For the words of these compositions, he has resorted to the version of the Psalms of the Rev. James Merrick, who died in 1765, before his work had been published, and whose merits have been handsomely acknowledged by Dr. Robert Lowth, Bishop of London, who died in 1787. Dr. Vicesimus Knox, in his Essays, prefers Merrick's version to the Psalms of Sternhold, and Hopkins, Brady, Tate, &c. Mr. Marquet, in the musical adaptation, has acted upon the principle of the Rev. Mr. Rowland Hill, that Satan should not have all the best music exclusively; and, in the task of selection, the compiler has gleaned from gems, secular as well as sacred, from Handel, Battishill, Boyce, Callcott, Cooke, Pleyel, Travers, Harrington, Rogers, the two Hayes, &c. We cannot better explain Mr. Marquet's praiseworthy object, than in mentioning that the sources from which he has derived his Melodies, are unexceptionable. An accompaniment for the pianoforte or organ has been judiciously added, and the voice parts are within reasonable compass for amateurs.

Holy Lord of Israel. Prayer, by H. N. O'Neil. Cramer, Beale, and Co.

A soprano solo, three flats in common time, leads into a quatuor of soprano, alto, tenor, and bass. It is simple in character and orthodox in treatment, and is stated to appertain to a MS. opera (qy. oratorio) of "Ruth."

Jousse's Pianoforte Preceptor.—West's Singing Preceptor. Davidson.

We can recommend these instruction books, which have been carefully compiled from the best sources. The work of Jousse is well known, but in the present edition Mr. Henry West has availed himself of the innovations in modern composition, since the Pianoforte has been extended from the 5½ octaves in Jousse's time. Of course, the present edition is much enlarged, but it is vended at a very low charge. The new exercises develop the fingering, so as to render the learner competent, with practice, to attack any digital difficulties.

The "Singing Preceptor" is a companion to the other work, at the same price, and is an epitome, combining the systems of the most eminent writers on the art of singing. The exercises have been judiciously selected, and the examples gleaned from the best sources. The "Singing Preceptor" will not do away with the necessity of having a good master, but it will aid the vocal aspirant materially in the formation of a sound style.

MUSICAL CHIT CHAT.

Philharmonic Society.—The eight Concerts, for the season 1847, are fixed for Mondays March 15, 29, April 12, 26, May 10, 24, June 7 and 21st. Mr. Costa is the Conductor, Mr. Anderson is Hon. Treasurer, and Mr. Josh. Calkin Hon. Librarian; Mr. Watts is Secretary. The Directors are Messrs. Anderson, T. Cooke, James Calkin, Howell, Lucas, Elliott, and J. B. Chatterton. The Society now comprises 37 Members, 49 Associates, 20 female Associates. and 7 Honorary Members. Messrs. Terry and Pye were elected Associates at the general meeting last Monday.

David, the violinist, visits London this season, and is engaged for the Beethoven Quartet Society. Madame Dulcken (sister of David) performed, at the first concert of the Leipsic Subscription Concerts, on the 4th Oct., Mendelssohn's Second Pianoforte Concerto, conducted by the composer. Moscheles had commenced his duties as pianoforte professor in Leipsic. Benedict, the composer, had arrived in Paris, from Stuttgardt. His opera of the "Crusaders" was to be produced in Vienna.

Edward Loder's Opera of the Night Dancers.—This interesting work has proved a great hit for the Princess' Theatre. It is now in good working order, but the opera would gain immensely if Giselle had for representative, Mdlle. Nau, for whom the part was written. The music is not within the compass of Madame Albertazzi, who is also too tame in her acting. Allen and Miss S. Flower, leave nothing to be desired—their duo "Peace to the Dead," is sung to perfection. The three pieces for the tenor, the Serenade "Wake my Love," "I Cannot Flatter if I Would," and the impassioned scena "Wake Giselle," are standing favourites, and Allen's style and feeling render them full justice. The music of the "Wilis" in the second act has secured the suffrages of all the best judges. Indeed, whenever Mr. E. Loder has trusted to his own inspirations, he has been the most successful; but, in striving to be popular, which the exigencies of publication require, many of his phrases may be traced to other masters. The opera, taken on the whole, is one of the best specimens from our English composer, and if Mr. Loder had written nothing else than the Flower duet "He loves me, he loves me not," he would be entitled to the praise of having added to the stores of high art.

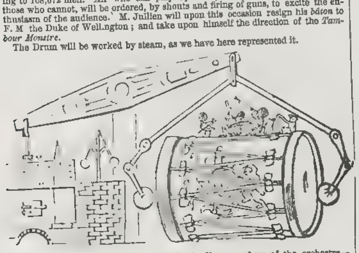
TRACTS FOR THE TRAINS.
BY ALBERT SMITH.

No. XVI.
M. JULLIEN'S MONSTER DRUM.

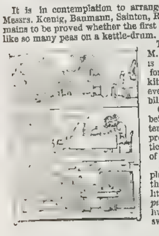
ULOUS as it may seem, yet we have been credibly informed that the large Drum which has, during the past week, excited the terror and admiration of thousands at M. Jullien's Concerts, is but the model of one making on a scale hitherto unthought of, for the future productions of that unequalled maestro.

The Drum will be used for the first time in a new set of waltzes, to be called The Bombarding Battalions -the old style of names such as the Hyacinth, the Bouquet Royal, the Bridal, &c., being too slow and quiet for the improved musical excitement of the people. M. Jullien has made arrangements with the Government for the entire British Army to assist at their performance, amounting to 108,672 men. All who can play upon any instrument, will do so; and those who cannot, will be ordered, by shouts and firing of guns, to excite the enthusiasm of the audience. M. Jullien will upon this occasion resign his bâton to F. M. the Duke of Wellington; and take upon himself the direction of the Tambour Monstre.

The Drum will be worked by steam, as we have here represented it.



It is in contemplation to arrange the leading members of the orchestra—Messrs. Kœnig, Baumann, Sainton, Richardson, &c.—on the top of it. But it remains to be proved whether the first blow will not bang them all up into the air, like so many peas on a kettle-drum.



The construction of this Drum, arranged by M. Jullien with a view to his provincial tours, is most remarkable. Placed on its end, it forms a three-floored residence, consisting of kitchen, parlour, and bed-room, fitted up with every regard to comfort and domestic capability.

Of course, nobody can live in it whilst it is being played; but this inconvenience is but temporary. On inquiring the effect likely to be produced by it, M. Jullien simply but emphatically assures us that it will be "stunning:" of which we have not the slightest doubt.

It is arranged for the first rehearsal to take place in the open air near Birmingham. By this, the sound will be heard, with more equality, all over England at once. The subdued piano passages of the waltz, scored for two hundred ophicleides, are spoken of as very sweet

THE GUN COTTON AGAIN.

Since we last wrote, this explosive novelty has occupied much of the public attention. Ingenious chemists have found out that paper, rags, tow, and even sawdust, when prepared, possess similar properties to those which last week caused "the aspiring blood of Lancaster" to sink into the ground at the Bond-street Gunnery. That everything and everybody will one day be annihilated in one grand bang, we firmly expect. In the meantime, we beg to show the effects of which, by a little careful arrangement of the head against the taster, may be made to go off at any time in the night.

CHARADE THE TENTH.

The great "bould spakers" of the land
Met in Conciliation Hall;
They talk'd of "slaves" and "bondsman's brand,"
And that the Saxon rule should fall;
And for the rint held out the hand,
And swore that Ireland, aye, should be
The first gem of the emerald sea.
And whilst the mob hurrah'd around,
With hearts buoyed up by empty sound,
They quite forgot, by want accurst,
They'd not MY WHOLE to fill MY FIRST.
That WHOLE, they were brought up to prize
An Argus with its hundred eyes.
But now long since it had been poorly,
From ills that slowly came, but surely.

The captain of a well-known band,
Now see MY SECOND proudly stand;
In Spain a middle rank he took
The Affghans led; Ghuznee forsook;
But, through all chance of fire and flood,
In Asia, first and last, he stood.
Of pride he ne'er possessed a particle,
Content to prove a useful article.
But never yet was he outdone,
Who chanced to be MY SECOND "one."

Next look towards a mighty pile
Of soaring dome and lofty aisle.
See Tiber's stream—the Bridge, also,
And Castle of St. Angelo.
Look to the right—the pilgrims come
In crowds to fill the streets of Rome,
As with an eager eye they scan
The façade of the Vatican.
Why are they thronging to and fro?
Why do the masses come and go?
They hurry on with [illegible] absurd,
'Tis only to salute MY THIRD.

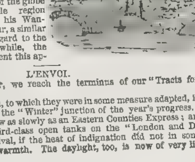
The removal of the Pyrenees was effected at the beginning of this month, being the chief exploit of the year. It was accomplished entirely by his Majesty Louis Philippe, in spite of all engineering difficulties, and the communication between France and Spain is now tolerably smooth. Great care will be taken to prevent the Pyrenees from again forming, which, from the nature of the country, they promise to do.—Year Book of Facts.

NOVEL SCHEME.

THE passage of the Nassau Balloon along the Thames, alluded to in a late number of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, has suggested to the Committee of Westminster-bridge, the possibility of applying the huge machine to arrest the further subsidence of the ancient pile. The determination of Father Thames not to keep his bed, renders all support from below perfectly useless. The Balloon will therefore hold up the arches; and it is the earnest hope of the Committee that, when the further removal of the stones shall have lightened the structure, it will, some night, fly away altogether, and take the ruins along with it, to some remote point of the globe—perhaps that remarkable region wherein M. Sue commences his Wandering Jew. Should this occur, a similar plan will be followed with regard to the Wellington Statue. Meanwhile, the bridge and balloon will present this appearance.



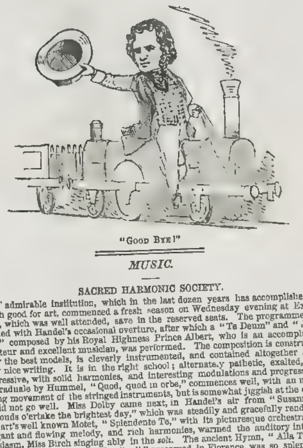
L'ENVOI.

With the present number, we reach the terminus of our "Tracts for the Trains."

For the summer locomotion, to which they were in some measure adapted, is now over, and we have arrived at the "Winter" junction of the year's progress. The traveller's blood begins to flow as slowly as an Eastern Counties Express; and the drenched inmates of the third-class open tanks on the "London and Dover" would freeze before their arrival, if the heat of indignation did not in some degree chafe them into bare warmth. The daylight, too, is now of very limited duration; and as to trying to read by the light of the dim finger-glasses that hang from the roofs of the carriages—one to every score of passengers—the mere notion makes your eyes smart. And, therefore, we think it best to conclude the series.

But we are not going to give up all communing with, we trust, our many friends. As Mr. George Robins forcibly observes, "we have been honoured with the directions of the owners" to take the "Everybody's Column" of the ILLUSTRATED NEWS under our own management, which will have no connexion with the Everybody's Column over the way in Trafalgar-square—for such have ceaseless allusions made it. Our own column will only take a week to build; there will, therefore, be a chance for everybody of average life to see its commencement and completion. We shall still illustrate our paragraphs here and there with those elaborate artistic sketches which we have been permitted to introduce; but amidst our weekly winter whims and fire-side fancies, we shall from time to time throw in such graver paragraphs as we may think worth transplanting from other quarters. And be assured that, although our fun may be occasionally personal, it shall be such that the objects of it may themselves smile at. At all events, they shall not be vexed.

Until we meet again, then, we bid you all a hearty



"GOOD BYE!"

MUSIC.

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY.

THIS admirable institution, which in the last dozen years has accomplished so much good for art, commenced a fresh season on Wednesday evening at Exeter Hall, which was well attended, save in the reserved seats. The programme was opened with Handel's occasional overture, after which a "Te Deum" and "Jubilate," composed by his Royal Highness Prince Albert, who is an accomplished amateur and excellent musician, was performed. The composition is constructed after the best models, is cleverly instrumented, and contained altogether some very nice writing. It is in the right school; alternately pathetic, exalted, and impressive, with solid harmonies, and interesting modulations and progressions. A Graduale by Hummel, "Quod, quod in orbe," commences well, with an undulating movement of the stringed instruments, but is somewhat jiggish at the close. It did not go well. Miss Dolby came next, in Handel's air from "Susannah," "Clouds o'ertake the brightest day," which was steadily and gracefully rendered. Mozart's well known Motet, "Splendente Te," with its picturesque orchestration, elegant and flowing melody, and rich harmonies, warmed the auditory into enthusiasm, Miss Birch singing ably in the soli. The ancient Hymn, "Alla Trinita Beata," one of the "Laudi Spirituali" preserved in Florence, was so splendidly sung by Miss Birch, Miss Dolby, Hobbs, and Phillips, as to secure a rapturous encore. Leonardo Leo's Double Choruses, "Dixit Dominus" and the "Gloria," concluded the first part, in the record of which we ought to mention, by the way, the fine execution of Cioffi, the trombone player.

Spohr's oratorio of "The Last Judgment" comprised the second part. This work—the English words by Professor Taylor—was first heard in this country at the Norwich Festival in 1830, and it was afterwards performed by the Philharmonic Society, at the Manchester and Worcester Festivals in 1836, and by the Sacred Harmonic Society in 1841. It is incomparably the finest of Spohr's sacred productions; infinitely superior to his "Calvary," "Fall of Babylon," &c. Crowded as the "Last Judgment" is with difficulties, his chromatic and enharmonic changes and mannerism are less palpable than in his later oratorios. Giving due credit to the artists and amateurs for their zeal to do justice to Spohr, we must at the same time confess that we never heard a more unsatisfactory execution. The unsteadiness of the conductor's beat was a primary cause; and there was no attempt at colouring the composer's imagery, without which Spohr's music is, indeed, dry and dull. The best efforts of the chorus singers were in the devotional "Holy, Holy;" but the terrible bursts in the "Destroyed is Babylon" were wanting, the time being so painfully dragged. The orchestra was often quite abroad in the intricate accompaniments. The two quartet gems, "Yes, every Tear," and the "Blest are the Departed," both in six flats, were unsteadily executed. In the lovely and touching operatical duo, "Forsake me not," Miss Birch was outsinging her weak but correct colleague, the tenor, Mr. Hobbs, and the consequence was that the beauty of the imitative passages was lost. The almost herculean task of interpreting the great scena, "Thus Saith the Lord," fell to Mr. Phillips, who was firm and vigorous, but it requires a Staudigl's powers to give it due effect. The overture and long instrumental sinfonia preceding the second part were played correctly, but without any distinctive light and shade. On the whole, the oratorio went heavily—partly to be ascribed to an inefficient execution, and more perhaps to the peculiarity of Spohr's style, which to the cultivated amateur presents most interesting points of learning, but which fails to create profound emotions from the masses, simply because the Handelian spark of genius is wanting.

SOCIETY OF BRITISH MUSICIANS.

We cannot compliment the members on their mode of execution of the instrumental pieces at the first Concert of the thirteenth season, on Monday last, at Erat's Harp Saloon. There was a want of delicacy and precision that ought not to exist. The new Quartet in G Minor for two violins, tenor and violoncello, was chiefly remarkable as the composition of a young lady, Miss Kate Loder, the pianiste, who was probably inspired by the example of Miss Orger. The Quatuor was well constructed as to form, but the ideas were not particularly striking. It was a creditable production on the whole, and quite as good as any of the works of more ambitious members of this Society. A MS. Piano and Violoncello Duo, played by its composer, Mr. W. C. Macfarren, and Mr. Lucas, contained nothing new. Misses Cubitt and Steele, Messrs. Lockey and Calkin, were the vocalists, and Messrs. J. and H. Banister, Gattie, Weslake, Thirlwall, and W. Dorrell, the instrumentalists. Mr. Clinton was the Director of the evening, and Mr. Wallace ably accompanied the vocal music, his own clever trio from "Maritana," "Remorse and Dishonour," being nicely sung by Miss Cubitt, Messrs. Lockey and Calkin.

M. JULLIEN'S CONCERTS.

The new Military Quadrille, "The British Army," was performed for the first time at the third Concert, on Monday last. Never, perhaps, had Covent Garden Theatre contained such an audience as on this occasion. It has been stated that 7000 persons were present, but this is an exaggeration; the number, we believe, exceeded 3000. As a composition the Quadrille is extremely effective, abounding in M. Jullien's happiest selections from popular composers, and more stunning than any of his former descriptive productions. It is not to be supposed that the picked players from the four bands of the 2nd Life Guards, the Royal Horse Guards (Blue), the Grenadier Guards, and the Coldstream, would be idle whilst the stringed instruments were at work, and the brass and the parchment were therefore victors in the conflict of sounds. The audience enjoyed the roar of the quintuple bands amazingly. They took M. Jullien's explanatory Key in the programme for granted with perfect reliance, that the fiery conductor was as competent to describe things immaterial quite as well as matter material. And why not? Have we not an instance in Spohr, who affects to describe sound by musical notes before its creation? Has not Haydn vivified Chaos? Has he not also given us the description of "light?" And has not that mountebank-plagiarist David, in the ode-symphony, the "Desert," cabbaged from Haydn, the same thought in the effect of the rising of the sun. M. Jullien is quite right, consequently, to give us "Twilight" in its minimum, and an "encampment" in demi-semi quavers. When "silence reigns around," M. Jullien never ceases his orchestral description; resolved to do or die, he prepares for the advancing enemy—a set of treacherous double basses and growling trombones and ophicleides; but our brazen friends, the trumpets, jealous of so much brass being exhibited without their aid, sound to "arms," and a chorus visible and invisible echo the cry: it is a trying moment; but the British Grenadiers are heard on the left wing—the Irish follow on the right, and the Scotch bagpipe in the rear; a crescendo is approaching—but not so fast; Jullien beats a feigned retreat for a piano, and when he obtains that, he renews the charge. The orchestral battle then "rages with fury;" Jullien is generalissimo of the attacking part, and of the defenders in the city. Nothing dismays him; he provokes the stringed combatants, excites the brass enemy, and rallies the drummers: it is hard to decide which is to win—the lower orchestra, his regulars, or the guerillas on the heights; but Jullien has a reserve—it is a monster long drum; and when that is brought up at the critical moment, it is sauve qui peut with the stringed fighters, and victory is proclaimed in favour of the brass and parchment, amidst what the Yankees would term "an everlasting smash."

It is needless to add how M. Jullien's fine troops behaved in this fearful fray. The officers of the staff—Oboe Barrett; Bassoon Baumann; Flageolet Collinet; Flute Richardson; Clarionet Lazarus; Trombone Cioffi; and Cornet-à-piston Kœnig—particularly distinguished themselves; but, as they have attained the highest rank, no further promotion can be awarded to them. The Generals of the Divisions—Waetzig, Tutton, Schott, and Godfrey—rendered effective aid in bringing up the auxiliaries. Field Marshal Jullien never wielded his bâton with more energy and precision; and when the concluding "See the conquering hero comes," was heard, he was saluted with military honours—every stick in the pit was raised with a hat or handkerchief at the top, imitating the gyrations of the illustrious chef d'orchestre. Royalty was permitted to join in the triumph of the British Army, for the National Anthem, skilfully intermingled in the martial themes, was separately called for at the close of the instrumental battle. The Quadrille will no doubt be repeated every evening during M. Jullien's last brilliant campaign in Covent Garden Theatre, the demolition of the interior of which, for the Royal Italian Opera of 1847, must be commenced on the 1st of December. M. Jullien proposes to build a Hall in Leicester-square.

"MUSIC, MIRTH, AND MELANCHOLY."—Mr. J. W Roe's second Annual Entertainment, under this title, was given on Monday last, in the Throne Room, Crosby Hall, and was fully attended. It consisted of a series of anecdotes and observations of human life, interspersed with singing by Miss Moriatt O'Connor, Mr. J. W. Hobbs, Mr. J. L. Hatton, and Mr. Roe. Mr. Dando and Mr. Hatton played one of Beethoven's Sonatas, in admirable style.

MUSICAL CHARACTERISTICS.—Mr. G. Buckland has announced two Lectures at the City of Westminster Literary and Scientific Institution, the first of which was given on Thursday; the illustrations being from Moore, Lindpaintner, H. Russell, John Parry, F. Romer, N J. Sporle, Lover, Phillips, &c.

THE CECILIAN SOCIETY.—Handel's oratorio of "Judas Maccabeus" was performed at the Albion Hall, Moorgate, on Thursday evening; the principal singors being Misses Thornton, Jennings, Hayes, Felton, Dyer, Seward, Bowden, Roncioni; Mrs. Cox; Messrs. Walker, Nelson, Jackson, Cross, and Butler.

DRURY-LANE THEATRE.—The new opera of "Loretta, a Tale of Seville," by Mr. Lavenu, will be produced on Monday next; the principal parts sustained by Madame Bishop, Miss Poole, Miss R. Isaacs, Miss Collett, Mrs. Hughes; Messrs. Harrison, King, Weiss, Borrani, S. Jones, &c. On Monday week Mdlle. Fuoco, from the Parisian Académie Royale de Musique, will make her debût in the new ballet of "Betty." Mr. Balfe arrived in London, from Vienna, on Wednesday, after a brilliant reception of himself and operas. He was presented by the manager with a service of gold plate. His new opera, the libretto by Mr. Bunn, will be put in rehearsal after Mr. Lavenu's work

THE THEATRES.

ADELPHI.

WE remember, in some old miscellany, to have seen a facetious plan, addressed to prudent housekeepers, for making a leg of mutton last a week—by roasting it on Sunday, eating it cold on Monday, hashing it on Tuesday, and so on to the bone. The idea is being followed out just at present by dramatic cooks, with pieces. A subject is first served up as a ballet—we will take one in question, "Giselle," as an instance; then it becomes the libretto of an opera; then we see it as a burlesque, perhaps it will next be a pantomime; and after that a drama of the Victorine school, altogether without music. There is no telling in what forms the legend may or may not be twisted.

To the habitués of the Opera, Drury Lane, and the Princess' Theatres, the story of "Giselle, or the Wilis," is well known; but as the audience of a minor theatre may not have it so completely at their finger ends, the following outline of the legend is given in the bill, which contains, by the way, almost as much as the piece itself. The tradition, then, on which the piece is founded, is taken from the pages of Henrich Heine, a German author, whose "elegant and facile pen" has enriched the world with a host of romantic bluettes, which, unfortunately for the British public, being written in the language of Faderland, have, notwithstanding the cheap fares to the Rhine, and M. Ollendorf's six months system, escaped the rifles of our dramatic sharpshooters. "The Wilis," says Herr Heine, "are young maidens, who, being betrothed, die before their wedding-day, and are supposed to find no rest in the tomb; for, though life is fled, there remains in them an insatiable love for the dance. At midnight, and in the bright moonlight, they rise in crowds, arrayed in their bridal dresses, wreathed with flowers and sparkling with jewels; their faces, though pale, have the beauty of youth, and winning smiles play upon their lips. Woe to the young man whose evil destiny leads him within the reach of their perfidious fascination! He is compelled to join their wild orgies, and to dance till, from exhaustion, he sinks down and expires."

The action of the original ballet, in this Adelphi piece of "The Phantom Dancers," which, it may be recollected, lies in two scenes, has not been strictly followed. More characters have been introduced, made to fit the company of the house; and the dénouement is changed. The cast embraces all the principal members of the corps. Giselle is played by Madame Celeste; Albert Brown, her lover, by Miss Woolgar; and Count Whirligig, his rival, by Mr. Wright. Then we have Mr. Paul Bedford as Prince Noodlehead, and Mr. O. Smith as a Zamiel, in a costume of red modern clothes; Mr. Munyard as his valet, and Mr. Mitchenson as a Wieland species of imp. Miss Ellen Chaplin, Miss M. Taylor, and Miss Harding also contribute to the general good effect of the piece, which was well calculated to display the happy versatility of the performers, who can act, sing, dance, or pantomime with equal facility and excellence.

A large sum has evidently been expended upon the mise en scène, which is very splendid and elaborate; indeed, the Adelphi burlesques of this school depend more upon startling effects of mechanism than upon sharp hits and allusions in the dialogue for their success. The change from the Village to the Phantom Regions, at the end of the first act, is exceedingly beautiful, and worked on the first night without one hitch, in spite of its complicated arrangements. So was the Sunrise on the Haunt of the Wilis, cleverly shut in by an ascending and descending scene—a "sink and fly," as it is technically called—which, on reopening, discovered a Salon de Bal, in which were assembled most of the old Adelphi favourite characters—St. George, Tilly Slowboy, Norma, Pollio, The Mysterious Stranger, &c.—who concluded the piece with a grand "Tarentella d'Extase," and brought down the curtain amidst loud applause.

There is some very pretty music in the piece, including some from the original "Giselle." Some of the Ethiopian airs are also introduced, and a trio, in the proper fashion, parodying "Buffalo gals, can't-ye-come out to night," pleased immensely. Altogether, the success was unquestionable; the applause was very hearty and prolonged: all the characters had to re-appear at the end; and Mr. Charles Selby was loudly called before the curtain.

SADLER'S WELLS.

On Wednesday evening Shakspeare's comedy, or rather play, of "Measure for Measure" was revived at this theatre, and met with a warm reception from the audience—to the greater part of whom its performance was a novelty, since it has not, we believe, been acted on the London stage for some years. We do not think that, pecuniarily speaking, "Measure for Measure" will do such good service to the treasury as some of the other Shakspearian dramas revived under this very excellent management. But its representation, on Wednesday, certainly excited some interest, no less amongst the literary men assembled to witness it, than the general audience. And not a point was unappreciated, either in the acting or writing.

It was capitally cast. Miss Laura Addison was, of course, the principal attraction, and, as Isabella, she played with a sweetness, and dignity withal, which won golden opinions from the house. Miss Addison's chief powers, however, are displayed to their full in scenes requiring impassioned energy rather than in level dialogue; at the same time, she can so nicely modulate her voice, naturally clear and sweet, that the greatest import is given to those quiet passages which might otherwise be ineffective. One or two provincialisms, which several critics at first complained of, are wearing away; and in every successive character she appears to more advantage. She is is in an enviable position, for a bright career is free and open before her.

Mr. Phelps played the Duke in his usual careful style, although he was somewhat imperfect in the last act. There are no great points to be made in this character, and he appeared to feel this. Mr. G. Bennett's Angelo was impressive, with a shade of exaggerated emphasis; and Mr. H Marston, as Claudio, overcame the physical defects of his voice, by his evident painstaking. Perhaps, however, the best sustained character was the Lucio of Mr. Hoskens. Every remark of the "fantastick" was greeted with honest laughter, and there was a pleasant affectation in his manner exceedingly well conceived. Mr. Scharf and Mr. A. Younge shared the comic honours with him, as Pompey and Elbow; and the old gentleman who played the little part of Barnardine proved himself a real artist; his performance, and his "making up," were very effective. Indeed, it would have been somewhat difficult to have found fault justly with anybody. The applause, from a full house, was loud and general when the curtain fell. Mr. Phelps and Miss Addison were called upon to re-appear, and the same compliment was paid to Mr. G. Bennett. The farce of "The Tobit's Dog" was played after the comedy. It is another version of the former vaudeville now running at the Haymarket, under the name of "Spring Gardens."

PRINCESS'.

Mr. J. R. Scott, a gentleman who has taken a high rank in America as a tragedian, made his first appearance at this house, on Wednesday evening, as Sir Giles Overreach, in Massinger's play of "A New Way to Pay Old Debts." He evidently possesses powers above the ordinary run, but we should prefer seeing him in some other more genial character before we give a decided opinion upon the chance of his taking so elevated a position on our stage as report assigns to him in the Transatlantic theatres, for the rôle of Sir Giles Overreach is somewhat an ungracious one to play, and, at the same time, an exceedingly difficult one to give effect to. Nobody, in modern times, ever created any great impression in it but Edmund Kean. Mr. Scott has, evidently, intelligence and good natural advantages of figure and features. His chief fault is a tendency to rant, but this, without doubt, he will be able to repress. The latter portion of the part was the most impressively acted. The play was, generally, well cast, Mrs. Stirling and Mr. Compton deserving the chief honours for their able performance in Margaret and Marrall. A young lady appeared, for the first time, as Lady Allworth, but she has a very great deal to learn. Mr. Scott was called for at the conclusion, and acknowledged the compliments of the audience in a very neat and agreeably-framed speech.

A little farce, called "Keeping a Place," was successfully brought out afterwards, the whole weight of which, if such a trifle could have any, rested with Compton, who is a simple gardener, and, being discharged for his lack of sense, is mistaken by his mistress—a sentimental lady—for a titled lover in disguise. The equivoque arises from this point, and gives birth to all sorts of comical misconceptions and situations, which kept the audience roaring with laughter all the time of the performance. To criticise such a bagatelle severely would be to break a butterfly on the wheel. It will, however, enjoy a short life, and, without doubt, a very merry one.

DRURY-LANE.

An agreeable divertissement was brought out here on Wednesday evening, after the opera of "Stradella" had been performed, called "Une Kermés,"—the name signifying, if we mistake not, a Belgian fête. It served as a vehicle for the dancing of different members of the Drury-Lane corps de ballet, including two or three artistes comparatively strange to the public, amongst whom we may name Mdlle. Adèle Benart and Mdlle. Anita Dubignon (the débûtantes in the "Maid of Cashmere"), together with M. Paul and M. Tell. Their exertions were rewarded with the frequent applause of the audience, and the production was quite successful. The house was comfortably filled, but not crowded.

LITERATURE.

The Emigrant. By Sir Francis Bond Head, Bart. Murray.

The title of this book is a misnomer; but the reader will soon be set right by the following pithy paragraph of the Preface:—"As the common crow is made up of a small lump of carrion and two or three handfuls of feathers, so is this volume composed of Political History, buoyed up by a few light sketches, solely written to make a dull subject fly." The gravamen of the book, therefore, is the late rebellion in Canada, and the conduct of the Whig and Conservative Ministries towards Sir Francis Head, as Governor of the Upper Province. The leading events are detailed with that excellent talent for observation, and in that very lively vein of humour for which the writer is celebrated; and the reader will not expect a dull affair under such heads as "The Flare-up," "the British Flag," "the Apology," "the Hunted Hare," "Political Poison," "the Explosion," "Moral," &c. "The Hunted Hare," by the way, is Sir Francis himself, who, when he left the seat of Government, must have had nearly as rough a ride as he took across the [illegible]nce. The entire narrative is written with a fixity of purpose which is very striking: indeed, Sir Francis considers it to disclose "facts which not only threaten the safety of our Institutions, but in which the Honour of the Crown is deeply involved."

Leaving this grave matter to the Colonial Office, we shall proceed to what will prove the more popular contents of the volume—a succession of discursive sketches of the scenery and manners of Upper Canada, which have all the sparkling vigour and humorous characteristic of Sir Francis Head's best manner. The book opens with a charming chapter on the physical geography of Upper Canada: this is entitled "A New Sky," and commences thus attractively—

"However deeply prejudiced an Englishman may be in favour of his own country, yet I think it is impossible for him to cross the Atlantic without admitting that in both the northern and southern hemispheres of the New World Nature has not only outlined her works on a larger scale, but has painted the whole picture with brighter and more costly colours than she used in delineating and in beautifying the Old World.

"The heavens of America appear infinitely higher—the sky is bluer—the clouds are whiter—the air is fresher—the cold is intenser—the moon looks larger—the stars are brighter—the thunder is louder—the lightning is vivider—the wind is stronger—the rain is heavier—the mountains are higher—the rivers larger—the forests bigger—the plains broader; in short, the gigantic and beautiful features of the New World seem to correspond very wonderfully with the increased locomotive powers and other brilliant discoveries which, under the blessing of an Almighty Power, have lately been developed to mankind."

Here, too, is a vivid picture of the four seasons in Canada:

"In the summer, the excessive heat—the violent paroxysms of thunder—the parching drought—the occasional deluges of rain—the sight of bright red, bright blue, and other gaudy-plumaged birds—of the brilliant humming-bird, and of innumerable fire-flies, that at night appear like the reflection upon earth of the stars shining above them in the heavens, would almost persuade the emigrant that he was living within the tropics.

"As autumn approaches, the various trees of the forest assume hues of every shade of red, yellow, and brown, of the most vivid description. The air gradually becomes a healthy and delightful mixture of sunshine and frost, and the golden sunsets are so many glorious assemblages of clouds—some like mountains of white wool, others of the darkest hues—and of broad rays of yellow, of crimson, and of golden light, which, without intermixing, radiate upwards to a great height from the point of the horizon at which the deep-red luminary is about to disappear.

"As the winter approaches the cold daily strengthens; and before the branches of the trees and the surface of the country become white, every living being seems to be sensible of the temperature that is about to arrive.

"The gaudy birds, humming-birds, and fire-flies depart first; then follow the pigeons; the wild-fowl take refuge in the lakes, until scarcely a bird remains to be seen in the forest. Several of the animals seek refuge in warmer regions; and even the shaggy bear, whose coat seems warm enough to resist any degree of cold, instinctively looks out in time for a hollow tree into which he may leisurely climb, to hang in it during the winter as inanimate as a flitch of bacon from the ceiling of an English farm-house; and even many of the fishes make their deep-water arrangements for not coming to the surface of the rivers and harbours during the period they are covered with ice.

"Notwithstanding the cheerful brightness of the winter's sun, I always felt that there was something indescribably awful and appalling in all these bestial, birdal, and piscal precautions; and yet it is with pride that one observes that, while the birds of the air and the beasts of the field, one after another, are seen retreating before the approaching winter, like women and children before an advancing army, the Anglo-Saxon race stand firm! and, indeed, they are quite right to do so, inasmuch as the winter, when it does arrive, turns out to be a season of hilarity and of healthy enjoyment."

"The Long Trot" describes several rides, the incidents of which are capitally narrated; among them we find a most touching account of the death of the Duke of Richmond, by hydrophobia, at Kingston, in the year 1819; the conclusion is full of fine feeling. Sir Francis says

"As I remained for a few minutes on horseback before the hovel which commemorates, on the continent of North America, the well-known facts I have just related, I deeply felt, and have ever since been of opinion, that there exists in the British Peerage no name that is recollected in Canada by all parties with such affectionate regard as that noble Englishman and English nobleman, Charles Lennox, the late Duke of Richmond."

Further on, we have a promising glimpse:

"The splendid region which lies between Toronto and Lake Huron contains the richest land on the continent of North America, and must hereafter become one of the most favoured countries on the surface of the globe. The enormous size of the trees clearly indicates the luxuriance of the earth in which they flourish, and, although it is truly astonishing to observe how much has been done by the emigrant, yet, as a solitary example of what ample room there still is in this favoured spot for the redundant population of the mother country, I will state, that between Lakes Ontario and Huron there exist six million acres of uncleared land in one block! The Crown lands of Canada, which, in my humble opinion, ought always to have been given to the British emigrant for nothing, or, to speak more correctly, as payment by the mother country for his courage, trouble, and expense in clearing them, can even now be purchased at about five shillings an acre. An Irish gentleman, resident in Canada, was desirous to persuade his sons to work as back-woodsmen instead of frittering away their constitutions and money in luxuries and pleasure; and as champagne costs in America something more than a dollar a bottle, whenever this old gentleman saw his sons raise the bright sparkling mixture to their lips he used humorously to exclaim to them, 'Ah, my boys! there goes an acre of land, TREES AND ALL!'"

A visit to an Indian family on the banks of Lake Huron calls forth these very original remarks

"Occasionally the head of the family would rise and salute me, but, generally speaking, I received from the whole group what I valued infinitely more—a smile of happiness and contentment; and when I beheld their healthy countenances and their robust active frames, I could not help feeling how astonished people in England would be if they could but behold, and study, a state of human existence in which every item in the long list of artificial luxuries which they have been taught to venerate is utterly unknown, and, if described, would be listened to with calm inoffensive indifference, or with a smile approaching very nearly to the confines of contempt; but, the truth is, that between what we term the civilised portion of mankind, and what we call 'the savage,' there is a moral gulf which neither party can cross, or, in other words, on the subject of happiness, they have no ideas with us in common. For instance, if I could suddenly have transported one of the ruddy squaws before me to any of the principal bedrooms in Grosvenor-square, her first feeling on entering the apartment would have been that of suffocation from heat and impure air; but if, gently drawing aside the thick damask curtains of a four-post bed, I had shown her its young aristocratic inmates fast asleep, protected from every breath of air by glass windows, wooden shutters, holland blinds, window-curtains, hot bed-clothes, and beautiful fringed night-caps, as soon as her smile had subsided, her simple heart would have yearned to return to the clean rocks and pure air of Lake Huron; and so it would have been if I could suddenly have transported any of the young men before me to the narrow contracted hunting-grounds of any of our English country gentlemen; indeed, an Indian would laugh outright at the very idea of rearing and feeding game for the sake of afterwards shooting it; and the whole system of living, house-fed, in gaiters, and drinking port wine, would, to his mind, appear to be an inferior state of happiness to that which it had pleased the Great Spirit' to allow him to enjoy"

The traveller's visit to Niagara will not disappoint the reader; the confused roar and boiling of the cataract are thus described:

"For a considerable time I listened to it all with the feelings of confusion I had so often before experienced; but, as I became gradually accustomed to the cold whirling vapour that surrounded me, as well as to the sudden crashing noises behind me, I felt myself by degrees enabled—at first imperfectly, and then distinctly—to analyze and separate from each other the various notes of the two different instruments of which the roar of Niagara is composed—namely, the deep thundering tone of the fall of more than a hundred millions of tons of water per hour over a precipice of 150 feet; and the raging, hissing, lashing, and boiling of all this broken water in the confined cauldron beneath.

"The more I studied this language, the more clearly I understood it, until, in the ever-changing but unceasing thunder of its eloquence I could always trace, in different proportions, and often apparently in different places, the presence of these two voices in concert.

"Sometimes the stunning, deafening noise proceeding from three thousand six hundred millions* of cubic feet per hour of an element of the same specific gravity as oak, suddenly arrested in its fall from 150 feet, would apparently so completely overpower every other, that I felt I could point in the dark precisely to the bottom of the falls; at other times, nothing beneath was heard but the raging of broken water, while the thunder that created it was resounding high overhead, and sometimes far away, as if a heavy battering-train of artillery were trotting through the forest over a paved road."

We need scarcely add that "The Emigrant" will be extensively read, both as regards the "lump of carrion" and the "feathers." We owe Sir Francis much for his sparkling "Bubbles," published some years since, and the work before us adds largely to the public debt. There is a cheerfulness in his writing, even when he is assailed with all sorts of political discontent; and this delightful quality indicates a very healthy mind.

GUN COTTON.

SONNET.

Cotton! thou right hand of Britannia's trade,
  Cradle of wealth and Manchester's renown,
  Hast become bellicose on dale and down
'Gainst grouse and partridge? Are thy fibres made
Auxiliaries to Moloch's ruthless blade?
  Is Schwartze's bright invention overthrown
By thee?.... Alas! far better had it been
  If men would turn thy qualities to good!
The organs of destructiveness, I ween,
  Are waxing out of fashion; for the blood
Of Man shall rarely now be shed like water:
  Far different is the mission of our age.
Gone are the days which joy'd in human slaughter—
  Condemn'd—contemn'd—by patriot, bard, and sage.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED

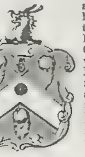
MARSHAL BOURMONT.

Louis Auguste Victor de Ghaisne, Comte de Bourmont, whose death occurred a short time since, at his château in the Maine-et-Loire, was born at Freignè, in that department, on the 2nd of September, 1773, and belonged to that Vendean nobility whose heroic efforts in support of the Throne form the brightest episode of the revolutionary convulsions of France. In 1788, at the early age of fifteen, Bourmont entered the army as Ensign in the Regiment of French Guards; but, in three years after, was forced to abandon his country, to escape the persecutions of the dominant party. He returned, however, shortly after, and fought under the Royal banner in the Vendée; and was eventually, in 1800, one of the Commissioners who signed the Articles of Peace. From that period until nearly the last days of the Empire, he took no part in active service; but, in 1812, he consented to join Napoleon's "Grande Armée;" and, as Adjutant-General, distinguished himself in the Russian Campaign. In 1813, he attained the rank of Brigadier-General; and, in 1814, that of Lieutenant-General, which Napoleon conferred upon him for his gallant and energetical defence of Nogent. In that affair, Bourmont was wounded. The Emperor's retirement to Elba suspended for a brief period only the military operations, and on Bonaparte's triumphant return to France, the Count de Bourmont was, at the recommendation of Ney, continued in the command of a division of that Marshal's corps. In this position he participated in the opening of the campaign of 1815, but, a few days before the battle of Waterloo, he quitted his standard and passed over to the enemy—a desertion that has tarnished for ever the bright fame of the soldier.

After the restoration of the Bourbons General Bourmont held a high place in Royal favour, and, in 1829, was appointed Minister of War. The next year, when the attack on Algiers was resolved on, Bourmont was chosen for its leader, and a Marshal's baton rewarded his successful conduct of the expedition. Brief, however, was the term of the Marshal's prosperity. The émeute of July overthrew the feeble dynasty of the Restoration, and the conqueror of Algiers, proscribed by the new Government, had to devote his military abilities to foreign service. In Portugal he aided the cause of Don Miguel, and held a chief command in that Prince's armies.

The deceased Marshal received, in 1825, the Grand Cross of the Legion of Honour, in 1817 was nominated a Knight Commander of St Louis, and, in 1824, had conferred upon him, by the Emperor of Russia, the Order of St. Alexander Newski.

SIR HENRY FETHERSTONHAUGH, BART.



This venerable Baronet, who died at his seat, Up Park, Sussex, had attained the advanced age of ninety-two, and had enjoyed the title no less than seventy-two years. He was only son of Sir Matthew Fetherstonhaugh, Bart., of Fetherstonhaugh Castle, in Northumberland, by Sarah, his wife, daughter of Christopher Lethieullier, Esq., of Belmont, county Middlesex, and derived his descent from a Saxon family seated at Fetherstonhaugh previously to the Norman invasion. Sir Henry married late in life Miss Mary Anne Bullock, of Orton, but had no child. The surname of Fetherstonhaugh is said to have been thus derived:—The house in which the family resided was formerly upon a hill (where were two stones, called fether stones), and was moated round, as a barrier against the Scots; but upon being destroyed, a new edifice was erected in the holme or valley, under the hill, which valley was locally denominated a haugh, and thence the appellation of "Fetherstonhaugh"

SIR GEORGE WOMBWELL, BART.

Sir George Wombwell, Bart., of Wombwell, in the West Riding of Yorkshire, died on the 28th ult., at his residence in Eaton-square, in the seventy-eighth year of his age. His father, the first Baronet, the late Sir George Wombwell, who filled at one time the Chair of the East India Company, purchased and brought back into the family the ancient estate of Wombwell, which had been alienated by an heiress. The first ancestor on record, Robert de Wombwell, living in the reign of Stephen, assumed his surname from the place of his residence in Yorkshire. The Baronet, whose decease we record, married, first, 19th July, 1791, Lady Anne Belasyse, daughter of Henry, second Earl of Fauconberg, by Charlotte, his wife, aunt of the present Lord Melbourne, and by that lady, who died in 1808, has left one surviving son, who has succeeded to the title, and is now Sir George Wombwell Of the issue of the second marriage of the late Baronet, one son, Charles, an officer of Hussars, married, in 1836, Charlotte, daughter of Orby Hunter, Esq., of Crowland Abbey; and one daughter, Louisa, is the wife of Henry Beauclerk, Esq.

PATRICK MAXWELL STEWART, ESQ., M.P.

There are few men in the country whose death would be more generally regretted than that of Mr. Stewart, or who, as active politicians, will leave fewer enemies behind them. The respected gentleman, besides filling the important post of representative in Parliament of his native county, was, at the period of his decease, Chairman of the Oriental Steam Navigation Company, Vice-President of the London Scottish Society, Chairman of the London and Westminster Bank, and a Director of the Caledonian Railway.

He was fifth son of Sir Michael Shaw Stewart, Bart., of Greenock and Blackhall, Lord Lieutenant of Renfrewshire, and grand nephew of the late distinguished Sir John Shaw Stewart, M.P. Of the honourable gentleman's sisters, the eldest, Margaret, is married to Edward, Duke of Somerset, and the youngest, Eleonora, to Sir William Maxwell, Bart., of Monreith. Rich and poor, men of all ranks in life and of every shade of political opinion, mingle in one general feeling of regret for the premature death of one possessed of such great and varied qualifications. Mr. Stewart had only just completed his 48th year. He never married.

THE LADY MANNERS

Jane, Lady Manners, died at Fornham Hall, Bury, on the 2nd inst., aged sixty-seven. Her Ladyship, the widow of Lord Manners, who held for a considerable time the high appointment of Lord Chancellor of Ireland, was daughter of James Butler, Esq., of Fethard, and sister of the late Earl of Glengall. Her Ladyship's marriage occurred in 1815, and the issue of it was one son, John Thomas, present Lord Manners.

Death of Another Member of Parliament.—Accounts have been received from Malta of the death of R. J. Eaton, Esq., M.P., of Stetchworth Park, Cambridgeshire. A vacancy has thus been occasioned in the representation for Cambridgeshire. Mr. Eaton proceeded to Malta a short time since, then in rather improved health, accompanied by a foreign courier; and, since his departure, no intelligence even of ill health on the hon. gentleman's part had hitherto been received. He had died at an early age, having scarcely completed his fortieth year, and leaves behind him a wife and two children of tender age. It is right to state that Mr. Eaton's family have not received intelligence of his death.

OUR MAGAZINE COLUMN FOR NOVEMBER.

COLERIDGE AND JOHN FOSTER.

You might, if your inclination led you in that direction, point out several heads of comparison between Coleridge and Foster. The preacher saw the poet at Bristol, a city which Southey called the most ancient, most beautiful, and most interesting in England. Certainly its venerable streets have witnessed a strange confluence of bright streams of genius. There Chatterton forged upon antiquity, and Westley founded Methodism, and Hall illuminated Nonconformism, and Coleridge talked as never man talked in this cold nineteenth century, and Southey himself saw visions and dreamed dreams. Nor should Foster be forgotten among those horses of the sun, who have run their race upon earth. No man lauded more earnestly the old man eloquent; his mind of vast comprehension and minute perception; opulent in multifarious knowledge; sympathetic with everything pure and sublime; yet having the splendour of his genius clouded over by a malignant spell, that embittered his life and wounded his reputation. Foster, perhaps, did not recognise his own resemblance to Coleridge; but it may be traced in his mode of expression, as well as of thought. He wanted Addison to do for his essays what Hume or Stewart would have performed for the philosophy of his contemporary. But the chief likeness is seen in the wild and unearthly tendencies of the imagination; in the passion which Johnson reprehends in Collins, of slumbering by Elysian waterfalls, or gazing upon magic palaces. Compare Foster's reflections on reading some passages of "Paradise Lost," with Coleridge's hymn before sunrise in the vale of Chamouni. Is not the same poetic character discernible in both?—Fraser's Magazine.

ADOLPHE THIERS.

Of all living statesmen, there is none more strongly marked by peculiar individuality than M. Thiers; of all living statesmen, there is none whom it is so difficult to sketch. He resembles those portraits covered by fluted glass, which present striking features, but which totally change with the point from which you view them. M. Thiers, as a journalist, in the bureau of the National, or the columns of the Constitutionnel—M. Thiers in the tribune, assailing the Ministry—M. Thiers in the same tribune, as President of the Council, defending Cabinet measures—M. Thiers, the historian of the Consulate—M. Thiers at the head of his hospitable board, in the splendid halls of his mansion in the Place St. George, are different individuals, yet the same personage, and all marked by strongly characteristic features. Born poor, he had wealth to make—born obscure, he had fame to acquire. Having failed at the bar, he became an homme de lettres; and, aspiring to distinction in political life, he enlisted in the ranks of the Liberal party, more from necessity than from inclination. It was the only party then open to a parvenu and an adventurer. He commenced by some grotesque revivals of revolutionary associations, and costumed himself à la Danton. Like other persons of lively imagination, he was devoured with wants, and was indebted for the first means of gratifying them to the munificent spirit of M. Lafitte. His reputation, however, whatever estimate may be made of it, is the creation of his own genius, aided, certainly, by opportunity; for without the occurrence of the Revolution of July, M. Thiers would probably now be nothing higher than the idol of some literary coterie in a provincial town.—Dublin University Magazine.

INCONVENIENCE OF POVERTY.

People who are too good for their employment are generally too bad for their employers. There is no such lumber in the world as broken-down gentility. Always out of place—never fit for anything. A decayed gentleman, as he's called, is a nuisance; that is, I mean, to a man of the world—to a man of business. For you see, there's always impertinence in him. He always seems to be thinking of what he has been—you can't get him to think of what he is. He becomes your clerk, we'll say. Well, you tell him to call a hackney-coach, and he sets about it in a manner that impudently says to you—"Once I kept my own carriage!" You order him to copy a letter, or what not; and he draws down the corners of his mouth, to let you know that—"Once in his day he used to write cheques!" Now this is unpleasant. In the first place, one doesn't like any insolence from anybody; and, in the next, if one happens to be in a melancholy, thinking mood, one doesn't like to be reminded by the bit of decay about one, what, for all one knows—for it's a strange world—one may drop down to one's self.—Douglas Jerrold's Shilling Magazine.

EXPLOITS OF LITERATURE.

Whether for good or for evil, literature is a mighty thing. Centuries are its days, and the universe is its sphere of action. Has not Louis Philippe trembled at the fitful eloquence of even the Abbé de Lamenuais? and if many hearts still throb, in France, at the memory of Napoleon, may you not thank or blame Beranger? It is the writers on political economy who have repealed the Corn-Laws. Jeremy Collier drove obscenity and profaneness from the English stage. Cobbett and Moore did as much as any men, though indirectly, for Catholic emancipation. Butler, by his "Hudibras," extinguished the influence of the Puritans, many years before such a consummation would otherwise have been possible. The Nation newspaper has created Young Ireland; Gioberti has created Young Italy, Disraeli Young England; perhaps, Newman, and Faber, and the Tractarians, were the first; all men of letters alike. The Encyclopædists wrote down the crown of France, and the King of France, and the kingdom of France, and Kings and kingdoms far and near; and the very law of God, for a time. Napoleon, who made the world tremble at his name, trembled at that of the woman, Madame de Staël. Chateaubriand has done more than even time has done for the great religious revival throughout France. A short treatise of St. Bernard's created so burning a phrenzy, all over Europe, in favour of the then newly-arisen order of the Knights Templars, that they became at once more powerful than many mighty kingdoms. Literature has been able to do these wonders. In Russia, the iron arm of the powers that be fears no opposition, excepting only the opposition of a free press. With that opponent, it declines to do battle. The free author exists not in the land: his voice is mute. That voice is carefully stifled, which, if it were once suffered to be heard, not ukases, nor the knout, nor the sharpness of the sword, nor all the fury of authority, armed with faggot and flame, could prevent from shattering the fabric of unholy tyranny, even as the sound of a mighty organ might shake into pieces a castle of cards. The successful man of letters is, indeed, a man of power.—Dolman's Magazine.

THE FAUBOURG ST. GERMAIN.

The Faubourg St. Germain may be said to have been unable ever to raise its head since the Revolution of July. Its deserted streets, in their sad and fallen splendour, have all the look of another Venice, although without the veil of poetry spread over the ruined fortunes of that city; without the stamp of romance upon their buildings—without any remnant of beauty to make up for the ugliness of a premature and sorry old age. The old coquette, it is true, does her best to deck herself with the beaux restes of her wealth and splendour; but the wrinkles are far too deeply seared to be hidden by paint or patches. The Faubourg St. Germain appears to be wearing mourning for itself—the mourning of departed greatness, for place and power ravished from its grasp by a dirty bourgeois revolution.

* * * *

In many of the families of the old French nobility an amicable arrangement would seem to have been entered into, in family council, by which some of their members, generally the younger branch, are permitted to "rally," i.e., attach themselves to the modern Court, whilst the others hold back with all the comedy of lofty disdain. By this arrangement consistency is apparently preserved, whilst time-serving no less has its rewards. One portion of the family is thus enabled to grasp its share of patronage and place, and the thousand other advantages to be gained by courtly or ministerial favour; the other can again hold out its banner, and declare its unflinching attachment to the cause of the elder Bourbons, in case of the event of a second Restoration, to which they still look as the Jews for the coming of their Messiah. Of latter years, this Janus-like compromise of conscience seems to have been greatly in fashion, and not to have been without its successful results.—(From Bentley's Miscellany "The Flâneur in Paris," a very smart series of papers in a vein of writing which is now much over-worked.)

WILLIAM WALLACE

In the year 1297, William Wallace, commonly known as the hero of Scotland, made his first appearance on the stage of history as a supernumerary, carrying a banner, for we find him engaged in unfurling the standard of liberty. He was at first merely the captain of a small band of outlaws—a sort of first robber—in the great drama in which he was soon to sustain a principal character. He was the second son of Sir William Wallace, of Elerslie, and had all the qualities of a melodramatic hero, as far at least as we are enabled to judge by a description of him written a hundred years after his death with that minuteness which the old chroniclers were so fond of adopting when they knew that no one had the power of contradicting them. The celebrated Bower, who continued the "Scotichronicon" of Fordun, tells us that Wallace was "broad-shouldered, big-boned, and proportionately corpulent," so that his shoulders were broad enough to bear the burden he undertook; and his being corpulent gave him this advantage over his enemies, that if they had fifty thousand lives, he had undoubtedly "stomach for them all." Mr. Tytler, who will perhaps excuse us for venturing on Tytler's ground, informs us, in his "History of Scotland," that "Wallace had an iron frame," so that we have the picture of the man at once before us. For a quarrel with an English officer he had been banished from his home, and by living in fastnesses he acquired some of those loosenesses which are inseparable from a roving character. His followers comprised a few men of desperate fortunes and bad reputation, who had turned patriots, as gentlemen in difficulties generally do; for it is a remarkable fact, that the men who endeavour to discharge a debt to their country are those who never think of discharging the debts which they owe to their creditors. Success, however, covers a multitude of sins; and Wallace with his little band of outlaws, having achieved one or two small triumphs, soon found out the fact, that the world which sneers at the very noblest cause in its early struggles will always be ready to join it in the moment of victory Wallace, having been fortunate in his efforts, soon had the co-operation of Sir William Douglas and all his vassals; just as Mr. Cobden and the Anti-Corn-Law League, after having been denounced as turbulent demagogues, and threatened with prosecution, were assisted on the eve of the fulfilment of their object by the leaders of the Opposition and the principal members of the Government.—(From Mr G. A. à Beckett's "Comic History of England," V., a capital Number, perhaps the best)

THE ROOF OF WESTMINSTER HALL.

The celebrated roof of Westminster Hall, the span of which is among the greatest ever built without pillars, is little more than one-third the width of the Worksop Spread oak, the branches of which would reach over Westminster Hall, placed on either side of its trunk, and have nearly thirty-two feet to spare; and its extent is nearly thirty feet more than the length, and almost four times the width of Guildhall in the City of London. The rafters of Westminster Hall roof, though without pillars, have massive walls on each side to support them; but the tree-boughs, of sixteen feet more extent, are sustained at one end only. Architects, who know the stress a staircase, of even eight or ten feet in width, has upon the wall into which the side is built, can alone fairly estimate the excessive purchase which branches on either side, spanning from outbough to outbough 180 feet, must have on the central trunk.—The Plough.

AGRICULTURAL PICTURES.—DRILLING AND HARROWING.—DRAWN BY DUNCAN.

AGRICULTURAL PICTURES.—DRILLING AND HARROWING.

THESE labours of "the descending year" have enabled our artist to present a picturesque scene.

Bloomfield, enumerating the toils of Giles, sings that he,

> Even now, whilst Nature's beauty dies,
> Deposits seed, and bids new harvests rise;
> Seed, well prepar'd, and warm'd with glowing lime,
> 'Gainst earth-bred grubs, and cold, and lapse of time,
> For, certain frosts, and various ills invade,
> Whilst wintry months depress the springing blade.

Virgil, in the first of his "Georgics," glances at the gain of the labour:—

> Nor is the profit small, the peasant makes,
> Who smooths with harrows, or who pounds with rakes
> The crumbling clods: nor Ceres from on high,
> Regards his labour with a grudging eye;
> Nor his, who ploughs across the furrow'd grounds,
> And on the back of earth inflicts new wounds;
> For he with frequent exercise commands
> Th' unwilling soil, and tames the stubborn lands.

HER MAJESTY'S STEAMER "CYCLOPS," AND THE PENINSULAR AND ORIENTAL COMPANY'S STEAMER "POTTINGER," ASHORE ON THE ISLE OF WIGHT.

EARLY on Sunday morning, a dense fog prevailed in this vicinity, which cleared away about ten A.M., at which time an express arrived at Cowes, from the Peninsular and Oriental Company's steamer Pottinger, for a pilot; that splendid steamer having gone on shore a short time previous in the fog. Accordingly, a pilot and assistance forthwith proceeded to the spot, distant about four miles to the westward

Several persons advanced along the shore to Gurnard Bay, while others started across the country, and reached the heights to the westward; and from the summit of the cliff a fine view of the stranded vessel was obtained. As the fog cleared off, another large steamer was observed in a similar situation, about a mile to the westward of the Pottinger. This turned out to be her Majesty's steam-frigate Cyclops. Both vessels were then ashore in Thorness Bay; the weather fine, with scarcely "a catspaw" to rumple the surface of the water. The tide, however, had by this time considerably ebbed, and there was no immediate hope of getting either vessel off. Accordingly, preparations were made on board the stranded vessels to get them afloat on the succeeding high water. The topmast of the Cyclops was struck, and the main gaff lowered, and were got over the sides for the purpose of shoring her up, and making her situation as snug as circumstances would admit. A similar process was resorted to by those on board the Pottinger, and that vessel was likewise shored up.

Throughout the day, crowds of spectators flocked to the scene, and the roads and beautiful summer walks towards Gurnard Bay and Thorness, were crowded with the inhabitants from Cowes and the neighbouring towns.

At three P.M. it was low water, and, fortunately for both vessels, the place where they had grounded presented nothing but a fine soft bed of mud. The only dangers—one ledge of rocks being plainly discerned some little distance to the eastward of the Pottinger, and the other ledge, called Thorness Ledge, between that vessel and the Cyclops.

The Pottinger remained perfectly upright, while the shores of the Cyclops appeared to have given way, and that vessel's situation rendered somewhat critical—she lying over on her starboard bilge with an inclination of about fifteen degrees.

During the forenoon, a boat from the Pottinger, with the Admiralty agent (Lieut. Brady) in charge of the mails, proceeded to the Motherbank, where the Ruby, one of the Isle of Wight steamers, was at anchor, and had been in waiting some days previous, expecting the arrival of the Pottinger. The master of the Ruby had previously received intimation that a large steamer was on shore, he had, accordingly, in anticipation, got the steam up, and proceeded to her assistance—pratique having been granted to the Pottinger. At four, P.M., the Ruby took out the passengers and mails, and proceeded with them to Southampton, where they were landed in safety.

On making inquiry as to the cause of the above accidents, we learnt that the Pottinger met with foggy weather in the early morning; but towards eight, A.M., it cleared up, and she passed through the Needles passage, and, as it turned out, without a branch pilot on board. Shortly after passing Yarmouth it came on a thick fog; owing to which the ship was cautiously steered up the Solent—not going at the time above three knots per hour; and the fact of her having touched the ground was scarcely perceived by those on board until they found themselves hard and fast.

The Cyclops left Spithead about eight, A.M., with despatches for the Embassy at Lisbon, under the charge of Colonel Wylde, one of her Majesty's Equerries; and, owing to the fog which came on shortly after passing Cowes, she was steered cautiously to the westward, off Egypt, the fog becoming so dense that the lead was their only guide. Some little time afterwards, they shoaled their water from twelve to ten fathoms, and, then, seven to four fathoms; at which time, it was judged prudent to anchor; and, in rounding to for that purpose, the ship suddenly grounded.

As soon as the information reached the neighbourhood, of the ship's being on shore, the Revenue cutter Adder, Commander Morgan, and the Rose, Captain Hughes, proceeded to render every assistance in their power, and their services were accordingly accepted—both vessels remaining by the Cyclops until she floated the same evening, about nine o'clock, after discharging about forty-five tons of water from the boilers and tanks.

The Pottinger was not so successful, and did not get off until about half-past ten o'clock the next morning.

The Cyclops received no apparent damage, and proceeded on her voyage with the despatches.

THE "GREAT BRITAIN" STEAMER.—It is now said that, in spite of the many rumours in circulation respecting the plans proposed, and the parties engaged to attempt to take off the Great Britain steam-ship, the Directors of the Great Western Steam Company have not yet decidedly adopted any individual from among above 100 projectors, nor any specific plan proposed for accomplishing that important and difficult object. In compliance with the request of the Directors, Captain Shrapnel, son of General Shrapnel, well known for his invention of the destructive shell which bears his name, has visited the vessel, and made a short report upon her condition His suggestions as to the necessity of blasting away certain portions of a rock near the hull, and its temporary protection by means of a gridiron-shaped fender attached to the stern, to break the fury of the waves on this dangerous shore, have been approved by the Directors. He has submitted to them a project in writing for raising the vessel out of the sand, out of the reach of the sea, by means of an apparatus ingeniously combining parallel and vertical moving powers, best calculated, in his opinion, to enable the hull of the vessel to be thoroughly repaired—when, by simply reversing the action of this powerful apparatus, he proposes to launch again the ponderous vessel, her own weight carrying her down the inclined plane, and out to sea a distance of nearly a thousand yards from the shore.

THE SMALL DEBTS ACT.—The Lord Chancellor is actively engaged in making arrangements to carry out the Small Debts Act of last Session. J. E. D. Bethune, Esq., was some time ago appointed to conduct inquiries, with a view to the formation of the various districts; and already lists have been made out of the fifty-nine districts where it is proposed to hold courts. Measures are in progress to ascertain whether these towns have been well chosen. It is the intention of the Government to bring the act into general operation as soon as possible.

SCENE FROM THE NEW COMEDY OF "LOOK BEFORE YOU LEAP; OR, WOOINGS AND WEDDINGS, AT THE HAYMARKET THEATRE.

HAYMARKET THEATRE.

Mr. Lovell's charming comedy wins "golden opinions" upon each repetition. The first representation was by no means a perfect one; but the several actors are now "at home;" and the laugh runs merrily, chequered with just enough of the serious "to make a change." It is a very long time since we have seen such a picture of real life upon the stage without the leaven of stage conventionalism.

The Artist has chosen a very effective scene—that in which Jack Spriggs, when intoxicated, calumniates Mr. Brandon to Mr. Oddington; and Elinor Mortimer beseeches her guardian not to believe the base insinuation: in the distance are Miss Brown, Claribel, and her sister.

We have received from Mr. Lovell the following letter, respecting a passage in our Journal of last week, which, it will be recollected, was given only as a discredited report:—

To the Editor of the Illustrated London News.

6, Mornington Crescent, 2nd November, 1846.

Sir—The gratification with which I read, in last Saturday's Illustrated News, your very flattering notice of my comedy of "Look Before You Leap," was much alloyed by your remarks respecting alterations reported to have been made by Mr. Farren in the last scene.

It is quite true that such alterations were made, and the character of Hardman expunged from that scene, by the advice, not only of Mr. Farren, but also of the Lessee (for reasons which it would be tedious to detail here); but that advice was offered only in the shape of suggestions, whose adoption or rejection was entirely left to my own judgment. I did deliberately adopt them; and, therefore, am myself alone responsible for the consequence.

Mr. Farren having most kindly given me the benefit of his long and extensive dramatic experience, a very natural unwillingness that this should, by any misunderstanding, be construed into unjustifiable assumption on his part, will, I trust, be my sufficient excuse for troubling you with this explanation.

With the highest appreciation of your good opinion, I have the honour to be, Sir, your very obedient servant, Geo. W. Lovell.

ASTLEY'S AMPHITHEATRE.

For some nights past, the frequenters of this very popular theatre have been wondrously amused with the feats of Herr Amidi Neuporte, the great Dutch Equilibrist; and the performance is really a fine exhibition of its class. Our Artist has represented the great favourite of the series, especially with "the twelvepenny colony," perhaps, the best judges of its merits. The circle is Herr Amidi's arena; and here he places a four-legged stool—each leg upon [a bottle, and another bottle upon the stool: he then raises himself, until his feet reach the neck of the bottle on the stool, and thus he rests; whilst, in each hand, he twirls a plate on the top of a stick; and a third plate is similarly placed in his mouth; thus forming the apex of one of the most extraordinary pyramids ever witnessed. This is called the Bottle Feat; but, how Amidi contrives to balance himself with what so often throws others out of their equilibrium is, to the public, a mystery! It is, altogether, a very striking performance.

CHAPTER XVI.

"Do not ask me, dearest Margaret—as you love me do not question what has agitated and distressed me," exclaimed Susan Clifford to her sister, a few days after the event related in the last chapter: "I cannot I will not, tell you."

"But, Susan——"

"Do as I ask you," continued Susan; "these entreaties only torture me. Send for Mr. C—— this instant; or, if you do not, I will go to him."

"Dear Susan, I have sent. But whatever your vexation may be, at least I can give you sympathy. Something in that newspaper which you will not let me see—I know it is. Surely a harsh criticism could not vex you in this way?"

"I am not vexed," said Susan; "do not use the word again. I am anxious, dreadfully anxious; but what about, in a word, I will not tell you. Be satisfied it is nothing connected with my profession." And apparently to make sure of secrecy for the present, at any rate, she tore a corner from a London newspaper which she held in her hand, and, lighting a taper, consumed the fragment.

Her good friend, Mr. C——, the manager, arrived in a few minutes and the reader may be admitted to the mystery of the interview which ensued.

"Dear Mr. C——," cried Susan, "you have sometimes expressed yourself as obliged by my humble services; there is an opportunity now of your conferring the deepest obligation on me."

The really grateful manager was eloquent in his expressions of devotion, and the actress continued—
